"Anatomy's" okay was applauded editorially by three of the four metropolitan gazettes. "Censorship can be justified only when there is a clear showing that public morals would be corrupted by the material in question," said the Daily News." "It is not be exercised merely because one disapproves of murder, rape or contraceptives. None of these things was recommended by the context in which they were used."

HAVE PARENTS ABDICATED?

Amsterdam Recorder Dubious About Any 'Official' Censoring

Amsterdam, N.Y., July 14.

The Evening Recorder of Amsterdam, editorially suggested, in the wake of the U.S. Supreme Court decision on "Lady Chatterley's Lover," several possible courses of action.

One: "A policy of self-regulation and the exercise of good judgment—backed by a tough prosecution of obscenity—are preferable in a free society to all forms of censorship, with its inherent dangers of abuse." Observing, "We are not unmindful that self-regulation has grown alarmingly weaker in recent years," the editorial continued, "Good taste and public sensibility have been repeatedly offended on the screen, and movie advertising has become increasingly bolder."

Paper suggested that "If official censorship is not the answer, and according to the U.S. Supreme Court, it is not, certainly the public—especially the parents—can insist on more responsibility within the movie and television industry.

"No producer," concluded the editorial, "will continue to make movies that are unpopular with the public."

Metro's Europeans

Eastman Fast Tint For 'Naples' Film Cuts Juice Costs

Madrid, July 14.

Introduction of new Eastman fast color film for the Clark Gable-Sophia Loren starrer, "Bay of Naples," will cut lamp rentals in half and consequently trim budget corners even further with economies in transportation and gaffer aides, according to lenser Robert Surtees, en route via Madrid to his assignment with the Rose-Shavelson production in Italy.

Newfangled celluloid, identified by Eastman as ASA 100, gives three times the speed as the current ASA 24, and makes it possible to light

Cinerama's Aug. 6 Stockholder Rally; Seek Sanctions on Many-Sided Changes

Cinerama Inc. has summoned a special meeting of its stockholders on Aug. 6 for the purpose of transferring all the company's right, title and interest in Cinerama to two new wholly-owned subsidiary corporations. In addition, the shareholders will be asked to approve the creation of liens in favor of the Prudential Insurance Co. on substantially all assets owned by the company; to okay an amendment to the company certificate of incorporation increasing the authorized capital from $35,000, consisting of 3,500,000 shares of common stock; to $60,000, consisting of 6,000,000 shares; to act on employee restricted stock option; and to elect seven directors.

The various changes proposed to the stockholders stem from the recent $12,000,000 loan obtained by Cinerama Inc. from Prudential and Robin International. The company proposes to employ the coin for the production of Cinerama pix and for continued research and development of a single lens system.

Research Monies

The $12,000,000 is a maximum that is being made available to Cinerama under certain circumstances. For example, Prudential is alloting up to $1,500,000 for research and development of a single lens system; $1,500,000 for a revolving fund to be used as an investment in four Cinerama process productions, and up to $6,000,000 to be made available for 50% of the approved budget for the four new pix. Robin International, which now has the right to exhibit Cinerama films in certain foreign countries, has agreed to participate in the production of four new pix to a total of $3,000,000, but not more than 25% of the approved budget of each picture, or $750,000 for each picture.

The loan agreement provides for the issuance to Prudential to purchase a maximum of 300,000 shares of common stock at $4 per share and for participation by Prudential in certain recipts and profits of Cinerama Inc. The loan agreement also provides for certain restrictions as to payment of dividends and maintenance of working capital.

In order to obtain the coin from Prudential, Cinerama Inc. is required to organize two wholly-owned subsidiaries. This will enable Prudential to obtain a first lien on all assets prior to the equity of the stockholders of Cinerama Inc. Up to about 11% of the assets of Cinerama Inc., based on book value, are to be transferred. One corporation will have the right, title and interest in the Cinerama camera, projection and certain other equipment. The other will hold all patents and equipment related to the new single lens camera.

As security for the Prudential loan, Cinerama Inc. is required to create liens in favor of the insurance company on substantially all assets now owned or hereafter acquired while any of the loans are outstanding. Cinerama Inc. is required to deliver to Prudential security documents on the following:

(1) All rights and properties which Cinerama may have in the four new pictures, including all proceeds and copyrights.

(2) All Cinerama patents related to the new single lens photography system.

(3) All stock owned by Cinerama in existing subsidiaries and subsidiaries to be formed in the future.

(4) All distribution and exhibition agreements with respect to Cinerama pictures.

(5) Other security documents which Prudential may require on any or all the property now owned or hereafter acquired by Cinerama Inc. or its subsidiaries.

The general effect of the liens to be created will give Prudential first call on all assets prior to any rights held by the stockholders of Cinerama Inc.

Prudential has also indicated that it will consider providing additional financing to Cinerama Inc. of up to $3,000,000 for the acquisition and/or equipping of Cinerama theatres. In addition, Robin International, has agreed that it will participate with Cinerama Inc. on up to one-half the expense of opening Cinerama theatres in the United States.

As consideration for arranging the Prudential agreement, Cinerama Inc. sold to Kidder, Peabody & Co., a Wall Street underwriting firm, five-year stock purchase warrants for $5,625, entitling the firm to purchase at $6.125 per share 45,000 shares of common stock. In addition, Kidder, Peabody will receive up to $75,000 as commission as and when notes are sold to Prudential.

For its commitment, Robin will receive options for $2.625 per share on 300,000 shares of Cinerama Inc.

The Prudential loan agreement also gives the insurance company 5% of the gross boxoffice receipts from the exhibition of the four proposed Cinerama pix after taxes and after recoupment by Cinerama Inc. of gross production costs; a 15% interest in films rentals realized from the exhibition of the four films starting April 1, 1974; and for the period of April 1, 1959 to April 1, 1974, a 15% interest in the total consolidated pre-tax profit of Cinerama Inc., excluding profits realized from theatres owned and operated by Cinerama Inc.

Stockholders have been asked to approve the following additional options: 35,000 shares for Wentworth D. Fling, exec v.p. (engineering) and director; 50,000 shares Byron Cherry, exec v.p. (administration) and director; and 15,000 shares for L. Grant Leenhouts, veepee.

Directors nominated include Hazard E. Reeves, president and whose Reeves Soundcraft owns 453,441 shares of 17% of the company; Fling, Cherry, John H. Hartley, secretary-treasurer; Nicolas Reisini, board chairman and head of Robin International; Bernard Goodman, former head of Metropolitan Broadcasting Co., and Marshall A. Jacobs, member of the law firm of Jacobs & Persinger.

Return of the Fly

script's limitations, the cast does fairly well.

The picture is technically slick and the special effects—for which no credit is given—are good. Except for the art director (Lyle Wheeler, who shares credit with John Mansbridge) the technical crew is different from the original. Paul Sawtell, who scored the original, assists Bert Shefter in scoring the sequel, adding a plus factor. But without the reputation of "The Fly" to trade on, this one would be a dud. Glen.

The Giant Gila Monster

Texas-made science - fiction "horror" thriller; photography best bet. Trite story. Part of package.

Dallas, July 7.

McLendon Radio Pictures release of Hollywood Pictures Corp. production. Stars Don Sullivan, Lisa Simone; features Shug Fisher, Fred Graham, Ken Knox. Executive producer, Gordon McLendon. Produced by Ken Curtis. Directed by Ray Kellogg. Story and screenplay by Kellogg, Jay Sims; camera, Wilfred Cline; production manager, Ben Chapman; sound effects, Milton Citron, James Richard; music, Jack Marshall; editor, Aaron Stell. Premiered at Majestic Theatre, Dallas, June 25, '59. Running time, 74 MINS.

Chace Winstead	Don Sullivan
Lisa	Lisa Simone
Mr. Harris	Shug Fisher
Bob	Jerry Cortwright
Gay	Beverly Thurman
Gordy	Don Flourney
Chucky	Clarke Browne
Sherry	Pat Simmons
Rick	Pat Reeves
Whila	Anne Sonka
Sheriff	Fred Graham
Wheeler	Bob Thompson
Compten	Cecil Hunt
Steamroller Smith	Ken Knox
Liz Humphries	Yolanda Salas
Eb Humphries	Howard Ware
Agatha Humphries	Stormey Meadows

This second McLendon Radio Pictures feature (budgeted at $300,000, but under the wire at $138,000, tandems with the earlier (Jan., '59) feature, "The Killer Shrews," as a good double-bill. It got that treatment in a "world premiere" June 25 at the Interstate Circuit's flagship house, the Majestic, here, also at the Palace in Fort Worth and in 11 other Texas towns.

Story is mild, but as an "audience reaction" feature, "Gila Monster" has appeal for the science-fiction situations. Slick black-and-white photography, mostly outdoors, captures some fine North Texas scenery, to make this a worthwhile feature. Trick camera work has a Gila monster, giant sized, feeding its way through wooded areas, wrecking a train, breaking into a dance hall to panic a teenage "record hop."

Director Ray Kellogg's special effects rate the big nod against trite yarn about a sheriff who calls on the leader of a hot-rod gang to help him find a missing couple — and then chances upon the giant reptile.

Don Sullivan is adequate as the male lead; he uses the appearance to exploit three of his own compositions. A dubious interpolation. His vocal assets don't match even his minor acting talents. Add that Lisa Simone, a beauty contest winner, is a dull leading lady. Ken Knox, a local deejay, gets off a slick stint, before posing as a KILT jock (that's the McLendon station in Houston, hence the plug) at the teenage hop.

Acting honors goes to veteran Fred Graham, who plays the diligent sheriff. Bark.

J'Irai Cracher Sur Vos Tombes

(I Will Go Spit On Your Graves) (FRENCH)

Paris, July 14.

Lux release of CTI-SIPRO production. Stars Christian Marquand, Antonella Lualdi; features, Renate Ewert, Paul Guers, Fernand Ledoux, Marina Petrowa, Daniel Cauchy. Directed by Michel Gast. Screenplay, Boris Vian, Jacques Decombe, adapted from Vian's novel; camera, Marc Fossart; editor, Eliane Bensdorp. At Biarritz, Paris. Running time, 95 MINS.

After "The Respectful Prostitute" and "Guts In The Sun," the French are still making films on race problems in the U.S. It just does not work, particularly in this case where the problem is used as an exploitation gambit in an essentially sensational film.

Besides the difficulty in properly portraying the U.S., this drags in the long line of juve delinquent French pix which of late are trying to cast them in a Yank mold via black jackets, violence, tests of juve endurance. What is left is a film with some exploitation chances here and abroad on its nudity and love candor but sans much continuity and lacking characterization. This is strictly for bally hypo chances in the U.S.—nothing more.

A Negro who looks white sees his brother lynched in the south. He decides to go up north, and pass as a white man thereby ostensibly getting some sort of revenge on the whites. All the girls in a little town go for him but he can not bring himself to kill any. Finally he falls for a rich girl betrothed to a local hoodlum. It ends in death for the Negro as well as the girl who loves him.

Director Michel Gast rarely gets any feeling for the plight of the hero into this. The indecisive playing of Christian Marquand in this role does not help either. Technical credits are okay but the spurious set, supposedly an American town, is flimsy. A fair resemblance is ruined by the English papers on display, French telephones, and signs like "Cross The Street." This is too naive for Yank arties with only possible exploitation on its theme and love scenes.

Yank pix like "Paths of Glory" and "I Accuse" are not allowed to play here because they show the French army in a bad light. "Graves" is not objectionable on its plot so much as on the lack-lustre way it is made and the exploiting of an important theme for strictly sensational reasons. French producers perhaps could treat more local problems of this type rather than dabbling in this sectional American problem. Mosk.

Operation Bullshine

(BRITISH-COLOR)

Pleasantly amusing Army comedy with gags and gal which raises plenty of laughter.

London, July 7.

Associated British-Pathe release of an Associated British Production. Stars Donald Sinden, Barbara Murray, Carole Lesley, Ronald Shiner, Naunton Wayne, Dora Bryan. Producer, Frank Godwin; director, Gilbert Gunn; screenplay, Anne Burnaby and Rupert Lang, camera, Gilbert Taylor; editor, E. B. Jarvis; music, Laurie Johnson. At Carlton, London, June 30 '59. Running time, 90 MINS.

Lieut. Gordon Brown	Donald Sinden
Private Betty Brown	Barbara Murray
Private Marge White	Carole Lesley
Gunner Slocum	Ronald Shiner
Major Pym	Naunton Wayne
Private Cox	Dora Bryan
Gunner Willie Ross	John Cairney
Junior Commander Maddox	Fabia Drake
Private Finch	Joan Rice
Bombardier Palmer	Daniel Massey
Gunner Perkins	Peter Jones
Serg. Merrifield	Barbara Hicks
Brigadier	John Welsh
P. T. Instructress	Judy Grinham
Orderly Serg.	Cyril Chamberlain
Reporter	Ambrosine Phillpotts
Subaltern Godfrey	Naomi Chance
Serg. Cook	Marianne Stone
Gunner Wilkinson	Harry Landis
Gunner Pooley	Brian Weske
German Airman	George Mikell

By now, pretty well every branch of service life has been exploited as a picture, either dramatically or comically. It seems the well's not drained. With "Operation Bullshine," which originally had the more appealing title of "Girls In Arms," it's the turn of a mixed ack-ack gun site. It's an unashamed supplicant for yocks and garners them with ease.

Many of the usual cliches of this type of film crop up but it has the advantage of a basically amusing idea, an accomplished cast and a screenplay by Anne Burnaby and Rupert Lang which does attempt to keep to its theme and not become merely a string of disconnected gags and situations.

When a bunch of A.T.S. girls are posted to a Light Ack-Ack post the commanding officer rightly fears that the glamor will upset his men's morale. But his good-looking second-in-command (Donald Sinden) revels in the idea and soon gets the reputation of being a lady-kiler. He's doing particularly well with a blonde cutie who sets her sights firmly on him. All's well, till his wife is posted to the unit as a private. Since it's against Army Regulations for husband and wife to serve at the same unit they have to keep it a secret, which causes endless matrimonial mixups. The tangle is, of course, suitably sorted out in the required 90 minutes.

Sinden brings charm and a quiet humor to his role and Barbara Murray has both prettiness and attack, a useful combination. Naunton Wayne fusses and blusters amusingly as the commanding officer and Fabia Drake is a formidable dragon as boss of the A.T.S. unit. The blonde who causes Sinden all his grief is Carole Lesley, a cute miss who sails through this role with no trouble at all. Two certain insurances for laughs in this type of pic are Ronald Shiner and Dora Bryan and both score heavily. One of the biggest yocks is gained by Peter Jones as a private soldier with a specialty of double talk which adds to the confusion of lectures.

Daniel Massey, Joan Rice, Barbara Hicks, John Cairney and John Welsh are others on hand to help the fun moving, and glamor is represented by a dozen or so girls who take every opportunity to reveal underwear more suitable for the Folies Bergere than an Army unit. Gilbert Gunn's direction is brisk, especially in one hilarious sequence when the sudden, unexpected arrival of a Brigadier necessitates the sudden smartening-up of the camp causing Operation Bullshine to snap miraculously into effect. Gilbert Taylor's lensing is okay and the sets authentic.

"Operation Bullshine" is no comedy epic but it sets out to amuse and does so for a respectable portion of its running time. Rich.

Ferry to Hong Kong

(BRITISH-C'SCOPE-COLOR)

Hokum treatment of a romanticmeller. Overlong, but presenting some intriguing scenes of Hong Kong. Good stellar value, but routine b.o. prospects.

London, July 7.

Rank (George Maynard) production and release. Stars Curt Jurgens, Orson Welles, Sylvia Syms. Directed by Lewis Gilbert. Screenplay, Vernon Harris, Lewis Gilbert; camera, Otto Heller; editor, Peter Hunt; music, Ken Jones. At Rank Private Theatre, London. Running time: 113 MINS.

Mark Conrad	Curt Jurgens
Captain Hart	Orson Welles
Liz Ferrers	Sylvia Syms
Miguel Henriques	Jeremy Spenser
Joe Skinner	Noel Purcell
Miss Carter	Margaret Withers
Police Inspector	John Wallace
Johnny Sing-Up	Roy Chiao
Foo Soo	Shelley Shen
Tommy Cheng	Louis Seto
Yen	Milton Reid
Portugese Major	Ronald Decent
Archdeacon	Don Carlos
Second Police Inspector	Nick Kendall
First Guardian	Kwan Shan Lam

The most fascinating aspect of this slice of meller-hokum is the way Orson Welles has clearly conned director Lewis Gilbert. Welles seems to have been allowed to write his own dialog and give his own interpretation of his role. He might just as well have taken over direction. The result is a piece of hammy over-acting which might have been fun for a few minutes. But, carried on for around two hours remorselessly, it becomes grotesque and, in the end a boring caricature.

The film is a slab of commercial cinema. Intriguing glimpses of Hong Kong locations, star value and some splendid storm-at-sea scenes will fascinate the average cinemagoer. But it doesn't look like the film that the bosses tried to turn out. Artistically, it's a mess. Financially, it may well prove a click.

Welles, with a magnificently phoney makeup and an irritating accent which veers from the "refeened" to the Cockney, is a phoney skipper who runs a ferryboat between Hong Kong and Macao, a five-hour trip.

Jurgens is a no-good bum who is exiled from his native Austria. Hong Kong tosses him out. Macao wants no part of him. So he spends most of the film travelling on the ferryboat to the annoyance of Skipper Welles. Welles hates him and tries to get rid of him. Jurgens is, for the first time, happy. He has a home. The clash between these two offbeat characters is emceed by Sylvia Syms, a schoolmistress, who falls for Jurgens and prods him into action. It winds up with him saving the ship when it becomes involved in a giant storm and a raid from some Chinese pirates.

Otto Heller's lensing and Lewis Gilbert's direction are at their best in the storm and hold-up scenes. The acting is as good as can be expected considering the dialog and leisurely yarn. Welles, as has been indicated, has had himself an actor's holiday. Jurgens wanders through the film with the air of a man whose heart isn't in it. Miss Syms, comely and charming, does wonders with a colorless role.

Best pieces of thesping come from Noel Purcell, as the ship's engineer, and Margaret Withers, as a busybody spinster. Jeremy Spenser, as a young ship's officer, doesn't stand a chance. Milton Reid as the chief of the Chinese pirates, brings brawn and some brain to an unbelievably written part, which must cause twinges of conscience for script-writers Lewis Gilbert and Vernon Harris.

Authentic peeks at Hong Kong will stimulate any patron into taking a ticket to that exciting city, if only for the nightlife. Some Chinese kids bring fun to the piece. Some 25 minutes, ruthlessly scrapped from "Ferry To Hong Kong," could have helped a pic which doesn't deserve to succeed but may well do so, despite its faults. Rich.

The Mummy

(COLOR)

Mild horror film well produced and with exploitation potential for intended market.

Hollywood, July 7.

Universal release of Michael Carreras production. Stars Peter Cushing, Christopher Lee, Yvonne Furneaux; features Eddie Byrne, Felix Aylmer, Raymond Huntley, George Pastell. Directed by Terence Fisher. Screenplay, Jimmy Sangster; camera (Technicolor), Jack Asher; production designer, Bernard Robinson; music, Frank Reizenstein; editors, James Needs, Alfred Cox. Previewed July 7, '59. Running time, 86 MINS.

John Banning	Peter Cushing
Kharis	Christopher Lee
Isobel	Yvonne Furneaux
Ananka	Yvonne Furneaux
Mulrooney	Eddie Byrne
Stephen Banning	Felix Aylmer
Joseph Whemple	Raymond Huntley
Mehemet	George Pastell
Coroner	John Stuart
Pat	Harold Goodwin
Mike	Dennis Shaw

Producers of this British import twirl their narrative around the old Egyptian curse, that whoever desecrates the dead in their tombs shall die. Premise is fairly well developed while offering little of actual newness to plot, and via U's planned exploitation campaign pic should do okay in is particular market.

Lavishly produced by Michael Carreras, film's subject benefits sharply by use of Technicolor, which gives tone and quality to unfoldment. Yarn carries the type of action expected, and while chiller aspects aren't too pronounced they're sufficient for those who want to find them. Acting fits the requirements of script by Jimmy Sangster and Terence Fisher's direction makes good use of characters.

Plottage follows three English archaeologists who discover the 4,000-year-old tomb of Princess Ananka, high priestess in the court of the Egyptian god Karnak, and events befalling them when they return home. Menace is provided by the return to life of a high priest, buried alive as a guardian of the embalmed princess, who is brought to England by a mysterious Egyptian to avenge the desecration of the sacred tomb. He kills two of the scientists, but the third is saved by his wife resembling the ancient princess.

Peter Cushing delivers handily as the third archaeologist, and Yvonne Furneaux, seen briefly, lends distaff interest. Christopher Lee scores as the avenger, who seemingly cannot be destroyed by bullets or spears. Felix Aylmer and Raymond Huntley, the other two scientists; George Pastell, the Egyptian; and Eddie Byrne, a police inspector, handle their roles creditably.

Technical departments are excellently executed, including Jack Asher's camera work; Bernard Robinson's production designing, editing by Jack Needs and Alfred Cox, and music score by Frank Reizenstein. Whit.

Ten Seconds to Hell

Marquee lure of Jeff Chandler, Jack Palance and Martine Carol, plus exploitation values, should push this so-so meller into fair b.o. returns.

United Artists release of a Seven Arts-Hammer Production produced by Michael Carreras. Stars Jeff Chandler, Jack Palance, Martine Carol; features Virginia Baker, Wes Addy, Robert Cornthwaite. Directed by Robert Aldrich. Screenplay, Aldrich and Teddi Sherman, from the novel "The Phoenix" by Lawrence P. Bachmann; camera, Ernest Laszlo; editor, Harry Richardson; music, Kenneth V. Jones. Previewed N.Y., July 9, '59. Running time, 93 MINS

Wirtz	Jeff Chandler
Koertner	Jack Palance
Margot	Martine Carol
Loeffler	Robert Cornthwaite
Tillig	Dave Willock
Sulke	Wes Addy
Globke	Jimmy Goodwin
Frau Bauer	Virginia Baker
Major Haven	Richard Wattis

Hazardous job of deactivating dud bombs after World War II appears sound material for a melodramatic and suspenseful film. But curiously "Ten Seconds to Hell" emerges as a downbeat picture that registers little audience impact. Names of Jeff Chandler, Jack Palance and Martine Carol, however, offer some b.o. insurance.

While the story has some negative aspects, nevertheless it contains some exploitable values. A campaign designed to take advantage of the latter, plus the star power, should help generate fair returns in the general market for this United Artists release.

Based on Lawrence P. Bachmann's novel, "The Phoenix," the Robert Aldrich-Teddi Sherman screenplay seldom draws sympathy for any of its characters. Of six former German soldiers who form a bomb disposal unit in Berlin at the war's end, three are quickly killed in performance of their duties. The audience knows little of their backgrounds, and is affected only impersonally by their deaths.

Palance, self-styled leader of the unit, is a man of courage and conviction. But he's a moody individual who appears to be continually wrestling with inner problems. Ruthless and egotistical is Chandler who has regard for no one except himself. Miss Carol, in an unglamorous role, runs a boarding house, where Palance and Chandler reside.

Instead of developing the characters more fully, the script chooses to train the cameras on one bomb deactivation after another. While this is a nerve-tingling operation, anything can be made dull through repetition. A pact made at the unit's inception under which half of each member's earnings will go to the survivor (s) at the end of three months also tends to make filmgoers sit back in their seats and wait for te inevitable.

Co-scripter Aldrich apparently keyed his direction around the story's grim and sombre qualities. The depressing atmosphere undeniably is there. There's little relief from it with exceptions of a few scenes where Chandler and Palance vie for Miss Carol's affections. A night club scene, which would have offered some contrast, wound up on the cutting room floor.

Performances are only fair. Neither Palance nor Chandler appears at ease in their respective assignments. Sexy Miss Carol, whose flair for romantic roles is celebrated, is largely wasted as the rooming house landlady. Virginia Baker has little to do as a telephone operator at the unit's "command post." Seen briefly before meeting death are unit members Robert Cornthwaite, Dave Willock, Wes Addy and Jimmy Goodwin. All have the proper fatalistic attitude.

With the film shot on location in Berlin, cameraman Ernest Laszlo has provided some realistic backgrounds. Kenneth V. Jones' score is effective but Harry Richardson's editing has some weak points. Physical values of this Seven Arts-Hammer Production are adequate for a film of this nature. Gilb.

Far Jag Lana Din Fru?

(Lend Me Your Wife)

Stockholm, July 7.

Sandrew Film production and release. Stars: Edvin Adolphson, Sven Lindberg, Bengt Brunskog, Elsa Prawitz. Features Annalisa Ericson, Nils Hallberg, Sif Ruud, Mona Malm, Lena Granhagen, Torsten Winge, Curt Lofgren, Ludde Juberg. Director: Arne Mattsson. Screenplay: Lars Widding & Eva Seeberg. Camera: Sven Nykvist. Editor: Lennart Wallen. Music: Jules Sylvain. At Royal, Stockholm. Running time: 104 MINS.

Fredrik Fredri	Edvin Adolphson
Bertil Lund	Sven Lindberg
Thorbjorn	Bengt Brunskog
Ulla, his wife	Elsa Prawitz
Fanny, secretary	Annalisa Ericson
Kurre, salesman	Nils Hallberg
Kurre's wife	Sif Rund
Ingrid Fredriksson	Mona Malm
Stella	Lena Granhagen
The vicar	Torsten Winge
Bartender	Curt Lofgren
The Coachman	Ludde Juberg
Hansson	John Norrman

A job as vice-president is vacant at Everything-For-Baby-Company, but the man most qualified for it has one fault, he's a bachelor. His best friend (Bengt Brunskog), who happens to be married, decides to help him, first by a telephone call to the president of the company (Edvin Adolphson) when he spreads word that the bachelor is a married man. The president is very happy to find out and arranges a party for the employees, including their wives and husbands. The bachelor is now back in an even more difficult situation, but again his friend wants to help, suggesting him to bring along his wife, introducing her as his own.

What seems a fine solution naturally develops complications, when the president sends the couple on a business trip out of town, and, at the same time, the bachelor has happened to fall in love with the president's daughter (Mona Malm). The husband in the story has become jealous and carefully follows the couple on their trip.

Story is not new, and not particularly well made, but the film has some commercial appeal, at least in the European market. A handsome tune by Jules Sylvain sounds as having Hit-Parade-appeals if well exploited.

Sven Lindberg as the bachelor who pretends to be married to get the job he wants, is doing very good, well assisted by well - routined veteran Edvin Adolphson as the big boss of the wholesale - company. Elsa Prawitz as the pretended wife of Lindberg as well as real wife of jealous Bengt Brunskog has the very best part of the film.

Technical credits are okay. Winq.

A new era in motion pictures has opened!

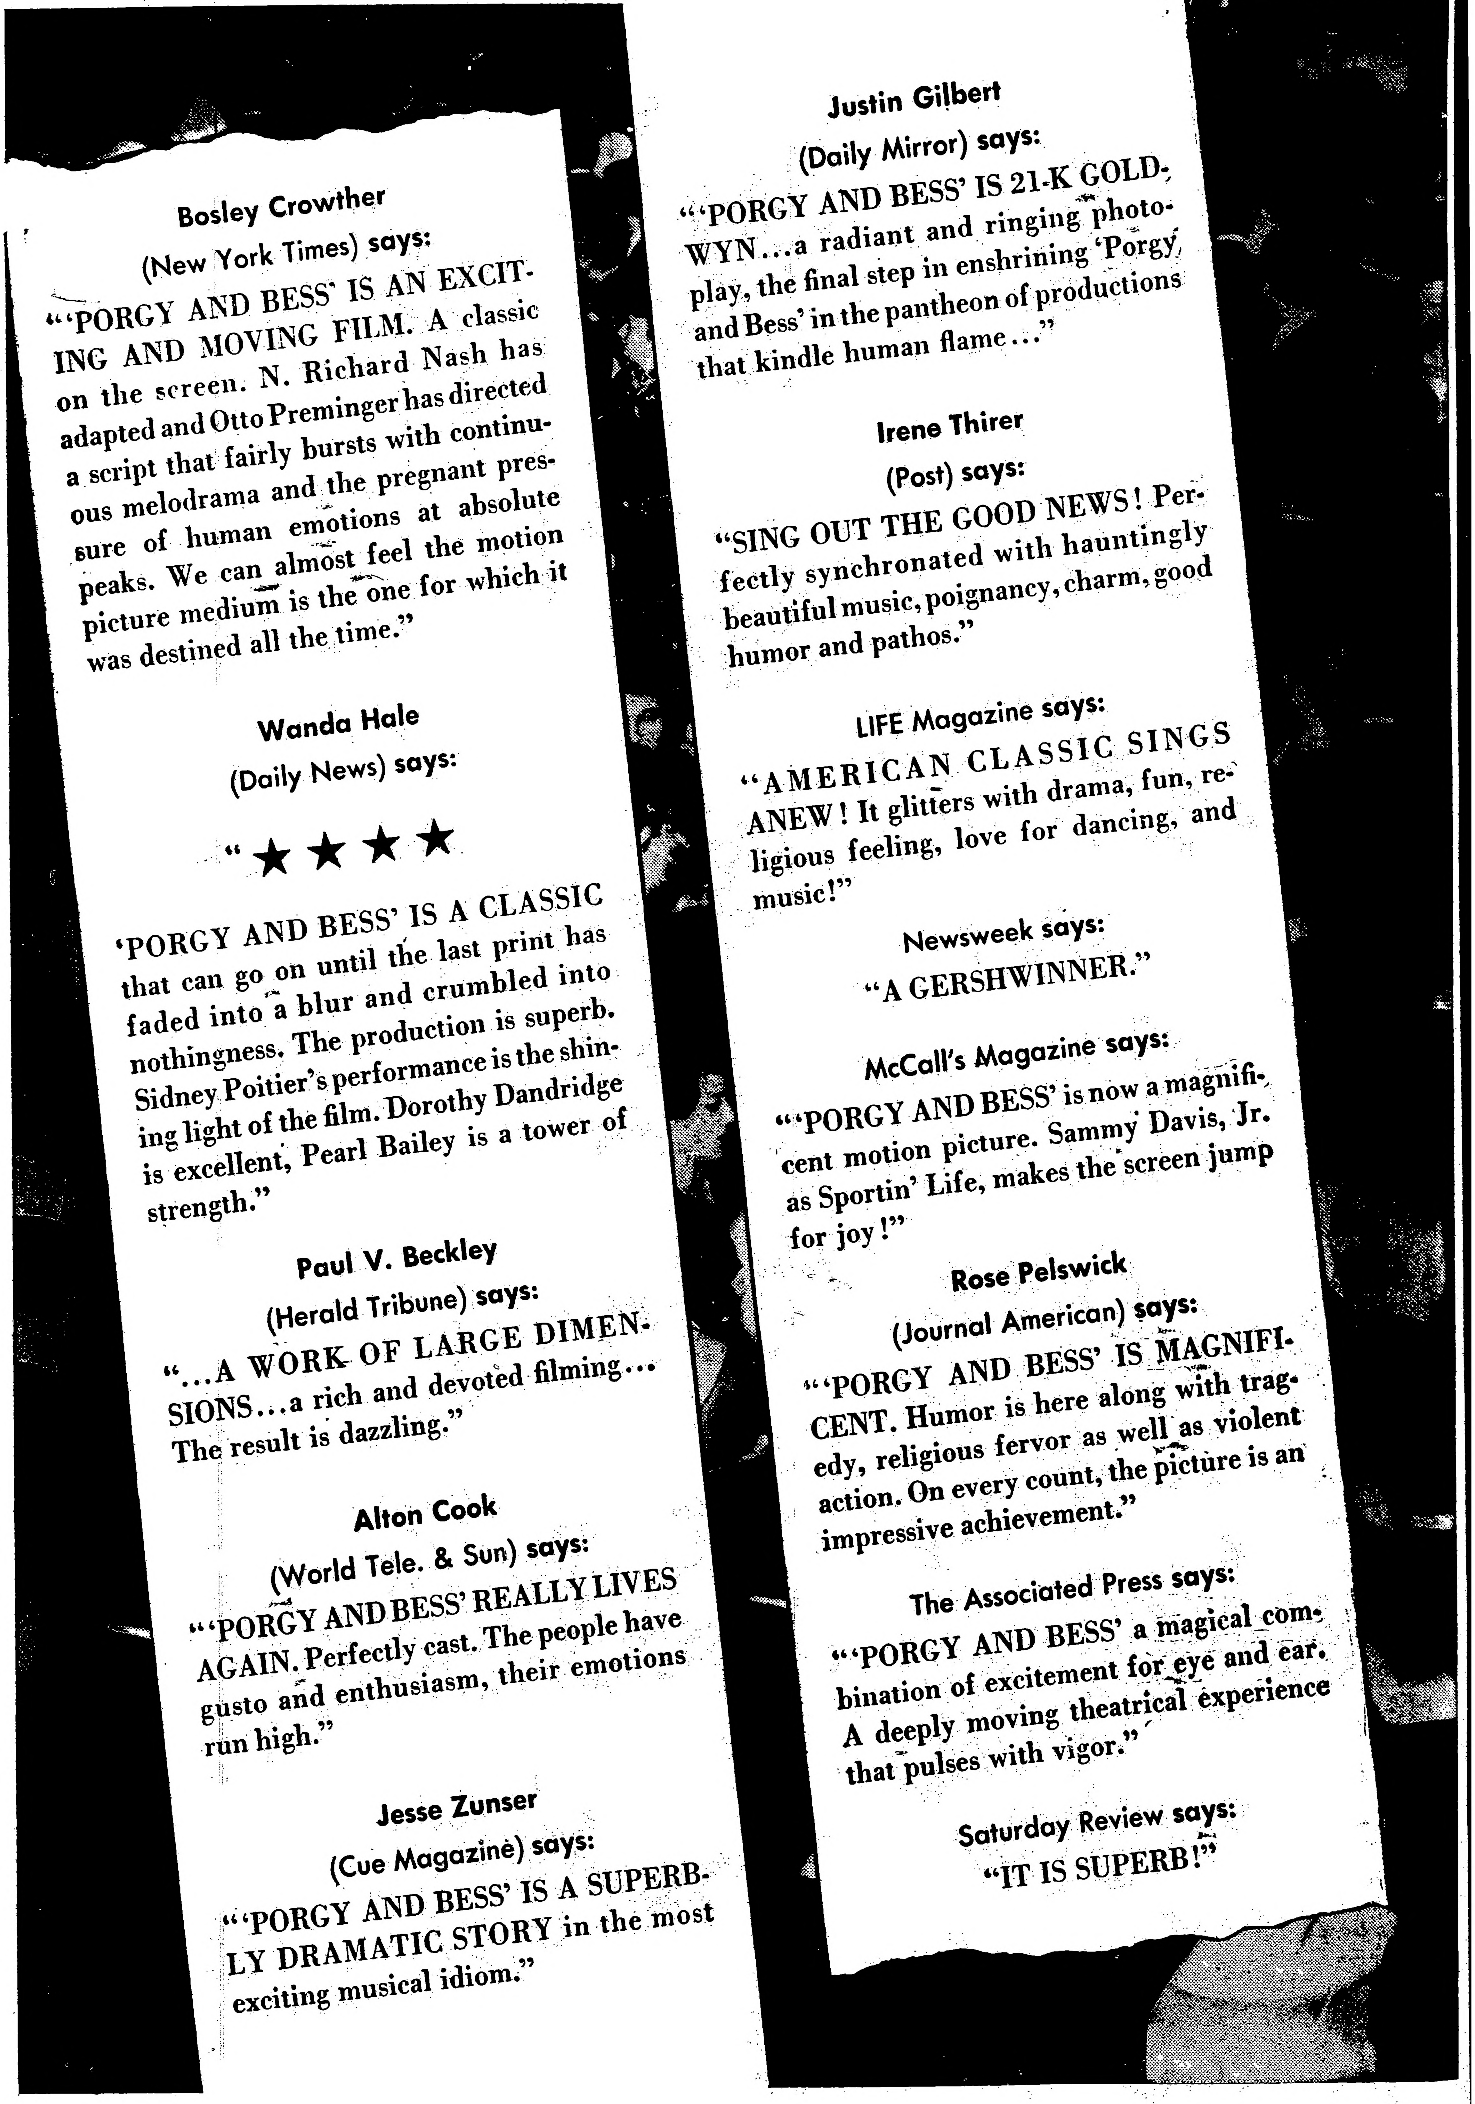
PORGY and BESS

[illegible] TECHNICOLOR [illegible]



Bosley Crowther
(New York Times) says:

“‘PORGY AND BESS’ IS AN EXCITING AND MOVING FILM. A classic on the screen. N. Richard Nash has adapted and Otto Preminger has directed a script that fairly bursts with continuous melodrama and the pregnant pressure of human emotions at absolute peaks. We can almost feel the motion picture medium is the one for which it was destined all the time.”

Wanda Hale
(Daily News) says:

‘PORGY AND BESS’ IS A CLASSIC that can go on until the last print has faded into a blur and crumbled into nothingness. The production is superb. Sidney Poitier’s performance is the shining light of the film. Dorothy Dandridge is excellent, Pearl Bailey is a tower of strength.”

Paul V. Beckley
(Herald Tribune) says:

“...A WORK OF LARGE DIMENSIONS...a rich and devoted filming... The result is dazzling.”

Alton Cook
(World Tele. & Sun) says:

“‘PORGY AND BESS’ REALLY LIVES AGAIN. Perfectly cast. The people have gusto and enthusiasm, their emotions run high.”

Jesse Zunser
(Cue Magazine) says:

“‘PORGY AND BESS’ IS A SUPERBLY DRAMATIC STORY in the most exciting musical idiom.”

Justin Gilbert
(Daily Mirror) says:

“‘PORGY AND BESS’ IS 21-K GOLDWYN...a radiant and ringing photoplay, the final step in enshrining ‘Porgy and Bess’ in the pantheon of productions that kindle human flame...”

Irene Thirer
(Post) says:

LIFE Magazine says:

“AMERICAN CLASSIC SINGS ANEW! It glitters with drama, fun, religious feeling, love for dancing, and music!”

Newsweek says:

“A GERSHWINNER.”

McCall’s Magazine says:

“‘PORGY AND BESS’ is now a magnificent motion picture. Sammy Davis, Jr. as Sportin’ Life, makes the screen jump for joy!”

Rose Pelswick
(Journal American) says:

“‘PORGY AND BESS’ IS MAGNIFICENT. Humor is here along with tragedy, religious fervor as well as violent action. On every count, the picture is an impressive achievement.”

The Associated Press says:

“‘PORGY AND BESS’ a magical combination of excitement for eye and ear. A deeply moving theatrical experience that pulses with vigor.”

Saturday Review says:

“IT IS SUPERB!”

Film Daily says:

"A MAGNIFICENT ARTISTIC ACHIEVEMENT AND A BOXOFFICE BLOCKBUSTER. Individual performances stack up as fore-runners of Academy nominations. Miraculous reproduction of the music. No previous production to compare with it. Will stand long as an industry record."

Hollywood Reporter says:

"ONE OF THE MONUMENTAL MILESTONES in the theatre's long history of entertainment. Powerfully enacted, presented with vocal and visual beauty. The musical bridges from mood to mood and scene to scene are probably the best the screen has ever voiced. Choreography is at its visual best. Fused into a moving and inspiring whole."

M.P. Daily says:

"A RARE EXAMPLE OF THE FINEST blending of photography, color and music. The best ever given the classic. Shines with memorable individual performances. The Gershwin music, has been magnificently recorded. A production of the highest quality in the established Goldwyn tradition. Fresh and new and vibrant—will endear it to all who see it."

Variety says:

M.P. Herald says:

"A TRIUMPH OF THE CINEMATIC ART, entrancing and exciting pictorial achievement. An event of first importance. Magnificent physical background. Fine and sensitive screenplay, utterly perfect technical job. Brought the great Gershwin music to new, fresh and wondrous life."

Boxoffice says:

"A TRIUMPH ON ALL COUNTS. A glorious and unforgettable motion picture experience, will stand as a monument to Goldwyn's producing genius. The acting is outstanding. All the warmth of feeling and dramatic intensity of the Heyward play. The score is superbly played and sung. Poitier proves himself one of our best actors."

M.P. Exhibitor says:

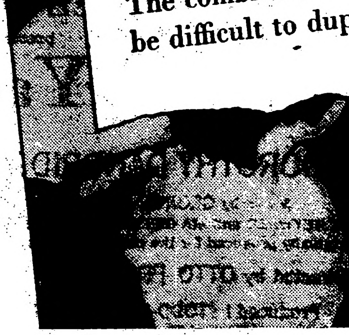
"SOMETHING SPECIAL as to entertainment value, magnificently attired, finely acted, outstandingly directed and produced. Cast is moving in its evaluation of the story."

Daily Variety says:

"FINELY PRODUCED AND DIRECTED. Intelligently acted and well sung. There is beauty and artistry."

Independent Film Journal says:

"STRIKING CINEMATIC STATURE, artistic as well as commercial strengths. The combined talent of the cast would be difficult to duplicate."



Variety says:

"'PORGY AND BESS' HIT ABSOLUTE CAPACITY IN INITIAL FULL WEEK WARNER THEATRE N.Y.C. AFTER THE SAME PACE IN THE PRIOR FOUR DAYS".

East Berlin Can't Get U.S. Playdates

By HAROLD MYERS

Berlin, July 14.

Films which glorified war, fascism or militarism had no place in East Germany. Nor was there much interest in "artistic decadence." There would, however, always be a welcome for features promoting peace and socialism, provided they also had entertainment qualities.

That credo was outlined at a press conference held in the eastern sector of Berlin under the auspices of DEFA, the East German production and distribution outfit. It was attended by about 100 newsmen who were covering the annual film fest in the western part of the city.

The press conference in the east has become an annual event, but this year DEFA, was more ambitious. It gave a screening of its Cannes prize-winner, "The Stars," a coproduction with Bulgaria, and followed with a supper party. That shindig attracted a surprisingly high proportion of the top trade and press brass at the festival.

At the press conference, there was considerable emphasis on the desire to capture new markets. America, of course, remains elusive. It was stated that four DEFA features had been sold to the U.S., two to Excelsior and two to Brandon Films, but it had not been possible to obtain playdates so far. There were hopes that East German film weeks, on the lines of the recent event in London, would be held in other Western capitals and would help in the pioneering work.

Because diplomatic relations do not exist between east and west, the DEFA films are barred from the fest. DEFA did, however, make a pitch to participate in the recent documentary fest in Mannheim, but the East German entries were rejected in advance, and a protest to Bonn had yielded no reply. There was no justification for calling it a festival of world films," said one of the DEFA execs, his entries were censored in advance.

Natives Still Haven't Viewed Spoleto

But Second Year Corrects Many 1958 Flaws—Gielgud Clicks—Inge, Williams Playlets Mounted—Robbins

By TRUDY GOTH

Spoleto, July 14.

Gian-Carlo Menotti's "Festival of Two Worlds" is drawing to a close here. No exiting first nights remain. Soon the mountain town will go back to hibernation. Boutiques art galleries and boites will close, the Festival office will tote up accounts to figure how much in the red it is, organizers will then figure out the moves for the 1960 Festival.

Without any doubt this year avoided most of the mistakes of 1958. Press office, tickets and accommodations were better organized. Flow of attendance didn't dry up after the exciting opening week. Weekend performances were actually sold out (matinee and evening performances on Saturday and Sunday). This season the press was mostly enthusiastic. Menotti succeeded in establishing a serious Fesival with much of last year's swish missing. No "grands toilettes," few Cadillacs, no dancers with purple tights skipping across the town square and except for opening nights fewer gossip columnist and more music critics, plus radio, tv, theatre and opera executives.

A discordant note were the giantsize USA—Tv trucks Ed Sullivan brought along to tape the show—trucks which more than once endangered corners and rooftops of Spoleto's ancient streets. Also the taping done on squares, staircases and church portals showed all sorts of scenes not seen in any Festival performances. Impression here was that Sullivan wanted the Spoleto name but thought its fare too highbrow or esoteric for American television. A dance scene from "Romeo and Juliet" was enacted which never was on any 1959 program and Louis Armstrong, who was striken and recovered with more publicity than all of Spoleto had had up to then, was supposed to play for Sullivan in a Roman (excavated) theatre, both of which never figured in any of the scheduled shows.

Last week's highlights here included Sir John Gielgud's "Ages of Man" which was enthusiastically appreciated by a large public of Anglo-saxons as well as highclass Italians (educated by English nannies) and bi-lingual intellectuals.

The other theatre evening—in effective contrast with this one—was the performance of two (world-premiered) one-act plays by William Inge ("The Tiny Closet") and Tennessee Williams ("The Night of the Iguana"). Audience followed with perhaps more interest and wish to acquaint itself with the American stage than delight or unconditional approval.

The actors, Rosemary Murphy, Vivan Nathan, Arthur Storch, Patrick O'Neal and Thomas Milian did an excellent job and Frank Corsaro showed clearly that his directorial talents lie in this field and not in the operatic one—as he tried to prove with Prokofieff's "Angel of Fire." Paul Sybert did adequate sets, though the Williams play suffered from a small stage and poor scenic devices which did nothing to underline the rhythm and color of the play itself.

Ballet again triumphed with Jerome Robbins' "Ballets: USA," an almost repeat performance of last year plus a new work to no music and no scenery called "Moves" it was masterfully interpreted, danced and choreographed. There was applause, praise from press and public.

The people of Spoleto who up to now had to content themselves with the shows outside the theatre of arriving and departing audiences, had their wish fullfilled and assisted—at popular prices—on the church square at sunset at Verdi's Requiem Mass sung by Eileen Farrell and conducted by Thomas Schippers.

IF PRODUCT GOOD THEY 'SELL AWAY'

By FRED HIFT

If German films in the art houses aren't doing what they should, it's partly due to a lingering resentment and a resistance to them on the part of special audiences, Sam Baker, prez of Bakros Films, opined in N. Y. last week.

Bakros, which has a tieup with the German UFA, today rates as the largest distributor of German films in the States, not counting outfits like Casino Film Exchange, which cater specifically to German language houses. Bakros also runs the 72nd St. Playhouse in upper Manhattan.

Baker, who instituted a German policy at the 72nd St. house a year and a half ago, warned that, unless there was greater cooperation from the German industry, he would have to abandon the policy and switch to playing French, Italian and other pictures. "Operation of the theatre has cost us a fortune," Baker, who also runs a chain of houses on Long Island, said. "In the 18 months we've been operating the 72nd St. place, we've only had five pictures that did some business."

Raps German Producers

The Bakros topper blammed the
The Bakro topper blamed the German producers for refusing to share the risk, and for failing to support their showcase. "When they have a good picture, which is rare enough, they're quite apt to sell it to some independent for a lot of money. Only it doesn't do them any good. We don't get the film, and the distributor dubs it, so the Germans don't benefit from any success."

There is only one other established German house in New York. It is the Casino Theatre on 86th St., in the heart of the German district. The Casino plays German films without titles. The 72nd St. Playhouse uses titled versions and caters to an audience that isn't exclusively German. The theatre is generally considered to have a strong potential, provided it's given the product.

Baker said he had originally been strongly encouraged by the success of "Captain von Koepenick," which did well at the 72nd St. More recently, "Monpti" has done well too. The performance at the 72nd St. isn't necessarily duplicated elsewhere in the country, as Distributors Corp. of America found out with "Koepenick." There's now strong pressure on Baker to change the policy of the 72nd St., which would deprive the Germans of their single "art" outlet.

"I'd hate to do it," he admitted last week, "but I may not be able to help it. It's a good house, and it's getting potentially better all the time as the neighborhood develops. Also, with the Beekman Theatre, a little further downtown, going first-run, we could become the moveover house. I'd like to give the German pictures a chance, but you can't do it if the Germans work against you."

Baker deplored the lack of German industry activity in the States. It's needed, he opined, to over-

Per-Film Earnings Up in Germany

Attendance Off 6% in 1958 — Austrian Features Slump, Italians Better, Yanks Down

Despite a 6% drop in attendance in 1958 and only a slight rise in total film rental revenue from all sources, the German films in West Germany registered a 3.9% increase in average per-film earnings during the past year. The Americans took a 12% cut in the average per film take and, despite more films in release, their total share of the market declined by 3%.

Statistics are included in the annual report of the West German film producers association, received in N.Y. last week. They showed the Italians registering the largest per-film gain (142.8%) even though in actual numbers of films released the Italians dropped from 36 in 1957 to only 19 in 1958. The Austrian productions took it on the chin, dropping 27.2% from 1957.

The report says one of the important problems facing the German industry is the one concerning the importation of American films. It notes that, in agreements with other countries, the number of imports into Germany is automatically limited. With the Motion Picture Export Assn., however, it is up to "self-control" or limitation by the Yank outfits. It adds that the German producer group "has always considered this an unsatisfactory solution.

Only answer, says the report, is an oral deal with MPEA, but even that isn't likely to reduce adequately the volume of U.S. imports. It does seem possible, however, to prevent the importation of Hollywood pictures more than two and a half years old, the Germans believe. The report adds that, with things the way they are, the Americans are eager for income from any source and are therefore apt to try and exploit pictures made between 1939 and 1946 and not yet shown in Germany.

"The aim now should be to work out with MPEA and the American Embassy a deal under which no films older than two and a half years can be imported," the report holds. Yanks in 1958 released 232 pix and earned 26.3% of total revenue. In 1957 they released 226 films and took 29.3% of the market.

The report shows that, in 1958, the Germans themselves produced 114 films, an increase of 11 over 1957. Total releases during the year—from all sources—came to 566 pictures. The Germans released 120 (including six reissues), the French 69, Italians 19, Austrians 23, Americans 232 and others 103. In 1957 total releases ran to 547, with the Germans releasing 111 and the Americans 547.

Statistics concerning the West German films show that, of the 114 made 54 were in color and 1 was shot in an anamorphic process. The largest percentage—41%—was made in Berlin, with the Munich studios next with 25.4%. The 114 German productions were turned out by 47 companies and included 15 coproductions. Export take hit a record high of 25,400,000 DM ($6,000,000) in 1958, a sharp increase from the 17,565,000 DM ($4,000,000) the prior year. The 1958 figure is an estimate and doesn't include earnings not remitted back to Germany.

On the distribution level, total rentals for all films were up only 1.2% in 1958 over 1957, rising to 365,000,000 DM ($91,000,000) from 361,200,000 ($90,300,000). In 1957, the increase was still 9% over 1956. Slight rise in rentals is opposed by a sharp dip in attendance, from 801,000,000 in 1957 to 753,000,000 in '58, i.e. a 6% drop. In part this was made up for via a rise in admissions and a drop in taxes.

The average per-film earnings for the 109 new West German films released last year was 1,585,000 DM ($390,000) or 3.9% above the 1957 average of 1,526,000 DM (381,500).

Brit. Producers Push on Co-Prod.

London, July 7.

The British production industry moves to get out a memorandum on co-production with Continental countries for submission to the Board of Trade are quickening pace. Latest step is to seek an early meeting with the exhibitor organization, CEA, this following a recent confab between the British Film Producers Assn., Federation of British Film Makers and the six labor unions concerned with production.

There's a measure of urgency to the deliberations inasmuch as the new Quota Act, into which conditions covering co-production would be written, is skedded for introduction next spring.

Hence, industry recommendations ought accordingly to be submitted much earlier. According to A. W. Watkins, president of the BFPA, the memo on co-production, which must necessarily take into account the views of all sides of the trade, should be ready before September.

24 Works From 16 Nations Draw 100,000 to Theatre of Nations

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Paris, July 14.

Third season of the Theatre of Nations concludes at the Sarah-Bernhardt Theatre with the five-day appearance of Jerome Robbins' "Ballets U.S.A." (July 14-19), which had opened at Spoleto, Italy.

Theatre of Nations season started March 20 and paraded 24 lyric, dance and theatrical troupes from 16 countries. It again enjoyed big support from Parisians, as well as tourists and foreign lingo residents.

Groups pay own way but get total boxoffice receipts for living expenses. Absence of language problems with musical and dance attractions helped them lead straight acting companies.

Biggest boxoffice went to the East German Comedy-Opera of Berlin. The brilliant stage effects for Offenbach's "Tales of Hoffman" won critical plaudits, as ditto the beguiling version of Benjamin Britten's "Albert Herring" based on Guy de Maupassant's comico-Rabelaisian tale of the deflowering of a village virgin.

Next money went to Spain's dance entry, the Pilar Lopez Ballet. The fine mixture of classical dance and frenzied flamenco and zapateado got out dance buffs for this.

Best of the dramatics proved to be Ireland's Dublin Gate Theatre with G. B. Shaw's "Saint Joan" starring Siobbhan McKenna whose earthy Joan got fine reviews and patronage here.

Attention, too, went to Brendan Behan's "The Hostage," done by the London Theatre Workshop, an irreverent romper that combined the bawdy, satiric and pathetic into a tale of naturalistic and epic feeling.

"Ulysses in Nighttown" is separately reported in another VARIETY story.

Operas

West Germany submitted the Stadische Opera of West Berlin and the Frankfort Opera in Richard Strauss' "Ariadne Auf Naxos," Wagner's "The Flying Dutchman" and Mozart's "Figaro." Latter two were done by Frankfort. All had fine staging and musicianship. Belgrade Opera did three operas to display expert staging and musical prowess. They were Gounod's "Faust," "Janecek's "Katia Kabonova" and Nicola Hercigonja's "The Crown of Mountains."

Sweden submitted a rather stilted classic in Hjalmar Bergman's "A Saga," and film people here flocked in due to the name of Ingmar Bergman as director. However, Bergman showed himself a more discerning film director than a theatrical force. Sweden's Stockholm Opera Ballet did a knowing "Miss Julie" but too much mime obscured the dance. West Germany's Schausupielhaus of Bochum did an expressionistic "Julius Caesar" of Shakespeare that obscured the play's beauty and humanism by trying to parallel it with Hitler.

Poland, Haiti, USSR

Poland sent the Warsaw Opera Ballet in a rather old fashioned romantic ballet "Mazepa" that denoted some good soloists but not much taking ensemble work. Philippines sent a beguiling amateur folk dance group, Manila Popular Dancers, for a charming if lightweight entry. Pilar Lopez Ballet was a solid Hispano knockout.

Haiti was represented by a folk dance group which was naive and had trouble transmitting its fervor. India's "Miss Vijayanthimala Troupe" gave some fetching classic rituals but repetitive. Indian National Ballet was more modernized but still evolving and now a cross between classic terp and a Yank-type musical revue. However, it was colorful and spirited.

Italy supplied the Morelli-Stoppa Company and the Gino Cervi Co. in Diego Fabbri's "Children of the Road," and Pirandello's "Giants of the Mountains" and Shakespeare's "Merry Wives of Windsor." All were well mounted and theatrically effective.

Russia submitted an eye-catching revolutionary entry in Vichnievsky's "The Optimistic Tragedy" which was old fashioned in its revolutionary tale but inventive theatrically and well received here. Finland was a negligible factor via an old verbose classic Kaj Munk's "The Idealist." Holland rendered Shakespeare's "Troilus and Cressida." Robbins' "Ballet USA" winds the fest with packed houses.

Theatre of Nations got about 100,000 visitors.

'Ulysses In Nightie' Wins Zero Mostel, Meredith Paris Critics' Praise

Paris, July 14.

A Yank originated off-Broadway piece, "Ulysses in Nightgown," adapted by Marjorie Barkentin from James Joyce's monumental novel "Ulysses," came in to the Theatre of Nations (July 7-10) as an English entry via the Arts Theatre of London. It was still directed by Burgess Meredith with Zero Mostel starring.

In spite of the hot-box aspect of the unairconditioned Sarah Bernhardt Theatre, work rated seven curtain calls. Though some French critics were baffled they all concurred on the acting of Mostel and the adept staging of Meredith. Some termed it the most unique offering of the TON season.

DON TESCHER TO HEAD HONOLULU COMMUNITY

Honolulu, July 7.

Don Tescher, director of the community theatre in Cedar Rapids, Ia., has been named managing director of the Honolulu Community Theatre, succeeding Jerome Mayer, who'll return to New York after directing "Guys and Dolls" this month and an August play.

Tescher, who's familiar with off-Broadway and summer stock dramatics as well as community theatre problems, is due in August for a "familiarization" period before assuming active management in September.

Cinecitta Plant Taken Over by Govt. Group

Rome, July 7.

Cinecitta Studios, among the largest in Europe, has been taken over by I.R.I., industrial grouping controlled by the Italian government.

Move was announced here today, with action said to have been taken by Ferrari-Agradi, Minister for State Participations, as part of a large-scale reshuffling of government-owned or subsidized organizations. Giant government-subsidized studio has in recent years run up very high deficits, despite the long tenancy of such U.S.-made items as "Ben Hur" and "The Nun's Story," both produced there during 1958.

Observers here note that it's too early to predict effects of this move on the studio and its personnel. However, the local hope is that the government will weigh the action carefully and go about any planned reorganization in cooperation with the film industry itself.

come the resistance that still makes itself felt against the German films. "The Germans are now where the French were years ago," Baker held. "But they're already acting as if they had decades of big hits behind them. They're asking a lot of money for the pictures." Bakros has a tie with UFA under which it can select given UFA pix for the States. It's taken three so far and has six more to go. "It's been a very discouraging experience," Baker said. "So far, we've had only one good picture from them, 'Monpti'." Bakros is selling it with the French title in the rest of the country.

"People will come in if they think it's French. I'm convinced that, once they are in there, they will like it. The problem is to attract the audience for a German film. Nobody here's very much interested in purely German problems. A German picture really has to be good to get attention. Personally, I think they should stick to the escapist stuff, the musicals, which people can enjoy." He cited the instance of the Apex Theatre in Washington, D. C. which staged a German "festival" and did well with such light stuff as "The Dancing Heart," "Beggar's Opera" and "White Horse Inn."

Baker said he had suggested to the Germans what he called a "fair" method of operations. He'd play the films at the 72nd St. theatre. If they're successful, Bakros would take them on for national distribution. If not, they'd just play at the house and Bakros wouldn't be responsible for print charges, etc. Tenor of the N. Y. reviews would be an influencing factor when it comes to making the decision.

"The trouble is that we haven't had a single German film that's broken through the barrier," Baker commented. "Once people get the idea that the Germans are capable of making fine films, which they certainly are, then, it'll be easier to sell these films. But such a breakthrough will never happen with dubbed product."

Close for U.S. Market

Berlin, July 14.

Keen interest in German features for the U.S. market was evidenced during this year's Berlin festival, and a number of important distribution deals were closed.

Richard Gordon acquired "Lila" and "Crime After School," while Irvin Shapiro bought "Dirty Angel" and "The Rest is Silence." Latter had previously acquired "Rosemarie." Emile Lustig acted as intermediary for both Gordon and Shapiro.

Lustig is also to act as supervisor on a German-U.S. coproduction which starts rolling at Spandau in September. The subject is "This is My Man," starring Mario Lanza and Caterina Valente, and it will be filmed in the English language jointly by Eliot Hyman, and Arthur Brauner's CCC. Ludmilla Tcherina is being paged for the lead dancing role.

Paris Discovers Lyon Co.

Paris, July 14.

Big legit stir has been created by an out-of-town company, the Theatre Villeurbaine of Lyon, headed by director-actor Roger Planchon. A month's stay at the Theatre Montparnasse has turned into nightly SRO with two Shakespeare entrics and one by Marivaux. Works have been given offbeat, unusual treatment with critics clashing over interpretations but audiences eating it up, perhaps proving that Paris is not the complete legit heart and center of France after all.

Planchon took Shakespeare's "Henry IV" and broke it up into two plays, "Henri IV" and "Falstaff." The audacious, dynamic staging made these bawdy, moving and seething with life with a feel for history in the making and the drama and comedy of power also pointed up. Played in an agitated, epic spirit these two made good theatre and critics were more or less in accord on this. It captured the verve, truculence and tragic spirit of Shakespeare even if the poetics of lingo were lost in translation.

But dissension broke out with Planchon's mounting of the usually delicate French classic, "Seconde Surprise De L'Amour" of Marivaux. Traditionally a muted tale of the fleeting, unsure movements and sentiments of two lovers, and a silken duel between two nobles, Planchon made this seeth with life and gave it a touch of drama and even tragedy. Some critics berated Planchon for sacrilege and falsifying of the original, but he did succeed in trenchant taking theatre again and crowds are going for it.

Company may get its stay extended and be a more regular Paris visitor with a probable government subsidy.

Mex Director Barbachano Thinks 'Artie' Dates In U.S. Plenty Honorable

Madrid, July 14.

Mexican film producer Manuel Barbachano, unlike most foreign film-makers, is not disturbed by the "art house" classification his features generally receive in the U.S. On the contrary, he accepts it as recognition of effort to inject original film concepts and creative techniques in the celluloid market.

His first two, "Roots," and "Torero," more than made the grade on the Yank art circuits. Asked whether he banked on general U.S. release for his Cannes-prized "Nazarin," the Aztec impresario shook his head negatively but said the Paco Rabal-Margo Lopez starrer should clean up in special situations.

With Metro and another Yank major distrib pressuring for world release rights to his current Hispano-Mexican co-venture, "Sonatas," it remains to be seen whether he can escape the "art" designation. South-of-the-border film mogul, however, is temporarily deflecting offers until after "Sonatas" makes an officially-invited Golden Lion bid as Spain's entry at the Venice film fest.

Getting a Venice print ready is a major task in itself. One hour of footage is being processed in Mexico; the other in Madrid. To film the screen adaptation of Valle Inclan's tale contrasting prohibited love under sullen Galician skies and the passionate unrestraint of sun-baked sangre during Mexico's turbulent 1830 bid for freedom, director (and co-producer) Juan Antonio Bardem shot so much footage, the producer seriously thought of releasing "Sonatas" as two distinct films.

Brought in for 30,000,000 pesetas ($600,000), "Sonatas" is the costliest production (sans Hollywood talent) on record for Mexico or Spain. Unlike Spain, producer Barbachano pointed out, location shooting is very expensive in Mexico where Bardem exposed more than half his negative with "Sonatas" stars Paco Rabal, Maria Felix and Fernando Rey (Aurora Batista is Spanish femme) and staged budget-heavy battles.

A leading figure in newsreel and screen advert production, Barbachano can only find time to produce one film a year. To date, each of his three films has been prized at Cannes or Venice. Confident "Sonatas" will provide stiff competition for the Venice Lion, he feels fest showing will bring better release terms from the Metro Lion.

U.S. STAR OKAYS 'NEW WAVE'

Gary Cooper Sees Younger French Producers Helping Pix

Paris, July 14.

Gary Cooper, not taciturn with the local press here, opined that the "new wave" of filmmaking in France, with young critics making pix, is a good thing. It was especially good because letting young talents get training without ruining anybody (producers). The fact that the films were also good, and paying off, was fine for everybody.

Cooper stated he would still not go to an acting school if he had his career to do over again. He might think of going if schools taught how to fight and not really get beat up, how to fall off a horse without getting bruised and how to get slugged without feeling ill effects.

Cooper said he had thought of forming his own production company, like most U.S. stars, but felt it would be too much trouble. He was fond of oaters but felt they had become too violent of late.

Cooper is on vacation in Europe with his wife and daughter after winding "They Came to Cordura" (Col) recently. Incidentally, he is one of the leading Yank film boxoffice names in France today.

Export Union To Boost German Product in U.S.

Berlin, July 14.

A blueprint designed to hypo the promotion of German pix in the U.S. was drawn up here during the closing stages of the Berlin Film Festival by Dr. Gunter Schwarz, president of the Export Union; Horst von Hartlieb, head of the local distributors' organization, and Munio Podhorzer, U.S. rep of the Export Union.

It will be carried to its next stage at a special meeting of the Export Union to be held either in Frankfurt or Munich. In its present form, the plan is dependent on aid being received from the German government in Bonn, the Economic Ministry and the Motion Picture Export Assn.

From the government, the Export Union primarily wants financial aid, as it has limited funds of its own; from the Economic Ministry it seeks goodwill support; and from the MPEA it is asking good advice as well as practical assistance in carrying out its mission.

Throughout the postwar period, the German industry has found it tough going in the American market. Last year, around 20 German films were sold to America, but less than one third achieved a gross of $50,000 or more. After paying 35% distribution charges, and meeting other overheads, there has been little or nothing in the kitty to return to the producer.

This year the Germans are more bullish, but even so recognize that they have a tough nut to crack. During the last two or three weeks alone, particularly as a result of festival activity, five locally-made pix have been acquired by U.S. distribs. It's estimated that at least five other major films also will be sold before the end of the year.

It's not the selling that worries them primarily any more; it's the lack of returns. It's in this connection that their main activities are being directed.

Italian Censorship Law Continues Till Dec. 30

Rome, July 7.

Current Italian film censorship legislation has been extended for the "nth" time, and is now valid through Dec. 30 of this year.

Move was made necessary when it became obvious that the long-proposed new censor law could not be discussed in full and passed before the expiration date set at June 30th.

RED COLLEGE FOR PIX

Actors, Craftsmen To Be Trained In Shanghai, Per Times

Red China last year produced 103 feature films, 1,120 cartoons and a number of documentaries. Ten studios are currently turning out color pictures, and six of the ten make films in widescreen processes.

Information was contained in a story filed to the N. Y. Times Sunday by Greg MacGregor, its correspondent in Hong Kong. He reported that the Chinese Reds were setting up a large motion picture training centre at Shanghai. A Chinese broadcast said the "College" would train actors, cameramen and artists to create animated cartoons.

The Reds earlier reported that their film audience in 1958 ran to 32,000,000, a 60% rise over 1957. New studios are being built, and pictures being turned out are produced with subtitles, which Chinese all over the world can understand. The films themselves carry a Mandarin soundtrack which most overseas Chinese do not comprehend.

Westerns Come of Age in France; 21% of U.S. Imports in 5 Years

Paris, July 14.

About 740 American pix have played in France from 1954 to 1959, and 160 of them, or about 21.6%, were westerns. In Brussels for the choice of the greatest films of all time last year, 117 film historians chose 609 pix but only 15 were oaters despite the fact that Hollywood always has devoted about one third of its production to cowboy epics and that this type of pic also has served to boost many actors like Henry Fonda, Gary Cooper, John Wayne, James Stewart, Jack Palance, Robert Mitchum and Richard Widmark to stardom.

These are the statistics of two young French film critics, Jean Curtelin and Vargas, who are making a study of the U.S. western film, its implications, meanings and history. The pair feels that the action production now has grown up and is no longer only for youngsters. The new westerns are now intellectual, usually liberal in viewpoint and dressed up with freudian under and overtones. They maintain that the oater is one of the most popular forms of films, and, though intrinsically national in tone and feeling, the most international in appeal.

French Analysis of Oater

They point out that the horse opera is a meeting of mythology and a mode of expression (or aspect of mass show biz and entertainment) which is the American gesture and outlook par excellence. The western, they say, has made the American Civil War western civilization's Trojan War and the trek west has become our Odyssey.

The original Westerns were deeply anchored in historical, geographical reality with a good measure of folklore. But the new ones use the past mainly through the viewpoints of today. Thus while the older ones were racist in their attitude towards the Indians the newer ones are anti-racist with the redskin often a hero. Eroticism, sadism and just plain exploitation of its physical aspects are now a part of the oater. Heroes rarely kissed anything but their horses in the old days while today some love scenes are torrid.

So like their discovery of the era of Chaplin, the French are now boosting the head-'em-off-at-Eaglepass pix into a deserving category. The crix maintain that too many exhibs underrate the Western and feel it has only a limited specialized following and is primarily for men. Critics, however, opine that there is a big distaff pull and audience for oaters.

Think Westerns Here to Stay

Though the cowboys are slowly being demystified, Vargas and Curtelin feel that the appeal of the individual of decent moral fibre forging his own way, but trying to find a proper place in society, is something that still holds great pull for audiences today.

Some feel that the Western might keep its place and even forge ahead with the new types and new interest being brought to it here by film crix and scribes who can wield a necessary influence on audiences. Yank majors are watching this and might add even more oaters to their necessarily careful choices for dubbing here since it is a quota country. If these critics have their way the Western will become synnonomous with quota.

Among the top grossers here last year, the oaters took a fair share of the loot. "The Vikings" (UA), really a Norse opera, took top coin, as did "Bravados" (20th), "The Big Country" (UA), "Man of West" (UA), "The Hanging Tree" (WB), "Sheepman" (M-G), "Cowboy" (Col) and some others.

Union Fines Director For Not Walking Out

London, July 14.

Leslie Norman, who directed "Dunkirk" and "The Shiralee," has been rapped over the knuckles by the Assn. of Cinematograph and Tele Technicians, and fined $140. Norman, and eight other members of a film crew, have been fined a total of $574, despite having apologized to the union.

Their offense was to disobey a strike call while filming "The Summer Of The 17th Doll" in Australia.

Tender(loin) Trap

Honolulu, July 14.

Hawaiian Village Hotel suspects that not all tourists are adventurous enough to enjoy raw fish, poi and other Hawaiian delicacies(?).

Luau menu now includes a steak for, as a press release admits, "those who are unable to eat our native food."

Chaney Does All Horror Sequences for New Mex Picture in Two Days

Mexico City, July 7.

Lon Chaney hit a new record here when he used two days, 12 to 14 hour acting chore, in completing all his scenes in the Fernando de Fuentes production of "The House of Terror."

"I had more photographers than staff," said a sweating but pleased de Fuentes after the final take. Producer used a battery of three cameras to shoot complicated sequences using Chaney from every angle.

The San Angel Inn Studios, where picture was filmed, never saw such a bustle of nervous activity and speed. Chaney was almost a quick change artist in transferring from mummy makeup to that of a normal human, and then a werewolf.

Actor took it all in his stride, even showing up for a 7:30 a.m. starting schedule, and was particularly surprised with the smooth way things worked out. Also, some of his suggestions to beef up terror sequences were immediately adopted by producer de Fuentes and director Gilberto Martinez Solares.

British Producers Join Britain-Soviet Assn.

London, July 7.

The British Film Producers Assn. has become a member of the newly-formed Great Britain-USSR Association of which Lord Attlee, Prime Minister when a Labor Government was last in power, is prexy.

The Anglo-Russ body was set up recently at the instigation of a couple of Members of Parliament, one Conversative and one Labor, who took a looksee trip at the Soviet Union. Idea is to coordinate all cultural exchanges between the two countries.

WB to Roadshow Its 'Nun's Story' in Britain

London, July 7.

Warner Bros. is to give the roadshow treatment to "Nun's Story" in Britain, the first time it has handled a pic in this way in recent years. Film is skedded to open July 23 at Warner Theatre, on a two-a-day, upped-admission basis. Associated British Cinemas chain giving it like treatment in several key centres.

Arthur Abeles, Warner Bros. European topper, on returning last week from the Warner Burbank convention revealed the setup.

He pointed up how WB tele production had absolved the company from the worry of studio overhead.

120 Cinemas in Hawaii

Honolulu, July 7.

Latest survey, made with the cooperation of both of Hawaii's major theatre circuits, shows there are between 120 and 125 commercial picture theatres in the 50th State.

Consolidated books some 99 locations and a handful of other non-commercial outlets. Royal books between 25 and 30 outlets.

Most of the 120 to 125 houses are conventional four-wall cinemas although several rural theatres actually are open air, bench-seat operations. Isles have few actual drive-ins, essentially because of chronic rainy conditions.

82-YEAR-OLD PEER OBJECTS

Lord Amwell Raps Metro's Poster On 'Mating' As 'Pornographic'

London, July 7.

Lord Amwell, 82-year-old-peer, launched a bitter attack in the House of Lords on a poster advertising Metro's "The Mating Game," now at the Empire. Amwell described the poster as "frankly pornographic."

In the Lords, he asked the government what procedure was adopted by the Board of Film Censors in viewing screenplays, and if its attention had been drawn to this. Amwell was reminded that the BFC had no control over posters and that its procedure had nothing to do with the government.

The Socialist peer insisted that steps should be taken to deal with "this constant glamorization of lust." A few days earlier he had rapped another film, "Look Back In Anger," which he declared contained "lines of unadulterated filth."

Charles Goldsmith, Metro topper in U.K., would make no comment to VARIETY on Lord Amwell's accusation. However, he pointed out that the poster "has satisfied all the necessary authorities and a very similar advertisement has been used in national newspapers, without complaint." Though posters in U.K. are often based on the American ones, Metro makes their own arrangements in Britain and can design or adapt at will.

Other Yank Majors May Copy N. Zealand Joint Distrib Plan in Aussie

Sydney, July 7.

Success of the 20th-Fox and Metro distribution link in New Zealand, introduced several months ago as an economic operational measure, is viewed with great satisfaction by other American distributors operating in Australia. It's predicted that before long N.Y. distribution toppers will set about reorganizing the Down Under setups via a new economy move to pace with the swiftly-changing cinema scene and the current biz dropoff.

Majority of American distributors are finding the operation of branch offices coast to coast here not economical, with many majors figuring the key biz could be geared through a Sydney and Melbourne head office, thus eliminating Brisbane, Adelaide and Perth. Figuring presently is that distributors could cover the minor keys by a general combo via one top clearing house similar to the one 20th-Fox and Metro used in New Zealand.

Distributors with a limited product outlet are finding the going fairly tough here at the moment. And with tele to commence soon in Brisbane, Adelaide and Perth, distribs are reported as keen to put their house in order pronto after viewing the boxoffice downbeat in Sydney and Melbourne, where tv has been building strongly for the past two years.

There has been a marked ease-off in the British distribution field over the last few months. However, the British product does not at present carry a 25% right of rejection as applied to American distributors here.

Robbins Ballet to London

London, July 14.

Peter Daubeny is to bring the second "Ballets: U.S.A.," of Jerome Robbins, to London for a short season, following the show's appearance at the Edinburgh Film Festival. "Ballets" opens on Sept. 14, and is part of Daubeny's varied, international program for the fall. First comes Michael Redgrave's adaptation of the Henry James' novel, "The Aspern Papers," with Redgrave himself, Flora Robson and Beatrix Lehmann, and it will be the first play in the newly-rebuilt Queen's Theatre, following John A. Gielgud's one-man Shakespeare sesh.

France's two big hits, "La Vie Parisienne," with Jean-Louis Barrault, and "Le Pretentaine" by Jacques Deval are in the Daubeny rep, and from Germany will come the original version of Brecht's "The Threepenny Opera."

Golden Day for Mex Film Producers Getting Govt. Coin May Be Ending

Mexico City, July 7.

The golden heydey of federal money for Mexican film producers may be coming to an end. Federico Heuer, head of the Film Bank, which shells out coin for picture production, indicated that his private feelings have been that less and less official money should be made available for making pix. This means that producers will have to seek angels elsewhere as their participation in budget percentages rises.

Heuer, who was a well-known economist before he took over his current job as the moneybags for Mexican films, said that present ratio of financing is more or less 55% by the Bank and the remainder by producers. This compares with the 70-30 ratio in the past. And the present reduced percentage may be even cut further if Heuer finds he can have his way.

The Film Bank has other uses for its funds, and what Heuer would like to see is a buildup of Mexican-owned cinemas in Latin America and Europe so that an assured market can exist for national product. Citing 1952 as a base year at 100%, Heuer said that Mexican boxoffice grosses abroad have risen by 208% in six years. This figure can be doubled, tripled, quadrupled and continue to grow, in his opinion, if Mexico builds up a network of film houses. He cited the success of the Mexico Theatre in Bogota, recently-completed, modern theatre which has been bringing in a satisfactory return.

But building pix palaces is a costly affair and Heuer admitted that, for the moment, Mexico cannot spread out in this direction. He added, however, that perhaps in the near future something can be done. It is this phrase that has producers worried because it might mean a rechanneling of Film Bank funds into the exhibition instead of the production field. Privately, Heuer has said he'd like a buildup of houses in the U.S., too, apart from theatres in France, Italy, Germany and England as well as key cities in Latin America.

There may be a shakeup in the distribution end, too, although Heuer was evasive about this. This is not his sphere in any case, he said (although he has a vote in decisions made by the Film Bureau). Further he has not had time to look over reports of the three major official Mexican distributorships, including Cimex.

Jorge Ferretis, Film Bureau head, who does have authority to axe the current distributorship setup, is currently in Berlin for the festival. But he is remaining on for a first-hand tour of inspection of Cimex European subsidiaries: Cimex-France, Deutsce-Cimes, and Cimex-Italia, prior to a reorganization. This latter will not be done pending his return here and submission of a report which will be acted upon by all official entities.

Golden Disk Montiel

Madrid, July 14.

Hispavox Record prexy Jose Vidal served a golden disk last week to screen star and song stylist Sarita Montiel whose recordings of "La Violetera" from the film hit of the same name topped Hispavox sales in Spain and Latin America.

In awarding the Disco de Oro, Vidal revealed September issue of another Sarita Montiel platter grouping tunes from her recently-completed starring vehicle, "Carmen of Granada." Disk release will coincide with "Carmen" premiere in Madrid.

German Film Prods. Go For Scandal-Type Pix After 'Rosemarie' Click

Berlin, July 7.

The German NF release "The Girl Rosemarie," which became one of this country's most sensational b.o. hits, has inspired many German producers to quickly came along with similar themes. Here are some of the new titles of forthcoming product — Fritko-Rapid-Union's "Truth About Rosemarie" (a sequel to "Rosemarie"), Cinelux-Cosmopol's "Decoy of Night (same topic, different lady), Filmaufbau-Europa's "The Man Who Sold Himself" (attacks against the new rich German society and the country's scandal press) and Omega-NF's "Our Wonderland At Night." Last-named probably tops them all. It attacks just about everything from industry barons to prostitution and juvenile delinquency.

Although not always admitting it, these producers' prime object is to make "a nice amount of money" via such pix. There are also some producers who insist that aside from the financial angle, they have in mind also what they call "social-criticism." Some of their recent efforts failed to convince. Attacks against this or that evil have been exaggerated to such a degree in some cases that their efforts or messages rang untrue. "Man Who Sold Himself" is a characteristic recent example along this line.

Many patrons are, as usual, indifferent to this trend in pix. As many others favor this trend because they favor any opposition to so-called evil in society.

Assoc. British Net For '58-'59 Up to $6,465,000

London, July 7.

Group profits, before tax, of Associated British Picture Corp. for the year ended March 31 totaled $13,286,000 as compared with $7,906,000 for 1957-58. Total dividend for year of 60% is double the previous year's rate. The net of $6,465,000 was against $3,314,000 of the '57-'58 period.

Though it's not possible to assess how much of the group profits come from the wholly-owned subsidiary ABC Television, the commercial web operating in the Midlands and North at weekends, it is estimated that three-quarters of current profits came from the same.

'Darby O'Gill,' on First Date, Okayed by Irish

Dublin, July 7.

Walt Disney's "Darby O'Gill and Little People," after a preem at the 3,500-seat Theatre Royal, moved over to the 990-seat Metropole, No. 1 house of Odeon group in Ireland, for an extended run. Irish, usually touchy about stories which suggest they know anything about leprechauns and "little people," have taken to the pic with enthusiasm and warm notices.

The fact that the two leads, Albert Sharpe and Jimmy O'Dea, are both known as vaude and revue players here has been a help to acceptance.

Stolz's Swiss Operetta Opens in Italy July 25

Trieste, July 14.

Robert Stolz's Swiss operetta, "Gruezi," alternately titled "Heavenly Blue Dreams" in its sundry mid-Europa productions, will have its Italian premiere here July 25 in the big open-air theatre of the San Giusto Castle. Italian librettist Mario Nordio has adapted it, and locally it will be called "Ciao! Ciao!"

The Philharmonic orchestra and the male and female choral groups from the Teatro Verdi are being recruited for the operetta.

'Cry' to Moscow Fest

London, July 7.

Eros Films' production, "A Cry From The Streets," has been picked as Britain's entry at forthcoming Moscow Film Festival. A joint committee of the British Film Producers' Assn. and the Federation of British Film Makers made this selection following their decision not to send "Carlton-Browne of the F.O." on the grounds that it was not suitable for the fest.

The Boulting Brothers, makers of the axed "Carlton-Browne." have written to the FBFM complaining of the selection committee's behavior.

Few French Pictures Made Up to 1954 Had Exportable Value, Survey Shows

Paris, July 7.

Although French filmgoers are supposed to be the most selective in Europe, and a renaissance of hit offbeat pix is now going on here boxoffice-wise, an analysis of figures from the Centre Du Cinema show that the hit pix from 1948-1954 usually were the fairly ordinary commercial entries depending on stars and rarely exportable.

In 1948, toppers were "Les Casse Pieds" (The Pests), "Aux Yeux Du Souvenir" (Eyes of Memory), "Barry" and "Manon." Of these only "Pests" and "Manon" played the U.S. and only the latter made much of a dent. Others were conventional romantico dramas.

In 1949, came the musical, "Nous Irons A Paris" (We'll go to Paris), "La Belle Que Voila," "La Beaute Du Diable" (Beauty of the Devil) and "Le Roi Pandore." Only "Beauty" hit the U.S. and this takeoff on the Faust story by Rene Clair fared poorly. Others were ordinary mellers and comedies.

In 1950, the musical "Andalousie" was tops followed by "Caroline Cherie," a sexy costumer; "Justice Est Faite" and "Le Roi Des Camelotes." Only "Cherie" and "Justice" made the Yank screens and both were flops.

In 1951, came "The Little World of Don Camillo," "The Wages of Fear," "Fanfan La Tulipe," and "Un Grand Patron" (The Perfectionist). All of them showed in U.S. arties but only "Fanfan" did well in spite of good reviews for "Wages."

In '52, came "Return of Don Camillo," "Violettes Imperiales," "The Butcher of Valorgue," a Fernandel comedy, and only the last two made America for only fair results.

In 1953, came the costumers and classics with Sacha Guitry's "Versailles," "Count of Monte Cristo," "The Three Musketeers," and a gangster opus with Jean Gabin "Don't Touch the Swag." Only "Versailles" made the U.S., and it was a highly-priced failure.

Two To U.S. in 1954

The year 1954 saw more costumers with Guitry's "Napoleon," "The Red and the Black" and "French Cancan." "Red" and "Cancan" made the U.S. with the former doing all right and latter not so much.

Yanks were found to go for offbeaters and arties which fare from well to fine here generally, but the commercial hits rarely make it in America or are even bought by Yank distribs. CDC also gave the star names that figured in the hits. Those with some appeal for Yank marquees, generally, are Fernandel, Martine Carol, Michele Morgan and Gina Loilbrigida. Top directors, commercially, were H. G. Clouzot and Rene Clair.

The new stars, like Brigitte Bardot, came after 1954, and changes have been wrought in public tastes. But it sums up that old adage that local hits are not necessarily international bets.

British-Spanish Trade Sanguine

Madrid, July 7.

British Board of Trade delegation met with government film authorities last week in an attempt to boost film exports to Spain, and found a favorable climate for dickering.

Board of traders, aware of growing acceptance for London product at a time when their exports here are half that of Italy and France, are seeking to bring British quota into line with favored Continentals.

Spanish distribs are also favorably disposed to increase, hoping to augment 1959-60 list strength with Hollywood product bearing the British quota seal.

PAMPA DRIVE-IN RESUMES

Pampa, Tex., July 14.

Pampa Drive-In Theatre has been reopened here under Paul West.

A new tower has been installed in the drive which is 50 x 70 feet.

Oslo Likes 'Windjammer'

Oslo, July 14.

More people paid to see National Theatres' Cinemiracle tri-paneler, "Windjammer," during its 29-week run here than the city's total population.

Film played to 401,320 paid admissions. City and its environs boasts 375,000 residents.

Film Biz Active In '59 Soho Fair

London, July 14.

The film biz is taking an active role in this year's Soho Fair, the week which got under way on Sunday (12). It is designed to glamorize and publicize the inhabitants of Soho and its visitors from all nations.

Robert Goldstein, 20th-Fox topper here; producer Robert McNaught and actress Marla Landi were among the judges skedded to pick the Soho Beauty Queen, who will receive a 20th-Fox screen test and a return jet trip to N. Y.

On Friday (17), British Lion will stage a Brains Trust consisting of actor Peter Sellers, film makers John Boulting, Frank Launder and Gordon Reid who will be on parade to answer any questions on films and film-making. Every day, at a big store on the edge of Soho, Walt Disney's Art of Animation Exhib is attracting visitors.

The Soho Fair covers a wide range of contests. There are legitimate show biz competitions such as a vocal group contest, an amateur jazz pianists' tourney and an amateur Jazz Group competition. Italian singers have a battle on their own and there is a Cartoon Film competition to be held by the leading film companies.

Added to these are a host of more cockeyed competitions such as a "yard of ale" drinking, a cigar smoking contest and a spaghetti eating challenge match. Waiters and waitresses' races through the beflagged streets of Soho, the "best barmaid," prettiest child, beauty and the "best beard" competitions.

Jazz bands in every street, surplus arrays of food and drink, a street carnival and a final gala Dance Night on Saturday (18) are all there to remind people that Soho is a district of hard-working, funloving, respectable citizens and not entirely an area of vice, thuggery and crime, as sometimes regarded by the casual visitor.

German Pix Stars Move To Switzerland, L'stein Trying to Avoid Taxes

Frankfurt, July 7.

It's no longer a problem of just making money for a German film star, there's also the problem of hanging onto it. And in an effort to keep more of their income, the German film and stage colony is gradually moving to Liechtenstein and Switzerland where they get a better tax break.

Latest of the young emigrants include recording star Caterina Valente, Sabine Bethmann, Karlheinz Boehm, Gudula Blau, Nadja Tiller and Walter Giller, who have all taken up residence in Lugano, Switzerland.

When leading German ingenue Romy Schneider marries French actor Alain Delon, they plan to live in Switzerland for the same reason.

Others who've recently taken up Swiss residence include former Hollywood director Robert Siodmak, now film-making in Germany, and Will Quadflieg, Heidemarie Hatheyer, Hildegard Neff and Anatol Litvak.

Allied Theatres of Michigan midsummer mid-state outing will be at Midland Country Club in Midland, Michigan, July 16. Includes lunch, golf, swimming, with business briefings and round table discussions.

LONGHAIRS GET INTO ACT

Light, Sound Spectacle in Athens Rapped, Patronage Falls Off

Athens, July 7.

The Assn. Nationale Des Sites de France and the National Tourist Organization of Greece for the first time in this country presented a spectacle which created quite a furor and controversy among local literary, longhair and show biz circles. This Light and Sound Spectacle, similar to those already scoring a good success in other parts of Europe, failed here. Patrons were seated on the hill of Pnyx to watch the alternate lighting of the Acropolis monument accompanied by music, sound effects and the reciting of a historical text.

Two shows are presented every night, the first one with a French and English narration and the second in Greek. Admission price was originally set at $1 top but after the bad local reaction, an extra added program earlier in Greek was offered for 33c admission.

Most of the local crix and longhairs claimed the show was a "blasphemy" against Greece's historical legacy, and urged the public to avoid attending its shows. The agreement signed between the French Organization and the Greek Tourist Organization, controlled by the government, looks to see a continuance of the show.

Vet Exhib Sees Expanded Mex Film Market

Mexico City, July 7.

Part of the film industry here received a stiff shot in the arm via the remarks of Antonio Orellana, vet exhibitor familiar with the Central and South American markets. According to Orellana, Mexico can produce and find a market for at least 150 pictures a year. And fully one-third of these, or maybe more, should be the quickies or "churros" as they are known here. The low-budget pix can be used to fill out twin and triple bill programs in Latin America, Orellana said.

"Mexican pictures have an enormous demand south of the Mexican frontier with Guatemala," Orellana stated. "This is logical for there is an affinity between all Latin American nations not only in the Spanish idiom but also in customs, ideologies and the trend now for a Latin American Common Market."

Orellana shudders to think that Mexico might drastically curtail quickie production, as has been advocated by official entities in the film field. They are a "necessary evil" and a "convenient" means of filling out programs. According to his observation, Latin American exhibitors are panting for Mexican product far above the twin bill, second-feature fare produced in Hollywood such as the oaters, crime and comedy series films.

While quickie producers are gloating over the Orellana statement, the official distributorships and the Film Bureau are not too much impressed. They know from hard experience that the "churros" are just that—an industry headache that, perhaps, makes small profits for the producers but surely does not win any recognition for the Mexican industry on the international level.

'80 Days' Winds 2-Year London Run at $1,000,000

London, July 14.

"Around The World In 80 Days" ended its longrun at the Astoria Theatre Saturday (11). The Mike Todd hit played for two years and one week and has been seen by approximately 1,200,000 people.

It has been shown as a theatre attraction, with bookable seats and separate performances. Pic has been playing to near capacity throughout its run.

The management was cagey in discussing the b.o. takings of "80 Days," but the 1,400-seater was good for $12,600 a week in its early stages, so its figured the film registered at least $1,000,000.

The pic will be replaced by "Sleeping Beauty" on July 29.

Brit. Producers Think About New Gov't Aid As Native B.O. Skids

London, July 7.

Although they're not at present contemplating a fresh approach to the Board of Trade to get an increase in the British production levy, film-making interests here are keeping a keen and worried watch on cinema takes throughout the U.K. with that notion at the back of their minds. It's claimed that only the compulsory levy keeps British production on a firm basis, and if the present downward trend of b.o. receipts continues then the level of production might well decline, too, unless further help were forthcoming.

To sime degree, the drop in home market takings is being compensated for by upped earnings overseas. But a spokesman of the British Film Producers Assn. declares that these will have to grow much more if the native pix decline is to be offset completely. To some degree, this explains the BFPA's current intensified activity in seeking government cooperation to get foreign restrictions eased or removed. A recent deputation attended the president of the Board of Trade, Sir David Eccles, to receive a sympathetic hearing and to learn that "certain measures" are already being taken.

Any eventual application for an increased levy on cinema receipts to aid production would inevitably cause a storm, with exhibs giving out with most of the folked lightning. The producers would stand firm, though, on the score that the further cut in product supply that would come elsewise would have grave effects on the industry as a whole.

Just Where We Came In

Barrhead, Scotland, July 7.

First film shown when the Center Cinema opened here exactly 20 years ago was "Robin Hood."

When the cinema shuttered for all time this week, the pic for the final program was "Son of Robin Hood."

Jeanson Blasts New French Prods.

Paris, July 14.

Screenwriter, playwright, librettist, ex-film and legit critic Henri Jeanson, most noted for his devastatingly witty summing up of the faults (rarely the merits) of both friends and enemies, let fly this week on an interview on a tele program here.

Jeanson sounded off primarily against the co-called "new wave" of filmmaking composed mainly of ex-film critics who have been blasting him as a pic scenario hack for some time. He felt these newcomers made films about a restricted conventional world in which the characters heaved great cries of revolt but took off their shoes so as not to dirty the clean floors.

Jeanson pointed out that he wrote "Jenny," which was well made by Marcel Carne in the early talky days when the French industry hardly existed.

Jeanson opined that the new directors feel they have accomplished a revolution but have only added some personnel to the industry. He especially singled out Francis Truffaut, who won the direction prize at the Cannes Fest for his first pic "The 400 Blows," and said "Blows" was a film for choir boys in spite of the cries of its revolt in showing an adolescent in crisis, and that it deserved its Catholic prize. It was not a revolution, just a miracle.

He claimed these newcomers were at the age when they felt they invented everything they named. To him the "new wave" was all in a teacup, and it did not even run over. He felt that young authors were lazy and the old ones tired. Jeanson also lashed out at crix in general who, he felt, talked with the assurance of their ignorance. However, he did have good words for directors Alain Resnais and Marcel Camus, who came from documentary making and assistant work to make two prizewinning pix on their first tries with "Hiroshima Mon Amour" and "Orfeu Negro," respectively.

Cinema Owners to Get Some Tax Relief From British Finance Measure

London, July 7.

The government's Finance Bill reaches its report stage in the House of Commons this week, virtually a formality before the measure becomes law. Chief item of interest to show biz is that the government has agreed to reduce the admissions tax following the lines indicated during debate in the committee stage, exempting cinemas from the first $56 of tax in any week.

Major departure from the revision as anticipated is that the relief shall start from Aug. 2, not retroactively back to April 11 as had been suggested. The government's clause also extends relief to persons who share the use of a cinema, each only using the place for a few days a week.

In total effect, where admission tax chargeable in any one week exceeds $56, the person concerned shall be entitled to deduct that sum from the amount he'd otherwise be required to pay. Where the tax doesn't exceed $56 he'll pay nothing.

Relief given will, it's estimated, amount to around $7,000,000 in a full year.

See Cannes Kudos Aiding Pix at B.O.

Paris, July 14.

Current firstrun boxoffice reports definitely point up how the Cannes Film Fest can boost pix to hit proportions. The three French prize-winner feature pix, mostly offbeaters, are turning out to be blockbusters in first-runs here.

The films in question would have been art or specialized entries, it's felt here, without the help of the Cannes awards. Besides the hoopla, the big biz racked up has industry eyes on offbeat subjects for a new filmgoing audience. Biggest hit is the Cannes Golden Palm winner, "Orfeu Negro," made in Brazil by Marcel Camus. It is socko and breaking summer attendance records at two houses plus foreign sales piling up. Ex-critic Francois Truffout's "Les Quatre Cents Coups" (The 400 Blows) also is rated a first-run hit.

Most chancey of the three was Alain Resnais' "Hiroshima Mon Amour," a pic made in Japan about a love affair between a French woman and a Japanese man. This would have found it hard going even in arty spots. Instead, with the Cannes' prestige it is drawing crowds at two first-runs. Foreign sales are slower for this one.

French actress Simone Signoret's acting kudo at Cannes for her role in the Anglo pic, "Room at Top" (Cont) helped it here where shaping big in two houses. "Compulsion" (20th) got the male acting kudo but biz is only fair here.

British Reps to Talk Italo Export Renewal

London, July 7.

The presidents of the two British production organizations, Lord Archibald of Federation of British Film Makers and A. W. Watkins of British Film Producers Assn., plan to go to Rome Oct. 23 to talk the renewal of the agreement on the export of dubbed pix to Italy.

The confab was due to take place last month, but the Italian industry reps suggested that, as new legislation was being discussed, it was better to wait and see what emerged first. The existing BFPA-ANICA agreement has accordingly been extended for three months or to Nov. 30.

'Motivation' Key To Antitrust If Pool Of Exhibs Buys Post-'48 Libraries

Washington, July 14.

Present Justice Dept. Antitrust Division attitude on the sale of post-1948 film libraries—according to a reliable source who knows what he's talking about—can be summed up as follows:

(1) No one company, group of companies, trade association or anyone else can purchase all the after '48 films for the purpose of keeping them off television. Justice considers that "an unlawful purpose" under anti-monopoly laws.

(2) Yet, Justice figures that exhibitors have the same rights as tv to go into the market to acquire programming. The Antitrust Division green light would probably apply to any exhibitor who seeks to buy certain outstanding motion pictures within the libraries, when the intent is to reissue them to earn money from motion picture theatre patronage.

(3) Antitrust Division lawyers intend to have a definite "show me" attitude on any of the pictures bought by exhibitors. If a film which didn't make much money originally is acquired, distributor and exhibitor will probably be required to justify the reasoning behind the purchase. In fact, questions could be asked on any deal, regardless of money-making potential of films involved. Justice doesn't intend now to permit any post-1948 sales to go unnoticed and without some investigation.

Can't Be Forced

(4) No distributing company can be forced to sell its film libraries to anyone. Yet, decrees and antitrust laws, in the opinion of Justice lawyers, forbid any distributor from agreeing with other distributors (or with exhibitors) to refuse to sell films to tv. There can't be collusion involved in holdouts.

An Antitrust Division spokesman confirmed that there have been "discussions" between Government lawyers and representatives of the film industry on possible sales. But, he emphasized, that all the talk has been in the "preliminary" category. Justice has not yet been asked to pass judgment on any specific deal.

DOWNTOWN L.A. PAR DOOMED TO COMMERCE

Los Angeles, July 14.

Downtown Paramount Theatre, acquired six months ago from AB-PT by Beverly Hills investor David Shusett, will be razed in about 18 months and a large office building erected, according to present plans.

New owner's son, Ronald, reported that contracts already had been closed with a contractor to tear down midtown structure, built in the early 1920's, for purpose. Possibility exists that a small theatre may be included, but matter isn't yet settled. DP, which when opened was known as the Metropolitan, presently seats 3,000, largest film house in L.A., and is a firstrun situation.

Catholic Legion Hates 'Lady,' Raps Adultery

The Roman Catholic National Legion of Decency has condemned the French import, "Lady Chatterley's Lover," because it condones adultery. The rating is as of July 14. The U.S. Supreme Court recently reversed a N. Y. censor ban on the picture, arguing that the state had no right to nix a film because it advocates an idea contrary to current moral standards.

Explaining its "C" rating, the Legion said: "This film, both in its development and solution of the plot, condones adultery. As such it constitutes an unconscionable attack upon a fundamental tenet of Judaeo-Christian morality. This is all the more reprehensible when such an attack comes through a mass medium of entertainment which, in our American society, is devoid of reasonable safeguards for the young and the impressionable."

The N. Y. Times, in its review of the film, called the uproar over it "absurd" and Justice Felix Frankfurter noted that stringent Victorian standards had to be applied by the N. Y. censor in banning it.

U.S. Rawstock and Gear Exports

Washington, July, 14.

Exports of U.S. motion picture rawstock and equipment have remained at a fairly steady high level during the past three years with Canada and Mexico the big buyers, a survey by the Dept. of Commerce reveals.

U.S. exports of motion picture film and equipment was valued at $31,818,109 in 1958; $31,473,416 in 1957, and $31,644,726 in 1956. Since 1949 the exports of motion picture film and equipment have almost doubled in value.

Canada is the principal world market accounting for $6,802,601, or 21.4 percent of total exports. Mexico ranks second with $2,843,579, followed by Japan with $2,827,061, and West Germany with $2,016,684. Other countries with $1 million or more in trade were the Union of South Africa, United Kingdom, and Switzerland.

Exports of motion picture equipment, including cameras, projectors, screens, and other equipment have been maintained at a high level during the past three years, with the peak year being 1957, with exports valued at $16,689,278, slightly higher than exports in 1956 and 1958.

Increase in foreign sales of 8-mm. moton picture cameras and projectors has been notable in recent years. While in 1955, the camera exports were 31,559 units valued at $952,171, they increased 85 percent to 57,648 cameras valued at $2,361,196 in 1958. Exports of 8-mm. unexposed film recorded a sharp increase in 1958.

MPAA and C. of E. Meeting; Unkown About Presidents

The long-delayed second meeting between representatives of the Motion Picture Assn. of America and the American Congress of Exhibitors has been scheduled to take place between the end of July and the second week in August. The exact date will be set when it is determined that all parties are available. It's expected that some of the presidents of the major film companies will participate, but there is no certainty as to the identity and to the number of the company toppers who will join the session.

The fact that a second meeting has been scheduled was revealed to the Congress of Exhibitors yesterday (Tues.) by S. H. Fabian, chairman of the Congress, and Sol C. Schwartz. Both Fabian and Schwartz have been holding informal sessions with MPAA chief Eric Johnston to determine what subjects will be discussed at the joint meeting. It was learned that agreement was reached between Johnston and the exhibitor reps that certain topics would not be introduced. Trade practices, however, was not among the topics knocked out.

Los Angeles, July 14.

National Theatres and National Telefilm Associates, which NT recently acquired, will be housed under one roof, when latter moves its headquarters from N. Y. to the Coast Oct. 1.

Theatres which for years has occupied a block on L.A.'s Film Row, will transfer its operations to new headquarters in Beverly Hills, first major outfit to leave the Row.

NTA execs shifting to Coast will include board chairman Ely A. Landau, prexy Oliver A. Unger, exec vp-NTA International prexy Harold Goldman and vp-administrator David J. Melamed.

Only NTA divisions remaining in Gotham will be NTA Program Sales, NTA Telestudios, the Owned and Operated Stations Division and the booking and shipping departments.

Hub's 'Ben-Hur' Hopes

Boston, July 14.

Ben Sack, who has lined up the New England premiere of Metro's "Ben-Hur" due at his Saxon around Thanksgiving, is planning all-out promotion. Echoes Metro, is predicting a two-year run.

"Ben-Hur" played its first engagement in Boston as a legit spec at the Colonial Theatre in 1900.

Allens Exit Canadian Distribution As Columbia Pictures Makes It 100%

Toronto, July 14.

Details were completed today (Tues.) for the sale of Premier Operating Corp.'s 50% interest in Columbia Pictures of Canada Ltd. to Columbia Pictures. Col owns the other 50% and will now have 100% ownership of the Canadian distribution setup. Col officials were here over last weekend to discuss the final arrangements. The film company revealed the takeover in New York about two weeks ago, which was then reported in VARIETY.

This means the disappearance from the Canadian distribution field of Jule and Herb Allen. Louis Rosenfield, former v.p. of Premier now assumes the position of president and general manager of Columbia Pictures of Canada. He is a brother-in-law of the Allens. Harvey Harnick remains as sales manager.

Pioneering the operation of theatres in Ontario and Quebec and also in the western provinces during the past 50 years, Premier also operated several theatres in Canada under the title of Theatre Holding Corp. Ltd., of which Famous Players Canadian owned 50%. Recently Theatre Holding Corp. built two theatres at Elliot Lake, a Canadian uranium center, and has been awarded the theatre franchise at the new town site of Thompson, Manitoba, being built by the International Nickel Co. The theatre is now under construction.

No move is contemplated by Columbia of Canada from its Toronto headquarters building. Nor is a change in personnel expected despite the sale of the Allen interests, which sees them out of film distribution after a 50-year history in Canadian film business. They came to this country from Bradford, Pa. and opened their first Canadian house, the Theatorium, in a reconverted store in Brantford, Ontario, in 1906.

Twenty years later, they were given the Columbia franchise for Canada and changed the booking company name from Independent Fims to Columbia Pictures of Canada. Included in the Premier sale is its one-third interest in Carlton Automatic Vendors, one of the largest operators and distributors of vending equipment in Ontario, with one-third also each owned by Famous Players Canadian and Trans-Canada Distributing Co. Earlier this year, the Elliot Lake Hotel was opened by Premier Operating Corp. at Elliot Lake, Ontario. This is an investment of $1,000,000 in partnership with Paramount Construction Co. in line with Premier's policy of diversification.

Alf Hitchcock's 'Chase' in Studio Chagrins U.S. Dept. of Interior

Washington, July 14.

High Interior Dept. officials are complaining that the agreement between the National Parks Service (Interior subsidiary) and Metro was violated in the filming of the new thriller, "North by Northwest."

They don't intend to do anything about it at this time, except possibly request Metro to rewrite the credit given the Interior Dept. in the film. Its present working, Government execs believe, implies Cary Grant and Eva Marie Saint actually were chased between the huge heads of George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt carved in a mountain at the Mount Rushmore National Memorial (S.D.) Chase was instead shot at a Hollywood mockup.

Larger gripe with Metro and producer-director Alfred Hitchcock is written agreement with which Parks Service gave Metro permission to take longrange shots of the national shrine. The agreement, Interior says, specifically states: "No scenes of violence are to show the sculptures (of the Presidents) or the talus slope (area between the heads) in the background."

"The movie," one official said, "is a per se violation of this agreement. We don't intend to stop MGM from showing the picture, but if we receive sufficient complaints from the public about the desecration of a national shrine, we will have to make the record clear on what the agreement provided and who failed to live up to it."

Before Interior Secretary Fred Seaton is the issue of whether to request a revised credit line. The one now carried states: "We gratefully acknowledge the cooperation of the U.S. Department of Interior and the National Parks Service in the actual filming of scenes at Mount Rushmore National Memorial, S.D."

(One Interior man reports he understands some United Nations officials are stirred up because the film depicts a murder taking place within the U.N. headquarters building. U.N. had also given Hitchcock permission to shoot scenes there.)

AD FEDERATION ALSO HEARS FROM SEX FOES

Minneapolis, July 14.

It isn't only the film industry that's causing public resentment in a number of quarters by reason of the manner in which sex is stressed in advertising.

At the American Advertising Federation national convention here several speakers made the point that much of the advertising industry is "too frequently" remiss in this respect.

These speakers pointed out that considerable antagonism toward advertising and advertisers is being created by the frequency of "sex splattered" ads. There is criticism on many hands, it was declared.

Consensus of opinion seemed to be that unless the industry polices itself an angry public will demand governmental regulation and censorship of advertising.

DON'T GIVE UP THE $40,000

Jerry Lewis' Latest Hits Metropolitan Nabes First Off

"Don't Give Up the Ship," starring Jerry Lewis, opened at New York neighborhood theatres last week because, as a source at Paramount put it, Lewis is more at home with "the neighborhood public than he is with Broadway customers." Par release has been doing well in the nabes.

Another angle, of course, is that a showcase engagement in Gotham entails an ad campaign costing around $40,000 and there's also house exepense to consider. Further, on Broadway Lewis' entry would have to compete with such product as "Diary of Anne Frank," "Porgy and Bess," "Anatomy of a Murder" and "Horse Soldiers."

Interesting aside to this is that "Ship" is playing top half on a bill with "Tarzan's Greatest Adventure." New York Times, in reviewing the program, gave Tarzan the top attention.

PACKAGED COLUMN FODDER

Emerling Worries About Film Eds While on Vacation

Thanks to Ernie Emerling, Loew's Theatres pub-ad veepee, newsmen who write about films need not worry about white space during their vacation stanzas.

Emerling has made up a special edition of "Movie Memo," published by Loew's Theatres since 1945 as a service to editors and columnists, containing six by-lined star interviews that can be used for columns during vacation periods.

The interviews include features by Eva Gabor, Joanna Barnes, Alfred Hitchcock, Martha Scott, Charlton Heston and Shirley MacLaine. Each feature is accompanied by art.

Academic View: Pseudo-Starring Crimps Pictures

Columbia, S. C.

Editor, VARIETY:

With great interest have I read in recent weeks several articles in VARIETY on the failure of the motion picture "The Diary of Anne Frank" to live up to the expectation of 20th Century-Fox studios.

Numerous reasons have been advanced, such as, the great length of the film, the roadshow policy and subsequent high prices, the problem of having to "kill" time after work until the start of the showing of the picture, and others.

I do not pretend to be able to completely account for the lack of success of "Diary" but I feel another important factor to be considered in this dilemma has not been brought forward: that problem is incorrect billing.

Miss Millie Perkins, although she seems to have pleased most critics and has the central role in the film, is not a "star" although I read in a recent issue of VARIETY that she has been elevated to solo star billing in the film.

If she had some previous experience in this branch of the entertainment world or in some other field, it might be understandable that she would be given star billing, but she has no previous experience whatever.

The real stars of this film are known to literally millions of people all over the world—Joseph Schildkraut, Shelley Winters, Ed Wynn. They are the ones who deserves star billing. In all fairness to having the central role, Miss Perkins does deserve some special billing, but it could have been "introducing" or "featuring" rather than starring.

Purely out of a desire to try to help the motion picture industry work out its problems of "Missing Business," I want to call this problem of incorrect billing to the attention of the film companies. An actor is not made a star by a producer's decision to list the actor as a star. The public is not fooled whether they (the public) realize it or not.

Everyone would know immediately that something was wrong if a bit player received billing over Clark Gable. This is too obvious to be overlooked, but whether the public realizes it consciously or not, they know something is wrong when, for instance, Gary Cooper receives no greater billing than Diane Varsi and Suzy Parker in "10 North Frederick." In my estimation, the lack of success of this superlative film can be traced directly to incorrect billing.

The Palmetto, the largest theatre in my home town, had the good sense to post ads giving Cooper billing in letters two or three times the size of Miss Varsi's and Miss Parker's billing and the night I went to see the film there was a large audience present.

Likewise when Dan Dailey, long a favorite with motion picture audiences, receives third billing behind such luminaries as Joan Collins and Jayne Mansfield in "The Wayward Bus" the result is disaster at the box office. The reason: incorrect billing.

Similarly, it now appears 20th-Fox has evil designs on the greatest star of them all, Joan Crawford, in "The Best of Everything." I observed in VARIETY that she is listed as the star, but only at the end of the list of actors, after 20th-Fox' contract players have been listed.

By naming only 20th-Fox films so far, I do not mean to say that the other film companies are not guilty of the same error, but I find that 20th-Fox is more consistently guilty of this fault than any other studio.

Paramount studios, for instance, made a great mistake in the American ads for "Tempest" which stars Silvana Mangano and Van Heflin, not Van Heflin and Silvana Mangano. I feel this film, which is almost as good as "War and Peace," would have done considerably better had the rightful star, who is one of the most important personalities in the world, been given top billing.

United Artists, which doesn't often fall into the trap of incorrect billing, happens to currently be the envy of the industry. Coincidence? I think not. Although there are other very valid reasons for the success of UA films, I consider good judgment in billing to be one of the most important. One of their mistakes, however, was in "The Naked Maja" in which Anthony Franciosa, a little-known actor, received equal billing to the "one and only" Ava Gardner. The film has not been too successful and the error in billing is surely partly responsible. If a film has only one star, only one person can correctly be listed as a star.

M-G-M is apparently on an anti-Mel Ferrer campaign. A couple of years ago, fresh from his triumph in "War and Peace," he was given second billing to Pier Angeli, to whom the general public is enormously apathetic, in "The Vintage," a fine film which did nothing at the boxoffice. Also among Miss Angeli's supporting cast was Michele Morgan, one of the greatest of the Continental stars. Now Mr. Ferrer has third billing in M-G-M's "The World, The Flesh, and The Devil," behind Harry Belafonte and starlet Inger Stevens.

Universal has long been known for billing several people as stars of a film when only one is present. To cite only one brief example, "No Name On The Bullet" is listed as starring Audie Murphy, Joan Evans, and Charles Drake.

Having only a desire to help the motion picture industry prosper, I submit this letter pointing out what I consider to be a hitherto unmentioned factor in the "Bureau of Missing Business" category.

The public cannot be fooled. People still frequently go to movies to see the stars, I am convinced. Actors become stars only through gaining the favor of the public. An actress cannot be a star if she has no previous experience.

Is 'Airconditioned' A Sell-Point?

[OR NOW TAKEN FOR GRANTED]

Is it necessary for theatres to indicate in their advertising that their houses are air conditioned during the summer months?

Theatremen believe it's a must, but film company advertising men consider the notation as superfluous. The latter argue that the public no longer considers air conditioning a novelty and is firmly convinced that all indoor theatres are cooled during the hot weather season.

Why then, it's asked, waste valuable space to tell the public what it already knows. The admen feel that the space can be put to better use with selling copy for the picture. Already harassed by space-consuming credits, demanded in contracts by stars, directors and producers, the admen contend that the inclusion of air conditioning copy removes still another opportunity to tell the public about the product that is of immediate interest.

Crasto Selling Near and Far East For National Telefilm Associates

Franchise system of selling will be set up in the Near and Far East by J. Remi Crasto, who has been appointed general manager for the area by National Telefilm Associates and who also will act as special representative for American International Pictures.

Crasto, who used to be managing director for RKO in the Far East, will handle a lineup of films from both companies, but not in Japan and Australia, where NTA already is represented. He'll sell the NTA product to both theatrical and tv accounts and the AIP films to theatres.

Rather than set up his own sales agencies, Crasto said he'd license the films to local distributors who then carry the cost burden of duties, prints, etc. He'll move out into the territories next month to start selling.

Any theatrical sales automatically include protection against television showings for a given period of time, Crasto declared. He said that many of the countries under his jurisdiction already have television, but that it'd be some time before it develops sufficiently to throw off much revenue. Meanwhile, his NTA product has a good deal of reissue value and the AIP product hasn't been shown at all.

Among the NTA features he'll sell are "Armored Attack," "The Men," "Bells of St. Mary's," "High Noon," "Gulliver's Travels," and "Cyrano de Bergerac." The AIP films include such titles as "Aladdin and the Giants," "The Mysterious House of Usher," "In the Year 2889" and "David and Goliath," all of them in color and CinemaScope.

Crasto said it was reasonable to assume that he'd run into some censorship difficulties. Far Eastern scissoring was rough, he reported, but at least it applied to local producers as much as to the Americans. However, the native outfits can reshoot scenes whereas the Yanks can't.

There's been no decision yet on whether to try and sell tv film series to theatrical accounts, Crasto said.

FAMILY WEEKLY SUPP'S NAME-NEW-FACES GAG

Family Weekly, a Sunday supplement that goes to 182 newspapers with a combined circulation of over 4,500,000, is giving away $60,000 in merchandise prizes in a contest that asks readers to dream up professional names for Hollywood newcomers. The contest begins July 26 and is set to run for six weeks.

Photographs and brief biographical sketches of the performers will be published at the rate of one each week. More than 700 prizes will be awarded those who come up with the best names for the "stars of tomorrow" to use in their film careers.

"Judges" are Janet Leigh, Jerry Wald, talent agent Henry Willson and Family Weekly's Hollywood editor, Peer Oppenheimer.

The contest will be launched with a cover story on "How the Stars Got Their Names." Featured on the cover will be Doris (Day) Kappelhoff and Roy (Rock Hudson) Fitzgerald. Many papers carrying Family Weekly are tieing in with neighborhood theatres for lobby displays and screen trailers. Distributing newspapers are being supplied with promotional kits.

Plan 'Ben-Hur' Museum

Hollywood, July 14.

United Artists Theatres will set up a motion picture museum in forecourt of the Egyptian Theatre, chain's flagship on Hollywood Blvd., in conjunction with run of Metro's "Ben-Hur," which opens a guaranteed two-year engagement in November.

Display, which will include props, costumes, etc., used in picture, will be part of a massive renovation program mapped for theatre, a tourist mecca since its 1922 opening.

Exhibit will be separate from L.A. County's plans for a motion picture and television museum, officially passed and now in the projection stage.

A Working Sorority

A crew of eight girls washed windshields of patrons as they entered the ozoners which was to raise funds for local and state welfare projects the sorority aids.

Biz Better—But Only Because Product Clicks?

"We have the pictures and the public is coming," stated Robert Shapiro, managing director of New York's Paramount Theatre. He was referring to his own theatre and some of the other Broadway showcases.

The comment reflects the attitude of both the public and the trade to large extent. The film business in many situations is up —the man-in-the-street is buying a fair-enough part of what Hollywood has to offer. On the other hand tradesters in large number increasingly have become convinced that nothing sells pictures like the pictures themsleves.

It's this kind of attitude that—here's the big trade angle—impairs all efforts to get off the ground with any industry institutional endeavors. The Council of Motion Picture Organizations is far from being well supported. And the Motion Picture Industry Council is limping. The first is New York-based, the second had meshed in with Hollywood production; both were looked to for rally-'round-the-industry approaches to the public.

The immediate meaning of Shapiro's comment is limited; he merely stated that the film colony is turning out merchandise that the public is willing to pay for. But the intra-trade interpretations can be much broader. There's a general feeling that no one will shell out for tickets unless the picture is attractive. All the work in the world by a trade asociation won't help, unless the product has that undefinable lure.

ing countries, but this hurts the competitive standard and a new formula of presentation would be of advantage to buyers and critics alike.

Although there had been some advance uneasiness about the selection of the official American entry, "Ask Any Girl," the fact that its star Shirley MacLaine copped the femme acting honors was firstly a reassurance and secondly a reflection on the lack of strong femme talent in the other films. Indeed, immediately after the screening of the comedy, everyone accurately tipped Miss MacLaine for the prize.

On a social level Berlin provides special problems. With a press corps over 500 strong, with a substantial influx of overseas buyers and producers, plus a powerful local contingent, the potential guest list for any reception was well over 1,000. Organizers of late-night supper parties, who were openhanded with their invites faced a serious problem of congestion. Others who showed discrimination and selectivity ran the risk of making bad friends among those excluded, but provided great comfort for the guests.

With his limited budget Leo Hochstetter chose the latter course for the Motion Picture Export Assn. party after the presentation of the official US entry. The guest list was trimmed to 350; valiant, but not entirely successful efforts were made to exclude freeloaders, but the final result was a select American-style barbecue supper—choice of steaks or chicken—at the Hilton Hotel, with the restaurant decorated in a Western motif. And instead of the inevitable local champagne brew, beer was the main form of liquid refreshment.

Unifrance also cut its guest list for its midnight supper party, but the menu on that occasion was the more conventional cold buffet. It didn't match the originality or the ingenuity of the MPEA effort.

With more than 40 nations participating and almost all playing host at one kind of reception or another, and with the temperature often soaring into the 80's and 90's, the Berlin Festival was, in itself, a "paradise and furnace" for the energetic freeloaders. It was more of a strain on the conscientious reviewer who tried to catch the majority of the 26 features, plus the full length documentaries. The mileage of films unspooled reached an almost unprecedented level.

Others on bill include Jackie Hilliard, Moro-Landis Dancers and Jerry Rosen orch.

6-Months Analysis of L.A. Grosses

Los Angeles, July 14.

L.A. firstruns took a marked dip downward during the first six months of 1959, repping a 7.88% decrease as compared to the corresponding first two quarters of 1958. First 26 weeks of this year turned up $5,277,978 as against $5,729,305 last year.

Figures are based on an average of 26 theatres for the 1959 tabulation, compared to an average of 29 for similar period last year.

First quarter for 1959 grossed $3,000,345, a dropoff of 4.05% from the $3,127,194 recorded for same quarter in 1958. This year's second quarter tumbled to $2,277,633 as compared to $2,602,111 for similar 13-week period last year, a slide of 12%.

Growing downward trend was further indicated in a comparison between this year's first and second quarters. Second quarter lost 24% to the first quarter, but this to a minor degree was expected since first period included both New Year's and Easter weeks. Last year, second quarter dropped 17% from biz of initial quarter.

In an additional comparative note, lowest week this year to date—in mid-June—hit a bottom of $120,503, compared to a low of $164,178 during first six months of 1958.

While the overall average was down in gross for first two quarters of 1959, it's to be noted that Fox West Coast Theatres claims that several of its houses did better biz during this period than during similar span in 1958.

For the record, too, it's notable that comparative figures between Daily Variety's own tabulation of local firstrun biz and Sindlinger's weekly survey of the motion picture scene nationally are widely divergent.

Sindlinger reported that total May attendance was 17.3% above 1958, based on theatre attendance of adults and children, paid and free. While comparative grosses were not listed by Sindlinger, its report indicates that biz generally was up.

On the other hand, record shows a 7.37% decline for May, 1959, as against same month last year, $675,828 to $729,585. Only one week, the first week, was better this May than last, $168,446 against $164,178.

Based upon the great divergency of the two companies' tabulation, it may indicate that Los Angeles is one of the low spots of the nation. Comparative figures between the regular L.A. firstruns and those racked up in nabes and driveins, many playing simultaneous runs, are not considered in this survey of local film biz.

Dropoff in this year's grosses may be chalked up to lack of strong product, according to general concensus of theatre operators, which last year was far more apparent and was studded with blockbusters.

Many pix were held over for second and third weeks, due to this product lack, which shouldn't even have been considered for holdover weeks, according to one top exec. These holdovers vitiated returns which ordinarily would have been much bigger had product been available, he pointed out, and consequently eliminated better profits.

Growing practice of multiple engagements further thinned the take at regular firstruns, he added. Current trend of "dividing too little good product among too many situations" is taking its toll, in this exhib's experienced opinion.

Theatres which last year were reckoned with in final count, but not included this year, included the Ritz, Crest, and Sunset. Ritz was converted into a legit house last Christmas, and neither the Crest nor Sunset now are firstrun houses.

Is the 'Arter' Epoch Kaput?

Continental Reasons That Imports Must Be More Patently 'Commercial'—Will Co-Finance

On the theory that the era of the "art" film may be over, Continental Distributing Inc. is seeking a balanced release schedule of between 10 and 12 pictures a year, with the accent definitely on the exploitable product.

Included in the dozen or so pictures Continental will handle will be four or five a year which it will co-finance with foreign interests, thus reducing the risks.

This was reported in N.Y. by Irving Wormser, president of Continental and a vet in the foreign film sales field. Walter Reade Jr. is chairman of the company.

Wormser, still elated with the success of "Room at the Top," which Continental co-financed in Britain and on which it has an interest in the net worldwide, said his company intended to double its present number of five offices. Continental doesn't believe in subdistributors and handles all its own releases. "The subdistributors push whatever is successful," Wormser said. "They don't bother with trying to sell a picture."

Wormser said there was no secret in the fact that Continental was trying to switch to the more commercial pictures. "For some time, people were intrigued by the 'art' films. They represented something different. Now, they're looking for more entertainment." He said it was his impression, too, that the public was cooling off on the downbeat imports.

That's one of the reasons, he felt, why "Gervaise," despite excellent reviews, didn't click out-of-town. The picture did close to 60% of its total business in the N.Y. run. "Mon Oncle," for which Continental advanced $210,000 also was disappointing, but—said Wormser—"we'll make out on it." "Room at the Top" is going like a house on fire. It's been booked into virtually every circuit and is showing a remarkable consistency at the boxoffice.

During his stay in Europe, Reade bought "Ransom of Red Chief," a Fernandel starrer. Continental also has coming up "It Happened in Broad Daylight," a crime thriller made in Switzerland. Picture will be released with English dialog.

As for television, Wormser said Continental got the tv rights to its product, but stipulated in exhibition contracts that films wouldn't be released to tv for a minimum of three and a half years. However, he noted, there's a big revival market in the foreign film field, and it's foolish to sell to tv until and unless a picture is really finished in the theatrical market.

Progress Is Incessant

Washington, July 14.

Blest be the tie that binds!

The Dept., of Agriculture's Motion Picture Service has at last substituted a binding machine for the tedious and time-consuming process of wrapping film shipments and tying them with twine.

Foreign Threat To Eastman Via Color Rawstock

Unless Eastman Kodak decides fairly soon to reduce its price for color rawstock, it may have to face the threat of effective foreign competition, a major laboratory executive said in N. Y. last week.

Foreign rawstock producers, who already have dented the Yank mart with black-and-white film, are hopeful of being able to underbid Eastman, which now sells for $3.75 per 100 feet. They've been told that, if they could come in with 3c a foot, the labs would buy. It's questionable, at this time, whether they can hit such a low price level.

Both the Italian Ferrania and the Belgian Gevaert are looking to the U. S. market. In the black-and-white field, Eastman sells higher than Gevaert. In the color field, Gevaert is expanding its European facilities. At the moment, it's still incompatible with Eastman. However, it's working hard to overcome that problem.

Quote the lab exec: "It'd be a mistake for Eastman to stick to its high price and let these fellows from abroad come in. Once they're here, there's no way of shaking them. And, in the long run, it's the customers who decide what they want. As long as the quality is approximately as good, they always take the lower price."

Forcing Drive-In Cops

Concord, N.H., July 14.

Mayor Melvin Morrison of Dover has appeared at a legislative hearing at the State House here to join in opposition to a bill which woud force outdoor theatre operators to keep a police officer on duty during shows.

Morrison, a long-time film exhibitor, now operates an ozoner in the Dover area.

MISSISSIPPI EXHIBS KEEP GEORGE DAVIS

Biloxi, Miss., July 14.

The Mississippi Theatre Owners Assn., newest regional unit of Theatre Owners of America, will be headed again by George Davis, of Drew, Miss.

The Mississippi unit, which ended its two-day convention here last week by voting to affiliate with TOA, also elected B. F. Jackson, A. L. Royal and Stan Taylor as vice presidents. Ed Ortte was named secretary and John Williams elected chairman of the board.

Britain and Italy

Factor, too, is that blocked earnings of Hollywood of necessity are being invested locally via coproduction and other activities which benefit the local industry. This is particularly true in Britain and Italy. With the companies quite active production-wise in both countries, the volume of outgoing coin in addition to the regular, basic and official remittance, in effect amounts to free convertibility.

When Eric Johnston, Motion Picture Export Assn. prez, goes to Britain later this year, he's again expected to press for free convertibility under any new film deal; either that, or for a higher base transfer than the $17,000,000 currently permitted.

4th Great Plains Business Forum

Showmen Sit Around Table and 'Think'—Results So Far Held Much Worthwhile

Minneapolis, July 14.

Even midwest exhibition now is going in for what may be a new sort of the currently much spotlighted "science."

At least, Great Plains Business Building Forum believes it's taking a "scientific approach" to showmanship. And with gratifying boxoffice results, according to the Forum's chairman, Leo Blank, head of the Iowa Central States Theatre chain.

Members revealed at the Forum session here that they feel they're doing this by roundtable debate and discussion of important pictures which, using their combined influence, they've induced film companies to saturate in their areas. "Scientific" analysis and dissection result in a group decision as to the best way to sell their pictures to their publics, in members' opinion.

The Forum comprises owners, film buyers and advertising-publicity heads of some of the largest and most successful midwest theatre circuits, including, in addition to Central States, the Minnesota Amusement Co. (United Paramount), RKO Midwest Theatres, Fox Midwest of Kansas City, Mo., Missouri Commonwealth Theatres, Oklahoma Video Independent Theatres, the Eddie Ruben's and the Harold Field's.

The Forum was organized this year and this conference was its fourth.

Blank points out that the Forum probably has accomplished something new in an exhibition cooperative way by having even competitors put their heads together to help the boxoffice generally in deciding upon film campaigns and exchanging showmanship ideas and suggestions.

At the session here after dissecting and analyzing the forthcoming "A Private's Affair" "scientifically"—the Forum had succeeded in getting 20th-Fox to saturate the attraction throughout the midwest—it was decided that the best way to sell it in these hinterlands is as a young soldier's amusing and otherwise experiences in the army and his romance. Thumbs were turned down on Fox's proposed handling of it as a rock 'n' roll picture.

Original ads, campaign material, etc., for "A Private's Affair" were approved at the meeting. It was decided to stress radio use in selling it.

Thus far, previously, the Forum has given its attention to three other such saturated pictures—"Alias Jesse James," "It Happened to Jane" and "The Hanging Tree."

In the aforementioned instances Blank estimates that the "scientific approach," in place of following lines laid down in company press books or in setting up the campaign before there are any of the latter, resulted in 20% to 30% greater grosses for the pictures by those circuits playing the films than would have been the case if "heads hadn't been put together."

He points out that Forum members are in a better position to know how to sell their clienteles than those who prepare press books and that "many heads" of a number of circuits "are better qualified than any one chain's comparatively few" in deciding on how to handle pictures.

Blank avers that what the Forum is doing is for "the interest of the common boxoffice" because everything the group develops is made available for all other of the section's exhibitors, large and small—that is, the non-members.

He also might have pointed out that these Forum's circuits are highly successful ones in their areas and include some of their sections' best exhibition brains.

"We make everything available for all of our area's exhibitors because we want the entire exhibition industry to be as healthy as possible—it's to our own and film companies' interest. So we are lending a helping hand, not entirely unselfishly, to the littlest fellow to try to help them survive.

"Before we started making what we think to be a 'scientific approach' by putting our heads together we'd gross what we'll call 98% to 100% on the average with such pictures as 'Alias Jesse James,' 'The Hanging Tree' and 'It Happened to Jane.' That's when we were going it each by ourself.

"But using the selling methods agreed upon by the Forum we were able to bring up these percentages from 115% on 'Jane' to 170% on 'Hanging Tree.' Of course, the film companies benefit with us because the larger our grosses the larger the rentals they receive from us. And they've been glad to cooperate."

The Forum also has succeeded in getting Warner Bros. to saturate "Yellowstone Kelly" for it and that will be dissected and analyzed at its next session, it was decided at the meeting here.

SUE HIRSH HOUSES ON UNDER-REPORTING

Philadelphia, July 14.

A suit, charging cheating in the reporting of admissions to determine rental charges, was filed against two theatres here by seven major film companies. Named in the complaint in Common Pleas Court were the former and present owners of the Century and Spruce theatres. Defendants are Philip Hirsh and Bertha Hirsh, individually and as executrix of the estate of David Hirsh who died in Feb., 1957; Hirsh Amusements, now a partnership of Philip and Bertha; Allan Hirsh, and the Hirsh Amusement Co. Philip, David, and Allan, the suit charges, had been officials of the amusement concerns.

The distribs had leased films to the two theatres from Jan. 1, 1948 to date and the fees were either set at a flat rental or fixed by a percentage based on gross admissions receipts.

The suit charges that in July, 1957, it was discovered that many of the Hirsh statements were "fraudulently and intentionally false" and disclosed substantially less than the actual admissions. The distribs allege that the defendants had placed in operation a "plan and conspiracy" to defraud by regularly making such false statements.

Damages of more than $5,000 are being sought by each of the distributors—Warner Bros., Universal, Columbia, Metro, Paramount, United Artists and 20th-Fox.

Vintage Celluloid To Divert Summer Studes

Albuquerque, July 14.

Old W. C. Fields' "Million Dollar Legs" leads off series of six films on summer schedule of the U. of New Mexico Film Society here. Film will be shown twice on Saturday night.

Other vintage pix lined up for succeeding weeks to entertain summer session students and campus visitors are: Rudolph Valentino's 1922 version of "Blood and Sand," July 11; "Film and Reality," a documentary, plus "Make Way for Ducklings," a short, July 18; Ernst Lubitsch's "Desire" with Marlene Dietrich and Gary Cooper, July 25; "My Darling Clementine," with Henry Fonda, Aug. 1, and "Blackmail," 1929 Hitchcock production, Aug. 8.

Make-Way-For-Tomorrow Thought 'Guides' Foreman In New 'Young' Emphasis

Organization of his film production company to give young writers, producers and directors a break on smaller pictures was outlined by writer-producer Carl Foreman last week before he returned to his London headquarters.

Foreman, here prior to launching his next major production, "Guns of Navarone," which will be shot abroad, said he will augment his "blockbuster" schedule, such as "Navarone," with two smaller budget entries annually.

Foreman pointed out that the film biz is only concerned with "day to day problems" and that no thought has been given to developing the people who will make the pictures 10 years from now. In the old days, he noted, every major studio had a system for training and developing new writers, directors and producers. "The only new people entering the industry today come from television," he said. "It seems ironic that our only source of new creative talent is coming from the enemy."

Foreman asserted that the average age of today's producers and directors is 45. "In 10 years from now they'll be 55. Will they then have the same excitement and energy?" Foreman's plan to utilize the services of young writers, directors and producers on his smaller pictures will see him serve as sort of executive producer and advisor. He won't be involved in the actual production. "I won't do any of the writing either," he said. "The whole idea is to develop new people."

As his icebreaker in the small picture field, Foreman has delivered "The Mouse That Roared" to Columbia. The film was produced for Foreman's company by Walter Shenson, a former film publicist.

Foreman has mixed feelings about his role as a producer and as a creative screen writer. Since he "likes to write my own pictures," he finds it difficult to turn out more than one king-sized entry annually. As a producer, he finds that personal appearances, particularly in Europe, often help the grosses of his films. This, of course, cuts into his time as a writer, a situation that has created a dilemma. "I don't know how I can solve the problem," he commented.

As a writer, Foreman does not dwell in an ivory tower. He is hep to industry business conditions and has a keen awareness of promotional values. As part of his concern for the latter, he has shifted Irving Rubine, his pub-ad v.p., from London to N.Y. "New York is the publicity center of the world," Foreman said. "You can't make an expensive picture overseas ('Guns of Navarone') and expect it to be handled like a picture made in Hollywood. You are too far away from the publicity nerve center."

Although "Navarone," which will be shot on location in Cyprus, does not start until January and is not scheduled for release until next October, Foreman will begin the bally barrage next month in order to build up world-wide know-about. He said he deliberately delayed the start of the film so that he could properly launch the pre-selling selling campaign to make "'Navarone' a household word" long before the actual release date.

Intelligent Spending Vs. Penury

Alain Delon Thinks Young Directors Carry 'Bare Bones' Technique Too Far

Although he welcomes the entry of new and young directors into the film field in France, French actor Alain Delon doesn't believe in their "bare bone" approach to filmmaking.

"I'm against the directors who came in new and think they can make pictures by spending no money at all. That's not the way to revolutionize the business," Delon—himself only 25—said. "The public today demands certain values in pictures. As a rule, the men who make a couple of films at a very low cost tend to snap back and it doesn't take them long before they spend more money."

In France, the emergence of the new directors has been hailed a proof positive that good pictures can be turned out at lower costs.

Both Delon and actor Jean Servais in N.Y. last week agreed that there was considerable merit in French producers taking the risk of employing new megging talent. They also agreed that it was extremely difficult, if not outright undesirable, to have actors direct themselves in flims.

More Carl Foreman Trade Slants

Carl Foreman, indie producer for Columbia Pictures, from his remote perspective in London, where he bases his Open Road Productions, is greatly concerned that "if there's a picture business still here 10 years from now, whether it's for theatrical or pay-see television purposes, who'll do it?"

He is strong for an all-industry, longrange program to insure new blood as "today's present crop of producers matures. The average of the present-day filmmakers, both here and in Britain, is nearer the 45-year age mark than 35 years, and 10 years from now they'll be 55."

Foreman stresses this, in relation to "knowing what the kids, who are the bulwark of movie patronage, will buy." You can't do it from an ivory tower, he argues.

He personally is surrounding himself with young writers and production aides who know what today's generation prefers; their thinking, their ideas and their ideals (or lack thereof).

He points to the click of the horror film cycle as no accident. "I'm sure the big studios all scoff, 'Aw, who needs Frankenstein, we had it 20 years ago,' not realizing that in the meantime a completely new audience was born and is near the voting age."

"Another thing," he continues, "is the need to realize that tempus fugits, and the Cary Grants and Bill Holdens and John Waynes too will have passed their boxoffice peak and so we're back at that age-old 'new faces' cry. Where and how to go about? The idea of spotting newcomers in large-cast pictures, with some star of course to carry it, is obviously the time-honored and most practical exposure. It works best."

Foreman is strong for another facet and that is to break the Hollywood studios of the cliche habit that "a writer should stay in his office and write. The best way for a writer to grow up into a director and/or a producer is to be on the set and see and observe what really makes a picture production tick. I personally never learned anything like this in Hollywood—it was only when I was in the Signal Corps and all of us had to double-up writing, producing, expounding techniques and the like that I really learned something about practical moviemaking. Otherwise I might still be stuck in some studio office and told that 'a writer should stay in and write and not bother about production values' because allegedly he 'interferes' or 'suffers' because his dialog is handled this or that way."

Foreman went back to London over the weekend, and thence to Greece for shooting of "The Guns of Navarone" while his wife went back to California with their daughter since the Athens environment would be too hot for them in July-August.

Rebirth of Film Aggression

pictures that are available, and consider the costs only subject to discussions with New York, Balaban reportedly told Karp.

This is a twist from trade conjecture. Feeling has been until recently that Balaban was wary of the picture business, as such, and was willing to go along with only properties that seemed fully insured for success on the basis of ingredients.

In this instance the trade has a film corporation once again devoted to films. And this is to the extent that there's a willingness to hire the important people in picture-making, regardless of price, so long as there is some indication of a profit.

In this connection there's the information available that Par, under the Karp regime at the studio, once again is high on the talents of William Wyler, George Stevens, Billy Wilder, etc.—who are high-budget men—and Par would like to cozy up to them if they have the right kind of packages. The word from inside is that former studio chief Y. Frank Freeman was disagreeable to any production by an outsider that couldn't be "brought in at a price." In contrast to this Par is now willing to spend—and risk big money.

"Upstart" in the Hollywood scheme of things has been United Artists. This outfit, under president Arthur Krim and board chairman Robert Benjamin, came out fighting nearly 10 years ago. They were loaded for bear.

Krim, Benjamin and partners came in at a time when others were frightened, and they were not. They had confidence in the picture business and, perhaps even more importantly, were capable of establishing the financing for big productions, which paid off. The UA crowd established that an audience is waiting for major film productions, backed by a Barnum & Bailey campaign, and have been following through ever since. UA gambled with increasingly more elaborate features. UA has been proved right, so far.

Metro, Col and U, to name a few, are now going along with the production concept. Too, Paramount and the others. They'll buy production packages and listen to agents' demands that heretofore were regarded as outlandish. They'll share the wealth via the participation deals when there's wealth to be shared and assume the production risks via the financing.

Carter, who bought out control of Republic from Herbert J. Yates, is a newcomer to the picture business, and he has yet to make any public announcements. But informed sources say he's of a mind to get back in the theatrical business—which Rep, under Yates, abandoned—in a big way.

There will be no new distribution setup, such as the one Rep once maintained. But there will be a strong production program with the accent on the investment big-time, as contrasted with the low-brow comedies, westerns and serials which Rep in past turned out. At least, this is the way an associate of Carter's calls the turns for the future.

And so it shapes up. There'll be more bidding for talent—perhaps the greatest amount in the history of the industry—as the people in command of Hollywood trend to the conclusion that pictures with talent can make money and the N.Y. people who can call the turns are willing to spend it.

A Commentary

Discussing Hollywood's impending production push, an eastern film distribution v.p. said there's likely to be on the horizon the greatest intra-show business talent raids in history.

As he stated it, the American picture industry is desperately in need of production and acting craftsman. This is particularly so as concerning the male performers who are aging beyond the call of cinematic romantic duty.

So Hollywood is about to go to the proving grounds— namely, tv.

Watch, too, he said, the Hollywood raids on video's producers, directors and writers.

Masked spokesman said the Hollywood studios are becoming increasingly aware of a public appetite for superior theatrical productions and want the talent to dish them out. Ironically, the Hollywoodites are going to the medium (tv) which, because of its alleged shortcomings, is "driving the public back to theatres," states the film source.

This is not the case, of course. West Coast execs are looking to the best in tv for conversion purposes, and are eschewing the practitioners of the routine.

Perlberg Testifies

William Perlberg (-Seaton Productions), currently East for "But Not For Me" testifies of the new "aliveness" of the Paramount studio since Jack Karp took over. Karp attorney who handled most of the Par studio negotiations, "has Barney (Balaban) all steamed up about the need for more picture production," says Perlberg, "and the studio is bubbling with the new deals he's instigating."

Perlberg points to his own, Hal Wallis, Shavelson-Rose, the Ephrons and others as typical of the "independent setups" which seem to be the continuing keynote of the Par production formula.

Practices Condemned, But Uncorrected

Myers Sees Need for Improved Remedial Laws—Rebukes Sam Goldwyn as Preacher of Pessimism

If the antitrust division of the Dept. of Justice continues its alleged laxity in enforcing the consent decrees, the only course open to exhibitors is remedial legislation, according to Abram F. Myers, Allied States Assn.'s general counsel.

Myers contends that the antitrust division's interpretations of the injunctions in the Paramount case has reduced the precedent-setting decision to a "mere scrap" of paper. He argues that exhibitors now find themselves in the strange position of being "victimized by practices" which the courts condemned, but which the decrees do not reach.

Myers' plea for remedial legislation follows an extended condemnation in Allied's latest bulletin of the statements and practices of Samuel Goldwyn. Myers soundly raps Goldwyn for harping on that "threadbare cliche—fewer pictures and fewer theatres." He charges that at the launching of "Porgy and Bess," Goldwyn—as has been his custom—holds a press conference "at which he airs his opinions on all phases of the motion picture business." This time, says Myers, he repeated his act and "was more lavish than usual in consigning theatres to destruction." Myers notes that Goldwyn apparently practices what he preaches, for he has "reduced his output to an irreducible minimum. And he insists that the few he makes be so marketed that only a few big city theatres will play them for a long, long time."

The Allied official blames Goldwyn for fastening on the industry the special handling of pictures—"that illigimate offspring of the once well recognized roadshow." With respect to "Porgy," Myers maintains that Goldwyn has moved further upstage than ever before by restricting his film to the few theatres equipped with Todd-AO. It will be interesting to see, says Myers, if Goldwyn is satisfied with the rewards from the special runs or whether he will look "to those theatres which he thinks should be put out of business to run his picture in another medium."

Jap-Seized-Film Damages Bill Not Apt to Pass Congress This Session

Washington, July 14.

Fate for this session of Congress is in doubt as to legislaton which would permit film companies to collect between $2,000,000 and $4,000,000 from the Japanese to compensate for unpaid rentals on Yank motion pictures seized in the Philippines at the start of World War II.

Harold Leventhal, lawyer representing seven Hollywood companies, urged a Senate Judiciary Subcommittee to include the Dodd Amendment in the pending war damage claim bill. Proposed by Sen. Thomas J. Dodd (D-Conn.), it adds films to those eligible for claims against Japs. But entire war damage claim issue may easily be deferred to next session of Congress, it seems now.

Companies involved (whose films were taken and exhibited by Japs with no rental payments) are Columbia, RKO, Metro, Paramount, 20th-Century Fox, United Artists and Universal.

K.C. WOMPI's Prexy Now Phyllis Whitecarver

Kansas City, July 14.

Women of Motion Picture Industry, Kansas City chapter, held its annual party at the Hotel Pickwick recently when Phyllis Whitecarver, Warner Bros. exchange cashier, was installed as president for the year beginning July 1. She succeeds Mary Heueisen, booker at the same exchange.

Other officers: Mrs. Patricia Pierstorff, Columbia; Mrs. Myrtle L. Cain, M-G, veepees; treasurer, Mrs. Hazel LeNoir, First American Products; recording secretary, Billie Mistele, Paramount; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Grace Roberts, 20th-Fox.

FULLY-PAVED DRIVE-IN

Legit's Gabe Rubin Opens Ozoner Near Pittsburgh

Pittsburgh, July 14.

Gabe Rubin, who owns the Nixon Theatre, legit house here, and the Silver Lake Drive-In has opened his new Fair Ground Drive-In Theatre. Fair Ground is first fully paved drive-in in the Pittsburgh area and is situated on Brownsville road next to the South Park Fair Grounds.

The theatre will be equipped with Bauer-NTS projector equipment that can show Todd-AO along with other wide screen processes.

ALBANY TIMES-UNION'S WORDS OF FILM CHEER

Albany, July 14.

Hearst's Albany Times-Union ran last week (7), under a three column-caption, "Peak Movie Attendance of 80 Million is Forecast," a lengthy story, attributed to a committee of local theatre owners, and the estimate, to the Council of Motion Picture Organizations. Elias Schlenger, Fabian division manager, was named as the committee's Albany spokesman.

The article, appearing on Page 3, stated that "Based on a recent uptrend in theatre attendance and the scheduled release of a number of top pictures during the next few months, the estimate foresees national movie attendance running well ahead of last year's top figure of 75,000,000, recorded in the last week of Aug. 22, 1958."

The upward trend in motion picture attendance "started in the middle of May, when admissions were running nearly 20 percent above the corresponding levels last year," the story continued.

"Breaking of theatre attendance records by the first runs of some of the big pictures being released leads industry statisticians to believe that summer business in the nation's houses this year will establish a peak for the past decade."

Among the reasons which the committee "gives for this upsurge" are that "many of the current and forthcoming pictures contain a definite feminine appeal, which is reflected in heavily increased attendance of women at both matinee and evening performances."

Another important reason is that "the playoffs of pre-1948 films released by the industry for use on television is reaching a saturation point, with several of the popular films already having been shown several times on home tv, plus the fact that several of the top tv shows go off the air for the summer."

"Approximately 18,000 theatres are expected to be in operation this summer," continued the "big break" story.

No Federal Legislation Affecting Amusements Is Foreseen This Session

Federal legislation directly affecting the theatre industry is not expected to emerge from the current session of Congress although the session still has a long way to go, according to Theatre Owners of America.

The exhibitor organization points out that the Senate Labor Committee has concluded hearings on the Minimum Wage Law Bill, which would for the first time include theatres in its $1.25 per hour coverage. However, according to TOA, reports from Washington indicate that the more controversial Kennedy Labor Reform bill stands little chance of passage, and the Minimum Wage Bill, which is of secondary importance, is therefore not expected to get beyond the Senate.

On the tax front, TOA says the drive for a balanced budget eliminated any chance of relief from the 52% corporate and excise tax rates. The Senate has extended it for another year. Inherent in the passage, TOA says, was an understanding that the existing excise tax structure would not be changed for another year.

The exhib org feels that this eliminates any possibility of action on bills to exempt theatres completely from admission taxes or on the tax on the first $2 of admissions.

TOA figures that one measure stands a chance of passage, despite Treasury Dept. opposition. This is the bill which would permit small business men and other self-employed taxpayers to waive taxes on as much as $2,500 a year put aside in special retirement plans—up to $50,000 over 20 years. The House has approved the bill and it now faces the Senate, but TOA feels that some compromise will be worked out to give small business men tax benefits now enjoyed by persons receiving big-company sponsored retirement plan coverage.

JOHNSTON HITS PARIS; COMMENTS ON PACT

Paris, July 14.

Eric Johnston, Motion Picture Assn. prexy, and Griff Johnson, MPA foreign head, were in Paris after a visit to Berlin Film Fest. However, there were no official huddles or decisions on the recently lapsed French-American Film Accords. They ran out July 1 and a new one has to be formulated.

As pointed out in VARIETY last week, the Yanks will probably try for more permits than the usual 110, plus asking for greater remittances. However Johnson told VARIETY that since the war the Accords have usually not been signed immediately.

They have lagged as much as eight months. But he expects the new one to be concluded by September, or by October at the latest. Johnston and Johnson winged stateside over the weekend.

Conn. State Cops Warn, Also Raid

Post-Saturday, Midnight Films in Drive-Ins Notified—Amusement Park Pinched on Gambling

Hartford, July 14.

State Police—who control nearly all aspects of entertainment in the state—last week started a rigorous enforcement of state laws. First to feel the pinch were the operators of five drive-in theatres.

They received warning letters about their extracurricular showings of films on Sundays.

Not so lucky were the operators of a variety of amusement and game concessions at Savin Rock Park at nearby West Haven. In the midst of a flourishing Saturday night (11) business, the state gendarmes swarmed into the popular amusement park, and arrested some 50 persons on gambling charges. The game operators were charged with giving money prizes, instead of prizes. At least 25 concessions were closed at the waterfront park which faces Long Island Sound.

Drive-in theatres were letter-warned for violation of a Sunday law which bans films between midnight and 2 p.m. According to the state gendarmes so called "bonus" shows have developed in the past year and consisted of extra shows in addition to the regular fare. In addition to the letters, the ozoner ops received copies of the state law.

Outdoor theatres known to have violated the law are located in New Haven, Plainville, Middletown, Southington and Berlin. A 1959 enacted law allows screening of midnight shows on Saturdays which fall on New Years Eve.

Intensified State Police action comes with the new State Police Commissioner, Leo Mulcahy, who took office the first of the month. He has promised a strict enforcement of all state laws ranging from gambling, rackets, to highway traffic violations.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Peter Frohn, 37, German-born mechanic for millionaire theatre chain president E. D. Martin, lost his life in crash of Trans-World Airliner which crashed in Italy Friday (June 26). Martin and Frohn were in Europe where the head of the Martin theatre chain, operating houses in Georgia, Florida and Alabama, participated in the gruelling Le Mans Grand Prix of Endurance June 21. Martin drove a Ferrari and was "doing very well" until the crown and pinion gear of his machine conked out in the 10th hour of the 40-hour run.

Following race Martin and Frohn went to Modena, Italy, to look at sports cars. Pair separated in Milan Friday, when Frohn left to begin his trip home. Frohn had arranged to go by train to Paris, but changed his mind and boarded the ill-fated aircraft.

Toronto, which has had up to 12 foreign-language film houses, is down to eight—six showing Italian films only. One of them also has an Italian stage show. Toronto-born brothers Bob and Lionel Lester own four of houses, plus one in nearby Hamilton. Three of the other foreign-film houses in Toronto are owned by E. S. Bode, who formerly operated theatres in Hungary. He also distributes European films across Canada.

Catholic order, Divine Word Missionaries, is peddling "The Atomic Apostle," biog of Bishop Thomas Megan who spent 25 years in Japan and China, to film studios. Tome written by Father Edward J. Wojniak was published by DWM. Twentieth-Fox reportedly is reading book on bishop, who also worked among Negroes of the South.

THREE NUNS AS CRITICS

Externals of Life Okay, But Not Much 'Religion' In Hepburn Film

Nuns viewing "The Nun's Story," which Fred Zinnemann directed from the Kathryn Hulme novel with Audrey Hepburn as the star, take a mixed view of religious life and values as portrayed in the film. This came out via a literary "roundtable" published in America, the Jesuit weekly, recently.

Said an Ursuline nun: "Entirely too much stress was placed on externals (in reality quite secondary) which were given undue attention. A girl thinking of a vocation would have to have the deficiencies in Sister Luke's religious training pointed out to her. Otherwise, I fear she might get a misconception of religious life."

Wrote a Sister of Charity: "I deeply regret that Kathryn Hulme's 'The Nun's Story' has been filmed, although I quite readily acknowledge the strange attraction that this sort of movie has for a secular audience. The externals of religious life are assiduously presented, the details accurately noted, the visible signs carefully depicted. But it is a hollow shell, for Sister Luke herself never once enters beyond the externality of being a well-conducted, modest, conscientious girl who wills to be a nun. I see Sister Luke as a person who confused her dedications."

Observed a Sister of Notre Dame: "Religious life is made to appear to be a series of lectures and processions and exhortations. Frankly, it all seemed boring to me."

The three nuns had good things to say about the technical perfection of the picture, the acting, etc. Views on the film by Miss Hulme, Zinnemann and Moira Walsh, America's film critic, also were published. Miss Walsh said she rejected the notion (expressed by one of the nuns) that the picture would give people a false picture of religious life or that it will discourage religious vocations.

'Pacific' to Atlanta's Roxy

Atlanta, July 14.

Rodgers & Hammerstein's "South Pacific," released by 20th-Century-Fox, will open a run at popular prices Friday (17) at Wilby-Kincey's Roxy Theatre, where the Todd A-O version played for 30 consecutive weeks under a hard ticket, reserved seat policy.

This showing of the Mitzi Gaynor-Rossano Brazzil starrer, by contrast, will be the 35-millimeter Cinescopic version of the Magna production in continuous performance. New showing scale will be 90c for matinees, $1.25 for evenings and 50c for children at all performances. Original go-round was at $2.20 top.

Currently shown is Par's "Don't Give Up the Ship," Jerry Lewis starrer, which has been doing bangup biz during two-week stand.

Roxy, which lost some 700 seats out of its 2,000 when it was converted into a house for Cinerama, now has 1,316 seats remaining. Patrick Michael Buckley is manager.

In anticipation of picture giving "South Pacific" album sales a huge shot in the arm, local disk selling spots are loading up on RCA Victor's soundtracker.

'HERCULES' HAS 6,000 WB DATES LINED UP

San Francisco, July 14.

Joseph E. Levine thinks his "Hercules" cinch to gross more than $4,000,000 in the U. S. between now and Christmas. Bostonian Embassy Pictures president, was here to check the playoff on his blockbuster and, because the figures looked fine, he was smiling.

He wouldn't even take a guess at the worldwide gross but said:

(1) "Hercules" cost $2,000,000 to produce in Italy and he's spent another $1,250,000 to exploit it in the U. S.;

(2) He's got 550 prints playing right now, ordered a total of 600 altogether, the biggest order Eastman-Pathe Laboratories has ever had;

(3) He won't release his second Steve Reeves film ("Hercules Against the Gods"), already in the can, until next July;

(4) He's got Reeves under contract for a third "Hercules" picture and for a future TV series;

(5) Warner Bros. has more than 6,000 dates already in hand.

Levine admitted he was plenty nervous about his film until it opened, a trifle prematurely, in Baltimore June 26. After the first week there he felt he had it made.

He's particularly high on his saturation bookings—118 situations in the Boston area, 90 in the Chicago area, "between 50 and 60" in the Los Angeles area, 135 in New York.

Kerasotes, McLendon At New Mexico TOA Meet

Albuquerque, July 14.

Ed Kidwell of Roswell has been named new prexy of the Theatre Owners Assn. of New Mexico at the group's annual convention held in Santa Fe recently. Elmo Courtney of Clovis is new secretary-treasurer.

George Kerasotes of Hartford, Ill., head of the Theatre Owners of America, was principal speaker at the two-day session.

Kerasotes, in going over present and future trends in the industry, was highly optimistic about future of films. He told of recent trip to Hollywood studios and pointed to some of the big productions forthcoming.

Gordon McLonlon of Dallas, who owns several radio stations and recently went into feature film production, was another speaker at the conclave. He spoke on the importance of radio and newspaper advertising to exhibitors.

About 300 New Mexico exhibitors, plus several wheels from Denver film row, were present for the sessions.

MAURICE BERGMAN'S POST

To Supervise Global Premieres of 'On The Beach'

Maurice Bergman has been named supervisor of the global premiere unit for Stanley Kramer's "On the Beach." In this position he will coordinate the international activities planned in conjunction with the openings of the picture.

United Artists plans to open the film in 25 cities on Dec. 17, 1959.

American Legion Will Smear Films, Based on Two Alleged Commies

Hollywood, July 14.

Resolution rapping the film industry, adopted at the meeting of the California American Legion three weeks ago, is to be placed before the national convention of the entire American Legion next month. Thus what originally appeared a blast on the "local level" is being brown up to nationwide proportions.

Legion's complaint is based on an alleged violation on the part of the industry of its agreement with the Legion which calls for barring from employment persons connected with Communism.

Resolution was accompanied by a "fact sheet" listing the name of five persons, three of whom appeared as witnesses before the House Committee on Un-American Activities. "Fact sheet" further states the Legion's Americanism Committee "has examined and has evidence of other persons who have records of un-American activities and who are currently associated with the motion picture industry."

Two of those names are actually identified with the American film industry. One is Nedrick Young, former actor, now a writer, who was co-author under the pseudonym of Nathan E. Douglas of the Stanley Kramer production, "Defiant Ones" which won awards from the New York Film Critics as well as the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences. Young took the Fifth Amendment. Kramer has stated that he did not know Young's true identity when he hired him.

Second is Carl Foreman, independent producer linked with Columbia, who had admitted having previously belonged to the Communist party but objected to naming fellow members. Foreman's deal with Col had been held up several months until he produced evidence satisfying the company that he had cleared himself with the House Committee.

Other three so far as is known have had no direct employment relationship with any American film company for several years. They are Dalton Trumbo, who served a prison sentence for contempt of Congress growing out of hearings in 1947; Jules Dassin who, states the Legion, "was identified as a Communist in sworn testimony . . ." and Charles Chaplin, listed by the Legion as being a "perpetual supporter of Communist causes and fronts."

Legion observes that Chaplin's films are being reissued "for general distribution throughout the United States."

HAROLD HECHT INC. READYING 3 FILMS

Hollywood, July 14.

Harold Hecht, partnered for past nine years with Burt Lancaster, has set up Harold Hecht Productions Inc., to operate as a singleton. Trio of properties already have been skedded, "Matter of Conviction," "Flight from Ashiya" and "Taras Bulba," first to go expected to be "Conviction."

Two pix remain to be turned out by Hecht-Hill-Lancaster, in which Hecht is partnered with Lancaster: "The Way West" and "Kimberly."

R. R. O'Donnell Distrib For McLendon Scifi Two

Dallas, July 14.

Robert R. O'Donnell has made a deal with Gordon McLendon to handle the distribution in Texas of two Texas-made features turned out by McLendon Radio Corp. via O'Donnell's Empire Film Distributors on a state-rights basis.

Films are "The Killer Shrews" and "The Giant Gila Monster."

O'Donnell is a nephew of R. J. O'Donnell, veepee and general manager of the Interstate Theatre Circuit and Texas Consolidated Theatres.

Theatre Wages

parent, and no date has been set for that yet.

The subcommittee made numerous changes in the original version of the bill by Sen. John F. Kennedy (D-Mass.), a major Presidential contender. But it did not alter Kennedy's language which brought motion picture theatres under federal minimum wage coverage.

New workers in retail and service establishments brought under minium wage for the first time would be guaranteed $1 per hour if business' gross is $750,000 annually or less. The guarantee would be $1 per hour the first year, with a staggered increase to $1.25 per hour after the fourth year, where the firm grosses in excess of $750,000 a year.

A subcommittee source said there had been a "discussion" of striking film houses from the bill's coverage, but that no vote was taken on that issue.

House subcommittee, on the other side of the Capitol, has done nothing yet this year on minimum wage legislation.

Vet director of photography, on leave from Metro and heading for his initial commitment with Paramount, also pointed out that "Bay of Naples" will be the first U.S. film production to process at Technicolor's recently-inaugurated lab in Rome, where Carmine Gallone's "Carthage in Flames" is already in the soup.

Surtees, about to start his third consecutive overseas assignment (following "Ben Hur" and "It Started With a Kiss" exteriors for Metro) this month, is taking ASA 100 in his stride, having been called on in the past to premiere 65m, Technicolor and Ansco-color footage for Hollywood producers.

Paramount Fashion Shows Divert Delegates' Wives at Biz Conventions

Paramount has set plans to play the "convention circuit" in its newest business-building approach. Blueprint calls for Edith Head, studio designer, to present fashion shows at national conventions, all, of course, tieing in with the wardrobes in Par pictures.

Miss Head will lecture and present models in appearances before the wives of trade convention delegates, including a meeting of the automobile industry and the Western Shrine Assn.

It's figured Miss Head will have an audience of 100,000 women who, in turn, will pass the word around to their respective home towns.

Flaherty Seminar to Calif.

Los Angeles, July 14.

U. of California's Theatre Arts Dept. has taken over the Flaherty Foundation Film Seminar. It's the fifth year. Named for the late Robert Flaherty, of documentary renown, the first years were conducted at the Flaherty home in Vermont.

Makes a transcontinental shift of setting.

VENICE DOCUMENTARIES REPRESENT 28 NATIONS

Venice, July 14.

Some 28 nations, among them the U.S.A., are participating in this year's Documentary Festival in Venice. Among Yank entries at the fest are: Martha Graham in "Appalachian Spring," "The World of Rubens," "The Cry of the Missiles," "The Life of Roosevelt," and "With the Nautilus under the Pole."

Total documentary items number to 140 with Soviet Russia, Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia all entered in addition Australia, Belgium, Austria, Germany, Canada, Ceylon, Costa Rica, Denmark, France, Japan, Mexico, Holland, Portugal, Puerto Rico, Monaco, Spain, Sweden, Tunis, and Turkey.

Also under way here is the Moppet Film Fest, with eight countries officially participating. No U.S. Contestant, but two from Britain: "Blow Your Own Trumpet" and "Salvage Gang." Also: two Japanese films, two Italo items, one from Spain, one each from Mexico, India, Yugoslavia and the USSR, which is presenting "Tambu Lambu."

Kallets Alter Corporation's Shares and Board Size

Albany, July 14.

Kallet Theatres Inc., of Oneida, filed an amended and restated certificate which changed the number of directors from "six" to "not less than three, nor more than seven" and which fixed the capital stock at $250,000—2,500 shares of common at par value of $100 each.

The corporation operates more than 20 film houses in the Albany and Buffalo territories.

Listed as directors and subscribers (each owning five shares) were: Myron J. (Mike) Kallet and Charles M. Stone, Oneida; Alexander L. Saul, Syracuse.

Authorization to file the amended papers was voted at a meeting held in Oneida April 27. Executing them were Robert M. Kallet (son of Mike, founder of the circuit), as president, and Eva W. Zophy, as secretary.

The corporation filed its original certificate in Albany Nov. 9, 1926, to conduct an amusement business.

An amended certificate also was recorded for Kallet Realty Company.

Boston's Joe (Embassy) Levine Plots Bangup Exploitation—Details His 'Hercules' Sequels Via Italy

Boston, July 14.

When bigger exploitation pictures are made—Joe Levine, Embassy Pictures Corp., Boston, hopes to make them.

In to kick off his "Hercules," Italian import, at the Pilgrim and 400 theatres in Yankeeland, Levine, spreading out stills of his newest acquisition at his Hub office, "Hercules Against The Gods," revealed that he is turning producer and will film in Rome and Yugoslavia under his Embassy banner.

Levine will shoot the third "Hercules" saga, as yet untitled, in Rome. Aline Czartjarwicz, Steve Reeves' fiance, who flew into Hnb for "Hercules" opening, will be associate producer. Pietro Francisci will direct. Levine said "Steve Reeves is more than a star—he's a phenomenon who is capturing the imagination of the public, and he makes Tarzan look like a puny midget. This man has a body like no other actor in the history of films."

First Comes Jackie

However, before he gets going on "Hercules," he's jumping "Jack The Ripper," Regal Films release. British film story of the never caught mysterious murderer of prostitutes in London, with two separate exploitation campaigns for U.S. One is a "mystery fan" campaign, the other a "class" campaign. Tag line for latter ads, already set, is: "Screen Bleeds With Dread Deeds of Jack the Ripper." The former gets teaser buildup: "Are You Mary Clark?" (In the film, the murderer looking for the girl of the night on whose account his son committed suicide, asks each victim "Are You Mary Clark?")

"Every comic in the country will be using the line when we get through the plastering job" says Levine. He disclosed he's negotiating with a major company for release of "Jack" here. Although the British film has no names, Levine feels it's "a tremendous exploitation picture," and says he expects it to outgross "Attila" also.

Levine said he plans to open "Jack the Ripper" at the Roosevelt, Chicago, in the fall. He said only three circuits have screened it: Dave Wallerstein, Balaban & Katz; Stanley Warner Circuit and RKO Circuit, and all were "very enthusiastic."

One of the stunts for "Jack" will be 10-12 pages in national magazines telling the true story of "Jack the Ripper." Levine, who spent $1,200,000 on the "Hercules" saturation campaign in 10 days, is going along on the same format for "Jack the Ripper" and upping the ante.

Word From Spain Re Pix By Schneer, Alperson And Spiegel: 3 on, One Off

Madrid, July 14.

Hollywood's summer film production chart for Spain lists one show on the road and two others calendared for shooting in August.

Charles Schneer's "Gulliver's Travels" (Col) started filming Mon. (13) at the fashionable Coata Brava beach resort of S'Agarro. Dynamated version of the classic Jonathan Swift satire is directed by Jack Sher, stars Kerwin Mathews and is being lensed by Britain's Wilky Cooper.

Edward Alperson's "Sea Nymph" for 20th-Fox is now slated to jump off in August on the Isle of Majorca where director Stuart Heisler will shoot the entire film on sea and land, including natural interiors and underwater effects. (Alperson's choice of Mylene Demongeot as the Nymph, has not yet been confirmed.)

Having finally located a cliff-hanging seaside village near S'Agarro, Sam Spiegel and "Suddenly Last Summer" director Joe Mankiewicz will plane to the Catalunia summer playground from London mid-August for exteriors with Elizabeth Taylor. Schneer and Spiegel will etat major at S'Agarro's luxury inn, Hostal de la Gabina.

Producer involvements with "Suddenly Last Summer" have forced Spiegel to postpone his second hot-weather project "House of the Lords." Moppet vehicle, localed in Spain's Canary Islands, is now on Spiegel's early 1960 schedule.

Also postponed until next year is the 20th Fox ancient Greece spectacular, "The King Must Die."

PLAYS ST. PAUL AT $1.45

'So. Pacific' Previously Ran 39 Weeks at $2.65

Minneapolis, July 14.

"South Pacific," which ran 39 weeks at the Academy here as a $2.65 Todd-AO hard-ticket attraction, an exclusive territory engagement, is now playing simultaneously non-Todd-AO as a grind offering at an advanced $1.45 admission both in downtown St. Paul, where it's firstrun, and in four local neighborhood houses, day and date.

In St. Paul "Pacific" is in its fifth week. The four local uptown theatres playing it are in different city areas and won it on competitive bidding among the neighborhood houses in the earliest clearance slot, 28 days.

After a week or longer in each of these uptown theatres it will go similarly to other of the neighborhood theatres, step by step, until the various clearance slots have been covered.

Disney Biog of Jaguar

Hollywood, July 14.

Walt Disney, who hasn't had a true-life adventure feature in release since "White Wilderness" in 1957, next will release "The Jungle Cat" in series, to go out early next year.

Film, story of a jaguar who lords it over other jungle creatures, has been in preparation for more than two years. It was lensed in Amazon jungles of Brazil by Lloyd Beebe, High Wilmar and James Simon, under direction of James Algar, who also wrote script.

Home-Toll Plans Of Telemeter As 'Partly a Secret'

Except for the disclosure that International Telemeter is definitely set for launching in the Toronto area via Famous Players Canadian, Paramount, as owner of this home toll television system, of late has been adhering to a policy of silence anent plans.

This much is known. Par apparently has tabled once-considered plans to ask for public financing as a means of getting Int'l Tele across to the public with a big splash. The theory now is to offer the system to the public on a small community basis—with not too much ready cash needed. When a likely town is selected it will be a matter of about six months before the system is in work.

Insiders now say that the Toronto project will not get off the ground for another half year, at which time about 6,000 homes will be cabled in.

As for specific programming, Par people are disinclined to make with the details although there are broad hints that new theatrical features will be available.

Catholic Showbizzers In Air Rosary Recital

San Francisco, July 14.

Members of the Catholic Entertainment Guild of Northern California recited the Rosary over radio stations KWBR, Oakland, and KSJO, San Jose, last week, led by Guild President Charles J. Maestri, general manager of Lippert Theatres.

Monsignor Vincent F. McCarthy, pastor of St. Patrick's Church and Frisco Variety Club chaplain, led the Rosary. Participating were James J. Donohue, Consolidated Amusement Co.; Joseph Flanagan, John O'Leary, Joseph Cane, Paul Schmuck, 20th-Fox; William Boland, Hardy Theatres; John Coyne, MGM; Jack Hurley, Paramount Pictures; Joseph Hanley, Warner Bros., and A. R. Feliziani, Cooper Theatres.

Possible Tax Break Abroad Cheered

Al Fisher Tells Congress: 'Great If Tax Not Due On Blocked Film Funds Overseas'

Washington, July 14.

Motion Picture Export Assn. of America's strong support of Boggs Bill giving tax incentives to encourage private U.S. investment abroad was voiced to a House committee by Albert A. Fisher, Loew's International Corp. assistant treasurer.

Fisher said MPEA considers it "a most important and progressive" bill, particularly the section which defers taxes on foreign earnings until they are brought into U.S.

"We are faced," he said, "with continued restrictions by foreign countries on the right to repatriate our earnings, and we have large amounts of funds blocked through the operation of oppressive foreign exchange regulations . . . In some counties in which we operate, as little as 12½% of our earnings is remitted, while the rest remains blocked."

If U.S. income taxes on blocked funds could be postponed until actually received, he said, film firms could expand operations abroad.

Motion picture companies, of course, have profit motive in mind operating abroad (where MPEA members spend more than $65,000,000 on wages, rents, services and foreign taxes), he said. But, Fisher stressed, Yank films sent overseas offer Uncle Sam advantages, too.

"They contribute to and help to develop and advance the economy of these countries, and they spread the good will of America abroad. They do it through a form of entertainment that wields tremendous power in shaping the thinking of foreign people and their attitude toward the U.S.," Fisher said.

His testimony was before the House Ways and Means Committee.

WCCO-Radio Satirizes WCCO-Video

Accepts Minnesota Chain's Sponsorship of COMPO Jingles Sneering at Home Set Films

Minneapolis, July 14.

WCCO, local CBS affiliate, operates both a tv and radio station, but it did not stop the radio division from accepting video-deriding commercials from film theatre interests.

Minnesota Amusement Co., of the United Paramount circuit, bought time on seven news shows to plug the joys of film-going and to bring attention to the great array of product available during the summer months. The chain is using the Council of Motion Picture Organizations records, which consists of jingles emphasizing the vast superiority of large screen film presentations. Television comes in for plenty of slams and stress is made of the "rut" of watching "old" films on tv. "Get out of the house, get more out of life, go out to the movies," the record's singers urge.

While Minnesota Amusement is bearing the entire cost, none of the commercials mention it or its theatres. "It's something we want to do for the area's entire industry," explains Charles Winchell, MAC president-general manager, who is enthusiastic over the COMPO disk and believes it will prove highly effective. The seven news programs are scattered throughout the day and evening and they will blanket the entire territory completely because WCCO reaches into practically all towns.

"We feel that if we can help the other fellows, including the little exhibitors and the smallest town theatres, we'll be helping ourselves and the entire industry."

Of course, Winchell says, "we wouldn't mind it if other of this area's exhibition segments shared in the cost of this radio campaign, especially the larger circuits and theatres, but under any circumstances we'll keep it going throughout the summer."

Organized Pressure In Pennsylvania Follows On 'Adultery' Film Decision

Harrisburg, July 14.

Capitol Hill here took on all the aspects of a full-scale GHQ in wartime this week as forces throughout the state marshalled to build a legal stronghold against "obscenity" in all forms which would take the place of the measure which was struck down by the Supreme Court recently.

Legislators, who had been looking forward to a 10-day holiday following the July 4th weekend, instead were besieged both at their homes and in the Capital by religious, civic and fraternal organizations and concerned individuals who demanded immediate action by the lawmakers in a matter considered quite routine, prior to the high court's action on the adulterous Lady Chatterley.

Governor David L. Lawrence, who expressed concern immediately following the ruling, was quick to act, and legislators were just as quick to react. Attorney General Anne X. Alpern, following the Governor's request to "proceed with all due speed to recommend actions by which the state may maintain proper morality and moral concepts through censorship where necessary," was readying amendments to the Penal Code banning so-called "lewd" features.

Miss Alpern, in answering Governor Lawrence, said that it was her considered judgment that "nothing in the recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania prevents censorship of obscene or pornographic movies."

The spontaneous result to the court ruling caught even the legislators by surprise as requests, urgings and even demands for action poured in from practically every community in the Keystone state. Included were messages from such orgnizations as the Philadelphia Crime Commission, who wrote directly to Governor Lawrence, concluding their request for passage of a bill covering the situation with "it is high time that the public rise in wrath and demand an end to this disgraceful situation."

Others contacting their lawmakers included the Veterans of Foreign Wars, an association of State's Attorneys, practically every Church group in the state, PTAs and literally thousands of individuals acting completely on their own.

Indicative of the concern being felt on this matter was the visit here by Judge Michael J. Eagen, Lackawana County, who was the jurist sentencing the movie operator in 1956 in the case which was reversed by the Supreme Court a week ago.

"I was greatly disturbed about this dangerous void (left by the court ruling) and came down (to Harrisburg) to enlist the aid of the attorney general."

Miss Alpern also revealed that legislation is being drawn up which would increase the present two-year prison term for obscene exhibitions to three years, and increase the fine from $2,000 to $3,000.

The Code will also be mended, Miss Alpern said, to strike out the clause on immortality a prohibition ruled unconstitutional by the state Supreme Court. It is this single prohibition which is believed to be at odds with the constitution—not the other prohibitions which are included.

One action which appeared to be certain was a quick passage by the House this week of the bill creating the Motion Picture Censorship Board, a three-man body which has already received the official blessing of the Senate, as well as the unofficial sanction of jurists, and state officials.

"In view of the emphasis on the present situation," said one of the legislators as he mowed his way through an avalanche of mail from his constituents, "we had better make sure this Censorship Board has some know-how—not just good party members."

Auction Memorabilia

with a magnificent view of Frisco Bay.

Many of those who attended the sale, conducted by Alfred B. Clark Auction Studio, were in their 50's and 60's. And most carried memories of the home's late owner. She was Norma Talmadge, 62 when she died of a stroke at Las Vegas on Christmas Eve, 1957.

Selling were such Hollywood memorabilia as a bronze bust of Eugene O'Brien, one of Miss Talmadge's leading men of the '20's, a signed photo of Marion Davies wearing an ostrich-plumed hat and a mahogany makeup case with faded green velvet lining.

Some women came for practical reasons. One wanted a birdcage for her daughter, another a crystal chandelier for her restaurant. Few, apparently, were aware that Miss Talmadge had lived in this home only a year, long after her glittering days.

She had married Joe Schenck 42 years ago, divorced him in 1934 to become Jessel's wife and divorced Jessel in 1939. Not until 1946 had she married her physician, Dr. James Carvel, and not until 1950 had she purchased the white Frisco home where she'd intended to settle down with the doctor.

This was not to be. Miss Talmadge was forced by illness to warmer, drier climates and the home was closed.

When she died her estate was worth more than $3,000,000, excluding these household possessions and this home. The home was sold last year to two men who are now trying to resell it.

Danny's Whammy

There was no little eyebrow raising in the trade last week when Danny Seymour, the tv-radio chieftain at J. Walter Thompson, expressed some concern (at the Foley Square FCC hearings) over the upgrading of hour specials by the networks with an inevitable squeeze on half-hour entries. What particularly distressed Seymour was the fact that the webs had scheduled the 60-minute shows without prior notice or consultation.

What Seymour left unsaid was the fact that, as JWT's buyer of tv programming, he has committed two of the agency's major clients, Ford and Kraft, to perhaps the most expensive full hour program series in all tv annals—the Perry Como two-year $25,000,000 Kraft deal and the 39 weekly "blockbusters" for Ford. Also left unsaid was the fact that, when the Como-Kraft NBC deal was negotiated between JWT and General Artists Corp., all the preliminaries were arranged without NBC even knowing anything about it.

Radio-TV's Coverage of Potential Pan Am Disaster: Study in Adversity

Covering the crash landing of a Pan American jet liner at Idlewild Airport on Long Island last Saturday (11) night became a study in the purest adversity for radio and television newsmen.

Considering all the efforts made to transmit radio sounds and tv pictures relatively little was gotten out, but what was transmitted successfully is generally considered to have been excellent reportage on a potential disaster of tremendous magnitude. The plane, with part of its landing gear missing, circled Idlewild for four hours before landing in a small ocean of anti-fire foam laid down by airport workers.

Not only were transmissions difficult to make from the field about 15 miles outside Manhattan, but newsmen had great trouble beating the throng of milling Saturday night drivers who, the minute the word was announced of a pending crash, seem to have decided there was nothing better to do but to block the highway to the field, the entrances to the field and some 4,000 spilled over onto the field itself.

ABC managed to get its tv crash mobile camera unit out to the field, but somehow live transmissions got fouled up. But ABC radio news writer-turned-reporter Ed Stevens seemed to have been the only one of the amassed broad-

Dow Chemical's Saudek Mysteries

Dow Chemical Corp. this week signed Robert Saudek Associates to produce a series of 60-minute classic mystery "specials" that it will present on a once-a-month basis beginning in the spring of '60.

Agency is McManus, John & Adams. Network and time period hasn't been set yet. Name theatre figure will front the series which will number some 12 specials.

Decribed as superior whodunits, several of them will be made abroad in locations described by the authors. Format will provide for some live and some taped productions.

Tint TV in Canada? 'Who Knows?' Govt. Told

Ottawa, July 14.

Nobody knows when color television will come to Canada, James P. Gilmore, operations controller of the CBC, told a government probe on broadcasting. Gilmore said CBC's intentions two years ago were to get color tv going here soon, but the apathy of the U.S. public to purchasing color receivers had set those intentions back indefinitely.

Gilmore told the committee U.S. color set sales in the past four years had totalled 300,000 against 45,000,000 black-and-white sets. He said color added at least 25% to tv production costs, another factor in delaying its start here.

Radio Dead? CBS' 52-Wk. Olds Coin On Lowell Thomas

CBS Radio pulled a handsome coup last week when the network closed a contract (four months in advance of the time the sponsor takes over) with Oldsmobile for a firm 52-week cross-the-board underwriting of the 10-minute nightly Lowell Thomas newscast. Especially unusual is that the deal with Olds, a General Motors division, was closed within a few days after Delco, another GM division, decided to back out of the stanza next fall, after precisely five years of unbroken sponsorship.

Delco decided to drop out of the program, according to the network, when the battery manufacturer made plans to end its national advertising campaign and shift to concentrating on specific regions of the country, which made a U.S.-wide radio program unfeasible.

CBS Radio prexy Arthur Hull Hayes is said to have been instrumental, via frequent visits of late to Detroit, in holding on to the GM biz. Time-talent cost represented by a full year's sponsorship of the Thomas program is sizeable in these days of network radio.

NAME GOODMAN NO. 2 ON NBC NEWS, PUB AFFAIRS

NBC Washington newsman Julian Goodman has been appointed to a newly created post of director of news and public affairs for the network. With the web for 14 years, Goodman was most recently manager of news for NBC in Washington. He'll be headquartered in New York on the new job. He'll be No. 2 man to news veepee Bill McAndrew.

Taking over as Washington manager of news for the network is Elmer W. Lower, who has been director of operations and general of election coverage for CBS news. For NBC, J. O. Meyers continues as director of news and Edward Stanley continues as director of public affairs, both reporting to Goodman.

'PLAYHOUSE 90'S' FIGHTING MOOD

By GEORGE ROSEN

Whatever the retreat of CBS-TV on "inside creativity" as reflected in the increasing number of outside program buys and the fact that "Playhouse 90" has been whittled down to 23 installments with a William Morris bigtime musical package alternating under Revlon auspices, the fact remains that, as one of the "last bastions" of Columbia's "my very own" the "Playhouse" roster for '59-'60 is geared for Page One headlines.

As an illustration, Fred Coe is all set to ride with an original by David Karp (he was the writer of the controversial "Plot To Kill Stalin") called "Man In Hiding," billed as a drama about presidential campaign intrigue. Actually it's the Bernard Goldfine-Sherman Adams story.

For a while it looked like it was no dice. When Lennen & Newell, whose client, American Gas Assn., shares in sponsorship of the 90-minute entry, got wind of the fictionalized treatment, it registered a strong dissent with the network, claiming it wanted no part of it. This is the same sponsor that moved in on the "Trial At Nuremberg" entry on last season's "Playhouse 90," resulting in deletion of reference to gas chambers.

Apparently CBS has smoothed the way, for "Man In Hiding" has finally gotten an okay. It'll be one of Coe's early entries on the '59-'60 roster.

New season's series is literally studded with controversial and news-making drama. Herb Brodkin, who with Coe, Peter Kortner and John Houseman will hold down the production reins, has one coming up on the Mafia. He also has one by Arnold Spies which speculates on the state of the world in 1975 if the United States should lose the cold war. (Brodkin tees off his series of six in January).

The "Six by Coe" will include an original by Paddy Chayefsky—his first tv script in four years; a straight drama starring musicomedy star Gwen Verdon; an original Civil War drama, "Crater Of Hell," by David Shaw, and a 90-minute examination of the mental health problem.

On the Brodkin drawing board, in addition to the Mafia story, are originals by Reginald Rose, Ernest Kinoy, the Spies cold war saga, and one by Joseph Stefano.

Houseman's first production is slated for Oct. 15 (season begins Oct. 1, with Kortner to do initial two entries). Houseman, among other entries, will do an original mystery by Alvin Boretz. Kortner will do an original by Rod Serling (which will probably be used to kick off the season) plus an additional work by David Shaw.

Directors for the new "Playhouse 90" will be culled from the series' "alumni," including John Frankenheimer, Franklin Schaeffner, George Roy Hill, Ralph Nelson, Delbert Mann, Fielder Cook, Herbert Hirschman, Buzz Kulik and David Greene.

"Playhouse" is SRO for the 23 weeks, with Camel and Allstate Insurance joining with American Gas in picking up the tab.

Lincoln Dickers Another Go-Round on Bernstein

Lincoln is again close to sponsorship of four new Leonard Bernstein-N.Y. Philharmonic music specials on CBS-TV. Programs are for the 1959-1960 season.

Dickers are said to be near conclusion for 60-minute Sunday shows, following essentially the same format Lincoln bankrolled last season on CBS-TV. Prespective dates for the Bernstein programs were not divulged.

Hubbell Robinson Jr. has set Ingrid Bergman to star, James Costigan to adapt and John Frankenheimer to direct Henry James' "A Turn of the Screw" as one of the early-fall Ford specials on NBC-TV.

Robinson has also secured the services of Tony Curtis, Alec Guinness and Leslie Caron, but is still discussing properties and vehicles for them without reaching a firm decision. Still another project, if consummated, would star Charles Laughton and the Stratford-on-Avon (England) Memorial Co. in "A Midsummer Night's Dream." Curtis will do "The Russ Columbo Story" and has been pencilled in for next January. Also set a tele original for Jimmy Stewart.

No date has been set for "A Turn of the Screw," which would mark Miss Bergman's dramatic debut on television. Nor have dates been set for any of the others, since they are still in the stage of selecting properties, though firm entries. Appearances would mark the tv debuts of Guinness and Miss Caron; Curtis and Laughton have made many video appearances, though Laughton in Shakespeare would be a first.

Robinson is also talking to Tennessee Ernie Ford (who's a Ford performer as well) about an appearance in a drama as well. One possibility, since rejected, was a tv version of the film, "Mississippi." Robinson is presently working out of the local offices of MCA, which is aiding him in assembling the Ford specials.

Joyce Brothers For Post-Paar Sex & Marriage

WRCA-TV, NBC's flagship outlet in Gotham, thinks it has discovered oil in the vast desert of broadcasting immediately following the Jack Paar Show.

What to do with the post-Paar problem from 1 to 1:15 a.m. has haunted programmers for a considerable spell but Max E. Buck, station manager, has come up with the notion that an "adults only" edition of Dr. Joyce Brothers' crisp analysis of the complexities confronting man and woman, namely marriage problems, dished up in the early hours of the morning might prove a contribution to society as well as a lure for a respectable sponsor.

"Consult Dr. Brothers" will be the title of the 15-minute Monday-through Friday show starting Aug. 10. It replaces 15 minutes of oddments that never managed to ring up a rating save for a five-minute segment sometime ago when Nancy Berg, the model, appeared in gossamer-like sleeping garments and pretended that she was keeping a rendezvous with Morpheus under the sponsorship of Englander mattresses.

Cynics, at the time of Miss Berg's appearances, sub-titled the program "Mind Over Mattress" but this, apparently, will not be the case when Dr. Brothers, who holds a doctorate in psychology from Columbia Univ. and is a former psychology teacher at Hunter College, appears on the show.

Dr. Brothers' serious after-midnight discussions on sex adjustment, base and clean love, husband and wife stealing and allied subjects, will be in the nature of a followup to her midday weekday programs, "Dr. Joyce Brothers" over WRCA-TV. It is Buck's belief that many husbands, unable to catch Dr. Brothers in the afternoon, will thus have an opportunity to solve some of their emotional gropings on this "adults only" program. Both husbands and wife could profit from her counsel, Buck thought, particularly at an hour of repose.

Background of the "Consult Dr. Brothers" show will have a library motif, sans an announcer. Dr. Brothers will do her own letter reading. Buck said the program would be made available to all NBC o&o outlets and expected the series to be fully sold by preem time.

Paley, Stanton Circuit

CBS board chairman William S. Paley is vacationing in Biarritz. He's fully recovered from his recent operation.

Upon Paley's return next month, CBS corporate prez Frank Stanton takes off for Moscow. It's a State Dept. mission.

Aaron & Zousmer Returning to CBS

Despite their demands, it appears that Jesse Zousmer and John Aaron, producers of "Person to Person," will be returning to CBS-TV in the fall with what could be a variant and revised version of the long-running interview-at-home-with-celeb series. A high CBS spokesman admitted "We got Aaron and Zousmer back for 'P to P.'"

When Edward R. Murrow announced he was taking a sabbatical and CBS said that Arthur Godfrey would take over the interviewing assignment on "Person to Person," Zousmer and Aaron exclaimed "they'd had it" and were bowing after a six-year run with the show.

MCA, meanwhile, started to peddle a number of their packages to other webs but this week, it was learned, the producers were in the midst of finalizing a deal with CBS to again produce a series of "remote shows" not exactly in the format of "P to P" but maintaining some of its characteristics.

Sid Stone's Judgment Vs. 'Price Is Right'

Sid Stone was recently awarded a summary judgment in the N.Y. Supreme Court against Goodson & Todman, producers of "The Price is Right" and other shows. Justice Thomas A. Aurelio ruled that Stone's submission of a prospectus for a show to the producers contained substantial portions of what is now incorporated in "The Price is Right."

Stone maintained that he submitted the material to the pro- in 1952.

Terms of the settlement called for an accounting in which back royalties plus penalties are to be paid. Goodson & Todman are to pay terms agreed upon originally if idea was taken up. They called for payments starting at $250 weekly and going up to $500. First telecast took place in Nov. 26, 1956, and total due him as of now is about $50,000 which would be retroactive to the first show.

All-Star Agency Cast in Foley Sq. Frolics; It's Mostly a Love Affair; Titterton's 'Closing Act' Wallop

FCC investigators at Foley Square last week listened to the testimony of a handful of agency tv executives who are responsible for more than $400.000.000 worth of network programming.

What the handful put into the record of the commission's investigation into network programming policies amounts to something more than a primer on the agency's role in the broadcast industry. But, until the afternoon of the fourth and final day, the investigation had the aspects of a tame love affair between advertiser and network. The mild atmosphere, in fact, had some observers viewing the affair as eyewash. There was none of the sensation that surrounded the Congressional hearings (Magnuson and Celler committees) which were responsible for the current FCC investigation.

The next to last witness, however, after being directed to do so by chief hearing examiner James D. Cunningham, dropped a couple of names in connection with an example of alleged network coercion. Compton veep Lewis Titterton said that Procter & Gamble had been refused a preview of two ABC-TV program properties because the client would not agree to a prespecified time slot if one of the shows was chosen. The shows in question were "Cry Fraud" and "Willie," both produced by Screen Gems for Frank Cooper and subsequently purchased by ABC. The time slot designated by the network was Friday 7:30 to 8 p.m. ABC sales veep William Mullen told the agency that the order had come down from web prexy Oliver Treyz. Stanley Potter of P&G refused the deal.

"Cry Fraud" is now scheduled for fall under another title, "Man From Blackhawk," with Miles Laboratories and R. J. Reynolds sponsoring. The show is in another Friday time period, 8:30 to 9 p.m.

Titterton cited another case of a refusal to screen a pilot, this one

'Mad Daddy' Blows Up WNEW Storm

Pierre (Pete) Myers, who frequently bills himself "Mad Daddy," last week began his career as a WNEW Radio disk jockey by antagonizing a substantial and vocal portion of the N.Y. station's audience and then by getting the outlet's top management worked up.

Myers, who on Saturday (4) replaced Al Collins as the WNEW 8 p.m.-to-midnight platter spinner, drew several hundred telephone calls protesting his heavy indulgence in rock 'n' roll music and chatter. By his third performance, almost all traces of r&r music had disappeared and were replaced by a more sedate kind of music which is WNEW's mark and, listeners noted, Myers role as a personality was not only subdued but diminished to the point where he was doing little more than "just announcing the titles."

A toplevel spokesman for Metropolitan Broadcasting Corp. said that Myers, who had been brought to N.Y. from WHK, WNEW's sister station in Cleveland, was hired with the understanding that he would pursue WNEW's regular music policy. It was added the jock was told to drop the heavy r&r "not because of the telephone calls but because we didn't want this kind of thing in the first place."

Marlene Specs Hot Again

The off-and-on situation that has surrounded the possibility of Marlene Dietrich doing some Revlon specials may be settled in a week. Wm. Morris agency is currently in negotiations with the star.

Dietrich was the first star handle connected with the specials which will alternate this fall with "Playhouse 90" on CBS-TV. It was later reported that she was out.

Script Troubles On 3 New Shows

Hollywood, July 14.

Script trouble is plaguing at least three shows being filmed for release next season. In deepest trouble is said to be UA-TV's "Trouble Shooters" which is causing considerable concern at Philip Morris and its agency Leo Burnett. The same writing difficulties are pervading NBC-TV's hourlong color show, "Bonanza" and Eddie Dukoff's "Goldie" starring Betty Hutton.

"Trouble Shooters" penning pains are said to be sufficiently acute to dispatch UA-TV prexy Herb Golden to the Coast in order to resolve the difficulties. The scripting is reported so far behind, teleplays completed the night before are shot the next day. Seven issues are now completed.

"Bonanza" is still working on the second show, production pace having been slackened because of slow delivery of completed scripts. Dukoff admits some trouble on show due to the typewriter brigade but says they are "minor" and are being resolved.

The trouble champ of them all is reportedly NBC-TV's "Black Saddle" which shows up next season on ABC-TV. It's recalled that scripts were handed to actors for the day's shooting and star picked the night before was told to report the next ayem at eight ready for the first take.

PM's Summer TV Ride For New Alpine Cig

Philip Morris will preem a new mentholated filter cigaret called Alpine in selected markets with cutins on the firm's summer network schedule.

New ciggie, handled by Doyle-Dane-Bernbach (which also has PM's Benson & Hedges premium brand), has already tested in New York state in Albany, Rochester & Syracuse. Company's summer web schedule includes "Tombstone Territory," "Rawhide," "To Tell the Truth" and Doug Edwards news on CBS-TV and "Reckoning" on NBC-TV.

Cowan's 1st Batch Of Grants-in-Aid

First CBS-TV writing grants-in-aid have been given to three women and two men. Each will get $5,000 for the year beginning today (Wed.) plus "a kind of a creative internship or matriculation in the development of tv," Louis G. Cowan, prexy of the web, said.

Winners are Eve Merriam, N.Y., who proposes to do a series of poetic dramas; Brock Brower, Chapel Hill, whose writing project will include fantasy comedies and dramatic scripts for "Playhouse 90"; Ellen Currie, N. Y., who is interested in doing a program series of magazine format; John Pfeiffer, New Hope, Pa., who has proposed a series of scientific programs on the evolution of matter, life and man, and Helene Hanff, N.Y. whose project is "The Autobiography of America" a series of plays and discussions concerned with the big issues of American history.

Honorable mentions went to Saul Zachary, Brooklyn; Lewis John Carlino, Los Angeles; Jesse Hill Ford, Humboldt, Tenn., and James L. Steffenson Jr., N. Y.

Winners were selected from several thousand entrants by Robert Alan Aurthur, exec producer of NBC-TV's upcoming "Sunday Showcase"; Erik Barnouw associate prof of dramatic arts at Columbia Univ. and past national chairman of Writers Guild of America, and Richard I. Lewine, director of special programs, CBS-TV.

Grants-in-Aid idea was conceived by Cowan who feels that a genuine effort be made at this time to encourage interest in creative writing for tv.

NBC Orbits the 'Moon & Sixpence'

Even though Ford Motor Co. is once and for all not going to buy NBC-TV's pet special "Moon & Sixpence," there's a saga behind why the network's brass had such momentary high hopes that the truculent automotive company might come through and actually take the whole Laurence Olivier starrer.

It was decided emphatically by the network last week to schedule the foundling "Moon in the 9 to 10:30 p.m. time period on Thursday, Dec. 10, thus putting an end to the series of ins and outs and ups and downs the 90-minute drama has suffered since it was taped a few months ago.

After having been successively "shelved," given a Wednesday slot in October, "shelved" again and so on, NBC, with rather a sigh of relief on behalf of the $356,000 production, decided to put it on the Tuesday night of Oct. 6, which was thought to be the week before Ford was to begin its series of weekly specials. This was shortly after (about eight weeks ago) NBC had offered the series to Ford, which rejected it as one of its 39 Tuesday entries on that network.

Subsequently, Ford decided to start its own series Oct. 6, instead of Oct. 13, and NBC accomodatingly "shelved" "Moon" again. A short while later, Ford revised its merchandising plans for kicking off the 1960 car line and wanted to —and did—go back to Oct. 13. NBC might again—and this particular move has never been confirmed—have decided to plant "Moon" on Oct. 6. But if it actually did, Ford again mussed up the scheme by asking a fourth time for a new starting date, which was to be Oct. 6.

This last and final Ford shift took place about 10 days ago. Because it took so long before a final decision was reached about the starting date for the Ford Tuesday series, NBC brass explained that they found themselves out on a limb; all the other preemptable 90-minute time periods were gone, except a particular Dec. 10 Thursday between 9 and 10:30. NBC told the sponsor that since it had consumed so much time in deliberation, thereby creating a nearly insurmountable placement problem for "Moon," newest intention was to preempt, among other things, Ford's half-hour Thursday Ernie Ford Show, an idea which didn't particularly sit well with Ford, even though the preemption was allegedly NBC's contractual right.

At this point, Ford again decided to reconsider "Moon" as one of its regular Tuesday entries rather than let Ernie Ford be preempted, and it was during this period that the network's hopes rose regarding the finding of one sponsor for the whole drama. Finally, Ford decided against it, but in doing so, realized that it had to relinquish Ernie's Thursday Dec. 10 time as compensation to long-suffering NBC. That's where it stands, with RCA buying half of "Moon."

WJAR-TV Whoops It Up

Providence Treated to Some Fancy Cutups in Station's Allout 10th Anni Hoopla

Providence, July 14.

Three-day celebration by WJAR-TV, Channel 10 outlet here, marking its 10th year of telecasting, was one of the major promotion stunts staged in history of this city.

Project, of such magnitude, may become an annual Providence affair, according to local politicos and station execs. Celebration was staged from July 8 through 10 with bewildering array of events including block dances, circus shows, parades, fireworks, all for free.

Highspots included a gigantic blockparty with more than 25,000 persons in attendance. Talent on hand included Connie Francis, The Four Lads, The Mystics, Lou Monte, George Hamilton IV, Shayne Rimmer, Dick Domaine and other record personalities.

Circus was staged in vast parking lot opposite Union Station. Anna Maria Alberghetti opened the show with singing of national anthem. Circus gave nine performances and 16,000 free tickets were distributed to public who queued up in front of all downtown Providence banks for free ducats, four to a person. Station provided free shuttle-bus service to circus grounds.

Anniversary Day (10) started off with enormous parade including marching elephants, Ferko String Band of Macy's Parade and Philly Mummer's Parade note, Navy floats from Army and Navy installations, displays from Mystic Seaport, Sturbridge Village and crack mounted police group from Boston.

WJAR-TV received numerous citations from local and state officials and military branches of the government for many pubservice eneavors during decade of telecasting.

Seymour Horowitz, station's program manager, coordinated 10th anni's three-day goings-on.

CBS Gives Arness Bullet-Proof Pact

Everything's rosy again between "Gunsmoke" lead James Arness and CBS-TV. Last week, the web, which has produced the half-hour telepic western since its inception, gave the actor a seven-year contract (with options for renewals by CBS) plus his own production company to make the stanza.

It's still a CBS production company, in effect, since the network will be paying the tab, but the new setup will give the performer a chance to keep a larger share of his coin intake than as just a straight employee.

Arness, who plays Matt Dillon, was to have ended his CBS contract following completion of the 39 episodes currently being made for next season, when "Gunsmoke" starts its fifth year on tv.

Arness recently showed signs of unhappiness over staying in one role so long and thereby becoming stereotyped and, consequently, he wanted to leave "Gunsmoke." New Contract obviously solved the entire matter.

CBS-TV STANDS PAT ON HOUR 'LINEUP'

After some uncertainty as to whether it would ride with the hourlong "Lineup" next season (network had been considering the 20th-Fox TV "New Frontiers" as a possible substitute), CBS-TV decided this week it will stand pat on its initial decision. As result "Lineup" is all firmed up for the Wednesday 7:30 to 8:30 period with a near-sellout status.

Network had been disappointed in the initial "Lineup" pilot but subsequently the second and third installments came in, both showing a perceptible improvement.

NBC Dickers Berle For Straight Drama Special

In addition to two NBC variety specials next season, Milton Berle has been approached by the network to handle a straight dramatic role, possibly in the Sunday night dramatic lineup.

Berle has appeared in other dramatic programs in past years, first in radio and then on tv on NBC. Since negotiations are in a relatively early stage, a script choice has not been made.

3 More 'Woman' Specials on Tap

Flushed by the rating pull of the first of its daytime specials last May, CBS-TV has accelerated its efforts to get at least three more "Woman!" 60-minuters into the schedule before 1960.

Network has already firmed up plans to preempt the 2-3 p.m. slot on Sept. 17 for a show from San Francisco based on the subject "Is the American Woman Losing Her Femininity?" CBS public affairs department is negotiating with Lauren Bacall to host the program, and Jim Fleming, who produced the May program on teenage marriage, already has been inked to do the second stanza. Margaret Mead, the anthropologist, has been hired as a consultant.

In early November, in the 11-to-noon time, a third "Woman!", on broken marriages, will be aired, and sometime in December, in a 4-5 slot, a fourth program, this one on the problems of old age, will be produced.

Hayakawa Series

Sessue Hayakawa has been signed to star in a telefilm series, titled "Files of the Tokyo Police."

Hayakawa's services were executed by agent-packager James Arthur Morgan of Hollywood and N.Y. attorney Albert E. Marten. Plan is to shoot the series in Japan starting in September.

TV'S YEN FOR O'SEAS TALENT

This Is a Sabbatical?

The way things are going Ed Murrow's one-year sabbatical may wind up as his busiest season in tv.

Murrow checked off CBS radio and tv as of July 1. But even before he's left the country for his round-the-world swing (he officially takes off Aug. 25; meanwhile he's "resting" at his home in Pawling, N.Y.), Murrow has managed to get five "Small Worlds" out of the way. All told he'll be doing 33 of them, taped in various parts of the globe. That's seven more than he did all last season.

This week he's wrapping up his first full-hour nighttime in-depth special (on missiles) which will kick off the Bell & Howell news series next season. He'll do another Bell & Howell later in the season, from somewhere overseas.

Throughout the year he'll be on a constant "alert" for on-the-spot news coverage. All told it adds up to more working hours than in the course of a normal season berthed at 485 Madison Ave.

Murrow "returns" next July, just in time for the GOP-Dems conventions and the elections.

With 3 Out of 4 Small Car Dealers It's TV as Best Way to Grab a Sale

Tv is still the biggest meaus of upping sales for new cars and it is estimated that three out of four dealers chose video as the major advertising source for the sale of the American-made upcoming small cars. These are some of the highspot discoveries in "Auto Motives," NBC's fourth annual study of car shoppers, buyers and dealers.

Report is the result of survey by R. H. Bruskin Associates based on more than 11,000 interviews with dealers and shoppers in dealers' showrooms, in-home interviews with general public and re-interviews of original shoppers. It all adds up to a rousing testimonial to video's power for customer acceleration in car buying.

Hugh M. Beville Jr., veep of NBC planning and research, said the survey showed that more car shoppers report tv copy stands out strongly in their minds than name newspaper and mag ads combined. In drawing people to look at a certain make, tv leads the dailies by two-and-a-half to one and mags by nearly four to one. In all 67% of dealers thought tv the most effective medium for pulling customers and 64% regard tv excellent for pre-selling the product. Also a significant finding is that 71% choose tv advertising as the most effective in selling the idea of the new compact cars.

Survey, additionally, revealed the preference for tv over all media far exceeds actual proportion of media expenditure allocated to tv. Based on average of four media preference measures, tv's share of mentions is 60%, yet only 35% of the ad dollar by the automotive industry is given to tv.

Examining impact and power of tv for specific sponsors on NBC, survey showed that 28% more viewers of average NBC car-sponsored program have shopped for the make advertised. Share of sales for average NBC car sponsor is 35% higher among viewers of his program than non-viewers. At no time during the survey was any connection with tv or NBC implied.

Dr. Thomas E. Coffin, NBC director of research, was supervisor of the project. Report, which is 32 pages, also summarizes highspots

Chrysler Settles For Astaire TV'er

Chrysler Corp. had visions of five NBC-TV specials for next season, but, as it appears now, the automotive company is settling for just one—a Wednesday night program with Fred Astaire.

Potential bankroller up till a few days ago had "holds" on four other NBC time slots, but, according to one high source, Chrysler decided against the other four when it became clear that there might be considerable trouble finding four other programs of a quality to match Astaire.

Chan Canned For WMAQ Obscenity; Chi Press Is Ired

Chicago, July 14.

Add another to the list of radio announcers whose bloopers earned them a pink-ticket.

Gus Chan, well known WMAQ personality who generally bills himself by his last name alone, was fired last week promptly after dropping a profane word before a mike he thought was dead. The word not only got out to 36 states during the "Jack Eigen Show" but boomed over the public address system in the WMAQ studio whence the program was originating. There were about 50 people in the studio audience, according to station management.

Chan, who had worked for the station 11 years, was fired for "gross misconduct," by virtue of which, according to the station's contract with announcers he is being denied some $2,100 in severance pay. He and the local chapter of American Federation of Television and Radio Artists are endeavoring to prove that a four-letter word which slips off the tongue in a presumed dead studio does not constitute "gross" misconduct. If Chan can win the semantical argument, he will be entitled to his severance pay.

Lloyd Yoder, NBC veep in charge of the station who is again being needled by the local press for the firing, used the figure "It's always the unloaded gun that kills someone" to justify his deed. He said further, "We're supposed to be responsible broadcasters, and we pay our announcers $10,000 a year to assume part of that responsibility. It's basic in the broadcasting trade to have respect for any microphone, dead or alive. Obscenities are not permitted on the air. If the press is so angry with me, let's see them try to get away with printing that word."

Chan, by the way, says he does not remember pronouncing the magic word that brought down the axe on him.

ROAM CONTINENT FOR NEW FACES

American television is gradually dropping the charcoal gray of Madison Ave. and taking on the Continental look. The medium is currently engaged in a more intense survey of Europe in search of new faces, ideas and new approaches that will bring new excitement to the living rooms.

The Madison Avenuites have long learned that imported telefare is quite palatable to American audiences. Foreign films have been doing well, shows taped and filmed abroad have proved no barrier to domestic acceptance, and even the imported comics such as Dave King have been able to impart a new note to home screen menus.

Among those who have gone to Europe recently add NBC president Robert Kintner, who will tour various countries exhaustively and Hubbell Robinson Jr., who recently junketed on the Continent in an effort to get signatures on contracts of Ingrid Bergman and Alec Guinness. An increasing amount of taping is being done in Europe by various shows. Dave Garroway did a week of tapes in Paris. Ed Sullivan taped a show in Spoleto, Italy; will do one from Moscow soon. Victor Borge has one set for Denmark.

NBC is sending producer-director Alan Handley off to India for three weeks beginning at the end of July. Handley's principle chore will be to sight and sign any fresh performing art available.

Likewise on an oriental kick, NBC coordinator George Slaughter has departed from the States for a junket to Hong Kong, Japan, Indonesia and, like Handley, ultimately to India.

NBC had two fair offshore successes in recent months, one Dinah Shore's Hawaiian stanza and the other the Shirley MacLaine Japanese production.

In the case of any names Handley and Slaughter uncover, NBC would like to transport the performers to this country for the shooting rather than tape them in their native locales, if only because shipping them Stateside is considered by NBC the easier way.

Network has no particular programs in mind for the Orientals but might build entire one-shots around them in the Friday or Sunday special schedule. Otherwise, they can be utilized within the framework of existing Friday-Sunday musical-variety formats.

Bob Finkel on Prowl

Bob Finkel, producer-director of NBC-TV's "The Dinah Shore Chevy Show," heads for Europe Thursday (16) scout talent in England, France and Italy for next season's programs. He'll remain abroad for six weeks.

Plan is to discover talent known to Europeans but unknown in this country. Performers will be flown to Hollywood for appearances on shows honoring various countries,

NBC-TV Dickers Cantor For 1-Shot Special On 'Ziegfeld Theatre Story'

In addition to all else it has brewing in the tv specials line, NBC-TV has initiated talks with Eddie Cantor regarding a one-shot for next season.

Company discussed with the comedian the possibility of becoming the fronter of a program to be built about the history of N. Y.'s famous house, the Ziegfeld Theatre. Cantor is understood at present to be mulling script submissions for the stanza.

When he was on the Coast a couple of weeks ago, NBC-TV director of specials Herb Sussan also initiated talks with producers Stuart Reynolds and Carey Wilson regarding a oneshot program on the Boy Scouts of America.

'59-'60 TV Spec Roster in Nutshell: 'We're All Going After Same Talent'; Jack Up Prices on Available Names

By JACK HELLMAN

Hollywood, July 14.

"They must be shooting for the moon. Where it will all end is anyone's wild guess."

Dave Tebet, general program executive for NBC-TV assigned to the Sunday night dramatic specials, was pondering the high cost of star talent, the quarry he was dispatched here to put under seal. He was ruminating over the prospect of more than 200 specs next season, more than two-thirds of them on his own network (Tuesday, Friday and Sunday plus preemptions).

"We're all going after the same star talent," said Tebet, "and that immediately tempts the agent to jack up the price. Time was when $150,000 would wrap up a big show. That's the starting price now and double that would be a fair estimate of what a sponsor will pay for an hour or 90-minute show. Naturally the big musicals will tote up more than our dramatic series but they'll be plenty high, too."

Tebet admitted he's after big names, mostly those from pictures who have shunned the tv cameras. He has given up trying to lure Clark Gable into the video fold and many of the others he has found equally difficult to convert despite that the shows can be taped in advance to meet their convenience and film schedules.

"We're all shooting for the same big names and that immediately makes it a seller's market," said Tebet. "While the prices the agents ask for their clients are out of line we have to meet the competition. Our series of 19 dramatic specials will be produced by NBC-TV and not brought in as an outside package.

"Because of the high prices demanded by the stars and to stay within reasonable budgetary limits, it will be necessary to scale down the prices of other performers on the show. In that way we'll be able to showcase fresh talent and develop our own stars. This we have been wanting to do for a long time and now the opportunity presents itself."

Committee Sifts Hub Radio, Finds State of Collapse

By GUY LIVINGSTON

Boston, July 14.

Monitoring of Boston radio has exposed complete local radio collapse, according to the Committee for Better Broadcasting.

"Monitoring of nine leading Boston radio stations indicates a complete lack of balance in their programming," Alden Eberly, chairman of the newly-organized committee, reported. "Analysis shows, he said, "that news reports and music for teenagers occupy 81% of the daytime programming on these stations.

"Whatever may be said of the quality of the recorded music, it is an indisputable fact that reception is the order of the day with a relatively small number of records being played over and over again on most of the stations monitored."

Breaking down the monitoring, Mrs. E. Tyler Parkhurst, secretary of the committee, said: "A typical day reported on by the monitors reveals that out of the 40 15-min. periods between 8 to 6, two of the stations devoted all forty periods to music and news, three devoted 39 periods and one 38 periods.

"While the other three appeared better by comparison, devoting 15, 18, and 21 periods to records, even these stations devoted almost no time to programming for homemakers who constitute by far the greatest group of listeners during these daytime hours."

The overall impression from clubwomen who performed the monitoring task was that radio on the downgrade. "There was nothing," one commented, "of any value presented all day. News was of the sensational kind. Contests were stupid. Listening was a painful, boring ordeal. I shall never dial in that station again."

Another monitor commented:

'Whispering Smith' Heads NBC Way; Ditto 'Diamond'

NBC-TV's previously unsettled 7:30 slots on Monday and Thursday are firming up.

"Whispering Smith," Audie Murphy starrer, is 99% sure for the Monday time, according to an NBC executive.

Four Star Production's "Richard Diamond," with 26 new films in the can, is very close as the Thursday entry. "Diamond" has been running this summer on CBS Sunday night at 10:30. NBC's excitement stems from ratings the show has been capturing. It was high in ARB's latest Top 10.

Both shows are totally open for sponsorship.

9 Musical Specs On ABC-TV Roster

Virtually all of ABC-TV's specials next season fall into the musical niche. Frank Sinatra is scheduled to do four one-hour live specs from the Coast next season, all of them to be sponsored by Timex. They will be dropped into the web's sked in October, November, February and April. Opener will have Bing Crosby and Dean Martin as guests.

Bing Crosby will do two one-hour stints from the Coast, with Oldsmobile picking up the tab. Initial outing is in September.

Then, there is "The Golden Circle," slated for Nov. 25, with Oster Manufacturing as the sponsor. Hosted by Steve Lawrence and Eydie Gorme, the show will be taped July 26. Motif is keyed to the disks which have achieved the 1,000,000 sales mark. Performers associated with those disks will be part of the show. Bill Hobin will produce and direct, with the show slated for telecasting at 10 p.m.

Additionally, Mutual of Omaha has been inked for a special on Nov. 10, keyed to the insurance company's 50th anni. Shows format still has to be ironed out.

In view of the rating success of Dick Clark's 'The Record Years," another Clark special of a similar nature is likely, as soon as a sponsor is rounded up.

That's about the web's special agenda at this point. Number of outings add up to nine.

Ken Brown-Bing Crosby's KCOP Gets Big Payoff on Non-Fiction 'Format'

By BOB CHANDLER

Hollywood, July 14.

Programming steps that were dictated out of sheer necessity four years ago have turned out to be a profitable and highly individualistic style of station operation today for local independent KCOP. The Kenyon Brown-Bing Crosby tv'er has so flourished with its travel-documentary programming — what general manager Al Flanagan refers to as "non-fiction" programming—that things are looking up overall for the outset:

1. Whereas in 1954-55, the station started from scratch in the field with "I Search for Adventure," this fall it will program a total of 21 half-hours weekly in the "non-fiction" genre, six half-hours more than this past season. It boils down to an additional half-hour strip, with the documentaries now entrenched 6:30-8 cross-the-board.

2. Out of this programming approach, and with the advent of videotape, has sprung a full-blown tape syndication operation at the station, with seven shows to be syndicated and two of them, "People's Court of Small Claims" and "Adventure Tomorrow," already sold in 14 and 10 markets respectively in little more than a month.

3. KCOP has ordered two more Ampex recorders, giving it a total of four to handle pre-taping, on-the-air playback and copying. Flanagan says it couldn't handle the load with only two recorders.

4. Station's 8-10 p.m. feature film programming will be upgraded. Soft market for feature films in Los Angeles will enable KCOP to buy the better packages from sources like Screen Gems (Columbia) and NTA (20th-Fox) to improve the quality of its prime-time features.

5. Station is nicely in the black, for all the competitive aspects of the seven-station Los Angeles market.

It all started back in 1954-55, when KCOP decided it just couldn't afford to compete with KTTV for firstrun syndicated programs. Flanagan then started to cast about for some other type of programming that could be locally-produced, at a budget that made sense for an independent. He took on "I Search for Adventure," which began to build, and within a year was topping the best of its network competitors.

At the same time, Flanagan began to notice some startling

OF's $2,500,000 Herts-Lion Tieup

Hollywood, July 14.

Deal involving $2,500,000 in production outlay alone has been finalized between Official Films and Herts-Lion International whereby the former will finance 13 additional segments of "What Are The Odds?" series as well as distribute three other teleseries to be produced by the newly-formed vidfilmery.

In all deal covers 118 half-hour telepix, according Seymour Reed, Official exec v.p., and treasurer, here to firm the deal.

International sales campaign on "Odds" will cost near $50,000. In addition to 13 "Odds" three other series included in deal are "The Victim," "13 Demon Street" and "Rhumba Beat."

P & G of Canada Buys 'Cong. Investigator'

Procter & Gamble of Canada has bought 52 weeks of ABC Films' "Congressional Investigator" half-hour adventure skein built around Senate rackets committee gumshoes.

Thirty-nine films now in production deal with such subjects as crooked juke box ops, the Mafia, loan sharks, bookies, gamblers and B-girls. P&G will spot the series throughout Canada beginning in the fall.

ZIV GREENLIGHTS 'THIS MAN DAWSON'

Hollywood, July 14.

Ziv Television has greenlighted production of 39 segments of "This Man Dawson," Keith Andes starrer previously titled "Law Enforcement," and will market the series as its next syndication entry. Production gets underway July 20 on the show.

Series will be produced by Elliott Lewis and William Conrad, the latter the actor now undertaking his first producer assignment. Lewis has been with Ziv for some time, as producer on "Mackenzie's Raiders." Lewis and Conrad are now buying scripts and have set Bill Spier for one of them.

Decision to go into full production on "Dawson" gives Ziv a current total of eight shows in production. Three are network entries, "Bat Masterson," "Challenge" and "Space." Balance, including "Dawson," are for syndication, and include "Sea Hunt," "Mackenzie's Raiders," "Lock-Up" and "Bold Venture." "Sea Hunt" is winding its second year of production and will probably go into a third; "Raiders" is already in its second year; "Venture" and "Lock-Up" are in the latter stages of their first year of production.

Flock of New Cartoons

Terrytoons, the CBS Films subsid, is joining the parade of firms putting out new cartoons for tv. Title of Terrytoon's new half-hour entry is "Deputy Dawg."

Recent cartoons either being distributed to tv or put in the drawing boards include Trans-Lux Television's "Felix the Cat," "Jayark's "Bozo, the Clown," a series of 130 five minutes episodes from Sterling Television; King Features' plan to produce new "Popeye" tv shorts; and Screen Gems' second year production of "Huckleberry Hound."

Bill Joyce Gets Lead In 'Johnny Guitar' Series

Hollywood, July 14.

Bill Joyce, erstwhile batting practice pitcher for N. Y. Yankees, will play title role in Mark VII's projected "Johnny Guitar" teleseries. He now is a Metro pactee.

Pilot, tabbed "A Ballad to Die By," will be aired July 31 on CBS-TV's "Stripe Playhouse."

'Bold Journey' Acquired For Syndication; Also 'Search for Adventure'

Hollywood, July 14.

Banner Films, syndication outfit headed by Charlie MacGregor, has acquired rerun distribution right to Jack Douglas' "Bold Journey" and "I Search for Adventure." About 195 films are involved in all.

"Bold Journey" will go into distribution in September, following its network run for Ralston. There are slightly over 140 half-hours in the package. "Search" started in syndication through George Bagnall Associates, which has distribbed the series for the past four years. Bagnall's lease expires on the show, and the 52 stanzas have been assigned to Banner for distribution.

Unique facet of the deal finds Douglas, who narrates and owns 50% of each of tfhe series, buying back rights to the two shows for the Los Angeles market from Banner. Douglas has commitments to KCOP, and wants to use the material on his shows on the station. Though he's partnered in the series and stars in them, he still had to pay the going price, which included Banner's 35% commission.

Moreover, he quipped, "their prices are outrageous."

Lock Up 'Lock-Up' Sales

A roster of new sales has been inked on Ziv's "Lock-Up."

Recent sales include the Kroger Stores in four new markets, Lexington, Ky., Louisville, Roanoke and Winston-Salem-Greensboro.

Ziv also has been active in lining up advertisers for the 60 markets which American Tobacco has signed for alternate week sponsorship. The following list of sponsors will share markets with American Tobacco on an alternate week basis: E. W. Edwards and Sons Food Products, Syracuse; Old Monastery Wine, New Haven; Phillips 66 Oil, Chicago; and Ortlieb Beer, Philadelphia.

Additional advertisers recently signed for the MacDonald Carey starrer include Old Kent and Trust Co., Grand Rapids; R. J. Reynolds and Swiss Colony Wine, San Francisco; Hiland Dairy, Springfield, Mo.; and Mississippi Bedding, Jackson, Miss.

CBS Films' 25% Increase In Foreign Revenues; 20% of Gross

CBS Films expects to increase its revenues from the foreign market 25% in '59, according to Ralph Baruch, director of international sales who recently returned from a tour of the European market. The projected 25% hike would bring the company's foreign take to nearly 20% of its overall gross.

Baruch saw no spectacular rise in the foreign market the next few years. He forecast a relative, slow but steady growth until new channels open up in Italy, France and England. Then, there should be some sharp climbs. But that's up to three to four years away, according to Baruch.

The Latino market was described as tough currently, with an over abundance of product. He estimated that there's twice as much product being circulated for the Latin American market than that area can absorb. Baruch predicated CBS Films' 25% rise forecast for '59 on the growth in the Australian market and the Continental market. Giving CBS Films a big assist in the Continental market, which most other syndicators find very tough, is the subsid's pub affairs shows. (See separate story).

Foreign operations, under Baruch, will go through what he termed a "cautious expansion," with new offices slated to be opened in France, Germany and a few other areas of the world.

An account of recent sales include the following: England, renewal on "Small World," "Whirlybirds," and "Rawhide"; Japan, renewal on "I Love Lucy" and sales on "Rendezvous" and "Perry Mason"; "Rendezvous" also has been sold in Sweden, Norway and Denmark; Mexico, "Assignment Foreign Legion"; Australia, "Gene Autry," "San Francisco Beat," "Annie Oakley," "Gunsmoke," "Have Gun, Will Travel," "Perry Mason," "Rawhide," and "Trackdown."

'59-'60 Vidpix Roll: Jobs for 1,500

Hollywood, July 14.

Resumption of telefilming after a three-month hiatus will open up an estimated 1,500 jobs in all categories, from lowest employee to top brass, as plans get underway for embarking on next season's programs. It's expected upcoming skeds will hit an alltime production peak.

With addition of no less than 15 series, repping multi-million dollar production investments, within the next two weeks, total number of series rolling here will be boosted to 75.

Four Star Films, now ensconced in its new Republic Studios headquarters, leads the pack, ready to get away with a rash of vidfilm spreads. Close behind is Warner Bros., with four vet series poised for action: "Maverick," "Sugarfoot," "77 Sunset Strip" and "Lawman."

Quartet of widespread skeins returned to cameras yesterday (Mon.), including "The Real McCoys," "The Texan," Desilu-Culver; "Five Fingers," 20th-Fox; "Peter Gunn," Metro. Other series springing to life are Walt Disney's "Texas John Slaughter" and Screen Gems' "Father Knows Best."

L.A., Usually a 'Hot' Market On Syndication Product, Going Soft

Hollywood, July 14.

Los Angeles, long regarded by telefilm syndicators and feature film distributors as a "hot" market, has gone soft over the past year, with the result that syndicated half-hours are currently selling at 25 to 35% less than previously. Feature films are affected less perceptibly, but "selective" buying is now more apparent.

In the syndication field, the average half-hour firstrun telefilm series a year ago sold in the neighborhood of $2,200 per episode. Today, though an average is hard to calculate, they are running from as little as $1,500 per half-hour to a general top of $1,750.

Put another way, a station film-buyer declared: "If there's a good show we really want badly, we can get it for $2,000. A year ago, we'd have had to go to $2,500."

In the feature film market, the key to the softness of the situation lies in the fact that stations can now buy "selectively," though still paying top price for "A's." That is, in any given package, they can buy the cream pictures without having to take on the "dogs" as well. When a sellers' market exists, as was the case a couple of years ago, a station buyer had to purchase the entire package, the clinkers as well as the top product.

One station recently bought 38 films from a package of 78-mixed —in terms of quality—features. It paid top price, in the area of $10,000 a picture for unlimited runs over four years, but was able to select only those it wanted rather than having to take the entire group. Currently, there are some packages kicking around with no takers at all—stations won't buy primarily because of poor quality, or a mixture of American and foreign films.

As to the reasons for the depression of the market, they stem principally from two stations, KTTV in the half-hour field and KNXT in the feature film market.

'ATTORNEY GENERAL' FOR LEVY, GARDNER

Hollywood, July 14.

Series based on the files of the California Attorney-General's Office of Identification & Investigation is next project in the hopper of Sussex Films and Four Star, currently producing "The Rifleman" and "Robert Taylor's Detectives." Company is owned by Jules Levy, Arthur Gardner and Arnold Laven.

Promise of full cooperation from state Attorney-General Stanley Mosk marks the first time the California legal unit has agreed to cooperate in a television venture. Series, tabbed "Attorney General," is not cast yet, though Levy is presently dickering with some top names.

Pilot will be filmed within five weeks at Republic, according to Levy. He's assigned Christopher Knopf to script the pilot teleplay.

Sandy Howard's Kidpix With Doodles Weaver

Hollywood, July 14.

Sandy Howard Productions has completed 75 five-minute animal films with Doodles Weaver narrating the kidpix and is attempting its own distribution on the package. Show is already sold on WNTA-TV, Newark, with deals pending in Port Arthur, Tex., and Shreveport.

Series contains existing footage plus some especially filmed by Jack Eisenbach, and also contains original music. Howard group feels it's an ideal kidstrip in view of the fact that cartoon repeats are beginning to cull complaints to stations from kids and parents.

Allen Rivkin Exits 'Troubleshooters'

Hollywood, July 14.

Allen Rivkin has resigned as producer of "The Troubleshooters," the Meridian Productions (John Gibbs-Richard Steenberg) series for United Artists Television. Rivkin will remain with Meridan to develop a new series for the company, however.

Rivkin's resignation on the Keenan Wynn-Bob Mathias starrer is effective Friday (17), when he finished the 13 shows for which he was contracted. Steenberg will handle production on the remaining 25. Series, set to bow on NBC in the Friday at 8 slot in September, is filming at Republic under Filmaster auspieces.

Rapf Tapped For 'Bros. January'

Hollywood, July 14.

Mathew Rapf has been signed by Screen Gems to a longterm producer pact, with his first assignment production on 26 "Brothers January" half-hours late this month. Series, a western about twin brothers, looms as a syndication possibility for late fall. Rapf was formerly associated with Screen Gems as producer of "The Web" and "Jefferson Drum," though acting for Goodson-Todman, which co-produced with Screen Gems.

'Northwest Passage' Segs As Theatrical Feature

Hollywood, July 14.

Metro will package three segments of its "Northwest Passage" teleseries as a theatrical feature for release in Europe. Studio is shooting seven days of connective footage, Taina Elg costarring with Keith Larsen in added sequences.

Tabbed "Mission of Danger," produced by Herman Groves and directed by Richard Bare, feature will go out in color.

REGIONAL COIN STARTS ROLLING

Still a Sizable Feature Backlog

While the bulk of the pre-'48 theatricals, and many of more recent vintage, have been accounted for, there still are a few sizable pix groups around. Still others are due to be released before the year is out.

The distributor with the greatest number of pix yet to be released to tv is Screen Gems, which is handling both the Universal library and the backlog of its parent company, Columbia Pictures. It's estimated that SG has about 300 Universals and 200 Columbia yet to be released.

Subsid now is following a policy of distributing pix, either individually or in groups, according to what it considers the receptivity of the market.

National Telefilm Associates International, now distributing "TV Hour of Stars" and its "International Package," will have another group of 78 20th-Fox pix sometime this fall. Under its deal with 20th-Fox, NTA will have an additional 78 pix coming from that source, following those slated for release this fall. Twentieth-Fox claims to have about another 300 pix in its pre-'48 library, but the commerciability of many of those pix is questioned.

United Artists plans to release another group of post-'48's through United Artists Associates, operated by UA. Flamingo, now handling many top notch foreign pix, should be picking up some more titles for release this year. Small operators such as Show Corp. of America, Medallion and others also should be picking up some fresh titles.

Other than that the outlook for fresh pix for tv distribution is dim indeed at present. Only major alteration in the scene would be some agreement on residual payments to Hollywood guilds for pictures produced after August, '48.

No Room in Syndication for Mediocre Half-Hours, Sez Flamingo's Gross

Hollywood, July 14.

The day of mediocre half-hour product for syndication is over, in the opinion of Art Gross, v.p. in charge of sales of Flamingo Telefilms Sales. While feature films and cartoons still continue to sell themselves, the only type of half-hour programs which can now find buyers are top-quality entries, Gross asserts.

State of the syndication business is such, says Gross, that stations are doing very little direct buying of half-hour shows. Networks have so encroached upon the time availabilities of affiliates, and such a superabundance of rerun product is available to stations, he states, that they simply aren't buying firstrun product.

It's no longer even a case of going into a $500 market and offering a series for $250, Gross emphasizes; the stations just don't want to bother with firstrun series. Today, sales of firstrun half-hours are made almost exclusively with advertisers and agencies, with the stations merely supplying the time.

As a consequence, with the existence of the big regional buyers, only the series of the highest quality can be sold. A mediocre series doesn't stand a chance with re-

Wolper to Russia On Space Special

Producer David Wolper, who is preparing a 90-minute filmed special on "The Race for Space," plans to go to Russia at the end of this month for talks with Soviet officials. Wolper is seeking Soviet government authorization to film Soviet satellite areas.

He has held preliminary talks in the U. S. with Victor Kalistratov, head of Sovexport Film in the U. S. In seeking authorization, Wolper has argued that many publications have shown pictures of Soviet space and missile areas, but no comparable footage exists of the activities in such areas. Producer also has argued to do a fair appraisal of the race between U. S. and Russia in outer space, there must be some comparable amount of footage. At this stage, Wolper has much more U. S. footage.

In conjunction with the projected tv special, Wolper reported that he has made an arrangement with the U. S. Defense Department for a touring exposition of replicas of our space vehicles. He has been holding talks with Russian officials here in connection with the Soviet Exhibition to get similar rights to tour Sputnik replicas, now on exhibition at the N. Y. Coliseum.

Residual Deals On 17 More Post-'48s Negotiated by SAG

Hollywood, July 14.

Screen Actors Guild has negotiated residual deals on 17 more post-'48 feature films, one of which, covering 11 films, calls for flat payment of $40,000 to the Guild for distribution to actors in the pictures.

The 11-picture deal was concluded with Schenck-Koch, covering films they made after 1948 for United Artists release. A second deal is with American International Pictures, calling for payment to actors of 15% of their original salaries, on five features which National Telefilm Associates will distribute to tv. A third deal, covering one film, was made with Robert Stillman on "The Americano."

Importance of the Schenck-Koch deal, according to SAG exec Chester L. Migden, is that it covers seven features which have failed to recoup their negative costs from threatical release. Deal, says Migden, "lays to rest finally and inconclusively a misconception held by many producers that if a picture has not recouped its costs from theatrical release they should not or need not pay actors additional compensation for the television release.

"The Guild's view," he continued, " is that television is a separate medium and that actors should be paid additional wages for use of their services in such medium. The additional revenue payable to the producer because of the television release should pay these additional wages regardless of recoupment of cost out of theatrical release."

SYNDICATION BIZ EYES $6,000,000

Syndication biz, generally in the doldrums for the past few months, is perking again.

A roster of regionals already have committed themselves for next season, with more multimarket sponsors due to sign shortly. Before the regional buying spree for next season is out some $5,000,000 to $6,000,000 in sponsor coin will be contracted. Some of that coin now is in the hopper.

Regional deals being inked are heartening to more than one syndication outfit. Many of them had been riding with a depressed sales curve.

New regionals coming in the fold include Budweiser's $1,000,000 buy on "U.S. Marshal" (see separate story). Independent Television Corp. has a few major regionals tentatively tied up on "Four Just Men." Understood the conditional orders includes DX-Sunray for a 30 market spread.

Also stirring up the regional fires are United Artists Television with "The Vikings," Screen Gems with "Manhunt," MCA TV with "Shotgun Slade" and Ziv with "This Man Dawson." MCA TV landed a big one with Falstaff Brewing for "Coronado Nine," for telecasting in January. Carling Brewing committed itself for $4,250,000 for a 63-market spread on CBS Films "Phil Silvers Show" for a three-year deal. The $4,250,000 Carling Brewery money represents time and talent.

United Artists Television and Ziv are holding on to the identities of their regionals at this point, but their names will be uncorked shortly.

Also bolstering the picture is the success of ITC with "Ding Dong School," now placed in about 70 markets. The stripped show, slated for telecasting either by vidtape or film, has garnered an array of national spot buyers. Of the 20 spots available weekly to sponsors, 10 have been accounted for by ITC by national sponsors.

Most syndication companies prior to this regional spurt had experienced a slow period. There were some exceptions. Ziv, in a statement, reported that sales and renewals for the company's shows for the first six months of this year were 34% higher than for a comparable period a year ago. But the Ziv experience was not reflective of the sales activity of most of the syndication houses.

Copping the regional account also poses a problem for next season. Most of the networks have bitten into the 7 to 7:30 p.m. (EDT) and 10 to 10:30 p.m. (EDT) time periods. Once the regional is inked, the syndicator then goes out to the various markets to clear what is considered prime syndication time for the big spending regionals. This season, the syndicator finds time clearances a tough problem.

But, as one syndicator put it, the time problem is tough, but not insurmountable. Let the regionals roll, he sang.

Solidarity

Rivalry between CBS and NBC will be put aside at the U. S. Exhibition in Moscow this summer.

The NBC-RCA closed-circuit tv facilities at the American pavilion will have Terrytoons animated cartoons for telecasting. Terrytoons is a wholly owned subsid of CBS Films.

The 10 cartoons selected for daily showing include: "Sydney's Family Tree," "Another Day, Another Doormat," "Woodman, Spare the Tree," "The Timid Scarecrow," and "Pastry Panic."

Guild in Merger With Vic Tanny; It's Another Stock Swap Deal

Guild Films will merge with Vic Tanny, $21,000,000 gymnasium chain, under the combined name of Vic Tanny Enterprises Inc. New corporation will operate two divisions, the Tanny chain and a vidfilm production-distribution-financing operation.

Terms of the merger, involving exchange of stock, were not disclosed, since Tanny is sole shareholder in his company. Merger agreement is subject to okay of lawyers now finalizing details, and ratification by Guild stockholders. Tanny would become the largest single stockholder in the new company and would serve as president and chief executive officer. John Cole, Guild prexy, would continue to head the vidpix division.

Merger will prove advantageous to both companies. In Guild's case, the company is in desperate need of cash, beset with creditors and lawsuits. Among its major assets, however, are several million dollars worth of free airtime, aggregated through barter arrangements (film shows for time) with stations; a tax loss carry-forward of $6,000,000; and a listing on the American Stock Exchange.

Tanny, with 70 gyms and in rapid stages of expansion, is presently in a situation where these assets are extremely valuable. It already is one of the major buyers of television spot time, hence can use Guild's barter time to great advantage. It can use the tax loss carry-forward so that the first $6,000,000 in earnings of the new combined company would probably be tax free.

Agreement apparently was reached quickly on Friday (10), since on Thursday afternoon both Tanny and Cole stated they had held no discussions for the previous three weeks, Tanny declaring that negotiations had turned cold and Cole adding he was currently in "advance-stages of negotiation" with three other companies.

Telefilm Outfits Also Have Yen For O'Seas Operations

There's a growing yen for financial investments abroad in tv operations.

CBS and NBC have been active in that area for some time now, with investments in Latino and English operations. Now telefilm companies would like to get into the act. Roster of telefilm companies scouting the possibility of investments in foreign tv outlets include Screen Gems, 20th-Fox, via its newly-organized foreign tv film subsid, and National Telefilm Associates.

CBS has a joint investment in Buenos Aires in the equipment of a studio. Partnered with CBS in that venture is Latin American tv operator Gore Mestre. CBS also is a party in association with ATV of England for a tv operation in Ireland. Web, whose foreign operations are under the guidance of Merle Jones, also is a party to a tv application in the West Indies and is mulling participation for a tv station in New Castle, Australia.

NBC international has a 10% interest in a Brisbane station, and has management-consultant contracts for TWW, Wales, England, and stations in South America and Europe.

MORE SPONSOR COIN FOR SG 'MANHUNT'

Screen Gems is still in the process of getting regionals for its latest syndicated vidpic entry, "Manhunt." Last week the syndicator came through with Alka Seltzer for several West Coast markets, including Tucson, L.A., San Diego, San Francisco, Bakersfield, and Honolulu, in Hawaii, and this week there is a deal with Coor's Beer for Denver, Colorado Springs and Yuma, with perhaps one or two other Rocky Mt. markets due to be picked up by the brewer.

Kroger Stores has bought three southern markets for the half-hour series, this too happening since the Alka buy was closed. Plus the regionals, the first of which was for Genessee Beer in all N.Y. markets outside N.Y.C. Eighteen station buys have been firmed up.

'Hour of Stars' Vidpix Entries in 75 Cities

"TV Hour of Stars," the first large package of hour-long telefilm entries to be introed into syndication, has chalked up about 75 markets.

Many stations are utilizing the episodes as substitutes for theatrical pix. The package consists of episodes from network entries of 20th-Fox and Warner Bros.

Loew's Dickering To Buy 4 Star?

• Telefilm biz is beset by rumbles of possible acquisitions.

Latest to be making the rounds is that of Loew's dickering for the purchase of Four Star Films, that highly successful telefilm combination. The current rumbles probably stem from acknowledged talks held between Loew's and Four Star execs about three months ago. The talks though didn't lead anywhere—but negotiations could be revived if both parties became interested once again.

Loew's failed to win a network entry this season and it's more than just unhappy about that situation. To bring a winning production outfit into its fold would buoy the MGM-TV operation, and put it into bigtime overnight. It's a situation being carefully watched. MGM-TV, in the meantime, is prepping its sales drive on "Thin Man," its first syndication entry.

Budweiser Repacts 'U.S. Marshal'; 93-City Buy for $1,000,000

National Telefilm Associates has copped Budweiser Beer for another round on the John Bromfield starrer "U.S. Marshal."

Deal, negotiated by Michael Sillerman's NTA program sales division and D'Arcy, is for 93 markets, with the possibility that the market list may be spread even further. It represents about $1,000,000 and is one of the major regionals of the season.

Second year production on the Desilu produced skein is due to start next month.

VARIETY -ARB FEATURE CHART

VARIETY's weekly feature chart, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, covers two markets. Each week the 10 top rated features for the two markets will be listed.

Factors which would assist distributors, agencies, stations and advertisers in determining the effectiveness of a feature show in a specific market have been included in this VARIETY chart. Listed below is such pertinent information regarding features as their stars, release year, original production company and the present distributor included wherever possible along with the title. Attention should be paid to such factors as the time and day, the high and low ratings for the measured feature period and share of audience, since these factors reflect the effectiveness of the feature and audience composition, i.e., a late show at 11:15 p.m. would hardly have any children viewers, but its share of audience may reflect dominance in that time period. In the cities where stations sell their feature programming on a multi stripped basis utilizing the same theatrical throughout the week a total rating for the total number of showings for the week is given, the total rating not taking into account the duplicated homes factor. Barring unscheduled switches in titles the listed features for the particularly rated theatrical filmed show are as accurate as could be ascertained.

Handsome Payoff On Closed-Circuit 'Direct-to-Client'

Hollywood, July 14.

ABC-TV's sales strategy in closed-circuiting the pilots of its hour shows to interested clients is already paying off. The process of taking the test show to the sponsor rather than having him come to the Coast to see it has resulted in offers from two clients and a firm order from a third.

Reps of Armour and its agency, Foote, Cone & Belding, were shown both "Adventures in Paradise" and "The Alaskan" on the private line to Chicago and were so well received that negotiations have been incepted for a participating interest in both shows. Network first put "Bourbon Street" on the closed line and won Lorillard as one of the show's three sponsors.

To stimulate sales interest in the hour shows at the point of reception, Oliver Treyz, ABC-TV prexy, and Tom Moore, veepee of programming for the network, attend the showings. On open phone lines to the Coast, Warners' William Orr and 20th-Fox's Martin Manulis stand by to answer any questions from the prospective sponsors on the series.

ABC plan has been well received by the advertiser and its agency even though many agency men aren't too enthused. It deprives many of them of a trip to the Coast and side trips to Las Vegas and Palm Springs on the ostensible mission of seeing the pilots. Any pilot of an ABC-TV show will be close-circuited to a prospective bankroller in any town where ABC has an affiliate.

Mack, Whiteside Face New Trial

Washington, July 14.

Second trial looms this fall for ex-FCC Commissioner Richard A. Mack and his Miami friend, Thurman Whiteside, on conspiracy charge connected with the FCC grant of Miami Television channel 10.

Federal Judge Burnita S. Matthews on Monday (13) denied defense motions for acquittal of pair following last week's 11-1 hung jury. Justice Dept. attorney's previously said they'd institute a second trial if the acquittal effort failed.

The case, stemming from Harris Committee disclosures in the red hot Miami television channel 10 case, took 14 weeks to try, and the jury deliberated 31 hours. Associated Press quoted three unnamed jurors as saying the 11 were for conviction, the one for acquittal. Judge Matthews did not ask the jury how it lined up.

Mack and Whiteside were accused of conspiring to influence the FCC award of Miami channel 10 to Public Service Television, a National Airlines subsidiary.

FCC deferred further reconsideration of the channel 10 award until the Mack-Whiteside trial was ended. FCC Chairman John C. Doerfer said following announcement of the hung jury that the commission would decide when it will proceed on channel 10 within a few days.

WPIX's SRO Shingle On '3 Stooges Funshow'

WPIX, N. Y., has hung up the SRO sign on the fall outing of "Three Stooges Funhouse with Officer Joe Bolton," stripped Monday through Friday from 5:30 to 6 p.m.

Lining up for the kiddie show are: General Toy, Miles Laboratories, Maypo Cereals, Bosco, Colgate Palmolive and V. La Rosa.

Recently, WPIX added another 40 "Three Stooges" one and two reelers, bringing its supply to 128 episodes. Distributor of the old theatrical reelers is Screen Gems.

Queen Liz Comes To Chi And War Is Declared

All TV In a Furore as Atlass' WBBM Bootlegs a Scoop; Station Heads Let Loose Blasts in 4-Star Melodrama

By LES BROWN

Chicago, July 14.

Columbia-owned WBBM-TV ad libbed from the Togetherness script last week and for its glorious achievement received only a loud round of outraged boos from its upstaged confreres.

The incident, in fact, rubbed upon old wounds and gave vent finally to some long suppressed tensions between certain prominent figures in the local television universe who, until now, have been making a fair show of being friendly rivals. Ironically, it all took place only hours after the tv Landsmanschaft boasted of the spirit of One Worldmanship so warmly demonstrated in a four-station poolcast earlier that day.

The cast of characters in this Windy City melodrama is as star-jammed (in terms of the local trade) as any "Playhouse 90" offering, with even Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth of England, getting gueststar billing in a minor but pivotal role. The principals include Mayor Richard J. Daley and his public relations staff, NBC veep Lloyd Yoder, WGN veep Ward L. Quaal, and CBS-TV veep H. Leslie Atlass, the latter playing the heavy with an assist from his daughter, Harriet (Sis) Atlass, WBBM-TV director of pubaffairs.

Chi's Angry Young Man

Alternating as narrator and Greek chorus in the drama is Sterling (Red) Quinlan, the angry young man of Windy City broadcasting who steers the ABC station, WBKB. So much for the cast, and now for the story:

After carrying off successfully a poolcast of the Queen's arrival in Chicago, the four VIPs of Chi television settled down to a posh dinner party tossed for the visiting royalty by Mayor Daley. Three of the station chieftains were surprised to find CBS cameras on the premises, but their indigestion was assuaged by Col. Jack Reilly, the mayor's special events director, who assured them the cameras were only for a closed circuit telecast.

With 282 newsmen anxious to cover the event, and with no room for them in the Conrad Hilton's Grand Ballroom, the mayor's staff had arranged with the CBS station to feed the proceedings into another room via closed circuit. It was explained to the station muckamucks that Teleprompter's bid of $1,950 was more than the city could afford to pay for the job and that WBBM-TV had made a more reasonable offer.

It's easy to guess what happened next. At 10 p.m. a portion of the closed circuit telecast was cut into the WBBM-TV newscast and less than an hour later 20 minutes more of the event interrupted the WBBM-TV feature film. Messrs. Quaal, Quinlan and Yoder were all surprised and abashed. Each was under the impression that all video coverage of the queen's visit was to have been pooled, and WBBM-TV had given no warning whatever of its pickup.

Then came the sound and the furore, the invectives, the harsh wires to the mayor's office and the ultimate blackballing of WBBM-TV from the local fraternity. In the denouement, peaceful coexistence between the commercial stations in this metropolis had come to an end, with something like war declared on WBBM-TV. For a twist, the outcome made allies-in-the-cause of WBKB and WGN-TV, which formerly had entertained a quiet hostility.

But this is only the bald scenario. The rest is after the fashion of "Rashomon" or Browning's "Ring and the Book," wherein everyone tells a different version of the same tale. There are even some cloak and dagger angles, as for instance Quinlan's suspicion of collusion between WBBM-TV and one of the mayor's underlings, a relationship which he hopes to smoke out.

The mayor's office, attempting to maintain a neutral position—or better, to step out of the whole mess, if possible—put it thus (p.r. director Earl Bush speaking): "We wanted all the coverage of the Queen's visit we could get, so we're not going to censure WBBM-TV because they did us a favor. Well before the Queen arrived we offered the dinner for pool coverage, but all four of the stations turned it down because they're commercial in the evening. When we needed the closed circuit, WBBM-TV asked for $550 and we set the deal. They never told us they were going to put it on the air. If they did we'd have told everyone, because we wanted it covered. But we're not going to pay the station the $550, because, as long as it was on the air, it was something we could have tuned in for free."

Miss Atlass of WBBM-TV denied, however, that there was ever any cash involved. "There was no discussion of pay," she says. "The city was in a spot. They called us the preceding Friday and asked if we would do the closed circuit. We decided to do it for the city, and as long as we were doing it we thought we might just as well put it on the air. Let's say the decision was made by 'station management.' We made that decision the day before the Queen arrived and had our lines put in that day, and as far as I'm concerned we were not obliged to tell anyone else about it." (The cut-ins from the banquet were labeled "Exclusive" on the air.)

Meanwhile, Back at Mayor's Office

Back to Earl Bush at the Mayor's office: "If CBS used devious means to score a scoop—why not? That's what newspapers do all the time."

Says Lloyd Yoder of WNBQ-WMAQ: "A visit from the Queen, like the inauguration of the President, is in the public domain. At our meetings beforehand we decided to make this event a great thing for Chicago, with no objective to grab any individual glory. This visit belonged to everyone, so it's not fair of WBBM-TV to make a scoop of it by pirating the show. This was no time for glory grabbing. We'll never refuse to do a poolcast in the public interest, but we know now to expect the double-cross from WBBM-TV."

Ward Quaal of WGN was more extreme. In his wire to the mayor he said he would never again participate in a pool arrangement with WBBM-TV. He said WBBM-TV's coup was a "complete abrogation of the pool arrangement and represented the most unethical move (he) had experience by any competitor in more than 20 years in the broadcasting business."

Further, Quaal said he believed the pickup was no last minute decision because of arrangements that had to be made, such as the ordering of AT&T wires. He resented too WBBM-TV's boast that it telecast the Queen's speech as a "public service," submitting that it would have been a greater public service if the other stations hadn't been blacked out by WBBM-TV's refusal to "play the game fairly."

The Prologue was Quinlan's, and so was the curtain speech. "The story from the mayor's office is too naive to be believable. WBBM-TV's program had to be premeditated, and the station did a great disservice to the public interest by not advertising or announcing the remote pickup. Even if they didn't have their lines in till Sunday they could have advertised in the morning papers.

"They violated their agreement with us to make a furtive and unethical grandstand play, and furthermore they wronged those reporters in the Boulevard Room whom they were hired to service. Instead of giving them first hand access to the news by closed circuit, they put the show on the air and scooped them. We've known for a long time they're a wrong bunch of guys, and we'll do our damnedest to avoid another pool with them."

Quinlan's irritation with the Atlasses is nothing recent; his animosity runs deep. And so a pair of flashbacks, the first two weeks ago when, in setting up the morning poolcast of the Queen's arrival in the mayor's office, Miss Atlass challenged Quinlan's right to the choicest remote spot and beat him to it by the toss of a coin. What angered the ABC veep particularly in this instance was that he had heard via the grapevine that WBBM-TV and WGN-TV had deprecated to the mayor's staff WBKB's ability to do remotes.

The second flashback goes back to February, 1953 when Atlass purchased the original (pre-merger) WBKB for CBS and cracked to the press that the station was in such bad shape "it would have been easier to start with nothing." Quinlan took the remark personally, declaring it "an unwarranted and unjustified attack on a fellow broadcaster," and the insult still sticks in his craw.

Anyway, the enmity is out in the open again, and Quinlan appears to have picked up a few allies. The mayor's staff will have to start from scratch to make friends in the broadcasting trade again, and the Atlass' scoop—albeit bootlegged — is ineradicable. The Queen's back on her throne, the snail's on the thorn and business goes on as usual.

One point not yet covered: WBBM-TV's manners may have been very bad at the royal dinner, but the television pickup, with Frank Reynolds on the commentary, was very good.

Is A. L. Alexander Show Info or Entertainment? AFTRA Wants to Know

A. L. Alexander, moderator-producer of "Court of Human Relations" on NBC-TV, will huddle shortly with AFTRA officials regarding question of union membership of his panel of mediators.

Alexander, who's a member of AFTRA of long standing, contends that his panelists, who appear occasionally and because of their professions and other fulltime assignments, should not be forced to join the union.

Alexander maintains that the mediators on his program who include Edward Corsi, Norman Thomas, Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, Judge Anna Kross, Justice William A. Wachenfeld, James A. Farley are not "people engaged in general entertainment" and because of their "occasional" guesting are therefore not subject to AFTRA jurisdiction.

Meanwhile, Alexander agreed to sign the AFTRA contract which subjects the program to the union's national code of fair practice for network tv broadcasting. But the issue of having his mediators join the union will have to be thrashed out in the near future.

More than 50 individuals are on Alexander's "Court of Human Relations" panel of mediators, and it is Alexander's insistence that the program should not be listed as entertainment but labelled instead an informational program.

'Playhouse 90' Vs. Moran's 'Anguish'

Chicago, July 14.

Despite the efforts of local citizen John G. Moran to black out in Chi the "Playhouse 90" rerun of "Seven Against the Wall" last Thursday (16), the show went on here as scheduled. Until early that afternoon, the local CBS outlet, WBBM-TV, had a feature film standing by in case Cook County Superior Court Judge Norman C. Barry should have granted Moran an injunction. The injunction was denied.

Moran said the play, which recreated the St. Valentine's Day Massacre, caused him severe mental anguish. The petitioner's father was George C. ("Bugs") Moran, the Prohibition hoodlum whose gang is celebrated in the title of the "Playhouse 90" drama. Moran himself had escaped the historic shooting in the Chicago garage but died a few years later in prison.

'All a Mistake,' No Lerner-Loewe Musical for NBC

Video viewers who had hastily cancelled all social engagements for the night of Nov. 13 from 8:30 to 10 p.m. in order to watch a 90-minute show featuring the music of Alan Jay Lerner and Frederick Loewe fashioners of "My Fair Lady" and "Gigi" under the auspices of General Motors over NBC-TV can now reschedule their bridge, backgammon and poker playing dates. Deal is off between GM, NBC and Alfred Productions, Inc., the Lerner-Loewe company.

Many factors apparently brought about the cancellation of what figured to be one of the major showbiz specials of the coming season. Norman Rosemont, veep of Alfred Productions said, there never was a firm deal between NBC and GM for the rights to the Lerner-Loewe music. Things hadn't progressed beyond the discussion stage. Secondly, GM, the potential sponsor, was evidently under a misapprehension thinking it was going to get performers from "My Fair Lady" and "Gigi" to appear on the 90-minute special. Moreover, NBC-TV had sent out a press release anent the proposed deal, which led dailies across the country to assume that what was in store for viewers was the actual showing of highspots from the hit Broadway musical and the hit film, which was definitely not the intention of the producers. Furthermore, the NBC release, according to Rosemont, was not authorized, as far as Alfred Productions was concerned.

Rosemont denied that CBS, which owns a hefty piece of "My Fair Lady" had anything to do with the sudden cutting off of negotiations for the upcoming special. Lerne and Loewe it was said had no objections to appearing on the air with their music but under no circumstances would there be re-creations of scenes from "My Fair Lady" and "Gigi."

The Lerner-Loewe deal was definitely off, all negotiations along this line having ceased, Rosemont said, NBC, however, said it was still trying to get Lerner and Loewe for another package with another sponsor in mind. As for lifting material bodily from "My Fair Lady" and "Gigi," for tv use in the near future, this Rosemont hinted was in the realm of ESP and has as much chance as the NAM getting prime evening time on Moscow Radio.

ABC's Historical Documentaries

A compact special task force has been created in the ABC-TV news-public affairs department to produce historical documentaries keyed to top news events.

Topped by Walt Peters, of ABC-TV's news department, the force of three or four men will have a running assignment to collect footage on particular issues or themes. The shows will be slotted on the web in conjunction with news breaks. For instance, another round of Geneva talks on the Berlin crisis could be utilized for a show on Geneva as a site for international confabs through history. A show could be built around NATO, which would be used on the web when NATO figures as a major news story.

Project is predicated on bringing in about 12 shows per year.

In the web's other pubaffairs areas, first special for the new season probably will be a report on Southeast Asia. Just returning from a six-week tour of the area are producer Bob (Shad) Northshield and cameramen-soundmen Nils Rasmussen and Jess Paley. Enough footage has been assembled for up to three one our shows, but that may be pruned down to one or two hourlong shows.

Other pubaffairs shows blueprinted for the new season under the aegis of v.p. John Daly are a series of one-hour shows on the natural sciences, ranging from micrology to the sea as a source of minerals.

BALANCE! The CBS Owned stations devote the same care and production values to programs in the public interest as they do to their entertainment schedules.

As proof: since the beginning of the year, news, information and education programs on the five stations have won a total of 36 awards, plaques and honorable mentions.

To cite but a few...of three Sigma Delta Chi television journalism awards, two went to CBS Owned stations. Five local "Emmys" (including a Special Station Achievement award) went to CBS Owned stations for public affairs programming. Four awards and honorable mentions given by the Ohio State University Institute for Education by Radio-Television ...a Sylvania award...a National Headliner Silver Medallion...and so on.

Unquestionably, it is the continuing commercial success of CBS Owned stations' entertainment schedules which makes possible the major-budget community service programs that attract large audiences. And thus assures the program balance – entertainment and information in generous measure – indigenous to WCBS-TV, NEW YORK; KNXT, LOS ANGELES; WBBM-TV CHICAGO; WCAU-TV, PHILADELPHIA; KMOX-TV, ST. VARIETY-ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top ten network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top ten syndicated shows in the same particular market. This week ten different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top ten shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting, competitive programming in the particular slot, etc., is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 150 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top ten network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U. S.

Foreign TV Reviews

CLASH BY NIGHT

With Sam Wanamaker, Patricia Neal, Nehemiah Persoff, Sean Sullivan, Neil McCarthy, Suzanne Finlay, Arnold Marle, Paddy Joyce, John Barrard.
Producer: John Jacobs
Writer: Clifford Odets
90 Mins., Tues., 9:15 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London.

Presenting as fine a display of acting as has been seen in British electronic drama. BBC-TV scored a coup-de-tv with this powerful triangle tragedy from Odets' poetic pen. If it was greater in its parts than in its whole—an objective glance back suggests that melodrama weighted the scales in the overall concept—that's no matter. During its entire running-time it compelled emotional attention as a true study of human beings caught up in an inevitable situation.

Set, with a finely captured feeling for atmosphere, on Staten Island during a heatwave in 1941, the story tells simply how Earl Pfeiffer (Sam Wanamaker) comes to live with his pal Jerry Wilenski (Nehemiah Persoff) and his wife Mae (Patricia Neal). At 38, lonely and aimless, Earl longs for someone and a purpose. Mae needs a man and love, not Jerry's weakness and doglike devotion. And when Jerry discovers what's happened, his dumb despair turns to fury, then to utter desolation, again to vengeful rage, and at last to forgiveness. But in seeking out Earl to explain this, he is met with a scared hostility that forces him finally into blind wrath and murder.

Of all the protagonists, Patricia Neal impressed the most with her superb study of the honest but hungry Mae, while Sam Wanamaker also made an immense impact—not the least because, on the small screen, he brought his customary extravagant style well under control. Nehemiah Persoff, with some of the toughest passages to carry, also scored something of a triumph, while among the firstrate supporters Sean Sullivan stood out with his study of a crafty, mind-festered uncle. Production througout was as good as anything achieved in a movie studio. Erni.

MY LOST SAINTS

With Louise Allbritton, Veronica Turleigh, June Jago, Alan Gifford, Sandra Stokes, others.
Producer: Sydney Newman
Director: Dennis Vance
Writer: Tad Mosel
65 Mins. Sun., 10.5 p.m.
Associated TeleVision, from London.

Tad Mosel's play about divided loyalties and the growing-up pains of a 37-year-old woman got understanding handling in this ATV production; though some aspects of the inter-character relationship were a shade foreign to English eyes. Nevertheless, that basic situation came across strongly and movingly, the net result being an arresting slice of tv drama.

The story it may be recalled, centres on the Hallett family wherein maid-of-all-work Kate (June Jago) is treated as friend and member. Things change, however, when Kate's mother (Veronica Turleigh) arrives and tries—in that time-honored manner of the self-centred, possessive, aged—to disrupt the peace and claim Kate for her own. She succeeds pretty well, until Kate herself comes face to face with the truth and plumps for staying with the Halletts.

The Misses Jago and Turleigh walked off with the acting palm, each giving a top-bracket performance. Louise Allbritton did well, too, as the neurotic Mrs. Hallett, as did Alan Gifford as her sorely-tried husband. The direction had its effective film-technique touches, while the setting of an American home was good. Erni.

BUONE VACANZE
(Happy Vacations)

With Gorni Kramer and orch; Mario Petri, Cetra Quartet, Jula de Palma, Johnny Dorelli, guests Betty Curtis, Achille Togliani, Lelio Lutazzi, Wilma DeAngelis, Duke Diamond, Jack Wilber.
Director: Stefano de Stefani
60 Mins., Sat., 9 p.m.
RAI-TV, from Rome

Elaborate summer replacement for the toprated "Il Musichiere" combines the surefire ingredients of music and song into a pleasant lightweight package to please the vacationing local listener.

Basically just a singer-and-orchestra stanza, show has been given gloss and visual entertainment values by imaginative staging of the various numbers, in addition to gathering together a goodly number of Italian musical personalities in the top-popularity brackets. First stanza caught showed need for pacing and was as usual somewhat overlong. Some lighting cues were also missed, but these rough spots should disappear as show progresses.

Initial lineup included regulars Jula DePalma, fine in several numbers; Betty Curtis, who belted across her new hit, "La Verita" (The Truth); Johnny Dorelli, good as solo and in group number; the Cetra Quartet, who reprised their old (and slightly cornfed) "Old America" number; and Mario Petri, unflatteringly lensed as he sang "Old Man River" in okay fashion. Some effective numbers were contributed by guests Wilma DeAngelis and Achille Togliani, especially in duetting "You Are My Lucky Star"; Lelio Lutazzi with a jumpy version of "Stars Fell on Alabama"; and dancers Duke Diamond and Jack Wilber, in a change-of-pace terp interlude.

Emcee-orchestra leader-soloist-composer Gorni Kramer bridged the various gaps in an easygoing manner which should win him host of new friends. Hawk.

LA BOUTIQUE DELLA CANZONE
(The Song Shop)

With Nuto Navarrini, Pier Emilio Bassi combo, Franca Aldrovandi, Gianni Traversi, Franco Pace
Writer: Riccardo Morbelli
30 Mins.; Sun., 6:45 p.m.
RAI-TV, from Turin

Skimpy production and one of least successful RAI efforts in the musical manner with spotlight on song. Show, part live and part kinnied, needs a stronger more sympathetic personality than that of emcee Nuto Navarrini. Despite his allout try, he's just not cut for the role.

Borrowing a leaf or two from the Perry Como show, stanza mainly reprises a series of past and present hits by a top Italo composer—in this case Fanciulli—with execution in hands of young talent for whom presumably this show constitutes a breaking-in stint. Effect is only so-so, adding to a general impression of tedium. Technical credits and sets okay. Hawk.

FESTIVAL IN BERLIN

With Wynford Vaughan Thomas, Ivor Jones, Willy Brandt, A. Bauer, Jean Renoir, others.
Producer: Alan Sleath
45 Mins., Thurs., 10:15 p.m.
BBC-TV, from Berlin (Eurovision)

BBC-TV's enterprising attempt to ally direct interviews from the Berlin Film Fest with prefilmed background stuff and film clips didn't fully succeed, largely because there wasn't sufficient holding material to fill the allotted slot. At times, in fact, the program seemed to be deteriorating into a travelog and a plug for Berlin hotels, even though coverage of the city and its accommodation could be regarded as proper fodder.

Probably the program would have been more successful if it had less ambitiously carried merely interviews with film personalities in Berlin interspersed with more clips. As it was, only three or four filmland characters—including directors J. Lee Thompson and Jean Renoir—and ditto excerpts got a lookin. The interlinkers didn't seem fully at ease, and technically the transmission was often rough. As a boost for Berlin and the festival organizers it was okay, but as a 45-minute show it was only so-so. Erni.

SOMETHING IN THE CITY

With Eric Barker, Joan Benham, Derek Guyler, Pearl Hackney, Peter Hammond, Diane Hart.
Director: Kenneth Carter
Music: Denis Wreford
30 Mins., Mon., 8:30 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion, from London.

Using shrewd observation of everyday human idiosyncracies, Eric Barker has hitherto built up an excellent line of gentle comedy that's been for the most part caviare to the general. This skein of pre-recorded programs, produced by Jack Hylton TV Productions Ltd., seems to be trying to widen his appeal. Instead, the first specimen suggested that Barker's going to be deprived of his bite and much else.

The comedian's seen as a subur-

CAVALCADE OF SPOTS

With Richard Carlson, host
Asso. Producers: Jack O'Mara, Dick Woollen
Director: Bob Hiestand
Writer: Harry Wayne McMahan
30 Mins.; Sat., 6:30 p.m.
KTTV, Los Angeles

KTTV prexy Dick Moore stuck his neck out several months ago, offering a half-hour of prime time for 13 weeks to the Assn. of National Advertisers' western meeting to prove that commercials can be entertaining. ANA never took him up on it, but several agencies did, and the result is "Cavalcade of Spots."

Moore was right—commercials can be fun. On the preem, host Richard Carlson fronted 14 of them, four American, the other 10 foreign. They were clever, tasteful and extremely soft-sell, yet highly effective in driving their sales points across.

Show included the first hard-liquor commercial on American tv, though the sell was so soft you'd never know it was liquor except for a closing shot of the bottle. Fully animated commercial, which ran about three minutes, was made in Milan for Stock Brandy, an Italian drink, and the theme was its universal popularity. Another offbeat blurb was a Belgian brassiere commercial, live-action, using a sort of subliminal approach that made its' point neatly.

Best of the lot, as far as humor is concerned, were the American and English blurbs, latter for Shell Gasoline there. The British used highly stylized animation, fine sound effects and a wry, intelligent humor in the pitch. American representatives were Calo cat food and Calo dog food spots, also animated and also cleverly conceived.

Two other Yank blurbs are a Lucerne Milk spot (west coast) employing a beatnik character, and the Elgin blurb showing a baby virtually wrecking a watch. Least effective was a Japanese blurb for suntan lotion, routine in conception, but a Japanese animated spot selling yogurt was excellent.

French spots included an excellent shell blurb, a very well done "Bic" (ballpoint pen) spot using puppets, a live-action cake ingredient blurb making imaginative use of sound effects, and an arresting avant-garde styled animated spot for powdered soup.

Carlson was an excellent host, handling Harry Wayne McMahan's script in straightforward style, explaining the origin of the show and giving detailed descriptions of the commercials. McMahan, ex-McCann-Erickson and now a consultant on commercials, is serving as advisor on the show. KTTV film director Dick Woollen and promotion director Jack O'Mara are producing. Chan.

THE JERRY LESTER SHOW

With Earl Barton, Maureen Arthur, Vic Dana, Dick Hazard and Orch; guest stars Carla Alberghetti, Russ Morgan
Producer: Maurice Duke
Director: James Gates
Writer: Bernie Gould
90 Mins., Fri., 10:45 p.m.
PARTICIPATING
KTTV, Los Angeles

Back in the days when a television set was a new piece of furniture in a living room, "Broadway Open House" was a fresh, lively, late-night attraction sparked by a likeable proprietor named Jerry Lester. Most of the warmth and spontaneous spirit of that early endeavor has not been captured in this unhappy 1959 imitation known as "The Jerry Lester Show."

The new show emerges an undistinguished caricature of the original. The basic formula has been adhered to, but the material and imagination to make it jell a decade later are not there. It's now merely a hodge-podge of sex, slapstick and sight gags, all secondary characteristics of the former show, which depended on a sort of reckless vigor, yet infectious warmth, for its charm.

The current offering served up virtually nothing in the way of humor, yet lingered for an overpoweringly monotonous 90 minutes. If the show continues to rely on an almost total absence of acceptable material it will have to be shortened considerably if it hopes to survive. It does not figure to survive beyond the summer in its current state.

Some dreadfully unfunny parodies provided the opener with its most unbearable low points. It must have been embarrassing for the hard-working members of Lester's cast, for the show is not without its talent.

Earl Barton is a young dancer of boyish appeal and considerable magic in his legs, much in the manner of Lester's former dancer, Ray Malone. He's by far the best commodity the new show has to offer. Maureen Arthur is of the Marie Wilson mold, although without the finesse of the original package. However, she gives her "all" to the show, and, physically, that's a sizeable contribution. Vic Dana's chore was confined to one vocal, a la lip-sync, delivered utterly without flair or interest.

Guests on the opener were Russ Morgan and Carla Alberghetti. Morgan's too-brief stint, in which he clowned with Lester and reprised some of his old favorites, was about the best thing in the show. Miss Alberghetti's operatic vocal was acceptable, but unstimulating and entirely out of the element of the proceedings. Dick Hazard's musical backing was capable.

Lester carried on bravely, but will need help if he is to make it as a local personality, let alone a tv comic of national proportions again. Tube.

Mike Wallace Newsbeat

It's not easy to find a genuinely exciting and fresh feature news story, but Mike Wallace all this week has been investigating on his nightly WNTA-TV (N.Y.) news show a virulent anti-white movement. The tv newscaster calls it, "black racism" or "The Hate That Hate Produced," which is the title of this five-part series. First of the series, Monday (13), packed a wallop.

Cameras and Negro reporters were sent by "Newsbeat" to cover mass rallies by a group, which this quarter probably like so many others, never before was aware of. Cameras picked up the leader of the "Muslims," a Southern Negro who has assumed the name Elijah Muhammed, and others of his sect, which was said to represent an extremely large group of Negro extremists, and all of them prated about how vile white men are, e.g. "adulterers, murderers," name it and they said it.

WNTA-TV got cameras, too, on Harlem street corners to hear liberals damned, to hear (in an interview with a fellow named James R. Lawson) Ralph Bunche labelled the "George Washington of Israel" and the NAACP laughed at.

Wallace, who narrated (with a beaut of an assist from Negro reporter Louis Lomax), interpreted slightly the Muslim and United African Nationalist movements. They seemed to be born from responsible reportage by NTA-TV, and, if so, Wallace has uncovered a brand new hornet's nest, worthy of still more time on tv. Art.

Perry Presents

Gloria De Haven appears round and wholesome on the NBC-TV cameras, and, as the replacement last Saturday night (11) for Teresa Brewer, who a week earlier unceremoniously severed her brief relationship with this summertime musicast, she proved satisfactory most of the time as the lead femme singer.

"Perry Presents," the hotspell filler for Perry Como, was an erratic hour. Pictorially, there was Miss De Haven on the plus side. On the other hand, there was fronter Tony Bennett, who, beneath the slick lighting of the NBC-TV program, looked like the mascaraed heavy on the silent motion pictures, and the Four Lads, looking like a personable rank of raw military recruits.

Musically, Bennett was uniformly acceptable. The Lads, a not overly blessed group of songsters, performed best in the comedic sequences. As for material, choice of songs was excellent (a medley of "rain music," highlighted by the thrush's "Singing In the Rain," and items such as "Little Girl Blue," "Boulevard of Broken Dreams," "It Might As Well Be Spring"), and special material, which included a partly impromptu birthday party for Miss De Haven, was also tops. But, by the same token, the combination of uncomfortable idiot board readings by the performers, in introducing the songs, and the copy working itself diminished the im-

THE ANDY WILLIAMS SHOW

With Jack Kane orch; Peter Gennaro dancers; Janis Paige, Johnny Carson, Eddie Hodges, Peter Appleyard, guests
Producer: Perry Lafferty
Director: Norman Jewison
Writers: Buddy Arnold, John Ayelsworth, Fran Peppiot
60 Mins., Tues., 10 p.m.
KELLOGG, REVLON, PITTSBURGH PLATE GLASS
CBS-TV, from New York
(C. J. LaRoche, Leo Burnett, BBD&O)

"The Andy Williams Show" is easily the best of this year's summer replacement entries—indeed, it's the best summer show to come along in the past three or four years. It will probably be a source of frustration to CBS-TV in that, at least on first glance, it deserves a permanent spot, yet the network has none to give it.

Hourlong musical-variety stanza is endowed with several blessings. First of all, there's Williams himself, a skilled and versatile singer and a surprisingly poised and relaxed host. Then there's the fresh, imaginative production approach employed by producer Perry Lafferty and director Norman Jewison, who turned out the classiest of all "Your Hit Parade" versions last season for CBS-TV. Still another key factor is the light, airy, unique-to-tv scenic design of Gary Smith, lending a sense of casual sophistication to the proceedings. And finally, there's originality and inventiveness on the part of scripters Buddy Arnold, John Ayelsworth and Frank Peppiot.

Premiere's guest list comprised Janis Paige, Eddie Hodges, Johnny Carson and Peter Appleyard. Miss Paige, displayed at her singing and dancing best, scored solidly with "Married I Can Always Get" and a wry Helen Kane takeoff with young Hodges. The youngster had a cute Maurice Chevalier takeoff in "Thank Heaven for Little Girls" and a good "Swingin' on a Star" duet with Williams. Carson turned in two excellent comedy bits, one as a Saturday morning television performer, "Deputy John," who's had a little too gay a time on Friday night, and another as Ed Murrow in "Person to Person," taking a George Raft disk out of context for striking effect. Appleyard is a young British jazz star, who trebles on vibes, piano and bongos and achieves some dazzling effects on all three, strongly reminiscent of the early Lionel Hampton.

Williams himself is equally at home with a ballad or a rhythm tune. His "Our Love Is Here to Stay," "So Rare" and a group of tunes debuted at the old Hammerstein Theatre, long since converted to a radio and later a tv studio and the origination point for the show, were richly textured and smoothly turned out.

Additional top credits include the choreography of Peter Gennaro and the dancing of his trio of Cynthia Scott, Wisa Dorso and Jayne Turner; Jack Kane's letter-perfect batoning; costumes of Leslie Renfield and the lighting direction of Stan Alper. Those lights, incidentally, were used to excellent effect in the opener, a clever musical takeoff on the "To Tell the Truth" panel show.

But overall, this entry is a triumph of style and individuality. Chan.

LONG SHOT

With Stan Freberg, Joyce Davidson, John Sack, Joan Fairfax, Larry Solway, Ray Armstrong, Don Franks, Nicky Balch
Producer: Ross McLean
30 Mins., Sun. (5), 10:30 p.m.
CBC-TV, from Toronto

Ross McLean is the most controversial producer on the payroll of the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. and he was teamed up with Stan Freberg, another iconoclast of tv commercials and interview treatment, 75% of whose writing talent material was bluepencilled on a nix by the "Chevy Show," Oasis Cigarets and "The Dick Clark Show." For the first time, Freberg was given the freedom of the Canadian airwaves, this with the full support of McLean.

Already, "Long Shot" has been bombarded with offers of sponsorship from advertisers who don't mind their products being kidded. The show, although started as a summer replacement, shows every sign of continuing into the fall-spring season.

True, McLean had too much material and had trouble closing the new program, but he is groping and too much material is better than none. (He and Freberg do their own writing.) The Geritol trademarked line of "My Name is Stan Freberg," this done by a mixed ensemble of males and femmes, could have been dropped

VARIETY - ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top ten network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top ten syndicated shows in the same particular market. This week ten different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top ten shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting, competitive programming in the particular slot, etc., is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 150 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top ten network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U. S.

Television Reviews

as a waste of time; but the McLean-Freberg blasts of opinion on tv commercials were warranted.

While Freberg's self-written material, such as U.S. agency censored cracks about Gov. Faubus, smog on the Coast, Las Vegas and Louella Parsons, were way over the heads of Canadian listeners, the tv viewers had an opportunity of hearing one man's opinion. This included Freberg's pro-feelings on desegregation, plus the use of the hydrogen bomb; but the CBC—and Foss McLean—were affording the hearing which American tv networks had banned. (Said Freberg, after the CBC broadcast; "There is more freedom of expression and opinion over the Canadian and Australian network than there is in America.")

With the McLean and CBC okay, Freberg, heard for the first time in Canada his 75% censored writings by the American networks, including his Southern States jibe about colored tv which will have black shown on one side of the livingroom while white color is shown in another. ("This will entail the use of two machines.") In lighter mood, Freberg manipulated the puppet and did the double-talk for Orville, the space-leader of a flying saucer from the moon "who just flew in the window," all a satire on modern thinking. What McLean wants is truth; and what Freberg was not allowed to say over the American networks, he did say over the CBC airwaves.

Whether he or McLean are creating hostility, their self-written sketches and monologs have already attracted the attention of tv viewers and would-be sponsors. In "Long Shot," McLean is again trying for an offbeat humorous gabfest this season in keeping with his previous "Tabloid" and current "Close-Up."

McLean had too much in his show, but quite outstanding were his poking fun at such "alternate sponsors" as the kidding commercials of "Butternut Coffee" and the "Hardwork Cement Mixer," with the deadpan announcements of Joyce Davidson, and the extolling of the features of "Puffed Grass." An adult program. McStay.

NAACP REPORT—THE FIRST 50 YEARS

With Roy Wilkins, Thurgood Marshall, Sen. Kenneth Keating, Rep. Emanuel Celler, Dr. Ralph Bunche, Jackie Robinson, Charles T. O. King, Daisy Bates; Richard D. Heffner, moderator
Producer: Eleanor Riger
Director: Jack Sumroy
60 Mins., Sun.; 9:30 a.m.
WRCA-TV, N. Y.

Television's flair for coming up with newsmaking material was demonstrated anew Sunday (12) with WRCA-TV's hour-long special on the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People's first 50 years. Not only did this timely panel program tie in with the NAACP's annual convention which started in New York Mon. (13), but the comments of Dr. Ralph Bunche on his exclusion from membership in the West Side Tennis Club added an extra topical touch.

Dr. Bunche, who is a United Nations official and a Nobel Peace Prize winner, indicated that nothing need be added to what's already been said about the incident. However, he declared, "I myself found it encouraging to note the extent of public reaction as an index of the public's thinking about intolerance." Particularly disturbed by the tennis club's action was Charles T. O. King, representative from Liberia to the U. N. Describing the incident as "most unfortunate," he asserted that "this action does not set very well with Africans because of Dr. Bunche's position internationally."

Also participating on the program were Sen. Kenneth Keating (R.-N. Y.) and Rep. Emanuel Celler (D.-N. Y.). Both touched on upcoming civil rights legislation. Earlier in the telecast Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the NAACP, noted that one of his organization's aims is to secure a "fair shake" for everybody. Thurgood Marshall, NAACP chief counsel, declared that he considered lawsuits as an important stopgap toward the eventual elimination of segregation.

Among other panelists were Jackie Robinson, onetime baseball star turned businessman, and Daisy Bates who heads the Arkansas State Conference of the NAACP. Entire session was smoothly moderated by Richard D. Heffner. On the whole this was a feather in WRCA-TV's public service cap despite the early Sabbath hour (9:30-10:30 a.m.) at which the program was beamed. Gilb.

"This was a most nauseating experience. There was not one piece of music worth listening to—I would be ashamed to be the owner or director of this station.

Another reported: "Other than hoping that the monitoring and the reports of many club women may improve the programs, I never felt that I had so utterly wasted my time before."

Eberly said that "where most listeners may have the radio on for an hour or two, many of the monitors stayed at their sets for as much as eight hours."

Comments from the general public have poured in the committee said expressing "enthusiastic approval" of its work. An 80-year-old woman, the committee noted, endorsed the movement and appended signatures of 21 friends.

Another radio listener wrote to the committee: "We have lived in the Boston area 18 months. My husband was transferred here by his company. We have been appalled at Boston's miserable daytime radio quality. Daytime shows are nauseating."

Memphis—Charlie Sullivan, vet Southern sportspieler and newscaster for WHBQ, has been transferred and moved up to the post of assistant program chief of WHBQ-TV, Channel 13 here.

Report on Russia: Harriman Trip

Staying right on top of the international news, pubaffairs dept. of CBS News came up with an interview Sunday (12) with former Governor W. Averell Harriman on his recent visit to the Soviet Union. CBS newsmen Charles Collingwood, Paul Niven and Whitman Bassow threw pertinent questions at the former governor and his replies, in the main, were similar to the views expressed by him in his recent newspaper articles and interviews given to the press in Moscow and upon his return to the states.

Nevertheless, getting Harriman's firsthand viewpoint on how the USSR shapes up against us and what Premier Nikita Khrushchev told him, made for worthwhile listening, though Harriman's personality, as always, is on the monotonous side, lacking sparkle and fizz. He pointed out that the Berlin crisis might be solved by limited Western acceptance of the East German regime without giving it the diplomatic nod. He thought there were far more important problems to consider, namely control of nuclear weapons and to get off the Berlin question at the summit conference. Particularly interesting were Harriman's observations on the temperament of the USSR Premier. He described Khrushschev as "a bit temperamental, and possessed of enormous vitality and drive," pointing out that the latter understands little about the U. S. A Khrushchev visit to this country, he said, would mean a great deal because he'd learn something about our way of life. Harriman thought the Soviet leader's representatives in this country were not providing him with a full and realistic account of our capabilities. As for the Berlin question, Harriman said "I think we are in a difficult spot in West Germany until there is a unification of the two Germanys."

Lawless Years

Another look at "Lawless Years" immediately conjures up comparisons. Since the first viewing have come along such as "The Untouchables" and Capone orgies of crime. The stencil of this Barney Ruditsky re-creation of police blotter stories is both dim and pale by any rule of measurement. It's a pure crimer with nothing to recommend it for originality or freshness.

Main trouble with Jack Chertok's production is that it's as dated as the stories it tells. Techniques have changed since Ruditsky wore a N.Y. police badge. The private eyes have moved in to put the coppers back on their beats. More to the point, the dialog has been smartened and sharpened. They just don't talk like Runyon characters in the higher rated actioners.

This outing had to do with the hijacking of 500 cases of Scotch. "Cutie Jaffe," who looks and acts more like a beatnik then a hoodnik, has delusions of grandeur and wants to move into the big time with all the luxuries it offers. He doesn't like the deal he's getting from the higher-ups of the underworld so starts to move. He doesn't get far, though, when the gun that was to be turned on his double-crossing in-law brings him down. It's done with such a heavy hand and complete lack of freshness that it would have trouble bucking the syndication field. On NBC it is sponsorless.

Robert Fuller as "Cutie," Bobs Watson as Dopey, William Giorgio as Fatso, Al Ruscio as Manny and Fred Engle as Lunkhead, are just what you'd expect, James Gregory and Robert Karnes are the lawmen who deserve better material. Helm.

Radio Stations Want Better Shake From AP-UPI on News Coverage

By JO RANSON

Major news disseminating services, particularly AP and UPI, are no longer considered sacred cows by alert-minded radio stations (particularly those not catering to the rock 'n' roll set) and like Latin American rebels are currently demanding better treatment.

Biggest beef at this time against the two big news outfits is that they reportedly assign their lower echelon personnel to the writing of the five-minute news summaries for radio while the daily newspaper wire gets the rich Sulka necktie set assigned to this older branch of the service.

Chief complaint is that the five-minute radio news wrapups are nothing but driblets rehashed all day long and that serious minded radio stations are weary of receiving this type of treatment. What the stations are seeking, it appears, are more interpretive, more comprehensive coverage — something they're emphatically not getting presently from the wire services. Said a knowledgeable news exec at one of the vigorously operated pubservice-minded commercial indies in an Eastern community: "What we want is more news in depth, news that is meaningful and significant."

Both UPI and AP have been experimenting with voice-cast service on a limited basis. Currently, UPI Audio, an affiliate of UPI, is providing about six stations in Northern California with local and regional voice casts on a thrice daily basis. Nor has AP been oblivious to this aspect of broadcasting. It too has been experimenting at Hartford, Conn., furnishing newscasts in and out the laboratory. AP indicated last week that its experiments in the field are incomplete so far and that no decision has been reached as to whether voice casts will be offered by the AP on a regular basis. A decision on this question should be forthcoming within several weeks.

Dissatisfaction has prompted several important powwows with bigwigs of both AP and UPI listening attentively with AP appearing more inflexible to changes than its rival UPI.

Meanwhile, some of the smaller stations, in order to beef up their news summaries are subscribing to the day newspaper wire which affords them more opportunity to add meat and potato substance in their news roundups. Cost of buying the additional daily newspaper wire is reasonable for a small sta-

WNEW Program Slot To Cleve.'s Mark Olds; No Policy Deviation

WNEW Radio, N.Y., is getting a program director from Westinghouse Broadcasting's Cleveland outlet, KYW. Metropolitan Broadcasting, which owns the Gotham station, hired Mark Olds.

Olds was program director for KYW, and is expected to take over the WNEW post, which has been vacant for several months, sometimes within the next couple of weeks.

WNEW has been on the hunt for a program boss for at least three months, and several major names in indie radio were brought up in the search, among them a Todd Storz exec. Metropolitan Broadcasting execs stated emphatically some weeks ago that whoever got the job the man would not be allowed to deviate to any marked degree from the longstanding WNEW middle-of-the-road music-news policy.

Davis, Dawson Shifts

Robert F. Davis becomes the director of research for the CBS Television stations division, and, simultaneously, W. Thomas Dawson gets the directorship of sales promotion and research at CBS Television spot sales.

Davis previously was with spot sales as research boss. Dawson merely adds Davis' former chore to his present one as director of sales promotion.

ATAS Elects Cronkite As New National Prez

Walter Cronkite was elected the new national president of the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences by the organization's board of trustees. N.Y. newsman Cronkite takes over from Hollywood tv exec Harry Ackerman, who was officially the national topper up to the past July 1.

Trustees, voting from N.Y. and the Coast by conference phone late last week, changed the ATAS constitution as well. Rather than continue the posts of 1st and 2d vice presidents, the trustees altered the setup so that ATAS will have an executive veepee instead. First exec v.p is Frederick de Cordova, Hollywood producer-director.

Other veeps elected were David Susskind, from the N.Y. chapter; Arnold Wilkes, from Baltimore. Irv Kupcinet from Chicago, and John Secondari from Washington. Henry White of Screen Gems is secretary-treasurer.

ABC Begs Off On Winter Olympics

ABC-TV has bowed out of its plans to telecast the 1960 Winter Olympics from Squaw Valley, Calif.

Knocking ABC-TV out of the Olympics box was the exclusivity provision the web thought it had. Sequence of events found CBS-TV making an exclusive deal for American tv coverage of the Italian Olympics. When confronted with that move, ABC-TV wavered about the scheduled Squaw Valley events and then begged off when ABC-TV also could not get its exclusivity provision to span the Italian-based events.

At this stage, NBC-TV has evidenced no interest to pick up the Squaw Valley ball. While CBS-TV has shown some interest in the California Winter Olympics schedule, net is questioning whether the costly venture will pay off. It's estimated it would cost about $1,000,000 to do the remote tv coverage from the mountainous California region.

JIM LOWE TO WRCA

Jim Lowe, deejay, is moving to WRCA, N.Y. and expects to start spinning platters at the NBC Gotham outlet within the next few weeks.

Lowe was formerly at WCBS Radio.

'Split Personality' May Get Daytime TV Nod In 'County Fair' Bumping

Once more in trouble, "County Fair," NBC-TV's 4:30-5 p.m. strip, may soon give way to a replacement. Web, which is still concerned over "Fair's" ratings, is thinking of moving "Split Personality" into the slot soon.

Actually, the web recently introduced Bob Quigley as the producer, in an effort to bolster "Fair's" audience, but the daytime program department of NBC-TV is still sweating out an improvement.

Sources within the web feel "Fair" has no chance of staying, on the basis of the advanced Nielsens, which place the show third in its time. "Personality," produced by Goodson-Todman, is part of the NBC-TV reserve daytime inventory.

MBS Creditors Agree to 10%

N. Y. Federal District Court was informed that attorneys representing Mutual's 14 largest creditors have agreed to accept a 10% return on the monies owed them by MBS.

The creditors committee stated that it will recommend the same settlement to the remaining 750 MBS creditors, whose lien against the radio web totals $3,195,000. MBS has filed a petition in Federal court seeking a reorganization under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Act.

Referee Asa Herzog postponed a MBS creditors hearing, slated for Monday (13) to July 28. Web's 10 largest creditors, as listed in Mutual's petition to include court, American Telephone and Telegraph, $508,000; RKO Teleradio, $128,000; Milwaukee Braves, $49,000; A. C. Nielsen, $45,916; River Operating Co., $40,750; Chicago White Sox, $35,000; Chicago Cubs, $30,000; ASCAP, $24,000; Boston Red Sox, $20,000.

Referee Herzog granted an okay for MBS' new management, led by prez Robert Hurleigh, to continue biz in the interim without putting up bond money.

Earlier in the week, the Mutual Affiliates Advisory Committee met and endorsed web's new management and expressed confidence in the web's future. MAAC group also planned a series of 10 regional meetings of affils, aimed at bringing about greater cooperation among affil stations.

Memphis — Virginia Long has exited her post as woman's director of WKNO, Memphis' tv educational station. She is transferring to Los Angeles where will freelance in radio and tv scripting.

Scorecard On 315

Washington, July 14.

House Communications Subcommittee has agreed on an "equal time" bill which exempts from Sec. 315 coverage "any newscast (including news interview) or on-the-spot coverage of newsworthy events."

Wording worked out by group headed by Rep. Oren Harris (D-Ark.) apparently leaves panel shows (like "Meet the Press" and "Face the Nation") and news documentaries under Sec. 315 control.

Harris, at least, thinks so. But when the bill goes before the House Commerce Committee (which Harris also heads) later this week, an effort is almost certain to be made to expand the present limited exemption in the bill worked out as a compromise.

Meanwhile, on the other side of the Capitol, the Senate Communications Subcommittee is skedded to meet Wednesday (15) to vote on an "equal time" bill. Advance guessing is that the Senate group will work out something similar to the Harris Subcommittee but will probably lump panel shows and documentaries into the exemption. This limited freedom of Sec. 315 is, of course, less than broadcasters want, but is almost certain to be all this session of Congress will approve.

Bill developed by Harris unit has been introduced as a "clean bill" by Harris himself, and was approved unanimously by the House Communications Subcommittee as a compromise.

The language raises questions.

What is "any newscast (including news interviews)"? Use of parentheses implies an interview is outside Sec. 315 only if conducted on a newscast. A panel show or documentary interview could hardly be brought within framework of that phrase.

What is "on-the-spot coverage of newsworthy events"? Harris says it means things like Democratic and Republican National Conventions. But it apparently could also cover events involved in the Lar Daly decision — the opening of Chicago's March of Dimes campaign and the welcoming of Italy's chief of state to that city. In fact, the language is loose enough possibly to cover many things.

Original Harris Bill before the House group had exempt "news, news interview, news documentary, on-the-spot coverage of news events or similar type programs."

CALVERT MAKES GIN HISTORY-NEW CALVERT GIN IS 100% DRY!

But No Gin Can Be Dryer!

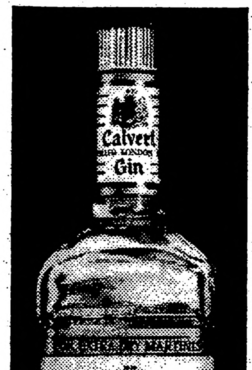
CALVERT GIN LOW IN PRICE

$1.69 Less Than Comparable Imported Gins

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Calvert London Dry Gin sells at a surprisingly low price—far below the price levels of imported gins. These gins, up to now, have generally set the standard for dryness. However, since Calvert Gin has reached absolute 100% dryness, this feeling has changed.

Calvert's low retail price is in accordance with a company decision to depend upon volume, rather than high markup, for a reasonable profit picture.

Silver and Blue Package Design Matches Crispness of Product



PLEASURE PACKAGE! Blue, silver and white dominate the new, crisply attractive Calvert Gin bottle. These colors were chosen to represent the dry, crisp taste of the gin itself, and to convey the feeling of refreshing coldness in summer drinks made with Calvert London Dry Gin.

DRYSDALE SERVES DRY MARTINIS. The man who symbolizes Calvert London Dry Gin, Sir Gibson Drysdale, serves a round of drinks made with his favorite gin.

Fresh Lime Peel Is "Secret" Ingredient In Calvert Gin

One reason for crisp, dry taste

Rushed to Distillery

When the limes are unloaded from the steamships, they are rushed to the Calvert Distillery. Here, they are kept under rigidly controlled temperature and humidity conditions to safeguard their freshness.

When the time comes for the lime peels to be added to a new "run" of Calvert Gin, skilled girls carefully peel the limes by hand. The skins then are added to the other Calvert "botanicals" while they are still fresh and moist.

All "Botanicals" Imported

In addition to fresh lime peel, other herbs, seeds and roots are imported for use in making Calvert Gin.

Some of these which lend their flavor or aroma to Calvert are juniper berries from the Italian Tyrol, cassia bark from Indochina, coriander seed from the Rhine Valley.

Quality Assured

To assure uniform botanical flavors, Calvert often buys a huge supply at a time, frequently a whole crop. The botanicals are shipped as quickly as possible to the distillery, where they are stored in air-conditioned rooms, under carefully controlled temperature and humidity.

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Millions of Americans will soon see a little Englishman, dressed in full desert kit, leaping across their newspaper pages. He will appear in every newspaper advertisement for Calvert London Dry Gin, and in all Calvert point-of-sale material.

SIR GIBSON DRYSDALE, Calvert Gin trademark, jumps for joy over 100% dryness.

Exclusive Dry Zone Process Removes All Traces of "Sweetness" and of "Perfume"

Calvert Gin Refined 7 Separate Times To Reach Absolute Dryness

RELAY, MD.—The maximum in gin dryness has been reached here by Calvert Distillers, it was revealed today. It was explained that no method previously known would produce a gin dry enough to be given the designation, "100% dry."

"We had to invent our own way to make gin," Fred Klayer, Calvert's Master Distiller, said. "It's called 'Dry Zone Distillation.' It makes a gin with the dryest, crispest taste in the world."

A New High in Dryness

"We distill Calvert London Dry Gin in a new way we developed," Mr. Klayer went on. "In fact, our gin is refined no fewer than 7 separate times. That's why it reaches a new high in dryness. There just isn't any way you can introduce short cuts if you want to reach absolute 100% dryness."

Calvert starts with basic spirits, as other makers do. These spirits are made entirely from selected grains. During every one of the seven refining steps, the sweet "head" flavors rise to the top of the distillation columns and are discarded. At the same time, heavy, perfume-y "tails" sink to the bottom and are thrown out.

Expensive Process

"This is a very costly process, of course," Mr. Klayer said, "but unless you get rid of every trace of these undesirable 'heads' and 'tails,' you wind up with a martini that tastes as if you have used too much vermouth. You won't ever say that about a martini made with Calvert Gin."

Calvert Flavor Recipe

When the spirits have been refined, they are ready to be married to the imported "botanicals" that make up the exclusive Calvert Gin flavor recipe. This is done over very low heat, in order to keep the delicate flavors intact.

Filtered 12 Times

After the botanicals and the spirits have been perfectly married, the gin is ready for filtering. A total of twelve filters are used to safeguard the crystal clearness of Calvert Gin—never any less. After filtering, the gin is sent to the bottling line and labeled "Calvert London Dry Gin."

by CBS by order of Hubbell Robinson. And, he said, "These are by no means isolated cases."

He said, however, that there was a good reason for not screening pilots too often. He compared a much-viewed pilot with the soiled shirt on the haberdasher's counter which everyone has handled and nobody will buy.

In his opening remarks when the FCC investigation got underway last May in Washington, Harold G. Cowgill, chief, broadcast bureau, stated, "In hearings before committees of congress and elsewhere, allegations have been made that the networks, in some instances, tie the use of network time and facilities to programs owned or controlled by them or in which they have acquired a financial or proprietary interest and that this practice has resulted in the arbitrary exclusion from network exhibition of some independently produced programs which otherwise merited selection as network offerings. It has also been alleged that networks have used their favorable economic bargaining position in the industry to further their own financial and economic interest in the production and sales of programs to the detriment of the legitimate interests of independent program suppliers and advertisers in a manner contrary to the public interest."

Titterton's testimony provided the only text that comes close to the previous allegations.

All of the witnesses agreed that networks should have the final sayso in program selection and placement. This would seem to be the trend what with ABC snubbing an advertiser like P&G.

The all-star agency cast which took the stand were C. Terence Clyne, McCann-Erickson; Danny Seymour and Jack Devine, J. Walter Thompson; Richard A. R. Peard, who will have his headquarters in Baltimore, will service advertisers and agencies in the Washington-Baltimore area.

Firestone's Turn

Washington, July 14.

Flareup over cancellation of "Voice of Firestone" is due to flare here again July 21 when the special Federal Communications Commission study of television network programming has sponsors in for a hearing.

First sponsor to be heard by FCC Chief Hearing Examiner James D. Cunningham (who's conducting the study) is a group from Firestone, plus Howard Barlow, long connected with the program.

Chi ABC-TV Key Preempts at Will To Hypo Summer

Chicago, July 14.

WBKB, ABC-TV's anchor in Chi, is asserting unusual autonomy for an owned station by preempting rather freely a large number of network shows this summer for special programs felt to be in the community interest. Sterling (Red) Quinlan, veep-topper of WBKB who means to carve for the outlet the image of Windy City's "special events station," discloses he has the blessings of AB-PT prexy Leonard Goldenson for the project and carte blanche to preempt as he pleases to accommodate the specials.

By the time summer ends, the ABC station will have telecast some 37 hours of specials supplanting around 10 and a half hours of network programming. Show most dispensed with will probably be "Lone Ranger" on Sundays, with at least three preemptions. "Colt .45," "Who Do You Trust," "Beat the Clock," "Deadline For Action," "Gale Storm Show," and portions of "American Bandstand" will all have been preempted at least twice, the concentration of specials being in early afternoons weekdays and late afternoons on the Sabbath.

This Sunday (19), Quinlan is blacking out ABC's "Open Hearing," "Lone Ranger" and "Deadline for Action" to carry the National Clay Courts Championships from River Forest Tennis Club. Entire telecast will cover four hours, blotting out several sponsored localers as well. Recently WBKB dropped "Colt .45" for a one hour spec on Queen Elizabeth's cruise down the St. Lawrence Seaway and deleted one network show, "Lone Ranger," in its two day coverage of the Gleneagles Chicago Golf Tournament.

Pan American Games, which start Aug. 27 for 12 days, will displace around six hours of network shows on the station, which has the rights to exclusive coverage. The preemptions will consist mainly of ABC daytimers during the week. Last March, WBKB's six and a half hour coverage of the Illinois High School Basketball Tourney claimed a pair of Saturday niters, "Lawrence Welk" and "Jubilee USA."

With such outdoor remotes, along with ABC's "Wednesday Night Fights" and "Top Pro Golf," Quinlan's station is asserting itself as a sports specialist, vis-a-vis WGN-TV, which carries the ball games. To bolster the sports lineup, Quinlan is installing "Winter Baseball" on video tape this fall, a one-shot bullfight special and a billiard show.

U.S. Video's Sphere of Influence Abroad

By ART WOODSTONE

The "American brand" of television, which already has more than a foothold on foreign soil, promises now to become a truly world-wide form of activity.

American money has found new reasons and new ways to cross oceans, and American technical and programming manpower is practically everywhere. Add to this the not especially new story that American programs themselves have already been poured into nearly every country friendly to the U.S. in which there is a tv station, technically advanced or otherwise.

The atmosphere for so vast a trend is favorable. "There is tremendous local encouragement," as one American investor put it recently. There are also encouraging signs of support from the U.S. State Department and Congress.

In addition to interest and activity by tv's majors, NBC (RCA), CBS and ABC, now American-based chains of tv stations are on the market for foreign station participation.

To encourage American investment in the other countries of the world, not all of them underdeveloped but all of them, without exception, U.S. targets in the cold war, Congress is considering a bill to exempt American companies investing in foreign industry from taxation. Rule would call for a tax only at such time as the U.S. firm decides to declare stockholder dividends on foreign earnings. But rather than declare any, it is probable, as assayed by experts here, that investors will plow back the coin into the corporation for still further development of assets. This is considered a highly tempting reason for further U.S. capitalization of video abroad; the money made elsewhere could, among other things, be utilized later within the U.S. to boost programming and redevelop tv facilities.

Creating a 'U.S. Image'

The U.S. Information Agency, an official organ of the State Department, is expected to view American video investment abroad with great favor. A tv operation on foreign soil, in which it is made clear to the native populace that American knowhow and finance are involved, if handled with dignity befitting its locale, can aid substantially in the U.S. desired international image.

American television executives feel there is no doubt that the U.S.I.A. will do everything possible to advise and support American investors toward that end.

The geographical spread of U.S. tv activity is amazing:

It is generally not known that, besides management aid provided by the firm in such South and Central American nations as Argentina, Brazil and Mexico, NBC International has either ownership shares in or offers managerial aid (for money) to telecasters in Saudi Arabia, Yugoslavia, West Germany, Portugal Wales, in England, and Australia. And the company is always on the lookout or involved in negotiation to extend its province abroad.

American Broadcasting - Paramount Theatres, which owns ABC here, owns a part of an Aussie tv outlet. It's a small equity, but it was all ABC was able to get, and therefore hardly a sign that ABC didn't want still more of an interest. The same company's top execs departed this month for Japan. It has been noted here that it is currently impossible for foreign money to buy an equity in Japanese tv, but the reported intention of the visit by ABC is to perhaps break down the barriers.

CBS is on the lookout the world over via CBS International, a Swiss-based subsidiary. (CBS and NBC, as well, are said to have cast a hopeful eye recently in the direction of India, Indonesia, Thailand and perhaps other south Asian nations, where a well-run American tv image could do worlds of good in behalf of the U.S.).

20th-Fox recently established an international tv operation and reportedly owns a share in an Australian tv station. That company is still looking for further foreign television station investment, to which, incidentally, it can supply some of the selfsame tv film product it plans initially for American consumption.

The list of countries in which American investors are seeking tv franchise extends also to Brazil, the Dutch West Indies, Aruba and Haiti and into as many as half a dozen African nations, some of which are already being aided by American technical personnel. Three years ago, to add still another country to the roster, an American firm, which distributes American tv sets in South Korea got the support of U.S. corporate funds to start a station in Seoul.

Bartell, McCaw's Hemisphere TV In Global Aspirations

Joining the network competition for tv franchise abroad, a group of U.S. station owners have already gotten an okay for a Haitian tv station, and are negotiating in Buenos Aires, Curacao, in the Dutch West Indies, in Aruba for similar setups. Group is called Hemisphere Television Corp., composed of two American tv-radio chains, KOF Bartell Broadcasters Inc. and Gotham Broadcasting Co., and Mike Rosenberg, Haiti industrialist.

There are indications that at least one other American chain operation is interested in foreign investment.

Hemisphere Television was franchised to operate a VHF'er in the Caribbean Republic. Known as Tele-Haiti, the installation will be handled by Bartell engineers, and operated under a program scheme that will include American network kinnies as well as straight syndicated properties. Local news shows, etc. will also be undertaken.

New international tv firm, which is principally interested at this time in Caribbean ownerships, is already looking elsewhere, reportedly in Australia. Company begins with approximately $1,000,000 in capitalization. This "beginning amount" could establish Hemisphere in "quite a few" other countries besides Haiti, a spokesman for the firm said. "Obviously," he explained, "it (the $1,000,000) is leverage money."

Previous efforts to get a Haitian tv station franchise have been made without apparent success. New group hopes to get its Haitian station on the air by Nov. 1.

The Bartell group owns radio stations in San Francisco, San Diego, Milwaukee, Atlanta and Birmingham, and its purchase of WOV, N.Y. indie, awaits FCC approval. Gotham, run by J. Elroy McCaw, owns radio stations in New York and Los Angeles and tv stations in Denver, Seattle and Honolulu.

Hemisphere spokesman did not know which one it was, but he said there were indications that another American station chain was competing for one of the overseas tv markets being sought by Hemisphere.

It's Now KYA's Turn

San Francisco, July 14.

KYA, the radio station with the "family formula" owned by the Bartell Family group (which recently acquired WOV in New York), is reportedly up for sale. Apparently the formula isn't what it used to be, at least in the Frisco market, for recent ratings have put the station in fifth place.

Oddly enough, Bartell acquired KYA from J. Elroy McCaw — the same McCaw with whom he is now in partnership on their Hemisphere TV operation seeking global expansions.

NEWS CLOSE-UP
With Martin Weldon, Herbert Gordon, Lee Hanna, others Producer-Writer, Weldon
25 Mins.; Sun., 7:35 p.m.
WNEW, N. Y.

Martin Weldon, news director of the WNEW N. Y. indie, has come up with a good news feature Sunday evening program.

The 25-minute outing takes some of the major news events of the week and develops the news items via interviews with some of the principal newsmakers. On the whole, the program is well edited and the production values are good. Interspersed is a "People's Panel," featuring the reactions of the man-on-the-street to the news. Latter segments act as a Greek chorus to the events.

What was missing on Sunday's (12) show was some last-minute segments such as the issue of the crash landing of the jet at Idlewild Airport. That could have been substituted for a self-congratulatory "look-at-what-we're doing" piece on traffic safety, which tagged the show. (The highway safety piece referred to a "Sound of Death" "Close-Up" program done the previous week).

But Weldon's program is sandwiched in between two five-minute news headline shows, and he may have thought it unwise to try to compete with headline news.

Interviewed on Sunday's outing were Gov. Rockefeller, former Gov. Harriman who just returned from a Russian trip, state and national political leaders. Topics discussed ranged from civil defense to the Russians. All and all, an interesting outing. Horo.

Providence—Jack Kavanagh, for three years promotion manager for WLWC, Columbus, takes over similar post with WPRO-TV.

Eddie Fisher To Launch BBC-TV's Vaude Upgrading

London, July 14.

BBC-TV is aiming to score a point over the British commercial webs in the vaude section of this fall's schedules by bringing in a Sunday spectacular one week ahead of resumption of Associated TeleVision's "Sunday Night At the London Palladium." Show will star Eddie Fisher, who's currently based in Britain while wife Elizabeth Taylor films in "Suddenly, Last Summer," and takes the air on Sept. 6. ATV lines up its first resumed Palladium program Sept. 13, with Kay Starr.

BBC-TV's deal with Fisher is for two 45-minute appearances, second of which will be recorded for transmission in October. Fee is said to be the highest ever paid by the outfit to a disk artist and more than the $7,000 allotted Ginger Rogers for her "Carissima" stint a month or two back.

It's planned to back Fisher with substantial talent, with singer Shirley Bassey and comic Benny Hill among those paged. Approaches have also been made to world heavyweight champ Ingemar Johansson to put in a guest appearance.

Broadcast Pioneers Elect Merle Jones Prexy

Merle S. Jones, prexy of CBS-TV Stations, has been elected prexy of the Broadcast Pioneers Club. Sol Taishoff, editor and publisher of Broadcasting Magazine, is first veep.

Three veeps elected by the membership are Roger W. Clipp, vice-prexy in charge of radio-tv for Triangle Publications; J. Leonard Reinsch, exec director of the James M. Cox stations, and Howard Lane, veep of the Gamble-Lane stations.

Clipp and Reinsch will serve two-year terms and Lane for one year.

Tulsa, Okla.—Bob Gregory becomes the new program director of KTUL and Lester Parsons takes over his former job as news director of the radio's station.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

Recent ad by book publishing outfit Henry Holt & Co. in industry trade journals anent the upcoming autobiography of Bill Stern, former NBC sportscaster, indicates that the story will tell of his comeback from dope addiction.

Title of book is "The Taste of Ashes" and Oscar Fraley is collaborating with Stern on the writing. Ad copy declares that when Stern "collapsed on New Year's Day, 1956, at the Sugar Bowl in New Orleans, the public believed he had suffered a nervous breakdown . . . Actually his collapse came as the climax of years of dope addiction. Now, in an account that pulls no punches, this ace sportscaster tells how be became a victimized addict and writes of his rehabilitation and amazing comeback."

Holt is planning to release the book in October.

Because of National Theatres growing stake in tv, a change of the corporate name to National Theatres & Television, is being proposed to stockholders by management.

National Theatres has acquired National Telefilm Associates and currently has three o&o stations, WDAF-TV, Kansas City; WNTA-TV, Newark-N.Y.; and KMSP-TV, Minneapolis-St. Paul. The Kansas City and the Newark-N.Y. operations also encompass radio outlets. National Theatres will consolidate their offices with NTA in Beverly Hills in October. Company hopes to expand its tv and radio station holdings to the maximum permitted by the Federal Communications Commission.

Tourists in Gotham are getting the "feel right at home" treatment when they tune in WRCA-TV. As a tieup with the N.Y. Summer Festival, Max E. Buck, station manager, has his staffers welcoming out-of-towners by airing call letters of their home-town NBC outlets, along with this greeting: "Are you visiting from Albilene, Texas? Welcome to N.Y. WRCA-TV, NBC flagship station in N.Y., extends hand of friendship to you on behalf of KRBC-TV, your NBC station in Abilene. KRBC-TV and WRCA-TV hope you enjoy your stay in N.Y."

Some 55 cities are being mentioned in the "welcome neighbor" project. Furthermore, NBC-TV out-of-town outlets will aid the campaign with their own "bon-voyage" announcements reminding viewers to tune in WRCA-TV when they get to the metropolis. Don Mercer, director of station relations for NBC, worked out this end of "welcome format" deal.

Studies in Public Communications booklet of the U. of Chicago for the summer quarter comments upon the gloomy views expressed by Bernard Berelson in the spring quarterly edition of Princeton's Public Opinion Quarterly. Berelson sees communications research as nearly dead because the pioneering minds have abandoned their original interests and their successors have been inferior scholars.

Chicagoans agree that a great change has occurred in communications research. There has been an ending of one period. The majority of such studies were centered on "campaigns"—to sell soap, reduce prejudice, induce acceptance, alter opinions. Elihu Katz of Chicago argues that communications research goes beyond specific "campaigns" in terms of commerce or politics and that far from being extinct is just opening upon a new epoch of investigation in the area of "pop culture."

"The United Nations in Transition," a special one-hour filmed program devoted to an evaluation of the growth and changes in the world organization, will be telecast by WABC-TV Sunday (19) at 2 p.m.

Program was produced by the Metropolitan Educational Television Assn. under the sponsorship of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. Experts participating in the discussion are Dr. Norman Cousins, editor of the Saturday Review; Dr. Robert M. MacIver, Columbia U. prof; and others.

WLIB, N.Y., is conducting a series of Sunday broadcasts on the Negro and the community. The half-hour series, broadcast at 6 p.m., covers such topics as the Negro family and welfare; delinquincy and the juvenile; housing; the role of the Negro church. Some of the participants will be Edward S. Lewis, director of the Greater New York Urban League; Dr. Kenneth Clarke, C.C.N.Y. professor; and Mrs. Corrine Morrow of the Mayor's Committee on Intergroup Relations.

Stephen Price, radio-tv director and coach of many N.Y. execs, newscasters and performers, has his book on speech and human relations ready for October publication (no title yet) by McGraw-Hill. Meanwhile three installments from the book are set for American Weekly, Hearst Sunday supplement. This week Price is at Lake Tarleton Club (Family Jacobs) as guest speaker for hotel's "Festival of the Seven Arts."

Philadelphia's Board of Education has agreed to purchase $150,000 worth of airtime over Channel 12 if it is converted to educational use.

The board voted to pay $30,000 a year for five years to the Metropolitan Philadelphia Educational Radio and Television Corp. provided it acquires the license to operate the darkened Wilmington channel.

Metropolitan operates WHYY, UHF outlet. It has petitioned the FCC for the right to operate Channel 12 which the Storer chain closed last year. Two other applications are seeking to continue Channel 12 as a commercial station.

The money offered by the board would buy one hour of air time between the hours of 7:30 and 10 p.m. every evening, Monday through Friday, on a year-round basis.

By rough count, better than 12,000 moppets and an extra 3,000 parents visited the S.S. United States at its N.Y. berth yesterday (Tues.) —and all as the result of one lone mention on a local tv stanza for kids. WNEW-TV's Sunday (5) "Wonderama," via host Sonny Fox, extended an invitation to clamber up the sides of the big ship, and within five days, the requests to attend mounted to nearly 10,000.

A British made tv series, distributed free in the United States under the auspices of the Central Office of Information, had, at the latest count a month ago, played 31 outlets in the U.S., had been contracted for a further 23 stations and three others were playing the programs twice weekly. Total estimated audience up to the mid-June date was 6,500,000.

The series, entitled "Topic," comprises 13 15-minute programs featuring Joan and Julius Evans hosting a tour round Britain.

Greer's CBS-TV Post

James H. Geer got the nod last week as the new controller of the CBS-TV network, and begins July 20. Job has been officially vacant for approximately the past eight months, with Harold Lang, the other CBS Inc. controller, doubling for the network.

Geer joins CBS-TV from ACF Industries, in N. Y., where he has been assistant controller since June, 1957. Before that, he was with Price Waterhouse.

Quaker Oats Soaper Coin

Quaker Oats dropped some coin into CBS-TV daytime programs this week. Cereal company inked for alternate-week quarter-hour sponsorships in two soapers, "Love of Life" and "Edge of Night."

Quaker also took an alternate-week quarter in "Big Payoff." In a second piece of CBS-TV daytime biz, Armstrong Cork bought an alternate-week quarter-hour in "Top Dollar."

NBC Shoots For Early Premieres On New Entries

Rather than run up against the same problem it had last year, when it was virtually the last network to launch its lineup of new programs, NBC-TV has decided that in the 1959-1960 season, it will premiere at least three of its shows before the other networks get their respective schedules rolling.

"Riverboat," "Laramie" and "Bonanza," three hourlong film programs upon which hang NBC's chances to capture parts of Sunday, Tuesday and Saturday, respectively, will all be premiered during the second week in September. This will give the trio of expensive NBC-TV entries from a week to two weeks headstart on the ABC-CBS competition.

Because most of NBC's new stanzas began as late as middle or late October in 1958, ABC-TV in the preceding weeks was able to boast heavy Trendex gains on NBC. Ensuing rating publicity by ABC and, in some cases, by CBS is considered to have gone a long way in hurting NBC's stature throughout the entire season.

Apart from the fact that "Riverboat," on Sundays, will begin at 7 p.m., a half hour before ABC's "Maverick," NBC is not taking any chances. By getting the new show off in early September, web figures it can get a "sample" of how the show is doing because it'll be running up against repeats of "Maverick" for a couple of weeks. In this way, it might be able to establish some kind of viewership acceptance.

Ditto "Laramie" on Tuesdays, where it will run up directly against ABC-TV's "Bronco"-"Sugarfoot" mating, both of them veteran shows. As for the Saturday "Bonanza," it's going to start, according to present plans, some days before the competing CBS-TV "Perry Mason."

National Audience Board Recruiting Orgs For Reviewing-Previewing

Nonprofit National Audience Board, currently identified with 58 civic and service organizations, mainly distaff, is planning to get the men into the tv previewing and reviewing act.

With the American Assn. of University Women, National Federation of Women's Clubs et. al. on the rolls since organization in '54, National Audience Board is after Rotary, Lions, Kiwanis, etc.

Org, with major offices in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Chicago and New York (HQ), also plans to offer a lecture program featuring tv industryites for club meetings and conventions. Purpose is to give board participants an insight into programming problems.

NAB will survey participants on special tv shows at request of a network, advertiser, producer or agency. As many as 46,000 ballots have gone out on such a request. Board runs the survey at cost with the tab coming to about $100 a city.

Civic leaders also are brought in to pre-screen special shows. Results are often published in NAB's monthly news letter.

Hawaii Booster Station May Beam To Far East

Honolulu, July 14.

KAIM, Honolulu indie which has both AM and FM outlets, says a 100,000-watt booster station which would beam educational and religious programs to the Far East is in the "idea stage."

Cornelius Keur, manager, says the station is seeking a 13-acre site for the transmitter, which will beam programs in several languages to the Philippines, Japan, China and possibly other Far East nations. Equipment alone is estimated at $180,000.

Montpelier, Vt.—Daniel B. Ruggles, Ill., owner of radio station WSKI, here, has been named as vice president of the Montpelier Chamber of Commerce.

BBC-TV UPPING ITS SCHOOL VIEWING

London, July 14.

BBC-TV is to double its expenditure on schools television, at present costing $560,000 a year, from Sept., 1960. Viewing time will be almost quadrupled.

Meantime the commercial web operating in the London area weekdays, Associated - Rediffusion, is talking of widening the scope of its educational service. A-R introduced schools tv to England and calculates that around 1,000 schools take advantage of the facility. The network says it would like to see sales tax on sets removed so that this number could be increased quickly.

Fred Eisley Gets Lead On TV 'Hawaiian Eye'

New looks and a new name finally landed Fred Eisley the lead in Warner Bros. one-hour gumshoe tele skein, "Hawaiian Eye," which premieres this fall on ABC-TV Wednesdays from 9 to 10 p.m.

Producer had long been pushing Eisley for the star role, but clients and agency Ted Bates were not sold. Actor retested with a mustache and made the grade with all concerned. That is with the additional condition of a billing change from "Fred" to the more lyric Anthony Eisley.

L. A. Biltmore Hotel Floor Space Assigned Webs on Dems' Meet

Los Angeles, July 14.

Biltmore Hotel downtown has been designated as convention headquarters for the 1960 Democratic National Convention, and the radio-tv networks have been assigned the entire fourth floor of the hotel as their administrative-reception headquarters.

Decision was made known at three-day meetings last week between J. Leonard Reinsch, managing director of the convention (and exec of the Cox radio-tv chain), and reps of the three networks, including CBS' Sig Mickelson, Elmer Lower and Paul Levitan, NBC's Bill McAndrew and ABC's Don Coe and Tommy Velotta.

Sessions also agreed upon facilities assignments at the new L.A. Sports Arena, where the actual convention will be held. Webs each got their studio-space assignments in the arena, and agreed on camera positions for the pooled coverage of the floor.

Harrisburg — Rossmoyne Broadcasting Co., operators of WCMB here, has applied to the FCC for permission to open a new station in Lebanon, Pa.

'Survival Tomorrow' Themes Tors' New NBC-TV 'Challenge' Series

Hollywood, July 14.

Ivan Tors has long been producing pictures and television in the science-fiction genre, but has generally had to film them in terms of the machine rather than the man. With "Challenge," his new Ziv series set for NBC-TV Saturdays at 8:30 in the fall, he's finally getting the chance to deal with the human end of science, the man over the machine.

It's a prospect that intrigues him, since the theme of the series is pegged on the research of man's ability to survive the worst nature and science can throw at him. The "Challenge" of the title is the challenge of streaching human endurance as far is it can go, and Tors is having himself a ball in terms of scientifically-premised speculation as to the situations he can create.

For example, the current segment filming on location deals with "skydiving." It's a new sport, foreign to America, in which parachutists free-fall from various heights, opening their chutes only at the last moment (about 1,500 feet). They use their arms swan-dive fashion to follow air currents, experience a feeling of weightlessness and euphoria, and are virtual addicts to the experience. The military application is the speed in which paratroops can make a drop, as contrasted with the present length of time it takes to float from great heights.

Another episode deals with the testing of new space-suit equipment designed to withstand heat, with star George Nader dropping into a semi-active volcano to test the suit. Still another speculates on the question of evacuation of key intellectuals from an atomic attack on an atomic submarine, and their ability to endure the cramped existence of a sub over a period of time. Another episode deals with survival in the water, with Tors testing a theory that experienced swimmers can survive the worst kind of storm through a sytem of breathing which enables them to weather 30-foot waves.

There's another episode on man's ability to survive an avalanche, filmed on location in Utah, and another dealing with brainwashing and the effects of complete isolation. This one has to do too with hallucinatory effects and with the asteroid plan of the military to keep human beings aloft in space in a tiny sphere over a 36-hour period (Project

What WGN-Radio is doing about it!

Over one hundred people every day are killed on our nation's highways. A death rate so alarming—that it has become one of the most pressing problems confronting our country. Top priority has been given to the President's highway program. Numerous road improvements have been enacted by the states. Police patrol has been extended to the maximum. But still the needless slaughter goes on!

In line with doing something to stem this terrible tide, WGN Radio conceived and instituted "Signal Ten"—a documentary radio program taken from on-the-spot tape recordings of State Police work. Intense—instructive—penetrating—"Signal Ten" dramatically portrays traffic violations and their impending dangers as they actually occur. And WGN Radio pinpointed the problem further by taking its own survey of traffic conditions before selecting the target areas for its programming. Then to broaden the scope of this much needed safety service, WGN Radio made "Signal Ten" available to 17 other midwestern radio stations.

It is for this kind of sustained public service that WGN Radio was chosen as the only radio station over 1000 watts, to receive the coveted Alfred P. Sloan Award for promoting highway safety.

This, we believe, is an outstanding example of how WGN Radio is fulfilling its dedicated purpose of "Serving all Chicagoland" better.

FARSON'S GUIDE TO THE BRITISH With Daniel Farson
Director: Rollo Gamble
25 Mins., Thurs., 7 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion, from London

In this skein of weekly programs, observer Daniel Farson's taking an unconventional look at Britain, turning up facts and features not found in the general guidebooks. Gimmick's good, and execution in this Volume One was excellent.

Farson chose his home stretch of London riverside, Limehouse Reach, the camera conveying some of its industrialized beauty and a hint of its history, latter with the aid of old prints. But the job scored the most with its interviews with waterfront characters—gruff-voiced woman with monocle, dockers recalling "the old days"—once again demonstrating that some of the best television comes from interesting people telling interesting things in an interesting way. Maybe there was overemphasis on the recovery of corpses from the Thames, an industry that apparently booms after the Derby, but that's by the way.

The series, photographed and edited superbly and blessed with Farson's easy but interested style of probing, looks like being a topline effort. Erni.

Foreign TV Followup

The George Gobel Show

The second of Gobel's two programs for Associated-Rediffusion impressed no more than the first, and maybe that's an overstatement. The comedian's daffily inane ramblings had a certain appeal, but by and large his stuff failed to click and the gag payoffs signalled themselves well in advance. And this time the support items weren't so hot, either.

Gobel scored the most with an amusing opening yarn about losing his hub caps and in a yodelling song preluded by backchat with Norrie Paramor and his orch. For the rest, uh-uh. Anne Shelton did a torch song and "Not For Me" competently enough; she also worked hard in a mediocre sketch about being trapped in a phone booth that was laced with inaccurate detail. Miriam Karlin went through a spot of satire on supermarkets that might have been a howl on stage but only just made the grade on tv, while Desmond Lane did some agile prancing around that didn't add much to his good penny-whistle and clarinet playing. Production was okay. Erni.

Roving Report

"Poland Today" was the subtitle of a stimulating addition to the Associated-Rediffusion series of current affairs programs, with Robin Day doing the interviewing and looking-around. The 25-minute survey adduced some little-publicized facts, including that the country is 90% Catholic and that there's a substantial measure of freedom of speech, while also noting Poland's comparative material poverty. Whole notion was to stress the relaxations evident since Gomulka's stand against the Soviet in 1956.

Only flaw in an otherwise admirably compiled job was that the summing-up was unbalanced. It may be true that Poland's looking more and more to the West, who knows? but the conclusion wasn't justified by the things shown and words spoken earlier. Erni.

KCOP

changes in American reading tastes. For one thing, the "pulps" were starting to disappear. For another, the glossy mags were begining to stress more non-fiction. The Saturday Evening Post, for example, used to have a majority of fiction. In the past couple of years, its non-fiction has risen to as much as 75 to 80% of its total content.

These, together with the success of "Adventure" and others like it, convinced him that there was a growing audience for "non-fiction." The problem was getting enough programming of its type, since "Adventure" represented a literal start from scratch.

This fall, station will hit a peak of 21 half-hours, 15 of them forming its powerful early-evening block at 6:30-8. Flanagan feels that his travel and documentary programming can compete against anything the network stations have to offer locally—it's only when they pick up the network shows that it's wise to duck. Hence the concentration of KCOP's strong shows before 8—slotted against local programming—and the decision to ride with feature films against the network competition.

It's Flanagan's belief that a small, powerful block of programs on an independent can carry the rest of the schedule with it. He points to KHJ's "Channel 9 Movie Theatre" (akin to "Million Dollar Movie" on WOR, N.Y.) with his own non-fiction block. Of course, the rest of his schedule is scaled to a sensible cost-per-thousand, but it's the "leaders" in programming like the travel shows that bring in the business. Moreover, he points out, programming syndicated film has the dubious characteristic of using something that's second best—it's product that invariably has first been offered to the networks and been turned down.

As to the travel-adventure-documentary programs, they're budgeted so they pay their own way locally. They're also high-rated, so now with tape there's no reason why they can't be sold elsewhere. The pricing on syndicated shows is such, says Flanagan, that the average station operator can't make a profit when he puts them on the air. If he can get product that's more reasonably priced, yet can do a program job for him, he'll buy it.

Mex Radio-TV Beef: Too Many Foreign Ditties

Mexico City, July 14.

The Department of Communications is worried about the "extranjerismo" (foreignism) evil affecting radio and television broadcasting in the republic. Despite repeated warnings, live and platter programs show a marked preference for foreign ditties.

American numbers are not so much in vogue, although they also have a following among the younger set, especially rock-and-roll and other dizzy ditties. But a spokesman for the Department said Mexican programming is flooded with Cuban, Latin American and European songs and rarely does Mexican music get the featured position.

Communications for some time has been asking radio and tv stations nicely to up programming, and to give "preference" to Mexican music. Since program directors are forgetting their "obligation" to feature nationally composed tunes, the Department's inspectors are now busy making a day and night check of all music sent out from this capital's radio and tv facilities.

The check will go much further, however. Not only type of music played and sung is to be charted. Investigators will check programs, rhythms and artists presented in person or on disks, especially concentrating on nationalities.

Case in point was last week's broadcast of "Radio Varieties" with this dedicated to find out the best singer among Bienvendio Granada (Cuba); Olimpo Cardenas (Ecuador), Julio Jaramillo (Ecuador), Celia Gonzalez (Puerto Rico), Lucho Gatica (Chile) and others. This is a disk jockey program and rarely does one hear the voices of Mexicans, except for the announcers and guest disk jockeys.

In this "strangling" situation, Communications hopes to achieve a little more diversification to get Mexican thrushes a hearing. But, and this is quietly overlooked, could be that the public is surfeited with the generally off-key, shouted zaney ranchero songs featured by so-so singers.

Canada Gets First TV Splurge on Pro-Grid

Ottawa, July 14.

First television of pro football in Canada this year will be August 18 when the CBC-TV web carries Big Four games between Toronto and Ottawa, Hamilton and Montreal. Western Interprovincial Football Union airers preem Sept. 19, Winnipeg at Vancouver.

CBC video will air 21 Big Four and seven WIFU games plus playoffs and the Grey Cup final. This year, for the first time, league games will get nationwide tv coverage, eastern schedules on English and French webs between Newfoundland and the lakehead, western games from Winnipeg to Victoria, with the Grey Cup game to all areas, from Toronto, Nov. 28.

Tors

Mercury). Another is the ability to survive an atomic explosion at a specified distance from "ground zero."

All deal with "survival tomorrow," as Tors puts it, yet they provide for all sorts of fascinating areas of speculation, and are framed within an action-adventure approach in themselves. It's the action - adventure aspect which made for the show's quick sale, Tors believes, though he admits that current public interest in space medicine and in the question of survival in space, paved the way for the show too.

Tors is all wrapped up in the show, to the extent of undergoing some of the experiments himself. UCLA, as well as various government agencies—the Defense Dept., the Civil Defense Administration and others—is working closely with Tors on the show, and when he learned that the Air Force was conducting tests on hypnosis as a ground-to-space method of quelling pain for space travelers, he decided to undergo hypnosis himself. He now has mastered self-hypnosis. In another case, he underwent the hallucination tests for brainwashing at UCLA. Tors didn't go so far as to try skydiving, but he did lean out of the plane to watch his diver go down, and says the effect is just as euphoric for the spectator as the diver. Nader has undergone the experiments with him.

Tors' only problem is one of self-restraint. "I promised my wife and my doctor and my insurance company that I won't get personally involved in these tests, but sometimes I forget." He's also concerned for his director, Andrew Marton, who also tends to get carried away. "He's 57, and if he doesn't watch himself, or we don't watch him, one of these days he'll kill himself."

In both instances, the stations had been "propping" prices by a vigorous demand. KTTV had been a ready year-round buyer of virtually all syndicated product available; similarly, KNXT had been a major feature film buyer.

But KTTV a year ago adopted a participating sales policy on syndicated shows which enabled it to buy such series on a longterm basis. It purchased 14 series at the time, all on a 52-week or longer basis, and consequently has been out of the market since, to all intents and purposes. An exec of the station admitted that "we might have been artificially propping the price for the past couple of years because we were such eager buyers." Today, however, KTTV is in a position to buy at the lowered price level because of its abstinence from the market and its backlog of product.

Similarly, in features, KNXT had been the key buyer in the market. But when it bought the 700-pic Paramount library, it virtually doubled its stockpile of features to an estimated 1,500 films and simply doesn't want or need anymore at present, unless a top package comes along. That tended to drop the bottom out of the feature market.

Besides these factors, adoption of new program approaches by the independents has helped change the picture radically. KTLA has gone to a live-plus-tape syndication policy and is eschewing the syndicated field and limiting its feature buys. KCOP is using the travel-documentary format and likewise buys little in the syndicated field. Evolution of personality shows—Oscar Levant, Tom Duggan, George Jessel—on a local live basis likewise is cutting down the availabilities for film.

Although L.A., with its four indies, would seemingly represent an inexhaustible demand for product, the new buying policies and new program approaches have contributed to make it one of the country's toughest nuts for the vidpix distributors.

Ottawa—Keith Sterling, for 10 years deejay of radio station CKOY's "Make-Believe Ballroom," has dropped his gab-and-spin chores to concentrate on being program director. Ray Lawrence succeeds him in the disk slot.

Joyce Davidson Expands Horizon

Toronto, July 14.

Joyce Davidson, whose expressed "indifference, like most Canadians, to Royal tours" sparked her resignation from the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. after she made the remark in New York on Dave Garroway's "Today" program, has formed her own company, Joyce Davidson Ltd., and has secured a Canadian charter. Her lawyer and an accountant will allow her $20,000 a year, the rest of her earnings to go into bonds and real estate.

As hostess of "Lux Playhouse," emanating from New York, her interviewing on "Tabloid," plus guesters on "Long Shot," two Toronto shows on which she has been re-instated by CBC, Joyce Davidson is currently negotiating the Los Angeles commercials on the Jack Benny and George Gobel shows aimed for fall release.

She says: "I have put things on a business-like basis because I realized I wasn't using my money well. Being a woman alone in the world of business, I didn't know what to do with my money. This company will take care of my burgeoning career in the U.S. and Canada."

Tape Sacrifices Performance In Graham's Opinion

Tape should be on tap but not on top seems to be the precept laid down by William A. Graham, director of "Omnibus" and "Leonard Bernstein and N.Y. Philharmonic" series this past season.

This week Graham completed shooting a 45-minute documentary for producer Hi Brown. Tagged "Investment In Life" it is designed to woo youngsters into social service work and will be presented under the auspices of the National Council on Social Work in schools and eventually on tv.

Current controversy over mastery of tape at the hands of directors prompted Graham to say that the future of tape will be the marriage of the technique of both live and film. Ultimately, however, tape will be superior to the scope of film.

Graham said he didn't agree with the directors and producers who say they "hate" tape. Tape, he thought, was another fine tool at the director's disposal "and if we get in trouble, don't blame it on tape." But, above all, tape was not the answer to all production problems; far from it, he said.

He thought there was nothing that could approach the live show however for acting intensity. "The live show has an immediacy, an emotional continuity approaching what you find in the theatre." Tape, he insisted, affords technical perfection at the sacrifice of performance.

Tape, he argued, shouldn't be used just because it is available, but always for a sufficiently good reason. It was his theory that plays with complex acting problems suffer when taped. Furthermore, when he does a live show he manages to get better results from a performer.

He observed that tv inherently belongs to the director, writer and actor while the film happens to be primarily a director's medium. As for the stage, he said, it's both a writer's and actor's medium. He felt that many of tape's flaws would be eliminated within a year's time.

Tape, he said, was currently being blamed for a lot of things that one can't legitimately blame on the material. The fault, he said, was in "our lack of experience with it." Producers, he observed, tend to be negative about tape because of the difficulty in budgeting productions and planning a schedule. "As we become more familiar with it, we'll be able to plan a tape production with the same accuracy of a film production," he said.

As for the roll over defect so frequently visible in editing tape, he noted with a wry touch, that most viewers seems to think it is a defect in their sets, not in the production.

"It may take viewers some six to eight months to discover who is to blame for this irritation but by that time we hope to have the problem licked," he said.

TV'S INFO GROUP MEETS TODAY (WED.)

Television Information Committee is meeting today (Wed.) at the Waldorf-Astoria in N.Y. to make detailed plans for the financial and organizational makeup of a fulltime body, being formed to work on the improvement of tv's "image."

Attending the morning meeting will be representatives for ABC-TV, CBS-TV and NBC-TV, and six station executives, among them Triangle's Roger Clipp and Lawrence (Bud) Rogers of WSAZ, Charleston, W. Va. It's understood that, on the advice of the National Assn. of Broadcasters, the Committee plans to ask each of the nets for $65,000 a year and the stations the equivalent of their highest one-hour card rate, also annually, to support the proposed informational organization.

Group ultimately expects to select an executive to head the permanent informational body, but it is not certain that his selection will arise at this Waldorf meeting.

Tommy Hunter Returns To Canada's 'Hoedown'

Toronto, July 14.

Tommy Hunter, male solo-singer of "Country Hoedown," who walked off the show with King Ganam, leader-emcee, is back on the series for all summer but Ganam is out because of increased money demands, according to the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. ("Country Hoedown" is one of the CBC shows continued into the summer and will be on next fall's CBC sked).

Hunter previously left the trans-Canada series because Ganam had the former under personal contract but has since been released by Ganam, with the CBC taking back Hunter. Neither performer could be reached for comment.

FTC Regimen Reversal Throws Some Doubts On CBS-TV 'Talking'

Having finally okayed the advertising line to be taken by Regimen, a reducing agent, the Federal Trade Commission has again withdrawn its sanction. In April, the FTC, the country's arbiter of fair advertising practice, issued a consent decree against the drug product, then after revisions were made, withdrew its ban a month later. Replacing of the ban last week, if only temporarily so that "further changes could be made," marks the first time the FTC has ever taken such a step, and it puts a question mark over Regimen's sponsorship of the CBS-TV "Keep Talking" stanza.

Network, in the first place, didn't accept the Regimen summertime biz for the half-hour until a letter showing FTC compliance on a revised advertising format was received. That was nearly two months ago, before Regimen started its 13-week cycle on the panel show. Program still has six weeks to run and it appears now as though CBS is going to take a "wait and see" stand with regard to any premature cancellation of the Regimen order.

Regimen has had considerable advertising on local tv and in the print media. CBS claims that even though the FTC did at one point comply with the new Regimen ad line, "we imposed perhaps even stricter standards on the company's advertising."

British Com'l TV Packed Tight On Ads; Nowhere to Go But Level Off

London, July 14.

Although the 20 largest spenders on press and television advertising in Britain divvied out 59% more on commercial tv last year than in 1957, and the figure for all advertisers is an estimated 50% increase, there are signs here that tv expenditures will reach their absolute peak and level out sooner than was expected. Earlier forecasts that 1959 would see a 25% growth in such spending are being revised to 15-20%, which provides the indication.

A contradiction could come, of course, from the networks' increase of air time devoted to commercials and/or an upping of rates. But both possibilities are virtually ruled out by the facts that currently the webs are packing in just about all the ads they can carry, though the forthcoming startup of Anglia Television and Ulster Television will extend the field a little, while the tendency seems to be to cut prices rather than increase. In March, for instance, average cost per ad was $490, as against $506 or thereabouts in March, 1958.

In general, most advertisers still spent much more on press than on tv advertising in 1958, the top 20 being responsible for 44% of same while providing only 18% of display advertising in the press. But in this group, at least a couple of major concerns reversed their 1957 policy and upped their press budget at the expense of their television allocations.

June rake-in by the commercial webs was over $12,130,500 from 26,513 spots, according to Media Records Ltd.

gional buyers and consequently can be counted out as a competitive factor in the market.

At Flamingo, Gross is planning to package all its previous series into a single group and sell the entire package as a library in individual markets. After that, the concentration will be on production of toprung product to compete for the regional business.

Meanwhile, the company, owned by Buckeye Corp. and headed by Herman Rush, is expanding its feature film catalog. Gross, on a recent European swing, picked up an additional 20 French and Italian pix, which Flamingo will distribute both to tv and theatrically—company intends to enter theatrical distribution shortly. Gross is currently on a three-week sales trip through the U.S.

Want Better AP-UPI Shake

tion with a policy of providing better newscasts for its listeners.

A particularly unhappy subscriber to the wire services has been the New York Herald Tribune Radio Network which has stations in Westchester and Nassau Counties. These stations owned by Martin Stone and "Jock" Whitney, Ambassador to Great Britain, haven't been too happy with the tidbit type of news furnished by the wire services and it was one of the first to up its news service by adding the day news wire. Richard Doan, former AP staffer, and, now director of the Trib Radio Network, has been in the vanguard of pushing the wire services into improving their transmissions. Radio stations subscribing to AP, it should be noted, are merely associate members and consequently not entitled to any voting rights, these being vested only in newspapers affiliated with AP.

The recent arrival on the broadcasting scene of such outfits as Radio Press, providing up-to-the-minute voice coverage of outstanding events around the world, has prompted UPI and AP to give serious consideration for the setting up of similar operations. Much soul searching is now going on among the execs of the news gathering agencies as to the advisability of providing on the spot voice reports from news breaking centers around the globe. Ultimately, informed observers predict, these outfits will jump into this category because they've got the correspondents and other facilities necessary to compete with Radio Press and similar type organizations.

Meanwhile, the small stations are insisting that AP and UPI stop treating their radio wire subscribers as stepchildren and start concentrating on giving them a more adequate regional and local news coverage. It is pointed out, in this instance, UPI is ahead of AP, in providing stations with local news, but ideal coverage is yet an unknown quantity.

News editors of smaller stations, many of them equal in savvy if not superior to those on the webs and affiliates, insist there's little difference in fashioning news for press and for radio and that it doesn't require much skill to shift styles from one to the other. For instance lifting a "he said" from the bottom of a news paragraph and putting it at the beginning, can nicely turn a yarn designed for the daily press into one for radio broadcasting without beclouding it.

But, most important, broadcasters insist, AP and UPI must revise their coverage or the latter will shortly find themselves losing valuable subscribers, namely hundreds of disgruntled AM outlets across the country.

As matters stand today, most of the news roundups sound alike and possess the color and taste of skimmed milk or maybe yogurt, and the blame, it is charged, rests on the stiff shoulders of the imperiously operated news wire agencies.

Pan Am

cast journalists who managed to get back a pre-landing radio report without being discouraged by engineering difficulties, although he and his confreres from all of the broadcast outlets had plenty of problems, some funny and others rather frightening.

Gabe Pressman, NBC radio reporter, was another who managed to get back on-the-spot radio reports, but not without engineering problems which often made reception difficult.

Like ABC, CBS got a tv remote unit out to the airport site but it was no use, because the network couldn't get a signal to bounce off the main transmitter at the Empire State Building in Manhattan.

Just getting out to Idlewild was problem enough for most reporters. Ed Stevens, normally a newswriter, who lives relatively close to Idlewild was called upon at home when the word came through of the Pan Am trouble. He got into his car and never would have gotten through the super-heavy traffic, which also bogged down firefighting equipment, if he didn't finally jump out of his lane to tag along after a fire truck, flashing his press card out the window as he went.

Bob Quinn, a CBS-TV director who took a taxi to direct a tv show that never got on, had to quit his cab outside Idlewild and run, somewhat breathlessly the last mile to the field where some news equipment had already managed to gather.

ABC-TV's camera crew and reporter Stevens got a real scare. Once they'd made the field, in the minutes just after to the post-midnight safe landing of the plane, a "sadistic fire sergeant," who was manning the truck to lay down the foam in case the plane caught fire, threatened to run them down, because he considered them in the way. He finally veered his truck off, at the last second according to Stevens, but before he did he—seemingly intentionally—sprayed foam on an ABC cameraman, a technician and apparently some foam on the $100,000 tv unit. An official fire department photog, who was there doing his job with a still camera also got sprayed, and thereatened to file a complaint against the sergeant.

Several others, including NBC personnel were also foam-sprayed. Formal protests, besides the photogs, have since been filed by press and broadcasting with the Port Authority (which runs Idlewild) regarding the "arrogant" foam-throwers.

Because the live cameras were of no use, NBC did get considerable tv film footage on the affair, which was used later on the air. CBS supplied sound reports to both radio and tv. CBS-TV cameraman Al Gretz filmed several interviews, also used on the air.

WNEW, the N.Y. radio indie, managed to get three men out to the field. But the station did not send a remote unit. Nonetheless, WNEW staffers phone-fed material back to the station to be taped, and then the station, besides airing them itself, forwarded the pickups to stations in St. Louis, Detroit, Davenport, Toronto and London, Ont., Baton Rouge, Houston, Cleveland and Boston.

JEANNIE'S BRITISH BOW IN 'CINDERELLA'

London, July 14.

Jeannie Carson will make her first U. K. tv appearance in a play in a tele-recorded musical version of Sir James Barrie's "A Kiss For Cinderalla." The production is skedded for BBC-TV transmission at Christmas. The music has been written by Christopher Whelen, who will also conduct the Pro-Arte orchestra, and will be directed by Desmond Davis.

"Kiss" has started off a new Barrie trend. Whelen is now working on musical versions of "Shall We Join The Ladies" and "The Boy David," which are intended primarily for tv but with a watchful eye on the legit stage market.

Azcarraga Spreading TV Wings to Panama

Mexico City, July 14.

Emilio Azcarraga, radio and television pioneer in Mexico, is spreading his wings and preparing to launch tv facilities in Panama.

Commercial television is coming to Panama and it is learned from a reliable source that Azcarraga is teaming up with Fernando Eleta, Panamanian radio broadcaster (also one of vice presidents of AIR) and Cuban Goar Mestre.

RCA equipment is to be installed and Channel 4 will be used for telecasts.

Until now Panama has only had a small television installation in the Canal Zone, for entertainment of U.S. troops. The American station, in operation past five years, has used filmed programs originating in the U.S., and featuring such old standbys as Ed Sullivan, Milton Berle, Arthur Godfrey, etc.

Albany — Anthony G. (Tony) Visk, continuity director at Schine-owned WPTR for several years and prior to that associated with WROW and WTEN-TV, has joined WPRO in Providence, R. I., as promotion and publicity director.

O'Seas Talent

similar to program's salute to Hawaii last spring.

The reasons for the new stress on Europe are manifold. In the first place, it is feared that the demand for personalities to head spectaculars will be so tremendous next year, that the prices will zoom to the point where even talent agencies are fearful of the results. They hope that by taping and bringing in newcomers from abroad, it may be possible to keep some semblance of reason in video's salary structure.

Another point, is the fear that unless new ideas and new faces come in, television will achieve a large degree of sterility. The present reliance on westerns and whodunits are cited as examples.

In a larger degree, it is seen that within a few years, it will be possible to telecast directly on a worldwide scale. In order to pave the way for international networks, live and tape, it is desirable to break in the American public to the idea of entertainment from abroad. On a longrange scale, it seems necessary to give living room show biz an assortment of accents and viewpoints. It is also deemed necessary to popularize new talent before present headliners erode through more exposures.

Interest in the importation of tele properties is just breaking through at this time. It's anticipated that just as films and legit have had to expand their horizons to maintain boxoffice, television is reaching the point where it must pick off the more suitable properties from other countries to augment domestic fare. Otherwise, even tele execs may get tired of their sets.

willing to commit ourselves or even express enthusiasm for the new house until we have seen the architect's plans, read the contractor's bids, carefully examined the comforts and conveniences and most soberly considered the costs."

Board also posed a series of 10 questions which must satisfactorily be answered in the present merger study being conducted by David Cole. They include the question of whether a merged organization would gain strength in collective bargaining; whether interests of all performers are always identical; whether agreement could be reached between film and live actors over pay-tv; whether a merged organization would be departmentalized according to various fields or ruled by a single, strong national board.

Also, what economies could be effected by a merger; what additional expenses would result from a merger; how initiation fees and dues eliminated by a merger could be replaced; whether the dues of non-AFTRA members of SAG would be increased and by how much; where the merged union would headquarter; and whether elected and unpaid officers and board members would retain their present control over union policies, finances and practices.

British ABC-TV Cuts Rates on 90-Sec. Spots

London, July 14.

ABC Television Ltd., commermercial network serving the Midlands and North at weekends, is cutting its rates for 90-second participations starting Sept. 5. Saturday price drops by $210 to $1,050 and Sunday by $420 to $2,100.

Move is of interest because of, though it need have no connection with, a contention made by Horace Schwerin at a one-day conference on tv advertising staged by Associated TeleVision, London weekend web, on June 3. The president of the Schwerin Research Corp. of America held that maybe British tv advertisers were relying too much on the shorter spot. In notifying clients of the revised rates, ABC-TV director George A. Cooper says that a reason for is that "we have found that a longer participation is normally inclined to sell the product more effectively."

Old-Style Brass Bands Boom Away With Local Talent in Penn. Backwoods

Harrisburg, July 14.

Despite competition from tv, radio, drive-ins, summer legit theatres and other areas of year-round entertainment, one of the country's oldest forms of show business not only continues in popularity through the rural districts but here in the Keystone State it has actually grown in proportions through the passing years.

The summer open-air band concerts, performed in the town squares. parks, pavilions, or just out in the open, in some cases in a farm field, this year are drawing larger crowds than ever before. and, because of the revived interest, units playing the shows are increasing their schedules, playing several times weekly from the July 4th kick-oq through the Labor Day holiday.

Unlike the big-city version of the concerts under the stars, similar to the Grant Park series in Chicago where big names in the musical field are presented in a no-gate basis, the smaller communities rely mainly on home-grown talent. Bands are sponsored by such organiaztions as the Elks, Moose, American Legion, and even the local fire departments, with musicians and soloists rehearsing and performing on their own time with no fee asked or expected.

Typical of the area's interest are such locations as the bandshell at Hershey Park, where, despite the

Stiff Package Prices Limiting Stereo Market Abroad: DGG's Detlefs

While the disk industry in Europe is growing steadily, the market still has to overcome the limitations imposed by the relatively high platter prices abroad, according to Gerhard Detlefs, liaison agent between Deutsche Grammophon in Germany and its U.S. distributor, Decca Records. Detlef noted that the high prices were a particular handicap in the pop package field where albums sell for $5. In terms of purchasing power relative to the U.S., that's equivalent to $10 per album for a European.

While stereo is causing much discussion abroad, it is still moving slowly across the counters. Where in the U.S. stereo now accounts for about 20% of the album turnover, Detlefs estimated that it was about 10% in Europe. He said stereo should pick up shortly when the instrument manufacturers start turning out machines in mass quantities.

In the Deutsche Grammophon German setup, Kurt Kinkele, who headed up the international artists & repertoire department, has been promoted to the head of domestic DGG distribution operations. Heinz Voigt has been upped to fill Kinkele's spot in the international division, while Johannes Ellrich remains as chief of the DGG international operation in Germany. Dr. Walter Betcke and Helmut Haertel also continue as overall general managers of DGG for the parent Siemens company, headquartering in Hamburg.

With the pop singles market abroad also dominated by the rock 'n' roll beat, the DGG pop subsid, Heliodor Records, has been wrapping up distribution deals with several U.S. indies, including Cadence, Chancellor, Laurie, etc. Power of the rocking beat, Detlefs pointed out, was demonstrated in the recent sale of 400,000 EPs in France alone of

APOLLO'S SUBSID LABEL

Apollo Records has set up a new subsid label, tabbed Showboat Records.

Ray Scrivner will head up the new firm as v.p., headquartering in Nashville.

Oakdale Music Theatre In Black With Jazzmen

Wallingford, Conn., July 14.

Oakdale Musical Theatre, which again is supplementing its regular musical-straight play fare with one-night jazz stands, has been moderately in the black with the three ventures so far this season.

Erroll Garner pulled $4.500; Duke Ellington, $3,500; Jonah Jones. $3,600. Next booking is Dave Brubeck and Wild Bill Davison combos set for July 26.

Epic Pushing 50 LPs in Fall

Las Vegas, July 14.

Keynoted by Columbia Records' prexy Goddard Lieberson, the convention of Epic Records, Col's subsid, at the Sands Hotel here over the weekend (10-11) drew a capacity distrib attendance to hear the company's fall plans.

Epic has come up with a special deal to push its release of 50 packages. A free LP will be offered to dealers for every seven pop stereo or monaural sets purchased. In the longhair department, Epic is offering a straight extra 10% discount. As an added incentive, Epic also is offering a classical and pop stereo "sampler" at a 25c reduction for every stereo purchase. Dealers are getting a stereo rack demonstrator as their sales incentive.

Epic's package sked will revolve around such artists as Lester Lanin, Roy Hamilton, the Merrill Staton Choir, Joe Glover and the O. B. Masingill minstrel show. The release will have for the pop market, 14 monaural LPs and 12 stereos, and for the classical line, 14 monaural LPs and 10 stereos.

WESTMINSTER SUBSID INTO LOW-PRICE MARKET

Westminster Records in entering the low-priced disk field with a new label, Whitehall Records, under the aegis of Norm Wieland, formerly with the 20th Fox disk operation. The Whitehall monaural LPs will sell for $1.98 while the stereo line will go for $2.98.

It's understood that the Westminster subsid is also planning to enter the singles field with a cut-price line. While exact tab has not been determined as yet, it's expected that it will be substantially lower than the current going price of 98c. Debut releases of the new label willl hit the market the middle of next month.

Guy Lombardo Cracks Mass. Ballroom Record

Wrentham, Mass., July 14.

Guy Lombardo cracked the 74-year-old house record of the King Philip Ballroom here last week when he drew 16,200 customers in a six-day stand. There was a $1 per ticket deal for advance purchases with a $2 tab at the b.o. weekdays and $2.50 on Saturday.

Lombardo played a one-week date at the King Philip in 1958, but did 30% more biz this year.

Connie's Busy Sked

Connie Francis, young thrush who has been a consistent winner on disks for the past year, is set to cut nine albums for MGM Records this summer, four of them in England. She's going to Europe Aug. 18 for dates in England, France and Germany.

Currently at the Bolero, Wildwood, N. J.; she's set for the Casino Royale in Washington, D. C., for a week starting July 20 and then goes to Ottawa for a nitery stand.

ASK BOTH SIDES TO REPLY SEPT. 1

Washington, July 14.

A proposed compromise on the jukebox royalty problem has been handed to spokesmen for the operators and the composers and publishers by Rep. Emanuel Celler (D-N.Y.).

The key legislator, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee and author of the pending jukebox bill, asked them to study it, think about it and come back Sept. 1 and let him know if they like it, have a counterproposal, want to make other suggestions or have modifications to propose.

The Sept. 1 date for the next meeting definitely means there will be no jukebox legislation ready for House action this year, and the serious illness of Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D-Wyo.), author of the legislation in the Senate, means there'll be none there this year either. Congress is expected to adjourn around Sept. 1.

The proposed Celler compromise (which he said he isn't wedded to, but is only searching for a possible area of agreement) calls for juke operators to pay about $2,500,000 extra in royalties to authors and composers each year.

It provides for a royalty payment of $5 per box, in its suggested form. There are estimated to be more than 500,000 jukes in operation.

Proposal calls for appointment of three trustees who would collect from the juke operators. They'd have a survey made to determine

GEMA's Pact With German Pix in U.S.

GEMA, the equivalent of ASCAP in West Germany, and the German film producers have reached an agreement on payments for music in German films shown in the U.S. Deal is retroactive to Jan. 1, 1956 and runs through December of 1960.

Under the pact, the producers agree to pay GEMA 2.5% of the net income accruing to them from the showing of their films in the States. Amount drops down to 1.5% if the total take runs to less than $30,000. In Germany, as in most European countries, the composers collect their take via the theatres. In the U.S., ASCAP cannot legally do this.

The French composers for some years have been trying to get a deal under which they'd collect a cut of film rentals from the independent distributors in N. Y. Latter have refused to consider this.

GEMA for some time prior to the agreement with the German producers took the view that it could actually stop exportation of films to the U.S. It argued that the German producers didn't have the right to license music rights to either the American distributor or exhibitor. Since the amounts are small, the German producers then decided to come to an agreement.

ABC-Par Execs Hit Road For Distributor Meets

ABC-Paramount disk execs are hitting the road for a series of national distrib meetings aimed at kicking off the label's fall album line and to introduce the company's new merchandise display units. Sam H. Clark, diskery's prexy; sales chief Larry Newton, v.p. Harry Levine and Allan Parker, album and merchandise topper, will head up the N. Y. meeting at the Hampshire House Saturday (18). The execs will then fan out over the country for similar powwows in other areas.

Fall album line will feature packages by such artists as Lloyd Price, Paul Anka, Eydie Gorme, Steve Lawrence, Johnny Nash, Dick Clark, Arnold Stang, Ferrante & Teicher, Leo Diamond, and others.

Pop Stereo Prices Go Downwards As Victor Meets the Competition

RCA Victor's move to join the recent Columbia Records' move to drop pop stereo LP prices from $5.98 to $4.98 is pointing to an industrywide trend. Capitol Records has already been operating at the lower list as have such labels as MGM, Dot, Warner Bros., Roulette and others. While the $5.98 price for stereo pops is still widespread, particularly among the indie labels, it's expected that the move by the three top majors will be followed shortly by other companies.

Drop in the pop stereo prices actually brings them into line with the going difference in tabs between classical and popular packages. The classical stereo packages still are going for $5.98, which is $1 more than the monaural version. The same $1 differential will now exist between the regular $3.98 monaural LPs and their stereo versions.

Higher price for the stereo disks is mainly due to the higher pressing cost. The making of a stereo disk involves a more delicate manufacturing process with a much higher rejection rate than is standard for monaural pressings. Presumably, if the manufacturing problems could be fully licked, the stereo disks will ultimately be sold at the same price as the monaural versions.

Teach, I Gotta Swing

Honolulu, July 14.

Seventy-three University of Hawaii summer session students of Asiatic Affairs took a field trip last week to Don the Beachcomber's cultural center, ostensibly to witness a demonstration of Oriental musical instruments.

Presiding at the lecturn was "Professor" Martin Denny, whose progressive jazz combo leaned more heavily than usual on their weird collection of musical instruments, as assembled from many Asiatic lands. Most of the summer students are co-eds from Mainland colleges.

Columbia Maps Can. Expansion

Columbia Records of Canada, a subsid of the U. S. Columbia operation, is expanding its operation with opening move being construction of new headquarters in Toronto. New offices will provide consolidated facilities for administrative offices, warehousing and the Columbia LP Record Club. Col prexy Goddard Lieberson stated that the Canadian disk industry has "developed to a most gratifying degree since Columbia established operations in Canada five years ago." He pointed to the fact that Canada has provided Col with several of its top artists, including Percy Faith, the Four Lads and longhair pianist Glenn Gould.

Robert J. Pampe is v.p. and managing director for the Canadian company. Last year, the Canadian subsid established company-owned distribution branches for Toronto and Montreal. Indie distribs handle the line in the west.

DELLA REESE WINDS UP FIVE-YEAR JUBILEE PACT

Songstress Della Reese has ended her deal with Jubilee Records because the diskery has failed to live up to its commitments. She has been with the label for over five years.

Miss Reese, originally a gospel singer, broke through with a big click a couple of years ago with "And That Reminds Me" and has been a consistent package seller for Jubilee ever since. Lee Magid, her manager, is now dickering with other companies for a disk deal.

Wallenstein Settles Row With AF Over LPs

The row between maestro Alfred Wallenstein and Audio Fidelity Records over release of several longhair LPs has been settled amicably out of court. The Wallenstein platters will now be issued in the fall.

The conductor originally refused to grant his consent to release the platters which were cut with the Virtuoso Symphony of London. He withheld his consent for technical sound quality reasons. Audio Fidelity sued Wallenstein, charging that there was no valid basis for his objections to the recording quality. The Wallenstein disks, some of which have already been on the market, represented AF's initial fling in the longhair field.

Rifkind Joins MGM

Julie Rifkind has joined MGM Records as field rep to contact distributors, dealers and disk jockeys. Headquartering in N. Y., he'll work under Elliot Wexler, the label's marketing chief.

Rifkind had been operating his own label, Dome Records, until recently.

Philly AFM Balks WIP Live, But Cuffo Airing Of Band Test Finalists

Philadelphia, July 14.

WIP, the Philadelphia radio station which prides itself that it "dares to be different," is beginning to wonder if originality pays off in this day of formula radio.

A John Philip Sousa Memorial Concert at Willow Grove Amusement Park, scheduled as final event in an on-the-air promotional contest, has been nixed by local 77 of the American Federation of Musicians. Union turned thumbs down on the cuffo performance, even though top prize for the winning band was to have been a paid, professional engagement.

Concert, skedded for Sunday (12), was to have been a run-off between the two finalists in the music contest—the Pottstown (Pa.) Band, directed by William Lamb, Jr., and the Quakertown Band, headed by Ralph Moyer. Both maestros are part-time musicians and AFM members. The recently refurbished Willow Grove Park had been chosen because of its long-time history as one of Sousa's favorite band-stands. Hence, dedication to the memory of the late March King.

The AFM action came on the heels of last week's set-back by the Federal Communications Commission. The FCC threw a monkey wrench into the well-oiled plans of WIP prexy Ben Gimbel for a two week "broadcasting holiday" in Atlantic City for station staffers and families. It denied a petition for waiver of its "home studio" rule, requiring majority of a station's programs to originate at home base. Substitute plan, a fortnight's "Salute to Atlantic City," is in the works.

Roulette Building Own Recording Studios

Roulette Records, which is moving to enlarged New York headquarters in a few months, is setting up its own recording studios in its new setup. Bill Scripps, formerly with Bell Sound Recording Studios, is now heading Roulette's engineering department.

Expansion plans in the new quarters call for the construction of an additional floor on the three-story building at 50th St. and Broadway.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By HERM SCHOENFELD

Tommy Dorsey Orch - Warren Covington (Decca): "EXECUTIONER THEME FROM 'MURDER BY CONTRACT'" (Longridge*) is a tough title, but a neatly executed instrumental slice. "OH, TO BE LOVED AGAIN" (Ardmore*) is a pleasant ballad vocalled by Warren Covington and chorus.

Champ Butler (Viscount): "OOOH, LOOKA THERE, AIN'T SHE PRETTY" (Leeds*) is a catching rhythm tune which Champ Butler delivers in very lively style. A tasteless implication in the lyric may limit the deejay spins. "THIS CAN'T BE LOVE" (Chappell*) is updated in a swinging vocal.

Terri Stevens (Felsted): "ADONIS" (Joy*) is delivered in appealing style by Terri Stevens who's due to pick up a share of spins on this tune. "VIENI, VIENI" (Witmark*) is a bright Italo-styled entry.

Bob Luman (Warner Bros.): "CLASS OF '59" (Lu-Tal†) is a good teenage ballad delivered in approved style by this singer. "MY BABY WALKS ALL OVER ME" (Lu-Tal†) is a fair country-styled number.

Harry Simeone Chorale (20th-Fox): "THE TOY DRUM" (Knollwood*) is a highly attractive entry in marching tempo due for wide spins. "LORILU" (Audubon*) is another bright slice by this fine choral ensemble.

Johnny Burnette (Freedom): "I'LL NEVER LOVE AGAIN" (Metric*), a slow-tempoed ballad with a good lyric, is projected expertly by this rocking vocalist who can really sing. "SWEET BABY DOLL" (Asa*) changes pace with a bouncing tune.

Nelson Riddle Orch (Capitol): "THE MARKHAM THEME" (Alaska*), a tv show theme, is fashioned into a lush instrumental that makes for easy listening. "TING-A-LAY-O" (Dornelle*) is a pleasing moppet-angled number done with orch and chorus.

Bill Doggett (King): "BIG CITY DRAG" (Jay & Cee†) is another pounding rhythm instrumental entry which the juves will find easy to dance to. "AFTER HOURS" (Popular*) is in a softer mood spotlighting Bill Doggett's organatics.

The Beach Boys (Kapp): "BATHING BEAUTY" (Alamo*) is a cute, uptempo rocking number with a seasonal peg which will help it. "ON THE BEACH AT SUNSET" (Sheldon†) is a neat ballad in a more traditional harmonizing groove.

Big Daddy (Wynne): "DANIEL WEBSTER AND THE DEVIL" (Elliot-Virtu*) is a somewhat long-winded yarn set to a familiar melody, but this singer delivers skillfully. "I THINK YOU'RE LYING" (Virtu*) is in a more conventional rocking idiom.

Jerry Benty (Willett): "WE'RE GONNA HAVE LOVE" (David†) is an interesting rhythm tune handled effectively by this singer. "WITHOUT YOU" (Bourne*) gets an okay country-styled vocal.

Chan Romero (Del-Fi): "IF I HAD A WAY" (Bobby Tunes†) is a typically tailored rocking ballad handled in the expected way by this young singer. "THE HIPPY HIPPY SHAKE" (Bobby Tunes†) is a frantic uptempo slice done in rockabilly style.

Tony Butala (Topic): "LOOK AT HIM, LOOK AT HER" (Cordial†) is a solid rocking ballad with a familiar theme which the kids never seem to tire of. "MY FIRST REAL ROMANCE" (Cordial†) is an okay rhythm ballad.

Eddie Chase (Viscount): "GINGER" (Weiss & Barry†) is a nifty rocking number with a driving beat and a cute lyric which the kids will buy. Eddie Chase belts potently. "IF YOU ONLY KNEW" (Weiss & Barry†) is an okay slow-tempoed entry.

Arena Twins (Kapp): "IN MY WALLET" (Gil†), a pleasant rocking ballad with a teen-slanted lyric, is handled with a typical sound by this vocal duo. "NO ONE ELSE" (Ashland†) is a less effective side.

Johnny Johns (Buena Vista): "THE HEART OF AN ANGEL" (Kellem*) is a strong ballad with a good beat which this singer delivers in typically rocking style. "I'M IN THE MOOD FOR LOVE" (Robbins*) gets a fair updating slice.

Ed Townsend (Capitol): "THIS LITTLE LOVE OF MINE" (Cherritown) is an above-par uptempo entry which this singer rocks to a fare-thee-well. "HOLD ON" (Cherritown) is an effective slow-tempoed side.

THE WANDERERS .... ONLY WHEN YOU'RE LONELY
(MGM) .... I'm Not Ashamed

The Wanderers' "Only When You're Lonely" (We Three†) bows this combo on an excellent ballad tailored and executed for the current market. "I'm Not Ashamed" (Beechwood†) is another good side nicely handled.

JOHNNY TILLOTSON .... TRUE TRUE HAPPINESS
(Cadence) .... Love Is Blind

Johnny Tillotson's "True True Happiness" (Tannen†) is a simple rocking ballad, with a spoken chorus that's corny enough to catch on with the juves. "Love Is Blind" (Sherman-DeVorzon†) is a rocking ballad set in highly interesting arrangement.

Album Reviews

"The Jazz Soul of Porgy & Bess" (United Artists). A superb package of big band jazz has been fashioned by UA out of the much-exercised "Porgy & Bess" score. In swinging, inventive arrangements by Bill Potts, who also conducts, this crackerjack studio band plays the Gershwin music with precision, color and taste. Among the soloists featured on the various numbers are such standout sidemen as Harry Edison, Al Cohn, Zoot Sims, Jimmy Cleveland, Bill Evans, Charlie Shavers, Phil Woods and others. Set has been handsomely got up with a folio of photos and notes by Andre Previn.

"An Evening With Lerner & Loewe" (RCA Victor). Composers Allan Jay Lerner and Frederick Loewe are in the spotlight of this rich-sounding offering. Three of their Broadway show scores, "Brigadoon," "Paint Your Wagon" and "My Fair Lady," and their score for the "Gigi" film are each reprised one side of this double platter set with a cast of topflight vocalists, including Robert Merrill, Jan Peerce, Jane Powell and Phil Harris with conductor Johnny Green laying down a very authoritative beat.

Duke Ellington: "Anatomy of Murder" (Columbia). With the jazz kick for background music for pix and tv still on the upbeat, this score for the Otto Preminger film, "Anatomy of Murder," wins another important case for the cause of jazz. Duke Ellington's score, as written by him and played by his orch, is a probing exercise in moods and colors. This is one suondtrack set that stands on its own feet with a minimum of dependence on the screen's story.

"The Amazing Nina Simone" (Colpix). This is a tough billing for anybody to fulfill and this young songstress, though of unmistakable talent, is not a combination of the best features of Bessie Smith, Billie Holiday, Ella Fitzgerald and Marian Anderson. Miss Simone has a rich smoky voice and she has a savvy attack with a swinging beat that's effective on this variety of songs, ranging from "Children Go Where I Send You" and a lovely folk tune, "Tomorrow We Will Meet Once More" to standards like "Willow Weep For Me" and "Stompin' At The Savoy." Whether or not she emerges "this year as the greatest new singing talent to hit the recording field in a decade," Miss Simone is a solid songstress stemming from, but not surpassing, a long tradition.

Tony Lavelli: "All-American Accordionist" (Urania). Tony Lavelli's flashing way with the squeezebox gets a sparkling workout in this album. Back by an orch, the ex-basketball star pulls out all the stops on a varied songalog including oldies like "All-American Rag," "Lady of Spain," "El Cumbanchero," "Beautiful Dreamer" and a medley of George Gershwin tunes.

Victorian Trumpet Trio: "Australia's Fabulous Trumpets" (Key). A trio of Australian longhair trumpeters, George Dobson, Merv Simpson and Stan Roberts, have teamed for an unusual display of horn technique. The unison effects are done in fast tempo with striking results on numbers like "Holiday For Strings," "Post Horn Gallop," "The Runaway Rocking Horse," "Sabre Dance," "Rhapsody in Blue" and other pieces. There's some incidental orch support, but the virtuoso trumpets are the whole works.

Arnie Kronenbergers "Square Dancing In Hi-Fi" (Warner Bros.). Square dancing is always in style and this set features one of the top callers in the business, Arnie Kronenberger. The beat has been updated somewhat and some listeners may not know whether to lindy hop or do-si-do, but enough of a country flavor has been retained in these jazzed-up oldies to identify them.

"Slim Gaillard Rides Again" (Dot). One of the authentic clowns of jazz, Slim Gaillard's freewheeling style of music and comedy is effectively showcased in this set. Gaillard's vocal interpolations, rhythm switches, word plays and musical sense actually make this collection of tunes a collection of surprises. He does, and undoes, tunes like "I Don't Stand A Ghost of A Chance With You," "How High The Moon," "My Blue Heaven," "Sukiyaki Cha Cha." No wonder he's one of the idols of the beatniks.

Phyllis Diller: "Wet Toe In A Hot Socket" (Mirrosonic). Extending the list of nitery routines that have gone into the groove, this set preserves a Bon Soir, N.Y., performance by Coast comedienne Phyllis Diller. This is a specialty item for the sophisticated mob. It's made up of smart patter and a group of material songs like "I'd Rather Cha Cha Than Eat," "Guess Who I Saw Today," "Today Will Be Yesterday Tomorrow" and others. Some of the audience laughter, which may be reactions to sight gags or mugging, is mystifying but that's always the risk of a "live" take.

"Words and Music With The Ames Bros." (RCA Victor). This is a neat song-along set of 12 public domain oldies. The Ames Bros. harmonize in their customary slick style a dozen songs whose words and music are included in this package. It's a nifty packaging job with a solid commerical peg.

"The Duncan Trial" (Evesdrop). As an example of the far-ranging material now available on disks, this LP gives excerpts from the trial of Elizabeth Ann Duncan who was convicted for the murder of her daughter-in-law by hired assassins. Unfortunately, the actual trial testimony sounds as if it were recorded in a boiler room and is barely audible. An accompanying script is absolutely necessary to follow the recorded verbiage.

Knuckles O'Toole: "Sing A Song With Knuckles O'Toole" (Grand Award). Knuckles O'Toole's honkytonking serves as a good backing for the sing-along trend built up by Mitch Miller on his Columbia disks. O'Toole has his own following and they should find "I'm Looking Over A Four Leaf Clover," "That Old Gang Of Mine," "Goodnight Sweetheart," "Don't Fence Me In" and the like highly appealing.

Bobby Short: "The Mad Twenties" (Atlantic). Here's a spirited item that's loaded with the high voltage crooning style and song entries of the 1920s. Working with frisky arrangements by Phil Moore, Bobby Short sets up a playful mood with such goodies as "Nagasaki," "That Society Bear," "Tiger Rag," "Heebie Jeebies" and plenty of others just as good.

Top Mexican Jazzists Muted by Peso Paucity

Mexico City, July 14.

After all the fanfare and hullabaloo, it turned out that Mexico's winners of the National Jazz Festival were left stranded without funds to participate in the recent Newport Jazz Festival. It was a matter of 23,000 pesos ($1,840) expense money that was lacking. Union leader Juan Jose Osorio had promised that a special assembly would be called, asking for maestros to pony up voluntary contributions to make the trip possible.

The assembly was never called and so Mexico's musicians, packed and ready to go, had to abandon their plans.

WBR Inks Band Contest Winner, Cornell Rejoins Thiele; Other Pacts

Warner Bros.: Claude Gordon Orch

Claude Gordon orch, winner of the recent band competition sponsored by the American Federation of Musicians, was corralled by Warner Bros. Records. The Gordon orch came out the winner of a contest in which 183 bands from the U.S. and Canada were entered to determine the "best new dance band in America."

Gordon had been working in the Los Angeles area as trumpeter with various other bands before forming his own organization in 1955.

Signature Records: Don Cornell

Don Cornell has exited Dot Records to rejoin Bob Thiele in the Signature Records' fold. Thiele recently ankled Dot as a&r chief to set up his own Hanover-Signature company.

Cornell's first release, due next week, will be "Sempre Amore" and "Forever Couldn't Be Long Enough."

Capitol: Whittemore & Lowe

The piano team of Arthur Whittemore & Jack Lowe have signed longterm recording pacts with Capitol Records. Whittemore & Lowe will record in Cap's N.Y. studios under the supervision of a&r exec Dick Jones.

Pair's initial album, "A Night In Spain," goes into release this fall.

Flag Records: The Escorts

The Escorts, a six-man combo from Pensacola, Fla., inked by Flag Records of Mobile, Ala. "Clap Happy" is their first release.

Decca: Treble Chords

Treble Chords, male vocal quartet, has joined the Decca artists' roster. They write most of their own material.

Initial release will couple "Little Louie" and "Without Your Love."

Everett: Russ Morgan

Russ Morgan, after 20 years with Decca Records, has ankled diskery to shift over to Everett Records on an exclusive deal. He already has cut three albums for new label, all in stereo.

Joe Sherman, Ex-Epic, Launches JDS Label

Joe Sherman, who recently exited as artists & repertoire head of Epic Records, has set up his own label, JDS Records, which are the initials of his name. He's kicking off his firm via the buy of a master, "Little Girl Lost," by Bobby Roy and the Cord-A-Roys, a New York combo. Also on his roster are singers Barry Mann and Stevie Leeds.

Sherman is distributing via National Consolidated Distributing Co., Jerry Blaine's company. An album line is also being planned by Sherman.

Newport Fete's Funds Blocked By Legal Row

Newport, R.I., July 14.

Funds of the Newport Jazz Festival in four Newport banks were attached by Mrs. Elaine G. Lorillard, estranged wife of Louis Lorillard, festival prexy and founder, Tuesday (7), in connection with her $100,000 suit against the festival.

Richard B. Sheffield, secretary of the jazz festival, said a U.S. Marshal served him with the writ attaching the funds, but said festival bills will be paid. Mrs. Lorillard's suit was filed in U.S. District Court, Providence, R.I. last week. She charged that she was not getting her share as the person who first got the idea for the Newport fete.

So. Africa Dixie Combo Asks Asylum in Sweden

Stockholm, July 14.

Four members of the South African Golden City Dixie band hope to stay on in Sweden and continue as jazz musicians. The quartet has applied to be political refugees in Sweden. The musicians include Jussef Williams, Jeff Cartriers, Brian Isaacs and Harold Jephthah.

The Golden City Dixie combo has been touring Europe for some time. One member of the group hopped off in England. The four members who hopped off in Borlange, Sweden, feel they will be free from race persecution here.

MIKE GOULD ANKLES DISNEY IN POLICY ROW

Hollywood, July 14.

Mike Gould has exited his post as general manager of Walt Disney's Music Company and its subsidiary Wonderland Music after differences of opinion with company toppers on the operation of the pubberies.

Gould, who joined Disney four months ago, was paid off in full for the remaining eight months of his original one year pact.

By DAVE BITTAN

Newport, R.I., July 14.

The first annual Newport Folk Festival—a real sleeper—attracted a surprising 15,000 folk music fans for its two-day stand (11-12) at Freebody Park.

Not yet recovered from the onslaught of the jazz fans from the Newport Jazz Festival, the local burghers didn't know quite what to expect from the folk buffs.

But they got a pleasant surprise. A quiet, well-behaved group, including many families, the folk fans provided none of the trouble that some of the excitement-hunting jazz fans caused. About half of the folksters were from the Greater New York area, but some pilgrimages were made from as far away as California and Tennessee.

The cream of the folk circuit was on the bill for the two evening and one afternoon concerts. Two of the attractions from the jazz festival, the Kingston Trio and gospel singer Professor Alex Bradford, were among the stars of the folk bash.

Others on the program were veteran John Jacob Niles, Martha Schlamme, a Viennese refugee who broke the crowd up with her Jewish folk songs; Odetta, with her Mahalia Jackson-like voice; banjoist-singer Frank Warner; Pete Seeger (ex of the Weavers), Frank Hamilton, a young Chicago singer, blind Sonny Terry and Brownie McGhee, Jimmy Driftwood and Leon Bibb.

Also on the program were Ed McCurdy, the Kossoy Sisters, Billy Faire, Oscar Brand, Jean Ritchie, the Rev. Gary Davis, Barry Kornfeld, the Stanley Brothers, Memphis Slim, Barbara Dane, Bob Gibson, Joan Baez, Earl Scruggs, Hylo Brown and the Timberliners, the New Lost City Ramblers, Mike Seeger, Pat Clancy and Tommy Makem, Serafin and Cherubim and several dance groups, including the New England Folk Dancers.

In sharp contrast to the noisy, inattentive audiences at the evening concerts of the jazz festival, the folk fans sat quietly and listened with almost a reverent quality. But they were responsive to the music.

A heavy fog rolled in over the open-air stadium Saturday night (11) as the concert began. But, rather than hurting the music, it helped by adding a weird and dramatic backdrop for the plaintive melodies from most countries of the world.

More than 5,000 attended the Saturday concert, 3,000 were present Sunday afternoon (12) and another 6,000 sat through the rain Sunday evening.

Another 600 attended a "song-swapping" session Saturday afternoon in which a half-dozen performers, led by Frank Hamilton and Seeger, demonstrated various tricks of their trade.

For a Sunday morning panel discussion on "What Is Folk Music?" another 500 turned out. This was led by Dr. Marshall Stearns, Alan Lomax, Willis James, Moses Ash and Stanley Hyman.

Co-producers George Wein and Al Grossman were pleased by the turnout and already are making plans for next year's folk festival. The session is sponsored by the board of the Newport Jazz Festival. Grossman operates Chicago's Gate of Horn, the nation's first folk night club.

Of the major news media, only the New York Times and the Saturday Review of Literature were represented, along with area newspapers and radio stations. This contrasted with more than 700 representatives from all over the world who attended the jazz festival.

Studs Terkel, Chicago folk expert, emceed the Saturday bash.

Dale Exits Alexander

Chicago, July 14.

Freddie Dale, topper of the Willard Alexander band office in Chi the past four years, ankles the post this week to pick up an Esther Williams Pool franchise for Southern California. His replacement hasn't been named as yet.

Dale will base in Los Angeles.

VARIETY DISK JOCKEY POLL

This compilation is designed to indicate those records rising in popularity as well as those on top. Ratings are computed on the basis of ten points for a No. 1 mention, nine for a No. 2, and so on down to one point. Wherever possible, only records with two or more mentions are listed, even though their total points are less in some cases than those which receive only one mention. Cities and jockeys will vary from week to week to present a comprehensive picture of all sectors of the country regionally.

Disk Dealer Raps LP List Prices As Bait for Public; Clubs Hurting

Arlington, Mass.

Editor, VARIETY:

The make-believe of phony price fantasy is going places in the record business. LP advertising has switched the accent from merchandise merit to booby-bait pricing. "Nationally advertised list prices," if pegged high enough by the manufacturers, can be finagled to create illusions of fabulous bargains.

The juiciest play on prices is made by manufacturer-operated clubs (get 6 now for $3.98 contract to buy 5 more at list prices). The last substantial increase in LP list, closely coinciding with the launching of clubs, enabled club deals to seem spectacular. "Whether the discount is real or not, people want the delusion" can be the hidden persuasion gimmick sparking bustling expansion of the club business.

Nevertheless, the public well knows LP prices are inflated to the point where "only suckers pay retail prices" for them. A little arithmetic shows alert buyers that prevailing discount prices are "bargains" equal to club deals, and less restricted. They are not limited to one label, save packing and mailing fees, and usually the records can be auditioned before buying.

A sharp example of price disparity shows up in supermarket series specials. They sell profitably for less than $1.50. Accent on list comparison is unnecessary. The question often is heard "How can they sell them so cheap?" Despite the rash of articles on phony pricing and ardent efforts of bureaus and commissions to protect the gullible, no one asks, "Why are regular records advertised at a price that nobody pays?"

But playing the game of souped-up prices doesn't make the consumer too much of a monkey. He is expected only to believe such prices; not to pay them.

Distributors and dealers aren't so lucky. From their corner comes a loud howl. Their cost, tied directly to the high list prices by traditional discounts, comes close to the average going prices that the public is being educated to pay. Markup, the system of percentages added to a base, isn't used in the record business. As club sales account for increasing proportions of the big label output, distributors and dealers ruefully watch it divert from what they consider normal marketing channels.

The small retail record dealer is beset by more than club competition. No longer "franchised" and somewhat protected, he must share the potential dollar volume of his community with racks in nearby grocery, drug and variety stores. Unable to make the mass purchases of chains and other bigs, he frequently finds LP's advertised to the public at less than he pays his distributor.

Record manufacturers in the club business console him. They say that the tremendous amount of club advertising stimulates extra business that rubs off on him. A Boston dealer, Frank Homeyer, doesn't agree. He says: "If clubs are also supposed to interest members in items to be found only in record stores, it hasn't helped our sales. Club members seem to stick with the club's selections."

ASCAPERS SUE JUDY RE SONG LICENSING

San Francisco, July 14.

A group of ASCAP publishers and writers filed suit in San Francisco Federal Court last week against the Judy Garland show in a move to block her use of four numbers. It was charged that she was using the numbers without a performance license. Plaintiffs in the suit are Irving Berlin, Richard Rodgers, Oscar Hammerstein 2d, Chappell Music and New World Music. Plaintiffs are Sidney Luft, Miss Garland's husband, and Henry Zeiser, of Chicago, the show's co-producers.

The action stems from Miss Garland's use of the songs in her recent stand at the Chicago Opera House. Like the San Francisco Opera House, where Miss Garland has been playing currently, the Chicago theatre has no blanket licensing agreement with ASCAP, but applies for licenses on a per-show basis. Luft stated that he had paid for performance rights of the songs in question: "A Couple of Swells," "A Wonderful Guy," "This Can't Be Love" and "Lady Be Good."

France's Disk Problems—An Echo Of What's Heard Around the World

Paris, July 7.

According to Ted Cross, president and director-general of the Pathe-Marconi disk setup here, the problems facing French platter companies are the same as everywhere. These are, in the main, to arrive at a good price level and to decide whether to put the emphasis on conventional disk dealers or go in more for the cut-price marts a la record clubs, guilds, etc.

Cross, originally head of the foreign department for EMI in England, the controlling company of Pathe-Marconi, has been topping Pathe-Marconi since last March when Pierre Bourgeois retired. Cross opines that France, like Italy, is a special problem in following its own patterns, that is, preferring their own music over Yank tunes. Most other countries follow U. S. bestseller patterns, but not France and Italy.

However, Cross feels that American music is seeping in via films, radio and musichalls and that young people, who go for U. S. cleffing, are becoming important disk buyers and may eventually bring Yank music into focus here and swing France into a more predictable platter orbit. But Cross notes that this is mainly conjecture.

More immediate problems are to find a good price level and to reach a decision on cooperation with record retailers. Some record company heads want to boost retail cuts via agreements with all companies, but this is still in the talk stage. Meanwhile, Cross feels that companies are pressing too many disks here.

Reaching for the 'Big One'

Besides the important variety records, which make up the bulk of sales, Pathe depends on its classical albums, jazz, folk music and miscellaneous items. But pops are tops, and companies usually have to decide whether to count on a performer who can deliver a regular good number of sales or one who may not be a regular seller but could hit top brackets with a record that catches on.

Cross points out that Pathe-Marconi with its local labels of Pathe, Viox De Son Maitre, Odeon, Ducretet-Thomson, and English Columbia and the American Capitol, United Artists and MGM, take about 40% of the mart, followed by Philips with 30%, Barclay and Decca with 10% each, and the rest split among the smaller labels.

A disk is pushed via radio, jukeboxes, tv, cafes, film houses, critiques and the musichall. Cross thinks that stereo is a long way off here and the ordinary problems of turnover and depth distribution of the regular existing disks have to be solved first.

The Paris area makes up 40% of the disk sales and is turning more toward modern music and Yank entries, which may spread to provinces soon. Pathe-Marconi pressed about 7,000,000 of the 20,000,000 disks that appeared in France this past year. Top-grossing pop singer names for the all-important single record sales for Pathe-Marconi this past season were Les Compagnons De La Chanson, Gilbert Becaud, Gloria Lasso, Edith Piaf, Franck Pourcel, Line Renaud, Luis Mariano and Tino Rossi.

BOB THIELE REVIVES SIGNATURE RECORDS

Bob Thiele, who recently set up Hanover Records in partnership with Steve Allen, has now revived his old label, Signature Records. Latter label, which bowed in 1940, was discontinued in 1948 when Thiele joined Coral Records as artists & repertoire chief. After seven years with Coral, he moved over to Dot as v.p. and a&r chief.

The Signature label will be part of the Hanover operation.

WBR TO SPRING LINE IN BRIT. 'VERY SOON'

London, July 14.

Warner Bros. is planning to launch its disks in Britain "very soon." The project was discussed when toppers of WB and of Associated British Cinemas attended the recent Warner convention at Burbank, Cal.

Apart from their general awareness of the coin that platters can produce, the British visitors were impressed by the fact adduced by Jim Conkling, head of WB's disk operations in the States, that Columbia's "South Pacific" disks have divvied up more than the entire stateside roadshowings of the film. Plans here have hardened little beyond the decision that pressings wouldn't be sold to the public in ABC cinemas, though clearly the circuit could provide valuable publicity, in the form of intermission plugs, for example.

Kenton Sour-Notes Stereo; Sees Only A 'Fiasco' Future

Bandleader Stan Kenton takes a dim view of stereo. According to Kenton, stereo recorded music is "only a gimmick with no sound musical validity, which will ultimately wind up a fiasco." Kenton insists that monaural high fidelity is the only true method of capturing an orchestral sound on records at the present time.

Kenton explained that the whole concept of stereophonically recorded music is contrary to the challenge that has been present ever since two musicians sat down to perform together — unity. "Stereo distinguishes from where different sounds are coming from, and, in effect, breaks down an orchestra into its component sections. Thus, the listener is unconsciously forced to turn his head toward a different speaker whenever a particular section of the orchestra is being used, creating confusion. The mere fact that you can tell direction does not mean you are getting dimension," he said.

He added that monaural high fidelity recordings present the overall unified orchestral sound from each speaker, regardless of the number of speakers used, thereby eliminating the necessity of shifting attention from speaker to speaker. This way, he pointed out, complete harmony is achieved, which after all, is the ultimate goal when recording more than one instrument simultaneously.

Bluebird's 'Speakers'

In a buildup of its "spoken word" catalog, the RCA Bluebird label has inked Dr. Suess, author of several bestselling kiddie books, such as "The Cat and The Hat," for Random House. His first package for Bluebird will be adaptations of his books.

The RCA label has also pacted Ralph Bellamy, Brian Aherne and Ronald Reagan for readings on LPs.

Inside Stuff—Music

Tired of listening to "The Battle of New Orleans" and "10.000 Drums," two staffers of radio station CKOY, Ottawa, have penned an answer, "The Bladensburg Races." It's been recorded on Regency, Toronto, indie label owned by Don McKim's and Bill Fisher's Phonodisc Co. Ltd. U.S. release is being dickered. Composer is Walter Munroe, CKOY musical director; lyricist Carl Schubert, station ad writer. McKim and Fisher nabbed it after hearing it on phone from Ottawa. Disk was available three days later, last week March is played, sung and barked by Des Williams (& His Redcoats), an Englishman over here a couple of years. Song is based on historic occasion in August, 1814, when 500 British Marines landed at Bladensburg on Chesapeake Bay and startled a far larger U.S. force so much that it turned and ran. The British chased them along the Potomac (called "Pottomac" in the lyrics, as a British mispronunciation), wound up in Washington and burned it down.

Since there's no reference to "bloody Americans" or even "bloody rebels," presumably the lyrics won't be altered for U.S. consumption. "Bloody British" was changed to "bloomin' rebels" in Columbia's Johnny Horton disk, for Canadian sales—but not till thousands of the unsapolioed version had been played and sold throughout Canada, with few complaints. Most radio stations (including those of publicly-owned Canadian Broadcasting Corp.) played it.

RCA Latin-Am Distribs Powwow in Curacao

RCA Victor's Latin American distribs convened in Curacao, Netherlands West Indies, last week for a series of sales and product meetings to preview upcoming Victor merchandise. Attending were local manufacturing licenses for RCA, including Discuba, Cuba; Gramsa, Venezuela; Sonoluz, Columbia; and Lucky-Damaroo, Trinidad. Also on hand were affiliated companies from Argentina, Brazil and Chile.

George Prutting, RCA International disk manager; Dick Broderick, export marketing manager; and Frank Amaru, Latin American field sales manager, headed the reps from the N.Y. homeoffice.

Celler Plan

an estimate of the number of ASCAP, BMI, SESAC, etc., spins on jukes and divide the kitty in direct ratio to popularity of their music on jukes.

U.S. Attorney General would appoint one trustee; jukebox operators would appoint a second; and societies representing songwriters would appoint a third. Their salaries and office expenses would be taken out of the roughly $2.500,000 they would collect before money is disbursed. Government would absorb no cost involved.

Trustees' decision on distribution of funds would be final unless some one wanted to go into court to charge the trio's action was "arbitrary" or "capricious," under terms of Celler idea.

Celler arrived at figure of about $2,500,000 extra royalties to be paid by operators, it was explained, because of testimony during hearings on his jukebox bill.

Operators claimed they now pay songwriters about $2,400,000 annually through record purchases. (Authors get a maximum of 2c automatically out of purchase of each record by juke operator or anyone else.) Celler recalled testimony that operators would be agreeable to doubling this 2c royalty. The Congressman, remembering this, searched for a method of raising a similar total figure of about $2,400,000. He found a $5 per box royalty would achieve it.

While all directly interested groups were represented at the conference here with Celler when he laid down his suggestion, no group or person okayed it. All wanted to think it over.

Included in the conference, among many others, were Sydney M. Kaye, BMI board chairman and Stanley Adams, ASCAP prexy.

amusement park, a large and popular swimming pool, and the regular star policy of the ballroom, the weekend free concerts pull standing room only crowds at every performance, with the audience coming from as far as 50-miles away every Saturday and Sunday for the performances. The Hershey season starts May 30, continuing through the Labor Day weekend.

Here in the State capital, concerts are held every Sunday evening at two of the city parks, with the bands alternating on a biweekly basis at each stand. Crowds this year have been so heavy that extra police have been called out at both sites to handle the cars and the overflow audiences.

Hershey Estates execs, who operate the Hershey Park, were so impressed by the influx of people for the concerts this year they provided a special show last week, bringing in Bill Haley and his Comets for three special shows on Saturday and Sunday, at no charge to the public.

The concerts also played a big part in last week's three-day celebration in Gettysburg, which was climaxed by a re-enactment of Pickett's famous charge on the battlefields. During the celebration span, marching bands were viewed daily, and sit-down concerts were conducted throughout the period.

the Kalin Twins' "When" platter in France alone.

If the beat is strong enough, as in the Elvis Presley, Bill Haley, etc., platters, there's no language barrier to impede sales of the U.S. artists abroad, according to Detlefs. Native lyrics, however, are generally used on the sentimental ballads where the lyric's meaning is important.

Rock 'n' roll is as popular in East Germany as it is in the West, Detlefs said, even though the state-owned East German diskery, Eterna Records, sticks strictly to conservative music. The kids in the East, however, hear the big beat over the radio.

Detlefs, who was with the DGG longhair artists & repertoire staff in Germany, is in the U.S. to work with Decca on the selection and promotion of the DGG disks in the U.S. A few months ago, the DGG platters began being released in the U.S. under the DGG label with Decca still handling the distribution.

form so that all members of the audience can see their faces.

The arena-style arrangement provided at least one effective bit. On the stirring "El Gato," featuring high-note trumpeter "Cat" Anderson, the four Ellington trumpeters, all top-flight soloists, faced the audience from four different points, yet blew in perfect harmony.

Dankworth, who made his U. S. debut at the Newport Jazz Festival, gets a full sound with his 15-piece band by using unusual instrumental voicings.

Dankworth is the only outstanding soloist in the band. But the tightly-knit, well-disciplined quality of the group makes it the equal of most U. S. big bands. Few bands here play with the drive and authority of the English orchestra.

Most of the group's arrangements are originals but Dankworth closes with a timely tribute to Ellington by playing Duke's "Take the A Train." Bitt.

200 D.C. Bigwigs Shell Out for Birthday Of Hank Fort, Hi-Si Girl

Washington, July 7.

Everybody's got birthdays. But hardly anyone has had one like Hank Fort just did here.

The composer, disker, vocalist and nitery entertainer advanced to some undisclosed age while 200 of the top levels of Washington high society turned out to celebrate, each paying for the privilege. She's a popular member of hi-si here, and 30-odd friends decided to set up a Dutch-treat black tie cabaret dinner dance in a Shoreham Hotel ballroom to surprise her on her birthday.

Nobody got in free, and the guest list included a combination of ambassadors, senators, congressmen, high officials of Government and the resident socially elite, plus some newspaper friends. Out of town guests included Paul Cunningham, ex-prexy of ASCAP, and Mrs. Cunningham. Party was smash success, and social register crowd believed it was the first time such a party drawing similar rank had been pulled off here.

"I'm flabbergasted; I'm speechless," exclaimed the usually supercharged personality. But she remained in neither state long.

Once the show which had been arranged wound up, she took the microphone to sing a medley of her own compositions.

Gene Nash, Capital Records vocalist, planed in to sing three Hank Fort songs, "Dandy Lion," "Please, Your Honor" (rock 'n' rollers) and "When Everything Is Right" (ballad). He's recorded all three, the latter, new, on an album he just finished. He danced, too.

Angelo Prioli, baritone formerly of La Scala in Milan, sang familiars, with one of Mrs. Fort's numbers, "If Ever," as an encore. Young Sandra McNeill, local product, voiced and danced her "I Didn't Know the Gun Was Loaded."

Plans had been made for an amateur chorus composed of Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.), Sen. Thomas Kuchel (R-Calif.), Sen. Frank Church (D-Idaho), Austrian Ambassador Wilfried Platzer, columnist George Dixon, Mrs. M. Robert Guggenheim (copper fortune), Martha Rountree, Mrs. John L. McClellan and Mrs. Herman Talmadge (Senate wives) and others. But, to the disappointment of photographers, it was called off when the program went too long.

Mrs. Fort, who switched her home from Nashville to here seven years ago, reports she's quitting niteries except for single-shot dates. "I don't like to live out of a suitcase, and I'm not going to do it any more," she declares. Happily, she has a private income from a dancing school she owns back in Nashville.

With Nat Tannen, she jointly owns Gemini Music Co. (ASCAP) which publishes her music. The firm name is her horoscope sign.

NOTRE DAME LETTERMEN
With Vince Mauro (5)
Instrumental; Songs
35 Mins.
Cloister, Chicago

Notre Dame Lettermen are fresh out of the South Bend school, where they placed high in the recent Midwest Collegiate jazz competition held there. Group is Ivy Leagueish in appearance, and devotes first 15 minutes or so purely to instrumentals with electric guitar, percussion, bass and piano. Second half of the turn brings on good looking Vince Mauro for a skein of vocals.

All hands seem a bit too disciplined just now, but it's to be considered that this is their first pro stint and in time can be expected to shake the stiffness. Overall, it's Mauro who tips the scale in their audience favor. His pipery, especially on ballads, can be exceptionally warm and affecting for an idiom noted for its detachment. He uses his voice—and it's a good jazz mechanism—intelligently, relying on it rather than gesture and posturing.

Instrumentally, leader Gene Bertoncini's guitar is dominant; and while the lads show considerable capability, they have yet to evolve a distinguishing sound or technique, though it may be that for the nonce, while they break in, the premise is "play it safe." Solos could also add appeal. They were missed at the set caught for review. Pit.

Brit. Diskeries on the Fence as Pye Piles Up Direct-to-Stores Impact

By ERNIE PLAYER

London, July 7.

Though Pye Group Records claims that it has virtually doubled sales in its first six weeks of supplying the majority of disks to retailers direct, instead of exclusively through wholesalers, there are no signs yet of an industrywide swingover to such a changed pattern of distribution. Philips Electrical, it's true, followed suit in a comparatively minor way, but the really big groups aren't yet likely to make many alterations in their established routines, though they're keeping a sharp eye on what's going on.

Main reasons for the general holding to the status quo are twofold. The first is that the Pye results are seen as less impressive below the surface in view of the fact that some sharp increase in orders was expected following the Budget, when an anticipated cut in purchase tax—though from 60% to 50% was less than hoped—ended a period of retailers' allowing stocks to dwindle. The second is that Electric and Musical Industries and the Decca group, together with Rank Records Ltd., all control their own wholesale outlets and, accordingly, aren't so keen to find alternative marketing methods.

Pye itself, while acknowledging the stocks-rebuilding angle, is inclined to look for even bigger results in some months' time inasmuch as May and June purchases generally run at about half the November-December level. Already it has drawn up plans for extending and varying tis scheme in the fall, fortified by the basic knowledge that it has something that works and that allows more freedom than dealing with middlemen. At present it employs a field staff of about two dozen and some 50 at its Mitcham h.q. to deal direct with about 7,500 retailers, plus vans which make on-the-spot deliveries. EMI and Decca, incidentally, have shown interest particularly in these vans and are reportedly thinking of their possible use.

Where the Pye scheme may have its greatest impact is in the long-play field, for here the outfit states categorically that the average sales were doubled during May. Pye points out that it is the LP standard material of any catalog that has to be "sold," whereas singles almost sell themselves via the top 20 lists, disk programs on the air, etc. This success, if perpetuated, suggests that other companies might usefully think of adopting direct-to retailer distribution for some kinds of disk while sticking to the present wholesale house system for others.

ROGER HALL MANAGING PHILADELPHIA SYMPH

Philadelphia, July 14.

Roger G. Hall, former assistant manager of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, has been named manager of the Philadelphia Orchestra. He'll take over duties in early August.

Hall succeeds Donald L. Engle. now with Mrs. John D. Rockefeller Jr., on her philanthropic activities in music.

Hall at moment is working with Howard Barlow, conductor for the old Voice of Firestone orchestra, in arranging Barlow's personal appearances and recording activities.

It works like a charm to say PRESTO—the first name in instantaneous recording discs. Only PRESTO makes the famous PRESTO MASTER, the ultimate in flawless, fleck-less disc-recording surfaces. Only PRESTO, alone among all manufacturers, handles every intricate step in the manufacture of its discs. Why use a disc that isn't PRESTO-perfect?

Florence Marston (For 4A's) Denies AGVA Eyes Teamster Ties

New York, July 10.

Editor, VARIETY:

The International Board of the Associated Actors & Artistes of America met on Thursday morning, July 9 at the request of the American Guild of Variety Artists.

The purpose of this meeting was to discuss an article in the Wednesday, July 8, issue of VARIETY, entitled "Scent AGVA-Teamster Tie."

Since the article made certain references, innuendos and speculations concerning the 4A's which were without foundation in fact or in truth, the International Board of the 4A's officially requests equal space and prominence for its reply to the article. In this connection, enclosed for your convenience is a copy of the International Board's official statement. The International Board wishes to inform you that the portions of the story dealing with the 4A's and its assumed reasons for action or inaction is totally without foundation.

The seriousness with which the International Board views VARIETY's article, especially in relation to those portions pertaining to the 4A's, is so great that in all fairness and in perfect candor to you, the International Board is furnishing to other trade papers and publications for release Wednesday, July 15, a copy of the attached statement. We assume that you will give this your utmost consideration and attention in the next issue of VARIETY.

By order of the International Board of the Associated Actors & Artistes of America,

Florence Marston
(Acting President)

The 4A's Statement

The International Board of the Associated Actors & Artistes of America pursuant to a request made by the American Guild of Variety Artists, met in quorum on Thursday, July 9, 1959. At this Special Meeting the following Branches of the Four A's were present: Actors' Equity Association, American Federation of Television & Radio Artists, American Guild of Musical Artists, American Guild of Variety Artists, Hebrew Actors Union, Screen Actors Guild and Screen Extras Guild.

At the International Board meeting Jackie Bright, National Administrative Secretary of the American Guild of Variety Artists, and Third International Vice-President of the Associated Actors & Artistes of America, acquainted

BELLE LIVINGSTONE'S OK POSTHUMOUS AUTOBIOG

Belle Livingtone's posthumously published (Holt; $4) "Belle Out of Order" turns out to be a fantastic American saga. Oddly the part known to New York best, her years from 1927 through the end of Prohibition, turns out to be the least interesting.

But her childhood in Kansas, where her father founded the Emporia Gazette, and later sold to William Allen White, her short stretch on Broadway as a chorine and bit player, her years in England and France, her four marriages (she seemingly buried all her spouses), her high life, her gambling are all told with a fascinating honesty and detachment.

She was rich more times and broke more times than the Wolf of Wall Street. Her first two marriages were incredible. The first one was to a traveling salesman to overcome parental objection so she could scoot from Kansas to Broadway at 17. It seemingly never was consummated but when her husband died he left her $150,000. Her second was to an Italian count who chased her all the way to Hong Kong, and died even before their daughter was born. Her third ended in divorce, but her fourth to a tweedy Briton, a bigtime engineer, was by far the love of her life. And of his.

Cleveland Amory writes a preface which tells how Miss Livingstone doodled around before deciding to write this book. Jailed for operating a speakeasy (she ran three), she really ran the gamut of life. She died at 82. Good to the next-to-the-last-drop. Scul.

Hamids Ask Probe Of Drake's Non-Show at A.C.

Atlantic City, July 14.

George A. Hamid & Son, operators of Steel Pier, has asked American Guild of Variety Artists to probe non-appearance here of Allen Drake, who had been booked into pier Music Hall as a comic and to emcee bill last week.

Drake, George Hamid Jr. declared, wired that he was ill and unable to appear, wire arriving short time before he was to go on. Music Hall bill included Fabian, Margo & Madrid and Rich & Gibson. An AGVA medic diagnosed Drake's ailment os "nervous exhaustion."

Hamid emceed first two shows with Joey Carter being rushed in to do chores. It was first appearance of Fabian, a Philadelphia youth who proved that he has a tremendous appeal to the teenage crowd, jamming 4,000 seater Music Hall during week of appearance here.

Jackie Bright's Teamster Denial

New York, July 14.

Editor, VARIETY:

This letter is to inform you that AGVA is, to say the least, greatly disturbed by and resents the story in the vaudeville section of VARIETY on July 8, 1959, entitled: "Scent AGVA-Teamster Tie."

On behalf of AGVA and myself, I hereby deny any thought, desire or attempt to in any manner sever affiliation with the Associated Actors & Artistes of America, and to either affiliate or associate in any manner with the Teamsters or anyone connected with the Teamsters. The reporting in this respect is ridiculously uninformed. The Teamsters are not even affiliated with the AFL-CIO or considered as part of the entertainment field. Under these circumstances, affiliation by AGVA would be unthinkable. Furthermore, AGVA is observing the rule of the AFL-CIO not to deal with Teamsters Unions.

AGVA has absolutely no intention of affiliating or merging with any union other than a branch of Associated Actors & Artistes of America or all such branches in the event overall merger is ultimately accomplished. Any other type of merger would not be tolerated by the National Board or the membership of AGVA, and would also be vehemently opposed by me. I assure you that any affiliation such as your reporter has conjured up would be resisted by me to the point of my resigning as National Administrator of AGVA.

Immediately upon being informed of the aforesaid story in VARIETY, I requested and obtained a meeting of the International Board of the Associated Actors & Artistes of America. You will undoubtedly receive a communication from the Board.

As far as the Welfare Trust Fund is concerned, (the) persistent statements are equally slanted. I am not even a trustee of the Welfare Trust Fund, and, therefore, have no vote. There are an equal number of AGVA and Industry Trustees who do the voting. As National Administrator of AGVA, however, I have every right to voice opinions and would be remiss in my duty if I did not do so in recommending that the Fund be brought up to date by an amendment of the Trust Agreement or otherwise, so that the receipts could be properly utilized for membership benefits, rather than be accumulated and built into a huge fund from which the membership under such circumstances would not derive sufficient benefits.

I expect that you will give this letter prominence.

Administrative Secretary,

Penny Urging Kayo of AGVA, Teamster Tie

Hollywood, July 14.

Urging action to prevent a possible alliance between American Guild of Variety Artists and the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, AGVA prexy Penny Singleton has wired an appeal to Ralph Bellamy, Actors Equity prexy; Howard Keel, Screen Actors Guild topper; George Meany, AFL-CIO prexy; and Sen. John L. McClellan, chairman of Congressional Committee investigating union racketing.

Miss Singleton, now in Atlanta starring in "The Bells Are Ringing," asked action on grounds of a possible conflict of ideologies between the creative arts as repped by AGVA membership and industry as repped by Teamsters.

Since many members of Equity and SAG are also members of AGVA, Miss Singleton pointed out, both of these orgs have an active interest in matter.

Miss Singleton said she wired Senator McClellan and Meany to urge an investigation of internal AGVA affairs which would permit such a move of AGVA affiliation without a vote of the membership.

Penny Doesn't Like 'Dirt'

Atlanta, July 14.

Penny Singleton, president of American Guild of Variety Artists, in Atlanta rehearsing for the lead in "Bells Are Ringing," opener for Theatre Under-the-Stars season, let fly a few verbal blasts at her "enemies" within AGVA ranks.

"They forgot that Blondie is a good housekeeper and I don't like dirt of any kind," she said in an interview. "I take up the rugs and sweep under them, too."

She was referring to her hassle with the executive committee of AGVA and organization's executive secretary Jackie Bright over the purchase of what was supposed to be a home for aged members of AGVA. She claims that the property, located in Catskill Mountains, is being operated as a summer resort and not as a home for aging members of AGVA. She said the purchase of this property came as a surprise to the AGVA membership and is being operated at a tremendous loss—$70,000 so far.

Miss Singleton explained that she first became interested in AGVA's work in 1956. She was elected first vice president in 1957 and became president in March, 1958. And, what's more, actress said, she plans to seek reelection

Edie Adams May Reopen Persian Room (N.Y.) Sept.

Edie Adams may play her first New York cafe engagement in several years. Indications are that she will reopen the Persian Room of the Plaza Hotel probably in September. Miss Adams played that room about three years ago.

Plaza hasn't yet started signing talent for next season, but manager John Horstmann is now scouting availabilities and will probably issue pacts shortly.

Dallas AGVA Putting Cuffo Turns on Carpet

Dallas, July 14.

The American Guild of Variety Artists is clamping down on entertainers who perform free in night spots around town. The guild recently hauled up Jack Cassidy, Gary Reynolds and Frankie Ford and imposed severe reprimands following a report they had performed at a private club.

"We let these members off without the customary fine because we realize they aren't the only acts who did a free show," said Jim Dolan, the local AGVA head. "But we are serving notice on all club owners that any future violation of the rule will be dealt with more severely."

Most entertainers are somewhat displeased with the edict which prevents them from an inpromptu performance. An entertainer here stated that if you don't sing, patrons think the star has a swell head. If you do sing, you run the risk of a $500 fine.

Black Orchid In Chi Foldo

Chicago, July 14.

Debt-ridden and strapped for cash, Black Orchid nitery folded last Thursday (9) several hours before Billy Eckstine was to have bowed for a two-weeker.

Padlock was clamped when three waiters filed in Chi Federal District Court for a total of $1,847 in back wages. Club was immediately placed in receivership. Total obligations, it's believed, are well over $100,000, the bulk of that owed on back taxes.

The 180-seater was a Rush St. landmark since Al Greenfield (husband of singer Gertrude Niesen) opened it in 1953. He sold it four years later to Paul Raffles, Pat Fontecchio and Bill Doherty, who had previously owned the Cloister Inn (now the Cloister). Raffles and Doherty only recently had stepped out of active participation to allow Fontecchio to adrenalize the boite as best he could.

Joe Parnello's trio, which showbacked for six years at the Black Orchid nitery, switches to the Cloister for the Lonnie Sattin-Gary Morton tandem opening July 28.

Honolulu State Fair Nabs Peak 200G Gross Via Big Talent Spree

Honolulu, July 14.

Sparked by a $40,000 talent layout that included Ricky Nelson, Johnny Cash and the Kingston Trio, 50th State Fair (actually a private promotion undertaken annually by the Honolulu Junior Chamber of Commerce) set new attendance records.

Some 150,000 paid admissions were chalked up, as contrasted to last year's 67,000. Gross revenue ran close to $200,000, with expenses near $150,000. The paid gate attractions, which included a Honolulu Symphony concert, set new recordds for the open air Waikiki Shell.

SPRINGFIELD EXPO ACTS

Shriner, Alexander, Herman, Barber, Ximinez Turns Set

Hartford, July 14.

Annual Eastern States Exposition has been skedded for Sept. 19-27 at nearby West Springfield, Mass. Pencilled in is Herb Shriner as top liner. He will be assisted by folk singer George Alexander.

Also slated for the exposition are the Woody Herman and Chris Barber aggregations, Ballet Espanol Ximinez-Vargas, a rodeo, "Zorro," horse shows, industrial exhibits, stock and midget car racing, etc., will feature the show.

Say Hawaii 'Sung 'n' Strummed' Into Union; Congress Succumbed to Plugola

By JACK HELLMAN

Honolulu, July 14.

A handful of show people won statehood for Hawaii.

Some politicos may question such a claim but the rank and file on the island of Oahu, territorial home of Honolulu, will support it to the bilt. It was the show people who kept alive the tradition of the island, praised its climatic and other virtues in lyric and melody and made the mainland conscious of its romantic charm. In Washington, they claim, it couldn't be ignored and in the halls of Congress the will of the people swayed to the rhythms of the hula and the leis of the alohas.

That it followed Alaska into the union has little significance. It was bound to come, be it 49th or 50th. Because of its strategic military proximity, the icy wastes had to be drawn in closer as a bastion against the menacing mujiks, 19 miles away across the Bering Sea. In a way, Hawaii was sung and played into statehood.

To name those who played an important part in adding a 50th star to our flag would have to include a bygone generation of vaude acts with ukuleles and hulas. Arthur Godfrey, Harry Owens, Don the Beachcomber, Webley Edwards, Alfred Apaka and the host of instrumental groups whose records have flooded the mainland were latterday phenomena. Godfrey and Owens have long sung and strummed the praises of the trade winds and the lazy tempo of living, an ad lib way of life. Edwards, onetime CBS correspondent, is rounding into 25 years with his "Hawaii Calls," which reaches across the Pacific in every direction. Apaka is the fair-haired lad among the island entertainers and his platters have sold in the millions. Almost pure Hawaiian, he is a striking figure of a man with a romantic pitch to his baritone. He is the most photographed male on Oahu, most generally with a belle from the states in close embrace—their, not his, idea.

With statehood and the 4½-hour jet flight from the states, Honolulu will boom like a howitzer. Once again it's the mainlanders who are supplying the steam. To name a few there are Hal Bock, ex-VARIETY stringer and heading up the top public relations outfit on Oahu, Bob Carson, erstwhile INS correspondent now consultant to the legislature and associated with many industrial enterprises; Edwards, a member of the legislature; Jack Keating and Art Sprinkle, owner and manager, respectively, of the NBC affiliate, KONA, the hottest of the three tv stations; Eddie Sherman, former nitery comic, whose show biz column in the Honolulu Advertiser has a Winchellian readership; Hal Lewis, a former fiddle player from Frisco, who bills himself as Aku and rakes in around $100,000 a year as a deejay. Writing his between-disks material is Henry Taylor, long a journeyman comedy writer in Hollywood, who buttresses his income by selling Esther Williams

BRIGHT IN AGVA TOUR TO RAISE CLUB FUNDS

A membership branch office tour is being mapped by Jackie Bright, national administrative secretary of the American Guild of Variety Artists, in order to obtain funds for the AGVA Country Club and Recreation Center, So. Fallsburgh, N.Y.

While problem of raising funds for the Center has been given as the reason, the road trip coincides with an active campaign by the AGVA administration to defeat incumbent president Penny Singleton in the forthcoming AGVA election of officers and board members. Adminsitration hopes to elect its own candidate Joey Adams in that office as well as board members known to be friendly.

Hamilton Pkg. at Apollo

Staging will be by Charles Akins with Rick Henderson at the baton.

COAST'S KIDDIELAND KLONDIKE

Obolensky Plots New Toney Look For Hotel Astor in Bid for Class Trade

The eastside set which comes over to the westside only when they're on their way to Europe or if they're going to the theatre, will be trekking back to that sector of town in the fall. They're being lured there as part of an overall plan to rehabilitate Broadway's Astor Hotel by Col. Serge Obolensky, vice chairman of the Zeckendorf Hotel chain, who is now in charge of the Astor as well as the Drake.

Obolensky, through social contacts, has now booked some of the top society events for the Astor. Included are the United Nations Ball, Oct. 22; Police Athletic League benefit, Dec. 3; the Imperial Ball for the Musicians Emergency Fund, Dec. 10; the Bachelor Ball, Dec. 14; International Debutante Ball, Dec. 30, and the Russian New Year Ball, Jan. 14. In each instance, the Astor Ballroom is being taken over by committees including some of the top strata of the 400, who do not ordinarily stray west of Park Ave.

The stress on society functions by Obolensky, a member of the Czarist nobility, is regarded as one of the more surefire methods of restoring the turn of the century glamour that the inn once had. Lobby renovations are currently under way which will give the Astor a new decor reminiscent of era in which it started.

Installation of Obolensky as head of the Astor is a return of control to the original family. Obolensky is related by marriage to the Astor family, long the owners of the inn, who sold out to the Sheraton interests several years ago. He's also related by marriage to the Waldorf family. The name Waldorf-Astoria is a combination of both family names.

Obolensky, who came into the hotel business through realty transaction had been associated with late Vincent Astor when the St. Regis fell into their lap via a mortgage transaction. Obolensky is regarded as having helped materially in its rehabilitation. He was also connected with the Ambassador, Plaza and Sherry Netherland.

Hotel rehabilitation hsa become an important factor of the hotel industry, according to Obolensky. Since the only surefire way of

MONK REVUES TO HIT ROAD AFTER VACATION

Julius Monk is slated to tour the shows from the Upstairs at the Downstairs, N.Y. He'll compress three editions of the show into one and dispatch them to other cafes. Kenneth Later Agency will represent.

The current layout. "Demi Dozen," will continue until August after which the spot will close for a three-week vacation. A new show will go into rehearsal early September. Current layout is still doing heavy business, but Monk feels that he likes to have annual shows.

Monk isn't touring the present show since he feels it a bit too "New Yorkish" for the road. Instead, he'll take segments of two previous editions and package it into one unit.

Waldorf's Clyde Harris Sets 1st 3 Fall Shows

The Hotel Waldorf-Astoria has lined up its first three shows. Season, which starts with Gisele MacKenzie on Sept. 17, will continue with Gordon MacRae for four weeks starting Oct. 14 and Nelson Eddy who begins Nov. 11. Later the Compagnons de la Chanson and Edith Piaf will be on tap for separate early spring shows.

New talent buyer is Clyde Harris, who succeeded Claude C. Philippe, who resigned as of July 1 to go with the Zeckendorf Hotels.

Perez Prado Gets Sole Right to Use Own Name

Los Angeles, July 14.

Mambo bandleader Perez Prado is the only one who may bill himself as "the original Perez Prado band," under a court order temporarily restraining any other group from such billing.

Superior Judge Charles R. Thompson signed order pending outcome of Prado's $75,000 damage suit against singer Billy Daniels, band manager Renee T. Block, Paramount Television Productions Inc., and station KTLA. Mambo king claimed his name was being used on a tv show in such a way that public was "deceived" into believing he was a participant.

Two Chi Clubs In Rivalry For Marquee Lures

Chicago, July 14.

Marquee competition among the frontline intimeries here figures to sharpen with the demise last week of the Black Orchid (See separate story).

Despite some pooh-poohing by the bonifaces—"there's business enough for all"—trade looks for a deepening rivalry on the Rush St. sector between Mister Kelly's and the Cloister, with the former conceded an edge for several factors.

The Oscar and George Marienthal's Mister Kelly's has a fat budget for talent and, perhaps more importantly, has developed an image as a chic showcase with a roster of repeaters that includes, among others, the current Mort Sahl, Ella Fitzgerald, Shelley Berman and Mike & Elaine.

The narrower field should also benefit the Cloister. With a lower overhead (no kitchen, for one thing), it doesn't have to match Kelly's biz to do itself good.

Cloister, by the way, celebrates its first anni in August. Its maiden show introduced the iconoclasm of Lenny Bruce to Windy City pub crawlers, and the comic later repeated. His last stint here, however, was for the Marienthals. So far, Bruce and thrush Lurlean Hunter have passed over from the Cloister to Kelly's, while the reverse has been true of Anita O'Day and Carmen McRae (current), with Gene Baylos and Della Reese upcoming.

One factor favoring Cloister owners Shelly Kasten and Skip Krask is their new Hollywood Cloister (nee Mocambo), making an axis that enables them to guarantee acts two or three months (or more) of work per annum.

TOURIST MECCAS MUSHROOMING

Hollywood, July 14.

It's a little tiresome to hear that everything is bigger and better in southern California, but the Los Angeles area alone can just about make this claim in regards to a current show business phenomenon, the multi-million dollar, private enterprise recreational facility.

In the L. A. area there are several of these, but four alone—Disneyland, Pacific Ocean Park, Knott's Berry Farm and Marineland—represent an investment in land and equipment of better than $55,000,000, of which $9,000,000 was spent during the past year alone.

The trend to the big amusement park, usually marketing nostalgia combined with science fact or fantasy, or an outlet for sports, is national, but southern California seems to have the edge, not only because it is a natural tourist mecca but also because it is an area where year-round operation is practicable and profitable.

Sunshine and orange groves were once the symbols of southern California tourism. Now industry has beclouded the sunshine with smog, and housing developments have supplanted the orange groves. If there is one single symbol for tourists in southern California today it is probably Disneyland.

Biggest in cash outlay and in tourist pull, Disneyland was opened only four years ago and already represents an investment of nearly $30,000,000. The park has 160 acres in Orange County of which 60 are so far developed. Attendance in the 1957-58 season (July-June), was 4,320,112, and will

New Donn Arden For N.Y. LQ Oct. 8

Latin Quarter, N.Y., will bring in its new show Oct. 8 with Channing Pollack, Gimma Bros. (5) and Patti Ross as principals. Layout, produced by Donn Arden, originally played the Florida edition of the cafe, but revisions will have to be made in the finale before its opening.

However, differences exist between the Latin Quarter and Arden which are still to be resolved. Cause hasn't been made known, but it's believed to centre around the length of the show. With present production costs, the cafe apparently feels that it needs a longer run to amortize the proceedings.

Meanwhile, the Latin Quarter has booked Vivienne Della Chiesa to start July 30; Keigo Imperial Japanese Ballet goes in Aug. 20 along with The Goofers and the Marquis Family, and Jack Carter and the Allison Sisters have been lined up for Sept. 2.

Florida Hotels Angling for More 'Vegas' Names; Regulars in Squeeze

A new booking design is being made evident in Miami Beach. The coming Florida season, according to talent agencies, is likely to see many names, now considered to be the firstline talent, being relegated to secondary positions. The percenters have determined that budgets for the next year will be up. As a matter of fact, some feel that talent expenditures will reach a level which will make it attractive for those rarely playing cafes to give the Beach a whirl.

The datediggers feel that names such as Frank Sinatra and Red Skelton, Judy Garland, Jack Benny and others who played Miami Beach last season, can be prevailed upon to repeat this year, with the possible exception of Benny. In addition, Sinatra and Skelton will pave the way for others such as Dean Martin, George Burns, Marlene Dietrich and perhaps others to take a fling in the cafes. As it is, most of these personalities play an annual date in Las Vegas and retire from cafes for the rest of the year, confining themselves to films and teevee. The Beach hoteliers hope to be able to get the rest of the roster down to the Beach.

In many instances, the innkeepers are prepared to shell out enough to make it worthwhile. The talent buyers have now come to the conclusion that inasmuch as they can never make the entertainment rooms pay off, they might as well go into the hole for a few more quid during season. It's all chalked off to advertising and promotion.

A sufficient crop of new names may make it extremely difficult to book some of the others who have played the resort annually as headliners. And some of the current winter headliners may have to play dates in the summer if they are to maintain their routes.

The hotelmen haven't yet started to buy their big names for the season. They're still waiting for consents from the top line of attractions to get the keystones of their seasons before looking into other availabilities.

Hawaii Less Than 5 Hrs. By Jet From Frisco

Honolulu, July 7.

The jet age whizzed into Hawaii last week with a record-shattering 4 hours 49 minute flight from San Francisco. But it took a foreign carrier (Qantas, Australia's overseas air line) to do it.

This carrier's first Boeing 707 jet carried 60 non-paying passengers, including newsmen and technicians. Regular service beginning late this month will be stepped up to four round-trips a week between Australia and the U.S., with two of these continuing on from San Francisco to New York and London.

Jet travel is expected to double Hawaii tourist biz within a few years.

Cafes, Hotels In With Bait as Cuba Faces New Unrest

Cuban show biz is highly abbreviated during the present political crisis. However, some pickup is expected during the summer school vacations. The cruise ships are expected to hit the island with more frequency starting in August, and plane travel is likely to be on the increase.

At this point, the political unrest hasn't yet hit the small trickle of tourists that have been coming in, but any hypo of revolutionary activity will undoubtedly cut off some of this outside revenue.

The hotels and niteries are trying more elaborate shows in some instances and have lowered restaurant prices. The Copa Room of the Havana Riviera, for example, now has a $4 dinner. The inn is importing talent from Mexico for its present display.

The Havana Hilton has put in an elaborate production show for the first time since its opening. Layout has been staged by Miguel Herrero, who used to do the shows at the Capri. Alberto Alonso, who is current producer at the Capri, also has an elaborate layout at that hostel with 26 in the cast. The Tropicana, once with the most extravagant shows on the island, has cut back its expenditures.

Should the political situation permit, it's anticipated that the bulk of hotels will attempt to put in name shows during he winter season. It's felt that something must be done to restore the pre-revolutionary attractiveness of Havana as a tourist center. They feel that unless it is done at that time, this city will fade on the Carib resort hit parade.

Warn Catholic Girl Re 'Immodesty' Of Participation In Beauty Contest

Albuquerque, July 14.

Sue Ingersoll flies to California tomorrow (Wed.) to compete in the Miss Universe contest representing New Mexico, in spite of opposition from the Catholic Church.

A real hassle developed between the church and Miss Ingersoll last week, after the archbishop's office in Santa Fe reminded the Albuquerque girl that Catholic girls are forbidden to compete in beauty contests, in which swim suit exhibitions are included. Reason: It's immodest.

The office of Archbishop Edwin V. Bryne has threatened to deprive the 20-year-old Catholic girl of the sacraments of communion and confession if she goes through with the thing.

Wire services picked up the story and as a result Miss Ingersoll has received a number of comments, mostly favorable, in the form of letters from people in neighboring states.

One of the letters came from Prescott, Ariz., from a man signing himself "Rev. Edie Clayton, evangelist." His letter commented that the "New Testament does not speak against beauty contests." He continued, "Religious crusaders should leave people alone and preach the gospel." He signed the letter, "Pray for your critics."

Miss Ingersoll last week said she saw nothing objectionable about the contest. She also commented that Marion Brown, Albuquerque franchise-holder and sponsor of the Miss Universe contest in New Mexico, was attempting to get a representative of the archbishop's office to go to California to observe the contest to see that there "is nothing objectionable about it."

Miss Ingersoll said her home telephone in Albuquerque has been ringing constantly since the story hit.

Her mother, a devout Catholic, refuses to have anything to do with the contest. Her father is not a Catholic.

ART ENGLER, EX-COMIC, TO HEAD ABC IN VEGAS

Art (Coweyes) Engler, long the comedy member of the Kirby Stone Quartet, will head the Las Vegas office of Joe Glaser's Associated Booking Corp. He'll work under the supervision of the Hollywood ABC branch.

In recent years, Engler has headed his own cocktail combo which has been working at the Sahara Hotel there, as well as other spots. He's giving up performing for the agency business.

Names to Take Over At St. Regis After Revue

The St. Regis Hotel, N.Y., will resume with singing headliners in December. Inn's Maisonette has already signed Vicky Autier for a date starting Dec. 17. Possibility is that other headliners will precede her.

The Maisonette will open the season in September with a miniature revue to be penned by Roger Price. It's the first time that such an enterprise is being attempted by this hotel.

Miss Autier will follow the St. Regis date with a stand at the Camelia House of the Drake Hotel, Chicago, and will play the Viennese Lantern, N. Y., in March.

Clyde McPhatter Tour

Clyde McPhatter is slated to do a summer tour under auspices of GAC-Super, a subsidiary of General Artists Corp. Tim Gale, in charge, has lined up the Crests, Bo Diddley, Chubby Checker, plus others.

They'll work the south and midwest territories.

Vaude's Last Stronghold Crumbling As Scots Give Up Variety for Video

By GORDON IRVING

Glasgow, July 14.

Is vaude dying out in the land of Harry Lauder and Will Fyffe? Attendances at the Glasgow Empire, regarded as a key out-of-London vaudery, have been falling noticeably in recent months, while the Edinburgh Empire, another house familiar to many U.S. acts, is shuttered for the summer, ostensibly for "reseating and redecoration."

It's become evident that many topline English acts, familiar via tv, no longer draw the audiences. A flick of a switch in the lounge at home can bring leading world acts right into the average person's home.

Switch of thousands of families to nabe areas on the fringe of big towns and cities is also hitting at vaude, as it is, too, at cinema boxoffice. Bus fares into city centres are expensive, and few families wish to make the trek back to live theatres in city centres.

The Moss Empires' group continues with its twice-nightly policy of vaude, ringing up the first-house curtain at 6:25 p.m., an early hour which results in small attendances. Many argue that a once-nightly show, starting at, say, 7:30 or even 8 p.m., would draw bigger business.

'8:05' Show

In favor of this is operator Stewart Cruikshank, a shrewd London-based Scot who promotes two "Five-Past Eight" shows at the Alhambra, Glasgow, and the Lyceum, Edinburgh. These light-entertainment layouts, lavish and with lotsa glamor, open at 8:05 p.m. nightly, with twice-nightly performances on country holiday days of Wednesday and Saturday, and are attracting near-capacity business. In contrast, run-of-the-mill vaude, with single acts following each other in monotonous sequence, proves cold and often boring.

The Glasgow "Five-Past Eight" stars Jimmy Logan, Jack Radcliffe and Eve Boswell, while its Edinburgh counterpart features a host of bright young performers, including Rikki Fulton, Digby Wolfe, Janet Brown, Jean Bayless and Peter Butterworth. The Glasgow show is switching its content every five weeks, while the Edinburgh revue, meeting demands of a much smaller population, has the rigorous routine of a fortnightly change of material. Dick Hurran, assisted by Ross Taylor, helms both under the Stewart Cruikshank supervision.

Meantime, the No. 2 resident shows continue to play to spotty business, and continue in time-honored trend of featuring kitchen comedy scenes, while the principal comedians dig into their baskets for thread-worn gag fodder. Loyalty of audiences is being considerably stretched when, at home, they can have first-rate drama and comedy from world tv situations via the U.K. independent and BBC networks.

One salvation for vaude is in similar loyalty towards Christmas and New Year season shows, which start at end of November and often run into April. Coach-party traffic from rural residents who demand at least two live shows per year, and the cameraderie of an outing to the big city, are aids here.

Fewer U.S. Names

Increasing tendency for fewer U.S. acts to make the trip out of London and into key provincial cities is also to blame. Whereas, six years ago, a continual stream of American acts were given headline prominence in U.K. vaude, their proportion today is extremely small.

Connie Francis played to good business at the Empire, Glasgow, this year, but there have been very few visits from other U.S. performers. Paul Anka didn't come up to expectations in b.o. results. Billy Eckstine and the Deep River Boys are pacted for late summer weeks. Beyond that, no other U.S. names are set.

A controversial act like Liberace, especially following his recent publicity, would pull out the customers, there's no doubt. So would the pacting of teenage favorites like Tommy Sands, Sal Mineo, Tab Hunter, Fabian, etc. Any visit by Elvis Presley would be a sell-out.

'Almanac on Ice' Into New England Ballroom

Boston, July 14.

"Almanac On Ice," the Jo Barnum icer which debuted at Caesar Tamango's Monticello in Framingham and held for three weeks, goes from a supper club to a dancery at Coral Gables, Weymouth, opening Friday (17).

It marks the first time hereabouts that an ice show has been set in a ballroom for the terp customers. Dancing will be held every night, and the icer will play two shows a night. If the dance crowd goes for the icer, booker Danny White says he'll play a round of New England ballrooms with the ice revue.

Hebrew Actors Union Asks For Work Chances

The Hebrew Actors Union is going directly to the public in a pitch for more employment for its membership. Organization is presently appealing via leaflets to the Yiddish public to demand that unions, organizations, summer resorts and camps hire more Yiddish performers.

In recent years, the Yiddish theatre, cut off from new audiences by lack of immigration and graduation of many of its names to more lucrative operations such as films and video, has been a disappearing institution. Some slack in its employment has been taken up by a few niteries, primarliy those catering to Yiddish organization trade. For example, Jennie Goldstein, recently played Arele's New Romanian, Flushing, L.I. Others have been able to get occasional jobs in the Yiddish cafes, but field is extremely limited, and confined only to New York.

The major hope for the union is to expand its scope in the Catskill Mountain belt, which is the top area for performer employment in the summer. The leaflet being distributed by the HAU says, "This is the season of the year when thousands of Jews go to the various resorts and camps for rest and recreation. They also like to hear and see a Yiddish show, listen to a Yiddish song and enjoy a Yiddish story. They certainly want this entertainment performed by Yiddish artists. Unfortunately, however, our actors and singers seem to be snubbed in certain Jewish circles. This situation can be corrected through your help and insistance.

"When we speak to you, we address you as our friends to whom the Jewish word and song are precious, to whom the Jewish actors and singers can perform. When you come to a summer hotel or camp, insist that the Yiddish song, show and dance be given by Yiddish artists. Remember the existence of the Yiddish actor depend on employment by the management of the summer—hotels and camps. The management of the resorts you patronize will certainly comply with your requests and demands."

The Hebrew Actors Union, despite the low state of employment in the field, is still affiliated with the Associated Actors & Artists of America.

Marshall Named Prexy Of Fla. Kiddie Park

Winter Park, Fla., July 14.

Maurice Marshall has been named president of Entertainment Enterprises, which is developing Circusland, a kiddie park enterprise themed along circus lines to be located near Orlando. He replaces Edmond Chevie who returns to Hollywood.

Circusland is being built by the Marco Engineering Co. and will open around December of next year.

Rap Minn. Niteries As Juve Drinking Spots

Minneapolis, July 14.

Several Minnesota night clubs are centers for juvenile drinking, charges Jack Puterbaugh, state liquor control commissioner, who declares he's going to clean them up.

Police recently arrested 13 Twin Cities' youths at Bar Harbor, Minn., night club on liquor violation and disorderly conduct charges. Puterbaugh says that the great influx of youths into the Minnesota resort areas makes policing a problem.

Cuba's Tourism Hitting Close To Its Record Low

Havana, July 14.

Tourism in Cuba is hitting close to a record low. Few tourists are to be seen on the streets. Souvenir shops have little trade, and casino busines is poor. Hotels are operating at 20% to 40% of capacity. Losses at the bigger inns range up to $100,000 per month.

The government, however, will not permit the hostels to close or to reduce personnel. As a result, hotels are seeking bank loans in order to keep open.

Adding to the troubles of hotelkeepers, wage increases have to be given to employees. Workers have called no strikes, but have used such quaint tactics as the casino personnel at the Hotel Riviera. These took off their coats and worked in shirtsleeves. They also threatened to take off their shoes.

Sans Souci casino has had to close because of dull trade. Santos Trafficante, who was running Sans Souci, has been arrested and faces deportation. Several other gambling figures have also been picked, but some have been released.

One airline reported that the traffic on its Havana-Miami run during the first five months of 1959 amounted to about 72,000 passengers, as against 90,000 during the same period last year. In an effort to boost tourism, Havana will host—at a cost of $500,000—the annual ASTA convention Oct. 17-24. As an advance guard, a group of Les Bons Vivants, a travel club, has arrived here.

Peel Will Ring Again At Vegas Thunderbird

Las Vegas, July 14.

The Thunderbird Hotel, which once featured nudes in an unsuccessful show, will bring them back July 3.

Producer Marty Hicks will have "nudes on ice" as part of George Arnold's "Les Folies Glaces International" ice-skating revue. Company of 30 will be toplined by a name.

Obolensky

making money which can be retained is via capital gains deals, it has become profitable to take properties and enhance their values for resale.

Obolensky also feels that the hotel is taking over a lot of functions that were normally held in the home. He points out that because of the servant shortage, smaller apartments are being maintained in New York and most of the entertainment must therefore be done on the outside. Thus hotels are becoming increasingly important in the social scheme of the upper strata.

Another part of the Obolensky plan is to put a new accent on the food. He is changing over to a haut cuisine and is making a lot of changes in the culinary department to achieve that end.

Obolensky is also in charge of the Drake Hotel for the Zeckendorf interests, where an entertainment policy is being set up for the fall. He has retained the Raoul Orch which played at L'Elephant Blanc, Paris.

House Reviews

Apollo, N. Y.

Drexel Singers (4), Skylights (6), Stars of Faith (4), Selahs (5), Gospel Clefs (4), Swain Silvertones (6); "Restless Years" (U) and "Ride a Crooked Trail" (U).

Thurman Ruth, N.Y. radio indie WOV's gospel deejay, brings this package of religioso groups into the Harlem vaude house for a week of happy stamping, clapping and wailing.

If the Apollo audience isn't sent quite as far out as the gathering in an all-night tent session, it still warms mightily to the uninhibited voicings of the groups extant. Particularly moving solos were heard by members of the Drexel singers, the Stars of Faith, and the Swain Silvertones, a male group with a destinguishing blues quality in a good deal of its work.

Also standout were the Selahs, who break from the traditional. Most of their numbers have a contemporary social theme—juvenile delinquency, politics — and the manner of presentation is polished and hip.

Ruth acts as emcee and keeps all groups on stage throughout the show (seated behind performers of the moment) to hypo aud excitement.

Berns Salonger, S'holm

Stockhold, July 7.

Los Tres de Castilla (3), Anita Lindblom, Silvia Ivars' Ballet (7), Berns' Orch conducted by Albert Vernon.

Spain is the most popular tourist country for the Swedes, and it might be considered as a very smart trick by Berns to present a more or less Spanish program during July.

Los Tres de Castilla is a vocal group specializing in Spanish and Latin-American pops. They have been touring Spain, Portugal, Switzerland and France, and are top attractions in Spanish radio. After their Swedish debut, they can include Sweden among the countries where they have met success. "Granada," "Malaguena" and "Maria Dolores," sure hits in most parts of the world, gave immediate contact between the artists and the audience, despite the fact that Spanish is not-too-familiar language to Norse audiences.

Top attraction of the month is the Swedish chanteuse, Anita Lindblom, who looks like a coming name in niteries. She has a good voice and looks enough attractive in a sexual way to attract any public, but she needs a lot more experience. In Sweden, she might be a name, but foreign audiences probably want some more action from a girl singing those more or less ordinary "daring" vaudeville numbers. At the Berns, she presents a couple of numbers which sounded "tailor-made" for her, especially a satirical song on the "My Fair Lady" theme and a selection of Duke Ellington numbers, the latter both in Swedish and English.

The program starts and ends a la Espanol. Ballet Silvia Ivars gives a very good performance of classic Spanish ballet. Professional in all ways but overlong.

Berns is Europe's largest restaurant (with 1,472 seats) and it seemed almost full-booked at the opening night with an audience of more than 50% foreign tourists. To judge from their applause, they too enjoyed! Wing.

Empire, Glasgow

Glasgow, July 9.

Bernard Bresslaw, Lorne Lesley, Morris & Cowley, Tony Fayne, Murray Campbell, Don Fox, Albert Sturm, Owen McGiveney Jr., Two Trevals, Bobby Dowds Orch.

Bernard Bresslaw, English comedy actor, had better look for better material. Headlining an individually-strong layout here, the tall six-feet-four comedian plays up himself as an extra-stupid type who does everything wrong, but this material, in itself, is not sufficient to hold up a top-of-the-bill act.

Bresslaw makes his entrance garbed in a yellow suit and carrying a flower-pot with a single flower. Act includes an eccentric dance and his two disk numbers, "You Need Feet" and "Mad Passionate Love." Comedian pulls down a song-sheet to get outfronters joining-in, which is purely kiddie stuff, as is his descent into auditorium to hand out sweets. On this showing, act has only temporary appeal, heightened by his tv characterization in "The Army Game."

Lorne Lesley, tall elegant chirper with coffee-colored skin, offers a stylish song act which comprises tunes like "As I Love You," "Birth of the Blues" and "Some of These Days." Distaffer has good looks and attractive smile, auguring well for her potential in tv and vaude.

Morris & Cowley, vet English twosome, replacing comedienne Gladys Morgan & Co. (on the sick list), offer their longtime character studies of two vet English Chelsea Pensioners in red uniforms. Act, despite its old-fashioned style, wins reasonable palming.

Tony Fayne (now minus his partner David Evans), tall, slim and dark-haired, registers with travesties of English comedian Terry-Thomas compering a disk-jockey show for housewives, vaude vet Randolph Sutton singing "Mother Kelly's Doorstep," and other radio personalities, and winds with the number "In The Beginning." Murray Campbell includes Grieg's Piano Concerto in his trumpet act, and can be faulted for gabbing too softly in his announcements.

Owen McGiveney Jr. holds attention with his skilful quick-changing in a one-man sketch of Charles Dickens characters, and exits to heavy palming. Act has lotsa offbeat appeal. Don Fox belts out pop tunes and oldies in entertaining songalog. Albert Sturm is fast at paper-tearing but naive in his gag-fodder. The Two Trevals offer a sound aerial act, with femme in fast neck spins, to open the layout, for which resident orch under Bobby Dowds provides showbacking. Gord.

Alhambra, Glasgow

Glasgow, July 2.

Stewart Cruikshank presentation of "Five-Past Eight," with Jimmy Logan, Jack Radcliffe, Eve Boswell, Sheila O'Neill, Sheila Paton, Don Peters, Keith Little, John Mulvaney, George Mitchell Singers (8), Ross Taylor Dancers (10), Geraldo Orch under Danny Walters.

Eve Boswell, dark-haired and petite, sparkles with versatility in this layout, bright and spectacular show in which the comedy has a difficult task in keeping near to the standard of dance and song ensembles. Thrush gets a chance at last in lengthy second-half spot, moving downstage on mobile white piano after opening with the chorines disguised as piano keyboard. Scene is highly effective, and decor wins palming prior to distaffer's own versatile song act, the high spot of entire layout.

Earlier, singer scores in a disk-backed scene, giving out in "Herman's Tune" with backing from the George Mitchell Singers, and sleeves of Perry Como and Louis Armstrong records for decor. The Ross Taylor Dancers add bright support.

Jack Radcliffe, senior Scot comedian, registers in character study as an elderly roadway attendant seeing school children across the highway. Act has neat blending of pathos and comedy, and is well up to standard set by Radcliffe in this field. He also scores solidly (with Billy Dick and Helen Norman as foils) in a sketch featuring himself as a male who has imbibed too well.

Jimmy Logan, who has star billing, fills the pre-finale slotting with a comedy study of a district nurse, and wins warm palming. He also essays his familiar Malkum McAuley role in a family sketch with Radcliffe & Co.; this has a small part for John Mulvaney, pop-eyed newcomer to comedy ranks who merits greater scope than is provided here and is being unfairly squashed out of prominence.

In the dance dept. there is standout work by Keith Little and Sheila O'Neill. Don Peters and Sheila Paton please in the song section, and the 10 Ross Taylor Dancers are handpicked lookers with hoofing skill. Main asset of show is standout staging, two notable scenes being a horse-and-carriage against moving panorama of cloud and skyline, and a Venetian gondola item. Geraldo orch under Danny Walters showbacks well, and is brought into show on rising and moving mechanical effects.

Layout has further advantage of playing to warm and sympathetic audience, mainly from the middle and uppercrusts, who appreciate vaude in a lavish setting, as here provided. Timing of show is also in the proper mood for enjoyment, teeing off at 8:05 p.m. when most outfronters are well fed and wined. Gord.

"...when they get into their COMEDY the ROOF REALLY RATTLES"

PAUL HOCHULI
Houston Press

GAYLORDS GREAT!

"Speaking of niteries, the International Club has come up with another good entertainment combination: The Gaylords—Ronnie Gaylord and Burt Ronaldi—have a diversified styling, ranging from wild comedy to calmed down songs that sold more than a million records for the two.

"However, it's when they get into their comedy that the roof really rattles. The takeoff on country music with Ronnie at the git-tar and Burt on bass is a real rouser. This one you shouldn't miss. It tops even their French routine of 'Pepe' and 'Lucky Pierre'.

"A fine team, doing their first job in Houston, and doing it that should rate a return."

PAUL HOCHULI
Houston Press

GAYLORDS SENSATIONAL!

"The Gaylords are just what was ordered to cure the doldrums of this hot summer. The Gaylords are the sleepers of the year here: Comedy and song and if you don't agree they're sensational we'll turn off the air conditioning . . . A great show."

BILL ROBERTS
The Houston Press

GAYLORDS SHATTERING!

"Shattering the crystal at the Continental Room is not the only forte of the tall tonsils of the Gaylords. The duo also attacks the funnybone as if piloting a slapstick blitzkrieg.

HOUSTON POST

GAYLORDS TERRIFIC!

"Yes, that Gaylord quartet, or rather duo, they're terrific. They have talent, enthusiasm, clever patter and a blend of voices that a Barbershop Harmony Quartet would gladly enlist."

MORRIS FRANK
The Houston Chronicle

A WHALE OF COMEDY!

"The Gaylords are one of the brightest teams to hit town this summer. A lot of good songs, and a whale of a lot of comedy routines that kept the audience begging for more."

Performer's Paradise

Despite Honolulu's population of nearly 300,000 is 67% Japanese, entertainment runs high and a sure way of getting a job is being able to sing or tell stories. Gov. William Quinn raises his tenor voice at most house parties and his wife, Nancy, joins in on all group singing. Mayor Neil Blaisdell is an accomplished hula dancer and doesn't have to be coaxed to display his terpsichorean artistry. Sterling Mossman, detective sergeant, is emcee-comic of the Queen Surf, a popular rendezvous of the pub crawlers and many other minions of the law entertain on the side.

Jack Berman, who has a new project going every 48 hours, whether it be in Honolulu, Manila or Hong Kong, is presently concerned with bridging the watery span between Oahu and Coconut Isle, a mile off shore, for the establishment of a gambling resort. It will be a rough go for him, according to the haoles (whites), because of the strong missionary influence. Despite that the Orientals have a passion for gambling, the church element, they claim, will lay the roadblocks in his path. It's a tiny isle, now the playground of Ed Pauley, politico-industrialist.

Probably nowhere else in the world is there a church choir that sings in night clubs and cocktail bars. Father John McDonald, who heads the group, has had an album made of their spirituals and says he, "if they don't sell, the Bank of Hawaii will have three of the loveliest churches on the island."

Perhaps the most colorful figure on Oahu is Don Beach, otherwise Don the Beachcomber, who started his Cantonese restaurants 26 years ago and since has had 152 imitators. What made him a beachcomber? "I was hungry." He's originally from New Orleans and his present concern is a resort on one of the other islands as a "hideaway" for show people from the mainland.

Honolulu is growing so fast commercially that Beach fears it will lose its charm for tourists. Henry Kaiser and the Dillingham family, among the earliest white settlers, are locked in fight for industrial expansion and what they leave undone will be finished off by Sheraton, which has taken over the Royal Hawaiian and three other hotels. The Royal, showplace of the island, and always a money loser, is being revamped and instead of native talent, the night spot will bring big names from the mainland. Sheraton doesn't like to report losses to its stockholders.

Co-op Apts. Booming

Biggest boom just now is in co-op apartments, up to 15 stories high. Most of them are sold even before ground is broken. The buyers call it an investment in the future and none will gainsay that it isn't bright as a new dollar.

Nowhere in the world are they more camera-happy. No Japanese is without a camera slung over his shoulder and for tourists it's standard equipment. Art Carter, who gave up photoging for fan mags in Hollywood, landed on the island 15 years ago with $3,000 in his kick. He sunk it in a camera and gift shop. Today he has shops in 12 hotels and can sell out for $250,000, which he may do and sink it all in real estate. The camera trick is perhaps one of the island's important industries, dollar for dollar. For a buck and a half you can get that picture they shot of you and you always have a camera poked into your kisser.

Nothing goes to waste here and there's a price tag on everything. Even the radio scripts of Edwards' "Hawaii Calls" are peddled for 50c with Edwards' autograph the comeon.

They like to tell the story here of the honeymooners, who ran afoul the rainy season. Two days after arrival the groom cabled home, "ma, we're coming back. It has been raining all the time and there's nothing to do."

Statehood and jet travel are the magic words that will transform this peaceful island into a bustling metropolis. The other islands will get the touring trade,

New Talent Peak in Atlantic City; Resort Brightened by Bistro Battle

By JOE W. WALKER

Atlantic City, July 14.

As the summer gets into full swing, it becomes more evident that there are more night spots and that they are bringing in more names as lures.

Many motels and hotels recently constructed or renovated are offering entertainment in airconditioned rooms. A case at point is the Castillian Room of the newly opened La Concha. Here a supper show is offered with a second show at midnight under a no-cover policy. Lilo and Joey Adams were the opening attractions.

The newer spots bid against such established operations on the broadwalk as the Hotel Traymore where, in the Submarine Room, the Bobby Roberts orch with the Don Juan Trio opened with no-cover policy. The President has two bands, Ramon Argueso's and Joe Stern's with a no-cover policy. Sheila Reynolds was a recent starter. The Ritz-Carlton opened with the Marty Portnoy orch plus Pedro Albani in the Carousel Room. Hotel Chelsea is new in this race. Its Terrace Club on the boardwalk recently brought in Milt Ross and Natasha for a Saturday and Joey Adams and Al Kelly for a Sunday; the Seaside, with the Redcoats; Claridge, with Mayfair Guardsmen; Haddon Hall, with Jan McArt and Harold Ferrin orch; Shelburne, offering Ada Cavallo and Verna Lee plus the Bob Kasha Trio.

Club Harlem, which, with Larry Steele and his "Affairs," has corralled the cream of the sepia business in years past, is confronted this season with a strong contender in the Cotton Club, which is a block away and kicked off the season with Pearl Bailey and her revue (50), coming into the resort for a first time.

Cotton Club brought in names last season for a weekend stand but its operators, Barney and Herbie Paloff, a father and son team, have booked for the full week this season. Bailey show was followed this week by Cab Calloway & Cotton Club Revue featuring Mae Barnes, and Nat King Cole is due in Aug. 6 for the rest of the season.

Cotton Club seats 500, is airconditioned, and now operates under a $5 minimum policy, serving no food, drinks only.

Big spot in night club field and only off-walk supper club continues to be Paul (Skinny) D'Amato's 500 Club which got its season underway with Vic Damone and Joey Bishop, who replaced Patti Page, originally booked for the opener. Club's big Vermillion Room seats some 750 and is operated under a changing minimum policy, according to name. Sammy Davis Jr. was brought in Saturday (11). Policy of last year, offering names weekends only, has been abandoned.

Two spots shuttered last January for violations of state Alcoholic Beverage Control rules got underway when Jockey Club brought in Christine Jorgensen with the Windsors while Topsy's Hideaway, located uptown, offered Billy Marshall. Sixmonth ABC penalties imposed had expired.

Other spots booking talent include Black Orchid Lounge, new this season, and offering Sara McLawler and Richard Otto with Lynn Terry and emcee Ben Terry; the Cove, with Quaker City Boys; Hialeah, with Strong Bros., Yvonne, Ron Sterling, Loretta Lee, Phyliss Miller, Eddy Curry. Hialeah is year round spot and now has three shows nightly plus two bands.

It is estimated that there are 300 places in the resort licensed to sell alcoholic beverages, and during the season most of them offer some type of entertainment. Something like 200 more are licensed in the resort area, and likewise attract more business with entertainment plus band, etc.

Kiddieland

probably top 6.000.000 when the figures on this past year are in.

Newest Park

Newest, but second in terms of cost, is Pacific Ocean Park, on the sea at Santa Monica. Opened last year, POP covers 28 acres but has room for expansion on ocean fill-in. So far POP has spent $12,000,000 on its site and attractions, of which $2,500.000 was put in during the past year.

Oldest and for years best known of this kind of park is Knott's Berry Farm in Buena Vista, near Disneyland. Less formal in its attractions than the newer facilities, Knott's Berry Farm actually dates back to 1920. But most of its development has been in the past 10 years and today the 200-acre plant represents an investment of around $6,000,000. It draws about 4.000,00 visitors yearly and is a heavy favorite with the little-old-lady-from-Dubuque set.

Marineland, at Portuguese Bend, covers 70 acres. Its cost to date has been $5.000.000. A new sea arena was built during the past year for $500.000 for a live water show (a la acquacade) but has not been a crashing success. Its mild reception, however, has not marred the basic popularity of the attraction. It opened in 1954 and gets about 1.000.000 patrons yearly.

Lesser Ones

These are the big boys in this field, although there are others which draw their quota of customers. They range from Corriganville in the San Fernando Valley to Newport Dunes, a new pleasure dome which opened last year at Newport Beach.

Some $1,750,000 was sunk into this water-and-land playground, which features a 15-acre lagoon surrounded by 78 acres of rest and recreation area. An additional $2.250.000 is being spent on the swimming-boating-amusement area between now and next summer.

Opened last year, Newport Dunes drew 158,000 admissions in its first 12 months. Attendance so far its second year is running more than three times last year's, projecting a figure of about 575.000 admissions this year.

The amusement park of the roller coaster and the ferris wheel was once a familiar aspect of American life. This form of park all but died in many sections (or did expire) with the advent of motion pictures, radio, television, boating, etc., the many demands on leisure time. A rejuvenated version, geared to current tastes, is what's making a strong comeback.

New Look-Jubilee Show

(Palace Theatre, Blackpool)

Blackpool, Eng., July 7.

George & Alfred Black presentation, starring Marion Ryan, Roy Castle, Peter Haigh, with Five Dallas Boys, Joe Baker & Jack Douglas, Gillian Moran, Gerry Bergman & Mimi; New Look Dancers (10). Orch under Donald Purches; staged by George Carden. At Palace Theatre, Blackpool, July 6, '59. $1.20 top.

Title of "New Look and The Jubilee Show" derives from two tv layouts seen recently on the U. K. network. The New Look section offers modern comedy and song, but hardly lives up to offbeat novelty and zest of the tv show of that name. The Jubilee Show section, in post-interval segment, is of merely average quality, and, at show caught, artists did not appear to be interested in projection of ye old-tyme musichall fodder.

Marion Ryan, attractive warbler with a come-hither smile and well-cushioned shapeliness, follows up her national tv marquee value (via the weekly Granada show "Spot The Tune") with some bright songs, and garners good palming for tunes like "Tropical Heatwave" and "Wait for Me." She also has one male customer up onstage to join her in song, and is later joined by comedian-dancer Roy Castle in attractive duetting.

Castle, young comedian recently propelled to forefront via success in a London Royal Variety Performance, lives up to all the praise given him, and is essence of versatility in song, dance and instrumentalism. He works throughout show, and is probably seen too much prior to his own clever comedy act, which can be faulted through over-length. Main snag to Castle is that he is much smaller in height than he appears on tv, but he makes up for lack of inches with infectious smile, zest for work and extreme versatility.

Peter Haigh, tv compere and interviewer, fits awkwardly into this vaude layout, and doesn't aid his prestige by becoming a run-of-mill dance man in ensembles. Also, he showed little interest, at show caught, in his emceeing stint at ye olde-tyme musichall, the poorish Jubilee Show section of layout.

Five Dallas Boys have pace in lively singing spots, and merit the strong palming they receive. Joe Baker & Jack Douglas are comedians who are best in a travesty of war films as they might be done by pix producers from U.S., Britain and Russia. Baker is tubby little funster in the Lou Costello tradition, and contrasts well with Douglas as foil. Gillian Moran gives nice support in song and dance bits, and the 10 New Look Girls are attractive line.

Show has its individual moments but scarcely lives up to potential of its talent, particularly that of Castle, an act to note carefully. Built round latter's friendly style and versatility, it might so easily have clicked. As is, it's mixture of old and new, and misses the mark as a vacation revue to write home about. Gord.

Deny AGVA-Teamster Tie

the International Board with the full text of a story which appeared in the July 8 issue of VARIETY, entitled "Scent AGVA-Teamster Tie."

The International Board of the Four A's accepted without equivocation Mr. Bright's complete denial of the truth and veracity of the article.

Mr. Bright stated: "AGVA has no intention of amalgamating with anyone, least of all with the Teamsters." He went on to say that "there have been no overtures from the Teamsters or any other union outside the Four A's. The National Board of AGVA as well as the membership would defeat any move of that nature." Mr. Bright pointed out that "I personally would be absolutely opposed to any amalgamation or affiliation with any union whose jurisdiction was not within the grant made by the AFL-CIO to the Four A's."

Mr. Bright emphatically stated to the International Board of the Four A's that "I would rather resign than be a party to any such move" and he assured the Four A's Board that "AGVA would continue as in the past to be a loyal sister branch of the Four A's and would remain as such until the Four A's should decide that AGVA was not worthy of being chartered by the International Board of the Associated Actors and Artistes of America."

The VARIETY article further states: "It has now been reported that the Four A's would have moved more readily for a one-card union were it not for the fact that such a step would have to include AGVA."

With reference to this statement the International Board noted that the American Guild of Variety Artists together with all other branches of the Four A's had been requested to participate in a merger study now being conducted jointly by SAG and AFTRA. Since Equity and AGMA are discussing merger they declined to participate in the proposed merger study at this time and AGVA also declined to participate, reiterating its longstanding position that it was in favor of one card merger of all the sister branches of the Four A's.

The International Board of the Four A's further noted in its meeting on Thursday that the sister branch AGVA had always been a part of any major discussion involving merger and the Board is satisfied that AGVA will continue to be a part of any other major discussion on merger.

While the International Board is aware of the fact that merger discussions between individual Four A's unions are in progress, this in no way affects the ability of the Four A's International to exercise its traditional functions nor will it alter its determination to do so.

The article in question also conjectured that the Four A's might move to take over AGVA's assets and stated: "It seems to be actually asking for the separation of AGVA." There has been no discussion at any time officially or unofficially of AGVA being eliminated from the Four A's or that the Four A's would take over the administration of AGVA or any of its assets.

The International Board in the past has acted with alacrity and decisiveness to stem any move by any of its branches which could conceivably affect the grant of jurisdiction to the Four A's, and reaffirms to its more than 50,000 members that it will be prepared to so act in the future should any move be taken which would warrant such action.

Penny Urging

despite her differences with Bright and the 45-man exec committee, the majority of whom voted along with Bright.

Her first crossup with exec committee came earlier in the year when she contested the legality of some of the board's actions, taken, she claims, when the board was not in "legal quorum."

This disagreement came as an aftermath of the AGVA national convention in Mexico City, which actress did not attend.

Asked about the possibility of court action, star said she "hoped" it would go to trial.

"I am in it up to my neck and I intend to stay in it," she said. "It is my duty to make sure that AGVA does that which benefits my membership."

Miss Singleton said that the situation at present is "still being resolved."

"Bells are Ringing" will open Tonight (Tues.) at 7,500-seat Chastain Memorial Amphitheatre in North Fulton Park.

'Aqua Follies' Replacements

Minneapolis, July 14.

Al Sheehan has inked Tony Turner, British champ and Eddie Cole, national trampoline champion, to replace the late Bruce Harlan in his "Aqua Follies" water show, one of the principal attractions of the local Aquatennial, annual summer mardi gras, here July 15-26.

Harlan, a star of the preceding 19 editions, died in an accident a few weeks ago. Both Turner and Cole are his former pupils.

New Acts

DIANE WISDOM
Songs
20 Mins.
Club 3525, Dallas

Diane Wisdom is a local product who got her singing start with Charlie Freeman's units, providing shows at vets' hospitals. Since then she's won her stripes as a band canary—Tex Beneke, Joe Reichman and the late Jimmy Dorsey.

Owning a pleasant voice, she knows her way around with ballads and standards and sticks to that forte. Stage presence is evident and she shows phrasing in her easy piping of "Amapola," "Till There Was You," "Goody Goody" and a slick "You Took Advantage of Me." But no current pop tunes.

Miss Wisdom is a well-stacked, suitry blond looker. She has the vocal and physical assets, but admittedly has no act. Stint is straight with songs, keeping her as a fine opener on a dual bill. With some between-tunes one-liners and special material, both with lyrics and chatter, she's a potential headliner.

Big assist comes from Ernie Johnson Trio's impeccable backing.

COURTNEY & VAN HORNE Dances
7 Mins.
Ak-Sar-Ben, Omaha

Although they've obviously had plenty of show biz experience, vet dance team of Courtney & Sonja Van Horne has never been recorded in VARIETY's New Act file. Which should be done inasmuch as this is a gifted team.

Neatly dressed in tux and red formal, duo is strong sightwise and works speedily. Most lifts and spins are excellent, although they faltered once or twice on small stage at this date. Routine includes waltzes, Latin turns and others.

Blonde Sonja, billed as a former "Miss Texas," is a cutie and displays a pair of eye-grasping gams.

booked solid, with no new time available.

As a consequence, local drumbeaters are preparing to revive ballyhoo methods which have languished for years. Columbia's experience with Highroad Productions' "The Mouse That Roared," which is scheduled to open July 16 at the Odeon Marble Arch, serves as an example of the techniques that will be employed.

Hyde Park's famous meeting place, near Marble Arch, which attracts as many as 10,000 people each weekend to hear freelance orators discussing almost any subject, was the center of a concentrated campaign. Men dressed in armor carrying sandwich boards hailed the premiere. Some of the speakers discussed the upcoming film as a result of a special preview to which they had been invited.

London's subway system was plastered with heralds and one-sheets. Unemployed newsdealers rented their vacant boards, on which the day's headlines are ordinarily crayonned, to Columbia for short advertising messages. Radio Luxembourg, which broadcasts from the Continent, was pressed into service and special commercials were beamed to the British Isles. Peter Sellers, who stars in the political satire, appeared on six BBC television and four radio shows as guest star.

Army Game & Variety
(HIPPODROME, BLACKPOOL)

Blackpool, Eng., July 14.

Bernard Delfont presentation of stars of "The Army Game" (Michael Medwin, Alfie Bass, Bill Fraser, Norman Rossington, Ted Lune), Saveen, Rosemary Squires, Ossie Noble, Fredianis (4), Albert & Les Ward, Hippodrome Girls (12); staged by Albert J. Knight; dances, Marie de Vere.

Army barrack-room comedy depends largely on richness of characterization. "The Army Game," a British tv series, offers ready-made types, all familiar already to majority of outfronters via medium of television. As portrayed by artists from the video format, sketches in Army hut and on parade-ground register solidly, with Ted Lune, lanky gangling male, a standout in yock-raising.

Bill Fraser has the requisite irascibility as a snarling company sergeant-major, putting the various soldiers through their paces while latter poke fun at him behind his back. Michael Medwin portrays a genial cockney type, while Alfie Bass and Norman Rossington, both not over-endowed in inches, contrast well with height of Lune. Group are joined by blonde chirper Rosemary Squires for some "Medical Inspection" comedy business.

Saveen, using his w.k. Daisy May doll, wins merited palming for ventriloquial act, in which he also employs a live pooch for effective talking-back. At show caught, Saveen found good foil in 10-year-old juve from audience, who cross-gabbed naturally with his boy-crazy Daisy May puppet.

The Fredianis, acrobatic foursome, build themselves into pyramids, and also offer some nifty somersaulting, exiting to solid palming. Albert & Les Ward register with instrumental zaniness, scoring with a travesty of Gracie Fields linked with Spike Jones in second-half segment, comedy musicians click with tv impressions.

Ossie Noble's gibberish comedy brings useful quota of yocks. Rosemary Squires belts out pop tunes and a medley of oldies for happy audience participation. Ugo Frediani, one of the Frediani foursome, is particularly nimble in footwork aspect of his juggling. The Hippodrome Girls are busy line of hard-working hoofers. Albert J. Knight stages admirably within confines of limited stage space available, and Marie de Vere arranges the dance line adequately. Show is in for vacation season, and is playing to hefty lines.

Ak-Sar-Ben, Omaha

Omaha, July 11.

Romeo-Hammond presentation with Bob Crosby, Carmel Quinn, Jan August, Grover Ruwe, Courtney & Van Horne, Dave Majors Orch (12); Ak-Sar-Ben Field, Omaha, July 8-9.

Second free show of the year for the 22,000 dues ($10 per year) paying members of Ak-Sar-Ben, Omaha civic org, proved one of the strongest entertainment portions to be served in these parts for quite some time. Les Paul & Mary Ford cancelled out due to latter's pregnancy, and Bob Crosby and Jan August were rushed in as last minute substitutions.

Crosby came in as a single and took over emcee chores in addition to his own 14-minute first-half closing bit in which he gagged about his relations and show biz in general. By the time he introed the acts, they had the battle made.

With Crosby's clever stint winding up the first half, the job of winding up the show fell on the competent shoulders of Carmel Quinn. The slick redhead quickly charmed the grandstand-jammed aud with her Irish songs and wit, and an outstanding community sing bit. She wowed 'em the entire 36 minutes.

August's piano artistics, opening the second half, used classical and pops, Gershwin medleys, songs of the 20's and concluded with "April in Paris."

Grover Ruwe, making his first appearance since a near-fatal auto accident three weeks ago, came on first with his harmonica-playing dummy, Luwe, with sharp local material. Then he brought on his wooden stooge, "Sunshine," for a look at the old days and smash gags. It was a clicko 24-minute act.

Show-openers, Courtnel & Van Horne, are in new acts. Next Ak show is July 27-29 and will be staged by Ernie Young.

The Big Show of 1959
(Opera House, Blackpool)

Blackpool, Eng., July 7.

George & Alfred Black presentation of revue. Stars Jewel & Warriss, Jill Day; features The Najorros (4), Peiro Bros (2), Jean-Louis Bret & Ilonka, Larry Griswold, Paddy Glynn, George Mitchell Singers (8), John Tiller Girls (20), Orch under Owen Walters; staged by Alec Shanks and Joan Davis. At Opera House, Blackpool, June 27, '59. $1.20 top.

Strong specialties, lotsa comedy business by leads Jewel & Warriss, and lavish costuming and staging make "The Big Show of 1959" an ambitious and worthwhile production for George & Alfred Black at this north-of-England holiday centre. Estimated some $75,000 has been spnt on show.

Comedy, much of it in familiar vein, has surefire advantage in warmed-up house of lotsa business. Jimmy Jewel & his longtime partner, Ben Warriss, are up to all their old tricks of clinging to rising curtains, being swamped by falling wood chips, and suffering well-staged interruptions by stooges, notably a male who poses as a customer parking his coat on the stage. J&W also use some film clips with their own commentary, this being series of travesties of tv commercials, with themselves in different guise in each.

Pair also indulge in merry cross-talk, and get swamped by familiar water tricks in comedy tropical-hut scene. At opening show caught (27) Jimmy Jewel had his toupee nearly washed-away by gushing water in this scene, evoking many yocks from the customers, to most of whom his use of a "rug" was not familiar. Pair also offer a comedy sketch set in a saloon which boasts Britain's "longest bar," but this didn't pull in the laughter expected. A good comedy item is Jewel's dame portrayal in an Apache scene set in Paris.

Jill Day, ash-blonde warbler, is stronger in the glamour than vocals department, but nevertheless offers a bright songalog, with Don Phillips, w.k. pianist-composer, tinkling the ivories with his usual artistry. Distaffer's act ranges over oldies and pop tunes, and includes audience participation via the too-familiar mirror-spotting trick. She also coaxes a male up from auditorium to join her in singing, another trick which seldom fails.

The Najarros (three girls and a boy), from France, indulge in some lusty body-tossing for strong mitting; oldest femme is amply-cushioned redhead with outside measurements that can't fail to attract attention and offer her useful padding in knockabout. The two Peiro Bros, from Mexico, are skilled in club-manipulating, hat-revolving and most aspects of the juggling trade, and also exit to solid palming. Dance specialty is by Jean-Louis Bert & Ilonka in Parisian scene.

Larry Griswold, only U.S. act in show, slips, revolves round, and falls off comedy platform and diving board for useful share of yocks, finally taking the leap and surprising customers with his bounce-back from trampoline. His wry patter and bounce take a trick, although act tends to be a trifle overlong.

Show is strong in spectacle. Underwater fantasy, titled "Wonderland of the Deep," designed by Erte of Paris, is complicated item calling on all mechanical resources of backstage staff, with effects of flying fish, Neptune's chariots, shoals of fish and marine wonders. Artists are seen diving and swimming onstage. Other spectacle bit, though much briefer, is a sea shipwreck, with liner plunging to doom as lights flicker and finally go out.

Vocal backing is in the top class from eight George Mitchell Singers, and the 20 John Tiller Girls form precision-happy line, adding glamour to many scenes. Costuming, by Erte, Anthony Holland, Alec Shanks, etc., is gay and modern; Joan Davis has arranged the dances and ensembles, as well as linking with Shanks for staging; and comedy fodder is by Dick Hills and Sid Green, responsible for the Jewel & Warriss radio productions. Music and lyrics are by Cyril Ornadel & David Croft, and Phil Park, among others Owen Walters batons special orch. Show is skedded to run well into fall and close of vacation season hereabouts.

Kane Triplets, 11-year-olds, are joining the McGuire Sisters' nitery act.

Copacabana, N. Y.

Jules Podell presentation with Romo Vincent, Betty Johnson, Tony Franco, Doug Coudy Line (8), Paul Shelley & Frank Marti Orchs; music, Al Foster & Keefe Brasselle; costumes, Billy Livingston; $5.50 minimum.

Jules Podell summer schedule has been productive of entertainment, and current bill continues in that tradition. Comprising Romo Vincent, one of the room's off-season stalwarts, and singer Betty Johnson, who has reached prominence through diskings and her work on the Jack Paar show, the new card provides an extremely satisfying session.

Vincent has a fat man's jollity and a singing man's pipes along with a flyweight's litheness. He has come in with an act that has, of all things, choreography with a credit going to Louis DaPron, who stages the Perry Como show. There's a greater stress on Vincent's physical attributes, which in itself provides the contradiction of a heavy boy going through some very graceful paces. He's a lot of fun to watch.

In the material sector, Vincent retains some of the pieces that have done well for him for a long time. His reprise of the cab driver and his repeat of the Texan, each with new bits of business to freshen it up, still provide highpoints in his act. Vincent is on for a little more than a half-hour and delivers strongly and effectively during this period.

Miss Johnson, coming on stage elegantly gowned, also delivers entertainingly. She personably delivers ballads feelingly and shows taste and a good overall song design. Miss Johnson has some tunes penned for her by the Blue Angel's Bart Howard to give her act some differentiation. Not all her songs are surefire. Once she starts on the medley of tunes made famous by Ethel Merman, she's on strong and certain ground. While not having the flamboyance and color of Miss Merman, Miss Johnson gives these tunes a quieter, but perhaps a more melodic rendition with a greater stress on the sentimental side. She walks off a winner in this room.

Shamrock Hilton, H'st'n

Houston, July 9.

Sondra & Jon Steele, Ford & Reynolds, Shep Fields Orch (12); no cover or minimum.

Sondra & Jon Steele have built a fine 40-minute showcase for their considerable talents. There's variety in presentation with thrush Sondra, sometimes joined in duet by pianist husband Jon, reviving some old show biz standards, such as "Whoopee," "You're Nobody 'Til Somebody Loves You," a couple of spirituals, and the begoff rouser, "When the Saints Go Marching In." Jon abandons accompanist and duet role for three 88 solos, "Lover," "Slaughter On 10th Avenue," and a swing-boogie arrangement of "Habanera" from "Carmen." The superb backing of Shep Fields orch on the arrangements help greatly.

Frankie Ford & Gary Reynolds also have varied talents. In their comedy, pair often rises above material. Both surprise with excellent turns on several musical instruments. Comic highlights are trumpeteer Ford's impression of Louis Prima, pairs carbon of Durante and Jackson and Ford's rock 'n' roll bit.

Alan Drake & Lila Guizar come in for two July 23. Skip.

Stork Room, London

London, July 8.

Arthur Blake, Anne Hart, Mlle. Pasqualine, Al Burnett, Johnny Holbrook's Combo (4); $3 minimum.

Impressionist Arthur Blake is the current topliner at the Stork Room, a late nitery unique in London. Blake's extremely parochial skits on thesps receive a cordial and understanding welcome from visiting show biz folk. Without props or wigs and relying purely on facial and vocal twists, Blake's witty patter enables him to do such diverse personalities as Charles Laughton, James Stewart, Bette Davis, Barbara Stanwyck, Katharine Hepburn, Mae West, Noel Coward and Marilyn Monroe. Though Blake's subjects are not new he has laced his patter with enough topicality to give it a fresh look.

Anne Hart, a tall, brunette vocalist, gives adequately with such songs as "From This Moment On" and "The Days That The Rains Came," but this type of singing seems out of place in such a saloon as the Stork. More in keeping with the atmosphere is Mademoiselle Pasqualine from Paris, a half-pinted-sized, cute, colored belly-dancer and stripper. With dead pan she goes through an athletic routine with a full measure of bumps and grinds. The permanent host, Al Burnett, is in good form, linking the acts and tossing off bullish jokes and songs with uninhibited good humor. Burnett's act is now so familiar to the audience that it can join in—and does so. Woe betide Burnett if he omits any one of his hoary gags and ditties. Heckling is part of the game at the Stork Room and Burnett handles verbal fire from all parts of the room with the zest and know-how of an emcee who has been on the receiving end of the customers' rough good humor for many, many nights.

Music for dancing is in the lively hands of Johnny Holbrook's four-piece combo. Rich.

Mister Kelly's, Chi

Chicago, July 7.

Mort Sahl, Ann Mason, Marx-Frigo Trio; $1 cover.

Ability of Mort Sahl to satirically cut to the essence of a foibled world continues to delight, and such has been his success that it's getting hard to tell the hard-core cultists from the late converts. His fifth Rush St. stand shapes SRO, per usual, for the four frames hes skedded.

Sahl's formula is a point of view airily free of political and social cliches. Being an up-to-dateline commentary, there's no problem with stale material. His brisk and glib manner keeps the thrusts amiable without any real loss of bite, and that's the key to his disarming popularity. He stitched firstnighters by covering the Senate's veto of Lewis Strauss, Henry Luce journalism, pic producer Jerry Wald, the latest Soviet vs. U.S. space sorties, Israeli arms for W. Germany, etc.

Chirper Ann Mason is a cute blond. Also, a pleasant stylist with a lilting delivery to freshen the standards in her Chi nitery bow. Against the Sahl-induced buzz, she made it congenially with such as "Lady is a Tramp," "Do I?" and "But You Don't Love Me." Fine backing, as always, from the Marx-Frigo combo. Larry Adler and Betty Bennett open Aug. 3. Pit.

Crescendo, Hollywood

Hollywood, June 30.

Frances Faye, Eddie Grady Orch (6), Modernaires (5), Ronnie Schell; $1.50-$2 cover, 2-drink minimum.

The fabulous Frances Faye is back on the Sunset Strip mesmerizing devotees at the Crescendo. With the Modernaires, Eddie Grady's six-piece orch and comedian Ronnie Schell swelling the bill, the club has a package which will almost certainly do great business.

Nitery veteran Miss Faye sends a reviewer to the adjective bin. She is: intense, relaxed, subtle, crude, polished, rough, callous, tender, dynamic and poignant. It's her great talent to combine all these conflicting elements into a consistent and exciting whole.

The fact that much of her material is special restricts her somewhat to an in-the-know audience, but her dynamic style and big, sure voice—so captivating that it obscures her excellent piano artistry—will hold any outlander who wanders in.

Because other performers over the years have paid her the great compliment of copying her mannerisms and dramatic devices, Miss Faye's act may seem familiar, in much the same way that Shakespeare seems to quote. The act's basically what it has always been: the regal intro, the jazz-cum-Latin numbers, the delicately smutty "Names" song with its homosexual overtones, the hilarious "songs-I-never-sing" bit, and a long medley of tunes concluding with the well-rehearsed musicians taking individual musical bows.

The four-men-and-a-girl Modernaires reminisce over some fine Glenn Miller oldies, best of which are "Juke Box Saturday Night" and leader Hal Dickinson's expert imitations.

While fairly new in the top circuits, comedian Ronnie Schell is a good pacer who bids fair to advance in stature.

Miss Faye will be at the Crescendo for at least two weeks. A holdover doesn't seem unlikely. Glen.

Sahara, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, July 7.

Sophie Tucker (with Ted Shapiro), Ames Bros., Dale Babcock, Cathy Stuart, Saharem Dancers (12), Louis Basil Orch (11); Produced by Stan Irwin, production numbers by Sonia Shaw, Bill Hitchcock; $3 minimum.

The double-header attraction of Sophie Tucker and the Ames Bros. has returned to the Congo Room where it clicked last February, and the combination is sure to do even better now at the peak of the tourist season.

Miss Tucker, and her teammate of 38 years, pianist Ted Shapiro, pulled strong applause and yocks from first-nighters. Star, who is valuable to a casino because she lures well-heeled sportsmen, sings "You Can't Make An Old Lady Out of Me," "I'm Living Alone and Like It," "Have Fun," "You're Only As Good As Your Last Kiss," "Grizzly Bear," "I Used To Love You But It's All Over," and "Alabamy Jubilee." She omits her trademark, "Some of These Days," but asks the audience to sing it to her. As "Sagebrush Soph," she comes out in a wild sequined cowgirl outfit and belts "I'm A Wild Wicked Woman From The Badlands" to a boffo bowoff.

The Ames Bros. have long been faves here, and seem to grow in stature with every visit. With Al Semola conducting the Louis Basil orch (11) for them, they score with "Curtain Time," "You, You, You," "Naughty Lady of Shady Lane," "Yes Indeed," "It Only Hurts For A Little While," and "True Love." On solo, Ed is effective with "Endlessly," and Joe does a stirring "Old Man River." Quartet wraps up turn with some funny celeb impreshes.

Two zestful Shaw-Hitchcock production numbers featuring Dale Babcock and Cathy Stuart balance the Stan Irwin package, set for three weeks. Duke.

Statler-Hilton, Dallas

Dallas, July 10.

Lucille & Eddie Roberts Sandy Sandifer Orch (7); $2-$2.50 cover.

It's been a long time since Lucille & Eddie Roberts amused localities with their mental act. At one local hostel in 1941, another in 1948, duo is now at the Empire Room and apparently well remembered. Reception at opening (9) was excellent.

Roberts easily opens the 35-minute stint with comedy patter as a warmup. Bringing on Lucille for the blindfold, he tours the tables for items and it's here that his rapid-fire comic ad libs keeps the patrons amused, while Lucille, onstage, does her identifications. Small crowd was with the personable pair all the way for hefty mitting.

Sandy Sandifer orch provides a "Concert in the Park" stint and pleasant terp tunes. Act ends July 22; comedy team, Dick Chase & Bud Fitchell, bows July 23 for two frames. Bark.

Society, London

London, July 6.

Joan Heal, Mike Morton's Orch (5), Gypsy Adam & Tzigane Players; $3.50 minimum.

Continuing its policy of presenting only one short act, invariably a femme performer, the Society has currently settled on Joan Heal. It's a good choice. The gal is one of Britain's better known revue and musicomedy actresses, and her present offering is a slick, nostalgic, 20-minute dip into revue memories.

She sets the pace with an original opener, "I Always Loved A Revue," and links her subsequent choices with singing bridges. Though much of her stuff is not new, her presentation gives the impression of specially-written point material. Following her bow-in she gives memories of Judy Campbell singing "Nightingale in Berkeley Square" from "New Faces," then impressions of Hermione Gingold, Brenda Bruce, Noel Coward and Joyce Grenfell from various past revues.

"I'm Not Pleased With My Lot" is one of her own hits from a past West End success, in which she complains that she always gets garnets instead of rocks. She subsequently scores heavily with other songs that she has sung in past shows, notably "There Was Something About Mr. Henderson," the love lament of a hat-check girl and "My Man's Gone," a riotously uninhibited hosanna to the delights of femme freedom. As a pay-off, Miss Heal comes back to do an encore and it turns out to be a song called "Why Come Back For An Encore When There's Nothing Left To Be Said."

This performer is stylish, good-humored and has an infectious impact on the late-night diners. Neatly backed by Mike Morton's Quintet, she measures up as one of the best homegrown floor-show entertainers of recent times and should prove an attraction anywhere. Gypsy Adam's Tzigane Players, alternating with Morton's combo, contribute some lively and smooth dancing music. Rich.

Fountainhead, New Hope

New Hope, Pa., July 7.

Jack E. Leonard, Ann Hathaway, Sandy Walsh, Johnny Crawford, Mickey Rodgers Combo (5); $3.50-$5 minimum.

The plush Fountainhead, complete with swimming pool, patio and English waiters, has only been open several months, but Jack E. Leonard already is in his second engagement. The reason is simple: owner Morris Singer has learned that he pulls in the people.

Leonard attracted capacity crowds for the weekend but he proves his mettle as a comic in playing to sparser midnight show weekday audiences. From his opening "good evening, tables and chairs," to his close 45 minutes later, Leonard has the people with him—and he keeps them laughing.

Where he falls back on smart one-liners while playing to a full house, Leonard often relaxes when he sees some empty tables. He relies on his sure-fire insult techniques and mixes in timely local color jokes. His fast ad-libs ring the bell every time.

Thrush Ann Hathaway, a sexy, brunette looker, has a fiery singing style. She hits hard all the way—and with good effect.

She opens fast with uptempo treatments of "Runnin' Wild" and "Between the Devil and the Deep Blue Sea." Songstress is at her best on a ballad treatment of "Love for Sale." A little more restraint on some of her numbers might help Miss Hathaway improve her act.

Pert Sandy Walsh does well in a couple of specialty dances and Johnny Crawford, doubling as emcee and singer, has a pleasant personality and a fine voice. Mickey Rodgers and his combo provide good backing. Bitt.

Silver Slipper, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, June 23.

Hank Henry, Sally Rand, The Appletons (3), Dick Weston, Sparky Kaye, Red Marshall, Danny Jacobs, Slipperettes (5), George Redman Orch (4); produced by Eddie Fox; choreography by Barry Ashton; no cover or minimum.

Hank Henry & Co., a group of burlesque-imbued characters delightfully alien to standard entertainers on the Las Vegas Strip, have long presented gems of showmanship in their tiny theatre, where they are skillfully guided by producer Eddie Fox. The intimate revues, which are traditionally a must for tourists and show biz celebs alike, bat a thousand as being the funniest shows in town. The new one, called with a sly wink "Paris Or Bust" to conform with the current trend of nudity in Vegas shows, certainly doesn't spoil that reputation. It's by far the funniest show in town.

Headliner Hank Henry, a local landmark, is a master showman who remembers every trick he ever learned in vaudeville and burlesque—the big, lovable buffoon uses them all here to consistently pull a blanket of belly yocks. He's the antithesis of the new school of "don't laugh at me but think with me" young comic. With his partners, also vets with his type of training—Sparky Kaye, Red Marshall and Danny Jacobs—he revives classic burlesque sketches and has a knack of making them funnier than they were intended to be.

Sally Rand, costarred with Henry, is a potent lure for the casino. She's as graceful and beautiful as ever, with a stunning figure that invariably sparks audible phrases of envy from distaff viewers. Her trademark, the fan dance, always brings brisk applause at its beginning and end.

The Appletons, an Apache dance act in which the male knife-thrower has not one but two femme parners, is a fast and furious turn which keeps the audience in suspense from inception to wild finals.

Dick Weston, a handsome, personable young ventriloquist, shows here that he's one of the best voice-tossers in the biz, and is a safe bet for early headline status. His dialog is both fresh and funny, and his "Aunt Martha" character is rewarded with booming laughs.

The Slipperettes (5) are lookers who are also good terpers, and they interpret the imaginative choreography of Barry Ashton. Duke.

500 Club, A. C.

Atlantic City, July 11.

Sammy Davis Jr., Arlene Fontana, Bob Melvin, Lindsay Sapphire Dancers (7), Jack Curtiss, Pete Miller Orch (16) with Joe Frasetto; $2 admission, $5 minimum on Saturday nights.

Sammy Davis Jr. is back in Paul (Skinny) D'Amato's Vermilion room supper club headlining the second show of the summer season and giving the customers more than an hour of solid entertainment.

This time around Davis scores with his vocal carbons of the great in show business, and tap and soft shoe routines. Morty Stevens, with his clarinet and at the piano, gives him a big assist.

Without the breathing period allowed in the days when he first appeared here with Uncle Will Mastin and Daddy Sam (he paid a sentimental tribute to them opening night), Davis is before the spots the full time.

From the motion picture "Porgy and Bess" in which he performs Sportin' Life he offers "There's a Boat Dat's Leavin' Soon for New York," and "I Got Plenty o' Nuttin,'" in addition to a flock of others. He also does "When Somebody Loves You" as Nat Cole, Tony Bennett, Billy Eckstine, Frankie Laine, James Cagney, Marlon Brando, Louis Armstrong and Dean Martin would sing it. Again he offers his Jerry Lewis "Rockaby My Baby" bit, which, with his imitation of Frank Sinatra "Lady Is a Tramp" is his best. His tap and soft shoe are again tops.

Added to the house orchestra are four violins to support Davis. The capacity house for the first supper show gave him top response and ropes up for second show assures best business of season so far for club.

Arlene Fontana is an okay thrush who does "Lover Please Be Tender," "Ol Debble Moon," "Am I Blue" and specialty "White Fox Fur." Does a neat piano bit on "Learning the Blues," and begs off with "Your My Everything."

Bob Melvin is good comic while Lindsay Sapphire Dancers (7) with Jack Curtiss, who also does emcee chores, score with two repeat production numbers. Pete Miller house orchestra gives good backing. Walk.

Cloister, Chi

Chicago, July 7.

Carmen McRae, Notre Dame Lettermen with Vince Mauro (5), Johnny Pate Trio; $1 cover, 2-drink minimum.

Fine as she is, it's debatable whether Carmen McRae has the headliner strength to warrant a three-week stand in this cellar. She gets no marquee help from the Notre Dame Lettermen, fresh from the South Bend campus with no professional rep to precede them, but who furnish some satisfying musical moments for the take-a-chancers.

Miss McRae can always be counted on for a vocally rewarding session. A down-to-business singer, she's a stylist with warmth and a keen sense of phrasing, arresting tablers with "Isn't It Romantic?" "Forget Me," "I Can't Believe," and "Our Love is Here to Stay," among others. Despite a hesitant moment or two, Johnny Pate Trio was good in support. Pit.

Carnival Room, Phoenix

Phoenix, June 30.

Jack Edwards, Carol Jayne, Rita Martin, Hal Sunday Orch (5); no cover or minimum.

Strong police resistance against strippers has forced a change in the entertainment policy at Edie Biale's Carnival Room. The result is a well balanced show headlined by comic-dancer Jack Edwards. Edwards as a performer has yet to reach full maturity—his material is blue, somewhat dated and tends to ramble, but this should be corrected by experience. He has a shy, ingratiating approach that his audience finds a delightful novelty.

Edwards relies on simple, uncomplicated situations for his yocks and highlights with a panto bit on a bowling addict that is reminiscent of a young Red Skelton. Closing, he surprises the house with a gifted pair of feet doing impreshes of Ray Bolger, Joe Frisco, Pat Rooney as well as original taps and softshoe.

Terper Carol Jayne, a very bountifully endowed young lass, kicks off with a demure but devastating "I Want To Get Married," followed by 20 minutes of serious interpretive dancing whose mood ranges from the Nile to the Orient.

Capping the show, thrush Rita Martin proves that a loud opening is the best opening. Thom.

Riverside, Reno

Reno, July 3.

Nelson Eddy & Gale Sherwood, Elsa & Waldo, Starlets (8), Eddie Fitzpatrick Orch, Theodore Paxson; $2 minimum.

In this umpteenth playback in the Reno-Tahoe area, Nelson Eddy proves his marquee value again, and with the assist of lovely Gale Sherwood the duo indicates perennial appeal. They have no problems with auditors.

In a 25-minute turn the two offer the nostalgia titles (solo and tandem), the novelty, and the visual, with Miss Sherwood in costume switch. Eddy takes initial command with an effective delivery of "Hello, Young Lovers," and follows up with such as "September Song" and a melange from his pix. Novelty is displayed during a backstage mike interview with a "Mrs. House" that is positive for good lines, and a neat rendition by Eddy of "Come On-A My House."

In tandem with the distaffer (in a full-skirted blue creation on nite caught), the duo offer a parody on "Carmen" that rates heavy approval. The two make it duo on such as "In The Still Of The Night" and "Lover Come Back To Me," after (on the latter) Miss Sherwood enters from the audience as a ciggie girl. Each complements the other, and suggest perfect harmony in both voice and stage personality.

Warmer for the headliners are Elsa & Waldo, zany comi-terp team debuting at the Riverside with an act that's unique to the area for several years past. In incongruous costuming for dance teams, the boy-girl duo command heavy mitts with stuff that's parttime strictly visual and parttime strictly talent. Bracketing the twin bill are the Starlets in Moro-Landis productions. Show runs through July 15.

Adolphus Hotel, Dallas

Dallas, July 10.

"Bottoms Up!," musical revue produced by Breck Wall; directed by David Tihmar, Buddy Williams; special lyrics by Al Harting, Kathy Johnson; costumes, Wayne Reed; sets, Curt Hunsaker, Jerry Avrett; musical conductor, Bob Farrar; features Lieux Dressler, Ann Hite, Gerry Johnson, Bill Fanning, Breck Wall, Bob Beard, Patty Kogan, Joan Strattin, Dick Gould, Buddy Williams; Joe Reichman Orch (7); $1.50-$2 cover.

Young Breck Wall's production of an intimate revue, "Bottoms Up!," is the smartest show that's ever been in a plush supper club here. Sophisticated and swiftly-paced, it spells entertainment in its finer facets, with much sock material ably abetted by local talent. It runs for 50 minutes.

This show moves and it keeps the tipplers awake and alert. Lieux Dressler, singer-comedienne, solos "The Loser" for good returns. She teams with a brace of lovelies, blonde Ann Hite and brunet Gerry Johnson, for special lyrics of "Mink, Mink, Mink," with the trio clad in furs. Miss Johnson divests to become Lady Godiva for laughs. Miss Johnson's vocal parody, "I Love Dallas," also scores, and Miss Dressler hits as a hillbilly songstress.

Sharing honors is Bill Fanning, vocalist, with comedic bits, scoring as a world-weary sophisticate. Dancing by Bob Beard and songs by Dick Gould keep the pace real funny distraction is a supermarket shopping scene, with the mothers of Cole Porter, Ernest Hemingway, T. S. Eliot and Lucky Luciano discussing their sons' art interests. Hilarious is the comparison of an English tea party and an American soiree.

Revue has been held over to July 29. Singer Helen Forrest follows July 30 for a fortnight. Current production has pianist Bob Farrar conducting the Reichman band in special scores.

Hotel Roosevelt, N. O.

New Orleans, July 3.

DeSanto Trio, Vagabonds, Bobby Blanque, Leon Kelner Orch (12); $2.50 weeknight minimum, $4 Sat.

This is supposedly the roughest time of year for nitery biz. But Seymour Weiss has come up with another cure for whatever ails the cash register, in the Vagabonds. A packed house greeted the versatile foursome opening night.

Main reason undoubtedly is the fact that the boys put on a whale of a performance. They hold the stage for over 30 minutes and their songs, mimicry, musicianship and clowning had the plush joint rocking with laughs and palm-poundign.

Boys tee off with a medley of oldies such as "Bill Bailey," "Alabama Jubilee' and an Italian version of the Irish ditty, "McNamara's Band," and from then on there's not a serious moment. They draw yocks and bellies with their impreshes of Louis Prima, Liberace, Sarah Vaughan, Johnnie Ray, Walter Brennan and others, followed by satiric sketches on television, including Lawrence Welk, Elvis Presley and prizefight, and close to a smash ovation.

Opening the bill are the DeSantos, a cute gal with a nifty chassis who sings and two lads who perform acrobatics. Vocally girl is average, but makes good use of all her other assets. Boys show good timing in their chore as well as precision.

Bobby Blanque, vocalist with the Leon Kelner crew, displays nice pipes and a likable personality to earn a big share of the evening's applause.

Kelner and aggregation play for show pro fashion and keep the floor crowded with ankle-benders with an assortment of nostalgic tunes, waltzes, pulsating Latin rhythms and other fare.

Louis Jordan's Tympany Five with Bonnie Smith, Peter Gentry; $1-$1.50 admission.

In this highly successful spot with its policy of mostly Negro name performers and integrated patronage, Louis Jordan and his Tympany Five, plus songstress Bonnie Smith and dancer-singer Peter Gentry, burn things up during a torrid and exciting session that packs a terrific entertainment wallop right up the clientele's alley.

The jump and jazz music with its invigorating rhythm and its accompaniments of clowning, vocalizing and hoofology provide probably the liveliest fare here to date, and that's going some. Jordan, Junoesque Miss Smith and Gentry also stir plenty of laughter with amusing banter directed at the customers.

Everybody concerned works like a beaver, keeping things going at a feverish pace. The energy, high spirits and rhythm communicate themselves to the tablesitters and are calculated to bring even a.k.'s to life—and there were plenty of the latter in the large Monday night audience.

The elongated Gentry is a sensational exponent of rock 'n' roll and his singing, stepping and various high jinks are rewarded by tremendous tablesitter enthusiasm. Miss Smith belts over her vocal part of the proceedings and adds innumberable comedic touches like a big leaguer.

Jordan will be followed by Lonnie Fattin and Stepin Fetchit on the same show.

Tidelands, Houston

Houston, July 6.

Dorothy Claire, Earl Humphreys, Don Cannon Orch (6); no cover or minimum.

By appearing at the Tidelands Motor Inn nitery, Dorothy Claire proves that show biz traditions can return dividends. Last January the madcap thrush was playing at the Cork Club here when Monique Van Vooren, then at this spot, became ill with a virus. When a hurry-up call was put in for entertainers playing the several Houston niteries, Miss Claire responded and the auditors embraced her. Now she's booked in for three weeks. This intimate club should be packed throughout.

Femme comes onstage through the audience beating a big drum and dressed in a makeshift Salvation Army uniform. After a salvation bit, she sings "I'm Going Back To My Husband To Relax" which sets pace for act, both in song style and comedy.

She next does a "My Fair Lady" medley of "On The Street Where You Live" and "I Could Have Danced All Night." Then there's her patented "Woman In The White House" number and the finale, "Old Black Magic." Miss Claire has a definite talent for comedy, and her belting voice is right there with the best. She's on for nearly 40 minutes.

Earl Humphreys, a personable young man, has a brief opener. He's in fine voice with "From This Moment On," "If I Should Lose You," "Our Love Is Here To Stay" and "I've Got You Under My Skin." While his opening night act lasted but 10 minutes, he spent 20 minutes just before showtime cruising among the tables singing request numbers. He has been practically a fixture at the Club 3525 in Dallas, and has a voice that needs discovering on a national basis. In appearance, he's somewhat of a handsome Bob Hope.

The Don Cannon orch is again right there in a backing job, and when the show isn't on can play as fine jazz as is heard anywhere.

Fairmont Hotel, S. F.

San Francisco, July 10.

Shirley Jones & Jack Cassidy with pianist Harry Froman, Ernie Heckscher Orch (11); $2.50 cover.

Shirley Jones and Jack Cassidy win over a cold dinner crowd in a fast varied 40 minutes at the Fairmont's big Venetian Room.

This is a fully integrated husband-and-wife act, occasionally sentimental without becoming mawkish; extremely funny in part; allowing each half of the act equal billing and work, yet dovetailing each solo into the act gracefully. It pays off in an ovation.

Cassidy opens, solo, with a brief "Have You Met Miss Jones," thus bringing on his wife, in a low-cut white gown. They do a couple of short duets and a small softshoe, and Miss Jones then does "Spring Fever" solo. Cassidy returns for a fine solo, "Trouble in River City," and Miss Jones, having changed to a handsome black-and-red gown, comes back on to join him in an excellent duet of "Bess, You Is My Woman Now." He soloes on "That's For Me," giving Miss Jones time to change to a coral-and-white dress, in which she does a medley of five songs from "Oklahoma" and "Carousel."

The two sing the specialty, "We Like Those Late, Late Shows," and proceed to do them funny song-and-dance takeoffs on Dick Powell & Ruby Keeler, Fred Astaire & Ginger Rogers and Jeanette McDonald & Nelson Eddy. Each requires quick changes, with pianist-conductor Harry Froman and Ernie Heckscher's orch accompanying superbly. Pair wind up with a pretty duet, "Goodnight. Till We See You Again," and this all-pro, 40-minute show finishes, to big applause. Show runs through July 29.

Gay 90's, S. F.

San Francisco, July 7.

Ray K. Goman, Bee & Ray Goman jr., Diamond Lil, Sharon Apel, Joy Healy Dancers (4), Dick Keegan Orch with Elliston Ames; $1-$1.50 cover.

The Gomans, father, mother and comic-son, come up with a sharp, well-paced show built around a carny theme and get excellent audience reaction for their efforts —good business, too.

Ray, Sr., intros show and then Diamond Lil, a 200-pound blonde belter, knocks out "Alexander's Ragtime Band," "Oceana Roll" and "A Good Man Nowadays Is Hard to Find." Ray, Sr., follows with his usual strong banjo medley and Bee comes on with a funny, blue songalog, followed by a mentalist bit.

Ray K. next does his very funny pitchman act — he is a standup comic who is slick in his handling of the inevitable hecklers: Ray K. never gets sore, always dishes out better than he takes and invariably has audience pulling with him.

The three Gomans and the very shapely blonde, Sharon Apel, whip through a couple of quartet specialties and Miss Apel and the Joy Healy Dancers come on with a tasteful "dance of the seven veils" in which subdued lighting allows Miss Apel to get very bare, indeed, without provoking the cops.

Whole cast winds 64-minute show in a pleasant, hammed up finale, with even pianist Elliston Ames getting in on act.

Show runs through Sept. 2.

Eddys', K. C.

Kansas City, July 10.

Johnny (Scat) Davis Orch (7) with Cindy Lane, Bob Hall; $1, $1.50 cover.

One of the pleasant surprises of the summer season is this date of Johnny Davis and his crew in the deluxe Eddy Restaurant. Although he is an old hand in the orch biz in these parts, Davis hasn't been here in years. He has a solid little group, and the 50-minute show they mount is nothing short of sock. The regular Tommy Reed orch is vacationing the fortnight, and Davis and group both do the two shows nightly and play for dancing.

Nucleus of the crew is reedman Jimmy Nuzzo and his outfit, including drummer Tony Papa, baritone sax Skinny Miller, pianist Dick Baldridge, bassist Roger Wernert, trombonist Harry Stover, and vocalists Cindy Lane and Bob Hall have recently been added. Since each of the group is virtually a soloist in his own right, the jazz level is steady and the entertainment strong through every minute of the show. There's the intro by Davis with his trademarked "Hooray for Hollywood," and several more standards. The "Beguine" with Jimmy Nuzzo is a high-spot of reedwork, and pace is kept high with Miss Lane vocalling "All of Me" as a catchy rhythm number. She's a slick chick and adds a much-needed element to the troupe. Bob Hall warbles a pair of tunes in fine style, Tony Papa beats out hot licks to "Caravan," Jimmy Nuzzo is back for "Baby, Baby," and Skinny Miller has a comic session with "Charley Brown, He's a Clown." Crew winds with a march around the hall to "When the Saints Go Marching In."

Stand here runs through July 23, after which the crew breaks for Vegas and an opening at the Sahara Lounge July 28.

Gatineau, Ottawa

Ottawa, July 4.

Bernie Foyer presentation of "The Follies of Yesterday," with Elaine Rogers, Roy Bennett, Eve Lombard, Doug Rogers, Barbara Kenny, Carl Conway, Irene Deau, Eddie Erickson, Claudia Curtis, Patricia Ruhl, Caroline Worth; staged by Ted Cappy; written by Bob Berntsein, Harold Beebe, B. Reyof; music director, Leo Russottp; Russ Thomas Orch (8); $1 admission.

Bernie Foyer's "The Follies of Yesterday" is in the Gatineau Club for its second appearance, the first being last November when it was preeming in niteries. Current performance shows plenty of work on all angles plus several new faces in the cast. Format is basically the same: a string of solid impressions of legends of show business, including Lillian Russell, Nora Bayes & Jack Norworth, Anna Held, Chauncey Olcott, the Castles, Jenny Lind, Elsie Janis, Eva Tanguay and George M. Cohan. These are not caricatures but serious apings in both sight and sound. Ability of the apers as chanters and terpers in their own right shines through, adding to the strength of the stint.

Besides the impressions, Foyer inserts a pair of specialty numbers, one kidding the showgirls of the past, the other roaring into the '20s with "The Vamp," plus socko opening and closing full-cast items. Closer has the chirpers tossing the songs to the customers for participation, using w.k. turn-of-the-century standards for big impact. Tribute to show biz standouts of the past, cleffed by B. Reyof, is a clicko tune deserving disking.

Foyer has a unique unit in his "Follies" that sends the customers away happy. Show, batoned by Leo Russotto, is backed by the Gatineau's house band, the Russ Thomas crew, which also plays for dancing.

Interlude, Hollywood

Hollywood, July 7.

Shelley Berman, Bobby Short, Dancing Waters; $1.50 cover.

The likes of Shelley Berman they like in this loft of lofty humor edged in purplish innuendo. To the average pub crawler he's someone out of leftfield, withal a gifted storyteller. His material and delivery serve well the taste and favor of this clientele, for not to appreciate him with vociferous guffaws is an open admission of not belonging. It's a good double bill that Don Norman has forged for the Sunset beat buffs, that of Berman upstairs and Frances Fay ground-floored.

Berman has a style that is not uncommon in this intimate arena where from his stool he is only a step away from the ringsiders. By turns he's zany and pseudo-intellectual, supplementing his vocal buffoonery with facial contortions. His orgy of drinking and the mental jottings of his hangover is delightful comedy and more on the common level, so much so that he's done it in his tv guestings. The PTA bit, with planted help from the sitters, transcends good taste with constant reference to the unniceties of sex and the bathroom. He laid it on thick and the hepsters, who frequent this forum of fun, gave noisy evidence of their complete approbation. This is no place for squares and your prissy aunt.

To storm up the bar trade, Bobby Short whacks a mean beat on the horse teeth and thunders his songs with a bounce off the low ceiliing. He's an adept performer and gives his repertoire of songs a rich mixture. When the crowd got too noisy he just up and quit until the bedlam subsided. The syncopated Dancing Waters form a shimmery curtain for the disrobing by a nymph just this side of the law but no more daring than at the beach. For what's left of the nitery business, this is a provocative slice of entertainment for the nightowls who roam the county strip.

Living Room, N. Y.

Dan Segal's eastside emporium has long been the scene of turnaway business. It's a comfortable spot, dimly lit for intimacy, with easy chairs and low cocktail tables to provide the feeling that one's imbibing in the privacy of home.

Lately, Segal has been getting a more widely known brand of performer. He has had some jazz toppers, and now has come in with Eileen Barton, a lady with a large voice who has worked top rooms around the country. It's a change of pace for all parties concerned. It's practical experience in the smalleries for the singer, and the management can learn whether big voices can be kept under control here, so that he may get a wider variety of entertainment. That too is possible.

Miss Barton is still not at home in the transformation. There was one instant when she failed to take the mike to her perch atop the piano, and she sounded just right for the room. Miss Barton, on her opening night, was a little confused as to pitch and as to repertoire for this room, but there's little doubt that she can make out excellently here. Her magnum opus at show caught is a medley of products of some of the top composers. She can do well here once she gets the range.

Other singer on the bill is Jacques Kayal, a chanteur from France who divides his time among several languages. Seated at the piano, Kayal has an intimate style eminently suited for cocktaileries and provides a light atmosphere to the spot.

The Jack Kelly Trio, with Kelly presiding at the piano, and backed by bass and drum, provides music with high listenability. Kelly plays an inventive and imaginative piano, and gives excellent support to acts as well.

Slate Bros., L. A.

Los Angeles, July 3.

Dave Gardner, Trudy Stabile, The Players (4); 2-drink minimum.

Dave Gardner, who's folksy a la Andy Griffith and with the razor-sharp glibness of Mort Sahl, bowed into the Slate Bros. La Cienega nitery Friday (26). While his name, aside from being billed as a Bob Hope find, has no draw, it's going to be the difference of opinion via word-of-mouth that'll keep the barbelles here hustling.

Gardner is way out. His humble southern approach will catch 'em off guard and looks to have the magnetism to pull in plenty of Yankee dollars. There are whose who won't dig this standup comic and with cause. His material comes across like a political speech; it's baffling. But to those who are partial to the school of iconoclasts —he's great.

He indulges in talk about Elvis Presley, beats the bongos, makes weird sounds, pulls an Yma Sumac, and warbles songs you never heard of. One thing is certain, Gardner will pull them back—even if it's just to figure him out.

Trudy Stabile's vocal bow comes off well enough to insure her future saloon dates. She shows plenty of savvy while belting such familiar pops as "Let's Fall In Love," "Just In Time" and "Smoke Gets In Your Eyes."

The Players (4) make plenty of musical noise with a sax, piano, guitar and drums to add the proper effect here. Henry Slate bounces on and off stage as emcee in his usual manner while brother Sid greets the rounders and eyes the register.

Chaudiere, Ottawa

Ottawa, July 11.

Diamonds (4), Lenny Collyer, Garrick Twins, Bob Arlen Dancers (5), Harry Pozy Orch (8); $1 admission.

The Diamonds, one of the vocal foursomes from Toronto who have done okay in show business, are in the Chaudiere Club with two new members, a tenor from Hollywood, a bass from Seattle. Their sound is basically the same but the quality has improved. Group shows sense in retaining a bass, unique among male chirp groups today, and give the deep voice plenty of chores in the act.

Same 90-minute bill has comic Lenny Collyer getting great guffaws with a slick Guzzler's Gin item plus gab and chant comedy. A hard-working comic, Collyer gets into the blue at times but has nice material in general and sends it over for good returns. Garrick Twins are cute blond identicals who work the inevitable mirror bit, then get down to business with a string of solid acro items. Show is here to July 18.

Shows Abroad

Once More, With Feeling

London, July 10.

Robin Fox Partnership (in association with Henry Margolis and Martin Gabel) presentation of three-act (five scenes) comedy by Harry Kurnitz. Stars John Neville, Dorothy Tutin, Martin Miller. Staging, Robert Morley; decor, Roger Furse. Opened July 9, '59, at the New Theatre, London; $2.80 top.

Chester Stamm	Jeremy Burnham
Gendels	Ernst Ulman
Victor Fabian	John Neville
Maxwell Archer	Martin Miller
Luigi Bardini	Robert Ayres
Mr. Wilbur	James Dyrenforth
Dolly	Dorothy Tutin
Richard Hillard	Maurice Durant

Harry Kurnitz is an adroit writer who's free with wisecracks, but "Once More, with Feeling" gives the impression that the gag came first and the play was built around it. At intermittent intervals the show is hilariously funny, but the pace is uneven and the construction is shapeless. Its marquee strength may help it for a moderate run.

Apart from the structural weaknesses of the comedy, it suffers also from some miscasting. John Neville, a distinguished Shakespearian actor, is hardly the best choice for the role of the tempestuous orchestra conductor. He makes a valiant effort and at times almost succeeds in suggesting the egomaniac that the author obviously had in mind.

Dorothy Tutin also is a dubious selection for the only femme role, but she improves progressively as the play develops and, by the time the third act comes around, has more or less happily settled in.

The one piece of inspired casting in the production is the choice of Martin Miller to play the impresario. Admittedly, he has all the best lines, but he never misses a trick and gives a thoroughly diverting and amusing portrayal. He dominates the stage in every scene in which he appears and his performance is indicative of the potentialities of the subject as a film vehicle.

The remainder of the cast is adequate, with James Dyrenforth neatly suggesting the chairman of the board of governors desperately trying to persuade the conductor to include "The Star-Spangled Banner" in his opening program. Ernst Ulman happily interprets the role of the violinist who has been assaulted by the conductor.

Robert Morley has directed the comedy with vigor and plays up the laugh lines. In one way, that contributes to the uneven tempo of the piece. The various sets designed by Roger Furse fit the bill admirably. Myro.

Roots

London, July 1.

The English Stage Company's presentation of the Coventry Belgrade Theatre in a play in three acts (four scenes) by Arnold Wesker. Stars Joan Plawright. Staged by John Dexter; decor, Jocelyn Herbert. At Royal Court Theatre, London, June 30, '59. $2.25 top.

Jenny Beales	Patsy Byrne
Jimmy Beales	Charles Kay
Beatie Bryant	Joan Plowright
Stan Mann	Patrick O'Connell
Mrs. Bryant	Gwen Nelson
Mr. Bryant	Jack Rodney
Mr. Healey	Richard Martin
Frankie Bryant	Alan Howard
Pearl Bryant	Brenda Peters

First staged at Coventry's Belgrade Theatre, "Roots" has very properly earned transfer to the Royal Court. But despite a wonderfully vital performance by Joan Plowright and confirmation of the skill and potential of author Arnold Wesker, its downbeat theme makes it a dubious prospect for a run in the West End despite the current vogue for down-to-earth realism vogue for down-to-earth realism. that in 27-year-old Wesker there is yet another name to add to the growing list of young playwrights with something to say and the know-how to say it. Wesker scored with his first play, "Chicken Soup With Barley," and "Roots" proves again that he will be a force with which to reckon. However, he has elected to write about a drab family deliberately saying dull things, and one of the most difficult things to do in the theatre is to present bores without actually boring the audience. Wesker has not yet sufficient skill to achieve this and as a result there are many flat passages, particularly in the first two acts.

"Roots" concerns a family of rural Norfolk cottagers visited by their daughter who left home a couple of years earlier for the bright lights of London, where she has been having an affaire with a young intellectual. He has obviously been trying to pump some pseudo-philosophy into her brain, which has long been resistant owing to her mundane upbringing. The family are waiting to meet their daughter's young man, but in the end he jilts her. Nevertheless she discovers that though one can't cast off one's family roots it is possible to develop a freedom of thought that is independent of them.

Miss Plowright, one of Britain's most intelligent young actresses, finds it difficult to cope with some of the earlier scenes where she tries to "educate" her family but rises magnificently to the occasion in the third act. Her final sequence when she suddenly finds that she can talk and think without the guidance of the young man whom the audience never sees is dramatic and moving theatre. Miss Plowright's vivid personality shines throughout in the drabness around her.

There are a number of other good performances, too. Gwen Nelson is splendid as the mother, bewildered at her daughter, but defiantly clinging to her own standards, however, small and dreary. Patsy Byrne, Jack Rodney and Alan Howard are others who impress as members of the family of banal small-talkers.

John Dexter's direction is well in the mood of the author and effectively sustains audience interest in a family so dull and out of touch with anything but the mundane that it is little wonder that a girl as lively as Miss Plowright's Beatie Bryant sould seek escape. Jocelyn Herbert's settings are also in key with the general air of flatness that the author has contrived, often too successfully, to convey. Rich.

Ages of Man

London, July 9.

Tennent Productions presentation of solo Shakespearian recital, starring John Gielgud. Opened July 8, '59, at the Queen's Theatre, London; $2.80 top.

The Queen's Theatre, bombed and gutted in 1940, has been rebuilt at an estimated cost of $700,000 and has reopened as the first new West End theatre in 28 years. John Gielgud, pre-war actor-manager at the theatre, appropriately launches its new lease of life with a three-week engagement in "Ages Of Man." This is the solo Shakespearian recital with which he has been a b.o. hit in both Edinburgh and the U.S.

Gielgud's performance is not only a standout feat of memory but an exciting, emotional experience. Sans costumes or props, he stands for nearly two hours on a stage bare except for red tabs and a reading table holding a script to which he gives only token attention. With dignity, fervor and a sly sense of humor he gives us soliloquies, sonnets and snippets representing Shakespeare in every mood from the tragic to the roguish.

Gielgud's noble instrument of a voice gives musical lustre to Shakespeare's verse. He is probably Britain's most distinguished Shakespearian actor and his understanding and obvious love of the Bard's work comes over the footlights superbly. He wastes no word or nuance and so even the more familiar speeches take on a fresh significance.

The evening is split into three phases, roughly embracing Youth, Manhood and Old Age. A whole gallery of Shakespeare's characters are paraded majestically by the performer. Not only does he extract every ounce of music from Shakespeare's brave verse, but he also acts the roles. Hamlet's soliloquies, the jealous speech of Leontes, the tragic crumbling of Lear, the lovesick romance of Romeo, Prospero, Richard II, Cassius, all come to life through the dedicated skill of the star. Not least satisfying are the brief, illuminating links with which Gielgud blends the pattern of his smooth offering.

This rewarding theatrical experience will be a sellout during its brief stay at the Queen's and could profitably run for much longer. Rich.

Der Schulfreund
(The School-Mate)

Berlin, May 13.

Schosspark Theatre production of play in 12 scenes, by Johannes Mario Simmel. Staged by Albert Bessler. Settings by Wilhelm Reinking. Technical supervision, Franz Gehrke. Preemed at Schlosspark Theatre, Berlin, on May 12. $3 top.

Ludwig Fuchs	Karl Hellmer
Rosl	Ilse Page
Paul Keller	Konstantin Paloff
Hauptmann Sander	Herbert Wilk
Hauptmann Kuehn	Siegmar Schneider
Professor Strohbach	Walter Tarrach
Doctor Lerch	Kurt Buecheler
Frau Wenzel	Else Ehser
Housemaster	Werner Stock
Frau Sander	Gudrun Genest
Frau Kuehn	Else Reuss

The German stage nowadays suffers from a lack of new native plays. So if a new author comes along with a new play and latter emerges as a success in the big cities, it is likely to be heartily accepted.

Such is the case with "School-Mate," Johannes Mario Simmel's initial stagework. The 35-year old author (established as novelist and screenwriter) may deserve the compliment of being "discovered" as a playwright.

Play is both humanly and politically interesting and of wide appeal. Its plot (incidentally, a true story) centers around a common German mailman. He lives in Vienna under Nazis, is a member of the Hitler Party, but not a bad man. He hides a Jewish boy in his home and so saves him from being sent to a concentration camp.

During the war as circumstances worsen, he suddenly remembers that Hermann Goering, head of Hitler's Luftwaffe, was once his school-mate whom he occasionally helped on his school works. So the little man gets set and writes a letter to the powerful Nazi which reads about like this: Please let the Jews in peace and make an end to this senseless war.

Such a letter could easily have gotten its sender liquidated, but Goering learns of it and saves his former pal by having him declared deranged. Thus the mailman as a "mentally sick man" may shout and rail at Hitler as much as he pleases without trouble.

Work gets a good interpretation at the Berlin Schlosspark Theatre under direction of Albert Bessler. Top honors go to Karl Hellmer whose lovable portrayal of the mailman is memorable. Other outstanding performances: Herbert Wilk and Siegmar Schneider as two Luftwaffen officers, Walter Tarrach and Kurt Buecheler as psychiatrists, and Werner Stock in a particularly effective study of a Nazi follower who later becomes the most "innocent" man on earth. Wilhelm Reinking created the settings with professional style. Hans.

Backed by the Bermuda Government as part of celebration of the 350th anniversary of the island's discovery, "This Island's Mine," a new play by U.S. author Constance Bainbridge, has opened for nine-day run in new outdoor theatre built in semi-round Elizabethan causerina trees and oleanders.

Shakespeare's "Tempest" is framework of play. It is thought Bard gained inspiration for "Tempest" from reports of the shipwreck of Admiral Sir George Somers who was washed ashore 350 years ago on Bermuda. Author has developed semi-mystery story theme of Shakespeare's learning of the wreck and dreaming about his last play before returning to Stratford-upon-Avon.

Play opens with the Bard in London tavern, trying for new inspiration when he hears song by strolling balladman telling about shipwreck and meets two drunken sailors who survived the sinking on the Bermudas. Prodded by his two leading actors, Burbage and Hemmings, he resolves to write new play as his last effort.

Author has developed a little known facet of Shakespeare's life with careful research and her use of the ancient idiom has re-

Dig We Must . . .

East Hampton, N.Y., July 7.

Guild Hall presentation of Ronald Rawson production of two-act (16 numbers) revue; sketches and lyrics, Ira Wallach; music, David Baker. General staging, Ruth Rawson; musical direction, John Morris; staging of musical numbers, Edmund Balin; settings, Bill Ritman; costumes, William Hargate; lighting, Dan Butt; piano accompaniment, John Morris, David Baker. Opened July 6, '59, at the John Drew Theatre, East Hampton, N.Y. Cast: Stars Alice Ghostley, Paul Lynde; features Gerald Hiken, Eileen Rodgers, John Bartis, Bob Dishy, Evelyn Russell.

Ronald Rawson has opened his 1959 season at East Hampton's John Drew Theatre with a revue that offers, a better than average sampling of scripting, acting and composing talent. "Dig We Must—" takes its title from the sawhorse motto of the Con Edison crews ripping up the midtown sidewalks "for a growing New York," and the revue presents its sketches as slices of 20th century Manhattan life as reconstructed by archaeologists of a future age.

Most ambitious and most successful offering is "The Headstrong Heart," a musical mixture of Shakespeare and "Marjorie Morningstar," in which Ira Wallach's clever pen, David Baker's music and the talents of the cast are shown to excellent advantage. Other notable bright spots are "Subliminality," a novel application of subliminal advertising techniques to a domestic triangle; "Duet for Five People," a tuneful, sophisticated dissertation on the blessings of familial togetherness; and "The Putnams of Westport," a song-history whose tongue-tripping lyrics place it in the class of a vocal tour de force.

Hi-fi addiction, parent-child relations, the credit card craze, the Democratic party's search for a leader, modern office efficiency and off-Broadway theatre (in the form of an "off-Bellevue" operation) are also lampooned with results ranging from fair to good.

Alice Ghostley and Paul Lynde, alumni of "New Faces of 1952," are star-billed in the excellent seven-person cast. Miss Ghostley is a skilled comedienne whose singing voice scores in straight ballads as well as comic ditties. Her admirable rendition of "The Putnams" shows her at her talented best. Lynde, with face that seems on the point of exploding, mugs his way in high style through a number of sketches, holds his own in the song stints and registers in a hilarious sales pitch for the "People's Digest."

Among the featured players, Evelyn Russell scores as the chief distaff support in the sketches and as a comedienne in her own right; and Eileen Rodgers, a full-voiced, full-figured singer, impresses as a real comer. Gerald Hiken, John Bartis, and Bob Dishy fill the many featured male assignments expertly. Bartis also rates praise for a well-turned singing voice.

Wallach and Baker's sprightly, interesting score is—with the exception of two numbers, "Just Us" and "Silent Heart"—tailored specifically to the requirements of the revue and has little chance of being heard outside of that format. "Heart," a fine showcase for Miss Rodgers' warm-throated warbling, may offer some promise as a recording.

The production benefits from the savvy direction of Ruth Rawson which maintains a brisk, but never frantic pace throughout. John Morris' musical direction, Bill Ritman's colorful, facile settings, Dan Butt's lighting, William Hargate's costumes and Edmund Balin's staging of the musical numbers are also credit items.

Though not sufficiently fleshed out at the moment, "Dig" offers considerably more than the bare bones of a successful Manhattan-style revue. Hank.

Abingdon, Va., June 30.

Robert Porterfield presentation of a new three act (six scene) drama by Pat Hale, starring Steven Phillips and William Corrie, and featuring Delores Robinson, Walta Chandler, James E. Mrs. Bradley	Anne Ives

The point of this play, which deals with the conflict of religious concepts and moral values in an isolated Southern mountain community, is obscure. The playwright has presented a minister, divinity-schooled, at odds with a faith-healing revivalist.

What gets through is the pastor's realization that his competition has the common touch, and is able to give momentary happiness to his followers. Moreover, the man who houses his religion in a tent is big enough to not ask God for the miracle of life when he has been shot and is dying.

Opening night the actors didn't help any of thi sby muffing lines. Steven Phillips gives the outstanding performance well paced, dignified, mighty in his anger, frustrated in his envy.

The part of the revivalist as written is like no revivalist most people have seen. His lines lack the fervor and hysteria so typical. William Corrie plays it this way. and his faith healings come off badly.

Delores Robinson is a little wild-eyed as the minister's wife. Walta Chandler is pretty and shows signs of development as an actress. As the fickle girl whose soul is sought by both religious men, she gives an adequate performance.

Both George Fontaine and James E. Brodhead give excellent characterizations in smaller roles as does Anne Ives and Phyllis Haddix.

The settings are simple, conveying the front porch of the minister's home and the tent where the revival conducted. Color is used excellently for mood and story emphasis.

And director Graham Jarvis has established pace. Marg.

Twelfth Night

Boston, July 10.

Cambridge Drama Festival presentation of three-act comedy by William Shakespeare, with incidental music by Andre Singer. Direction, Herbert Berghof; decor, Lester Polakov; artistic supervision, Michael Wager. Stars Siobhan McKenna, Zachary Scott; features George Mathews, Michael Wager, Geoffrey Holder, Tammy Grimes, Patricia Cutts, Fritz Weaver, Frederick O'Neal, Alvin Epstein, Russell Oberlin. Opened July 9, '59, at the Metropolitan Boston Arts Center Theatre, Boston; $4.50 top.

Feste	Alvin Epstein
Singing Zany	Russell Oberlin
Dancing Zany	Geoffrey Holder
Orsino	Zachary Scott
Curio	Grant Reddick
Valentine	Robert Elston
Orsino's Servant	Robert Packer
Viola	Siobhan McKenna
Sea Captain	Michael Constantine
Sailor	Dan O'Shea
Maria	Tammy Grimes
Sir Toby Belch	George Mathews
Sir Andrew Augecheek	Michael Wager
Olivia	Patricia Cutts
Malvolio	Fritz Weaver
Olivia's Attendants	Marjorie Butterworth, Fay Tracey, Mae Marmy
Fabian	John Karlen
Sebastian	William Daniels
Antonio	Frederick O'Neal
Officers	Lee Richardson, Jerry Silberman
Priest	Tony Kraber

This jazzed up version of "Twelfth Night" was the opener for the 1,800-seat Metropolitan Boston Arts Center Theatre on the Charles River. In the current vogue for having fun with Shakespeare, director Herbert Berghof has put together an imaginative production with wit and vitality. Two characters, new to Shakespeare, a dancing zany and a singing zany, enhance the entertainment.

With original music by Andre Singer, this "Twelfth Night" has rollicking appeal. The acting is sound. Siobhan McKenna is a charming Viola and Zachary Scott a dignified Orsino. Fritz Weaver is standout as Malvolio, and George Mathews scores with a low comedy portrayal of Sir Toby Belch. Tammy Grimes bounds about amusingly as Maria.

Blonde looker Patricia Cutts is soothingly sprightly as Olivia. Long and lean Geoffrey Holder as the dancing zany, and Russell Oberlin as the singing zany add to the delights of an interesting evening. Michael Wager turns in a slick performance as the doltish Sir Andrew Augecheek. Alvin Epstein plays the clown to the hilt.

Berghof has done a standout job in staging the play, although some of the poetry and profundity of Shakespeare is glossed over, if not lost. In this version, among the highlights is a rowdy drunk scene in which the comics sing "Twelfth of December," almost in a rock 'n' roll vein. All in all, the show keeps the audience laughing.

The three quarters arena stage, with high spreading platforms and long stair cases and telephone poles on which the comics chamber, is an ideal setting, and Lester Polakov's decor has vivid color splashes and glowing pastel tints. As the first of three Shakespeare productions in a 10-week festival, in a tent rushed to completion to make the opening, it augers well. Guy.

Walter Matthau and Kathleen Maguire will appear with Orson Bean in next week's tryout of Robert J. Asherman's "The Dragon Slayer" at the John Drew Theatre, East Hampton, L. I.

Claim Understudy Wouldn't Go On; Tunetent Bringing Equity Charges

Washington, July 14.

Rosecroft Music Circus, climaxing a thorny opening month, is drafting a formal complaint to Actors Equity council charging Norma Donaldson with refusing to perform the lead in "Jamaica" and asking $2,500 in damages, according to producer John Schaefer.

The new tent, eight miles out of town at Oxon Hill, Md., had to cancel the Friday (10) and Sunday (12) performances of "Jamaica," and make refunds, both times after the audience had arrived. Schaefer says $2,400 was involved Friday and about $2,500 Sunday. He will seek to get back the Sunday money through his complaint to Equity.

The illness of the original star, Abbey Lincoln, caused the Friday calloff. Schaefer reveals that he plans no complaint against Miss Lincoln, although he expressed annoyance that she waited until "five minutes" before curtain time to decide finally that she was too ill to perform.

Since Miss Lincoln, who had played the lead since the June 30 opening, evidently couldn't recover her health for the final three performances (two Saturday, one Sunday), Miss Donaldson was picked as the wind-up understudy.

Judge Says Equity May Sue Theatre League To Force Pension Confabs

The dispute between Actors Equity and the League of N.Y. Theatres over the inclusion of a pension plan in the union's demands for increased welfare benefits is subject to trial. That was ruled last week by N.Y. Supreme Court Justice Vincent A. Lupiano, who decided the matter was not arbitrable because the meaning of welfare in the agreement covering such negotiations between the two organizations "is not precise and free from differing views."

The situation stems from Equity's pitch for pension benefits in welfare negotiations reopened by the union with the League a few months ago under a clause in the basic contract between the two organizations. The League, however, refused to discuss a pension setup on the ground that the agreement with Equity for the reopening of welfare negotiations does not include the introduction of such a plan.

The League, in support of its stand, also refused to arbitrate the matter. Equity thereupon brought the legal action, which resulted in the decision by Justice Lupiano. Under the ruling, the union is enabled to bring suit to force the producer-theatre operator group to negotiate the pension demand. If Equity should win a court trial of that issue, the League would then have to negotiate the matter.

The present Equity-League contract is due to expire next May 31, but negotiations for a new agreement would presumably be started a month or two before that date.

Select Ruth Roman For Chi's Sarah Siddons Nod

Chicago, July 14.

Ruth Roman has been voted as giving the best feminine performance in Chicago during the 1958-59 season. The citation was made by the local Sarah Siddons Society, which has been conferring the award for the past seven years. Miss Roman, who won for her performance in the touring company of "Two For the Seesaw," will be presented with a "Sarah" statuette in the fall.

Runners up, in order, were Diana Barrymore for "Garden District," Constance Bennett for "Auntie Mame" and Claudia McNeil for "A Raisin in the Sun." Balloting was done by members of the society, who are described as "first nighters, critics and drama devotees." Sarah Siddons membership is largely from the Social Register.

Past winners of the award are Anne Rogers, Deborah Kerr, Beatrice Lillie, Nancy Kelly, Shirley Booth and Helen Hayes.

Comden-Green Have New Musical Show for B'way

Paris, July 14.

Adolph Green is in, savoring the local atmosphere for a book show he will write with Betty Comden. Green and Miss Comden will star in this when it is due to hit Broadway in 1960. Green states that the success racked up by his two-people show with Miss Comden led to the decision for them to star in a regular book musical.

He also hops to London where he will finalize a West End appearance with Miss Comden in their two-person show. On his first trip over in years Green cracked that he saw by the posters that the French went for a lot of American stars like Maurice Chevalier, Edith Piaf, Marcel Marceau and Robert Dhery.

'Gazebo' Had 31G Deficit on B'way

"The Gazebo" ended a 28-week Broadway run June 20 with a $31,192 deficit on a $75,000 investment. That's revealed in a June 27 accounting, covering the last three weeks of the run, plus closing expenses.

The Alec Coppel comedy-mystery is scheduled to resume as a touring entry next Aug. 1 in Central City, Colorado. Tom Ewell and Jan Sterling will costar in the roles originated on Broadway by Walter Slezak and Jayne Meadows. The June 27 audit does not disclose the amount of money, if any, received by the Playwrights Co.-Frederick Brisson production on the sale of film rights to Metro.

According to the audit, the backers have thus far been repaid $34,200 on their $75,000 investment. During the show's final three weeks on Broadway the weekly grosses ranged from $11,791 to $15,139. Coppel waived his entire royalty on the lowest-grossing frame, while director Jerome Chodorov took a 75% royalty cut on that stanza.

TEXAS GROUP AIMING TOURS IN NORTHWEST

Houston, July 14.

National Variety Players has been formed here to present touring shows in small towns throughout the Pacific northwest, the south and the midwest. The organization is headed by Mitzi Wayne and Jim Mendenhall, coproducers of the local Playhouse Theatre, and Russell K. Barron, president of Variety International Productions, which will book the tours.

The local Playhouse will be the springboard for the venture. Talent for the touring ventures will be recruited from the Houston area and will be developed and supplied by the Playhouse. Tours by at least three NVP companies are planned for the fall. "The Moon is Blue," which recently ended a lengthy run at the Playhouse, is scheduled to launch the project the latter part of August at the Olympia Theatre, Washington.

Tours of 12 weeks between September and December are contemplated for each company to be followed by another 12-week cycle after a Christmas holiday layoff. The producers estimate the three companies will cover 35 states during the fall and winter tours.

Woolf Players in 'Game' Do Quick Fold, Boston

Boston, July 14.

After a single week of "Fair Game," with Benny Adler, the Stanley Woolf Players folded at the 300-seat Charles Playhouse, billed as Boston Summer Theatre. Plans for a nine-week season of stock were abandoned after poor reviews and skimpy biz.

Frank Sugrue, who operated the Charles Players during the winter season in an off-Broadway operation and presented the Woolf Players, is planning to continue the playhouse.

Chinatown Come-On

San Francisco, July 14.

Broadway's "Flower Drum Song," is using a 24-sheet poster 3,000 miles from Broadway to advertise the musical.

Unveiled recently was a big Foster & Kleiser billboard in the heart of Frisco's Chinatown. It reads:

"When in New York, See 'Flower Drum Song'."

Handling the unveiling was Ken Wong, city editor of Frisco's bilingual Chinese World, who replaced "Flower Drum Song" author C. Y. Lee in the newspaper job. Lee was on hand, too.

N.Y. Pressagents Make Autonomy Move in ATPAM

The N. Y. pressagents chapter of the Theatrical Pressagents & Managers has moved to exercise what it regards as its contractual right to autonomy in the union. That is indicated by the recent passage of two resolutions by the chapter.

The proposals were adopted on the basis that the contract covering the p.a. chapter's entry into the union in 1938 gives it autonomy in formulating its own working rules and in all matters "except in the instances of dues, assessments and strike calls." It's believed to be the first time the publicists have sought to exercise the independent status granted them in the contract.

The chapter's recognition of its autonomy is reflected in the passage of a resolution that its members serving as general press representatives be accorded the same privileges extended by the union to general managers. That, in effect, permits a Broadway pressagent, employed as a general p.a. on a touring show, to service the production from his New York headquarters.

The resolution obviously stems from the union's stand in blocking publicist William Fields from servicing the Ringling Bros., Barnum & Bailey Circus on tour because he was headquartered in New York and not traveling with the show. In line with that specific situation, the pressagents also recommended to the union's board of governors that in ATPAM's negotiations with the circus next year the contract include a provision permitting the circus to assign one of the required pressagents in New York while the show is on tour.

Silvers-Spina Musical Set for Coast and B'way

Los Angeles, July 14.

Sid Silvers and Harold Spina have collaborated on new stage musical, "Cops and Robbers," to be presented on the Coast by Glorioso Productions on a $300,000 budget in contemplation of a transfer to Broadway next February.

The musical is to premiere in San Francisco in November, followed by a stand in L.A. before heading east.

Sked Genevieve 'Can-Can' For Central Park Date

French singer Genevieve, who's making a career of starring in "Can-Can" out of town, will appear in the musical in New York. The show is scheduled to play a two-week run, opening Aug. 25, in Central Park as part of the Hudson Celebration Theatre-in-the-Park summer program.

The songstress, a frequent performer on the Jack Paar tv show, established a record gross in "Can-Can" last summer for the Kenley Players, Warren, O. She subsequently repeated the stint in a 10-city fall tour and has already appeared in the musical this summer for two weeks (June 22-July 4) at the Carousel Theatre, Framingham, Mass.

Besides the upcoming Central Park date, she's skedded to do the same show Aug. 3 at the Warren Theatre, Atlantic City, with a stand at the Warwick (R.I.) Musical Theatre scheduled to follow.

Offer Keith's as D.C. Civic Legiter; Cultural Center, National Angles

By LES CARPENTER

Washington, July 14.

The RKO-operated 1,850-seat Keith's Theatre may be turned over to the city of Washington as a municipal showplace for live performances by December, 1961, under an offer made by its owner, Morris Cafritz, multimillionaire builder-realtor and husband of noted hostess Gwen Cafritz. Cafritz says the RKO's lease expires next December, but there is an option for a two-year renewal.

Keith's, called Chase's when constructed 40-odd years ago, was originally a vaudeville house, one of the most lavish of the circuit in its day, but dropped live performances for straight films 25 years ago. Its ample stage (said to be larger than that of the city's only present legit theatre, the 1,650-seat National), orchestra pit and extensive dressing rooms have remained intact.

"Very little needs to be done to make it into a legitimate theatre," Cafritz asserts. "Washington needs another legitimate theatre. I have about $1,000,000 equity in Keith's, which I will turn over to the people of Washington if the house is to be operated for the presentation of the cultural arts (in live form). It would be ideal for operas and ballets, as well as plays and musicals.

The Cafritz offer followed a series of confusing statements by various civic leaders and members of Congress as to possible means of preventing the Sam S. Shubert Theatre, legit house gutted by fire last January, from being demolished for a parking lot. The Shu-

In-the-Round 'Rashomon' Set for Chi Strawhat

Chicago, July 14.

Herb Rogers is producing an in-the-round version of "Rashomon," the recent Broadway drama, at his Tenthouse Theatre in Highland Park, Ill. Sessue Hayakawa has been signed to star.

The show will be done the week of Aug. 3, plugging a booking gap that follows the two-week non-legit stand at the strawhatter by Louis Armstrong and his jazz group. Although Armstrong has cancelled a number of dates following his siege of pneumonia in Europe, Rogers has been assured by Associated Booking Corp. prexy Joe Glaser that the musician will keep his Tenthouse engagement.

'Gunman'-'Rivalry' $102,486 in Red

The Cheryl Crawford-Joel Schenker producing venture at the Bijou Theatre, N. Y., last season represents a deficit of nearly 70% on a $150,000 investment. Production activity in a planned three-play series at the house ceased April 18 with the close of the second presentation, "The Rivalry." The initial offering was "Shadow of a Gunman."

An accounting dated May 9, covering theatre expenses and the amount dropped on the two productions, both flops, lists total costs of $102,486. The balance of $47,514, subject to final financial adjustments, goes back to the investors, since the producers are not continuing the project. They had an option to renew their lease on the Bijou for the 1959-60 season, but didn't exercise it.

As reflected in the May 9 accounting, the loss on "Rivalry," which ran 10 weeks, was $55,306 and the loss on "Shadow," which ran seven weeks, was $47,048. The production company also had theatre expenses of $284 for watchmen's salaries from the time "The Rivalry" closed to the date of the audit. That brought the total costs to $102,638, which was reduced by income of $152, including revenue from the sale of "Shadow" stock rights.

MIRIAM HOWELL JOINS ASHLEY-STEINER AGCY.

Author's representative Miriam Howell has moved her writer client list into the Ted Ashley-Ira Steiner agency.

She's joined the percentary in a move that marks another major step in the firm's extension into the legit field. The agency, which originally concentrated on television and films, acquired a roster of stage talent last year when it acquired the Milton Goldman Agency and its performer clients.

The lineup of authors handled by Miss Howell includes John Patrick, Fay and Michael Kanin, Alec Coppel, William Marchant, Leonard Spigelgass, Guy Bolton and Henry and Phoebe Ephron. Performer clients include Margaret Sullavan.

Miss Howell's tieup with Ashley-Steiner is similar to the move made a few years ago by author rep Audrey Wood in joining Music Corp. of America. Incidentally, Herbert Gottlieb and Alden Schwimmer have become partners in the agency.

Equity Membership Was 10,712 for 1958-59 Year

Actors Equity had a total membership of 10,712 for the year ending last March 31. That's revealed in the annual report by the union's recording secretary, John Effrat. The tally for the period included 1,765 new members. The total membership for the previous year was 10,065.

Listed as new life members during the year were Peggy Cass, Gunnar Dahlberg, Burl Ives, Earl George, William Windom, Matt Briggs and Hilmar Sallee.

'Sunrise' Profit $52,605 After 70-Week B'way Run With Loss on Road Co.

"Sunrise at Campobello" had a $52,605 profit when it ended its 70-week Broadway run May 30. It's figured the Dore Schary drama increased that figure substantially during its six-week run at the National Theatre, Washington, ending last Saturday night (11). The Theatre Guild-Schary production is laying off until Sept. 10, when it resumes its tour with Ralph Bellamy continuing as star.

The financial status of the venture is covered in a May 30 accounting. As shown in previous audits, the unsuccessful touring company of the play, with Leif Erickson playing the pre-Presidential Franklin D. Roosevelt, represented a $84,197 loss. The latest statement also lists a $12,000 payment to Bellamy, representing the balance of a $24,000 purchase by the management of the star's 3% share of the profits of the production.

As of the accounting, the distributed profit was $45,000, of which the backers have received half, representing a 20.45% net return thus far on their $110,000 investment. Still to come, in addition to potential touring profit, is income from the film version of the drama, to be produced by Schary for Warner Bros. release.

May Restore Goodspeed Opera House, E. Haddam

Hartford, July 14.

Efforts are again being made to reopen the historic Goodspeed Opera House at East Haddam, on the Connecticut River about 35 miles southeast of here. The theatre, supposed to be a miniature reproduction of the Paris Opera House, has been used as a maintainance depot by the State Highway Dept. in recent years.

Pledges of $100,000 of a hoped-for $500,000 have reportedly been obtained to restore the 83-year-old building. The State Legislature recently appropriated $10,000 to repair the roof and paint the exterior over a five-year period.

Governor Ribicoff has indicated that the state would sell the opera house for a nominal sum to a nonprofit group which would help restore it as a cultural center. The Goodspeed Opera House Foundation was formed to carry out such a project. It would also operate a nearby hotel with restaurant and bar facilities.

State's Bureau of International Culture

Appoint Ex-Minister Thayer to Head New Exchange Information

Washington, July 14.

State Dept. has created a Bureau of International Cultural Relations to handle all international cultural and educational interchange, with Robert H. Thayer, former minister to Rumania, as chief officer.

To quote Thayer: "The element of human communications has become vital in the relationships of peoples and nations. We in the United States have become increasingly aware of the strength and validity of other peoples, and they are becoming more interested in understanding us. Cultural interchange furthers the kind of understanding we seek.

Thayer is designated a special assistant to the Secretary of State, a reorganizational move giving cultural pursuits the highest rank in the State Dep't.

Pamplona Pulsates With Hemingway and Gardner As Spurs to Gaiety

Pamplona, July 14.

Pamplona, capital city of Spain's province of Navarra, has been rightly compared to a bottle of champagne that goes off for a full week of undiluted merriment when the cork gets its annual pull on July 7 in honor of Pamplona's Saint Fermin.

Fiesta this year was no exception. If anything, the presence of Ernest Hemingway who immortalized the fete in "Sun Also Rises," and Ava Gardner who played the "Sun" role some years ago with Tyrone Power for 20th-Fox, challenged native San Ferminses to make Pamplona vibrate as never before.

Essence of the Pamplona Fair can be reduced to "bulls, botas and jotas." Any Navarran worth his chorizo somehow manages to spend a sleepless week getting an abundance of all three. Few stalwarts among the Yank fiesta hordes survive the drink, dance and tease-the-toro routine.

Bulls and bullfighting inspire the basic fever pitch among celebrants. Agile manipulation of the bota wine-skins produces the thin steady stream of tinto and claret that swells to a torrent melanging fever and buoyancy. Torros and grapejuice constitute week-long succor to flagging merrymakers who fill fiesta hours doing the whirling jota jig in the Plaza del Castillio.

While daily corridas form fest's conversation core—and this year ace toreodor faves Ordonnez, Chamaco, Curro Giron and Miguelin spurred mucho chatter—Pamplona's ancient San Fermin tradition gives bullfight fans a chance to see the "enemy" in action outside the bullring.

NEW CHI GROUP AIMS LOCAL-B'WAY SHOWS

Chicago, July 14.

Drama Group Workshop will attempt to produce a new play, "The American," dually in New York and Chicago this fall. Group avows to have the capital to mount the two productions almost simultaneously, with the Windy City getting the actual premiere in October and the Broadway opening intended a week or two later, depending on the availability of a theatre. Workshop has put in a bid for the Great Northern Theatre here, which is now owned by the federal government, and the booking is pending.

The Workshop opened its Chi branch a month ago and tapped a vein of Chi investors, the principal one being Mrs. Bryon Harvey Jr. of the Fred Harvey restaurant chain. Plans are to open additional branches in other major cities before long.

The play, concerning an American Indian struggling with the conflicts of his two cultures, was coauthored by actor James Colby and Richard Cavalier. Workshop going pro, heretofore confined its efforts to non-or semi-pro activities.

For a switch, Chicago will get the "original" cast and Broadway the second one on the theory that this will appease the hinterland city's press and theatregoers.

Back to Basics

London, July 14.

Sarah Churchill and John Bentley, stars of the touring play, "Triangle," met the problem of no local newspapers at Portsmouth by parading the streets of the town with sandwichboards advertising details of performances.

A strike of ink company employees has shut down provincial and national publications and forced drastic reduction in the size of London newspapers.

'BILLY BARNES REVUE' MAY SWITCH TO B'WAY

The off-Broadway production of "The Billy Barnes Revue" may move to Broadway. A switch from its present berth at the York Theatre to the John Golden is being considered for Aug. 1.

The show, which originated in Los Angeles, still has a company playing there.

Ballet Is First Victim Of British Press Snarl

London, July 14.

The first West End casualty of the British printer's ink strike is the Ballet-Theatre de Maurice Bejart, which was to have opened last night (Mon.) for a two-week run at Sadler's Wells Theatre. Because of the uncertainty about the position of the national press and the consequent loss of advertising and editorial coverage, the theatre management gave the company a chance to bow out of its contract.

The Ballet-Theatre will not appear at the house this season.

Coast Reviews

Maid to Order

Los Angeles, June 30.

Valmar Oleska's Theatre of Arts presentation of a two-act comedy by Alfred Golden and Howard Buermann. Direction, Roger W. Clark: scenery, Eric Freeman; lighting, Marty's Sound and Lighting Co. With James Lydon, Lynne Allen, Robert Ivers, Abbey Shelton, Thea Ruckert, Jerrilyn Jorgenson, Dadye Rutherford; features Cheerio Meredith. Opened June 18, '59 at the Theatre of Arts; $3.30 top.

There is little original or comic about this "original comedy" by Alfred L. Golden and Howard Buermann. Only the staunch efforts of a cast willing to endure the punishment of its old lines and creaky situations give it the strength to earn a few sheckles for Valmar Oleska's Theatre of Arts.

Dealing with the difficulties of a witless suburban family in attempting to unearth a competent maid, the play labors the point for two hours with nary a break for a fresh secondary situation. All anyone talks about is maid trouble, and in uninspired fashion. There is a case of mistaken identity, some frantic bedroom hopping, and an unendurable child prancing about without restraint, none of which threatens to invade the realm of humor.

Mendel the Beatnik

Hollywood, June 30.

Zev Bufman & Oscar Ostroff presentation of two-act musical comedy by Al Springer, based on a play by S. H. Cohen. Staging, Marco Meyer; settings, Jerry Grallnik. Opened May 29, '59, at the Le Grand Comedy Theatre, Hollywood; $3.30 top.

Cast: Abe Lax, Phil Arnold, Frances Weintraub Lax, Shirley O. Mills, Linn Vandervier, Leroy White, Leo Fuchs.

"Mendel the Beatnik" is about as "beat" as a borscht circuit hotel. Outside of its specialized appeal to Yiddish audiences, it is only sporadically entertaining, with long lags and a few bright spots near the end of the long 135-minute show. Willing talent seems to be buried beneath the poor material and inadequate production. Leo Fuchs is an expert showman with rare plausibility and authority, and his supporting cast is capable.

Al Springer's "musical comedy" script, based on a play by S. H. Cohen, is simply not funny, relying principally on antique "play-on-words" gags that butcher real humor. Only the spirited trouping of the performers keeps the show alive.

John Kerr-June Walker Do 'Menagerie' on Coast

Santa Barbara, Cal., July 14.

The Santa Barbara Summer Theatre, a new strawhat group, has been formed for a four-week season, opening July 23 with "The Glass Menagerie," to star John Kerr and his mother, June Walker. The outfit will operate the old Lobero Playhouse, and Herbert Kenworth will direct the all-Equity productions.

Season's sked also includes "Who Was That Lady?" "The Great Sebastians" and a revival of David Belasco's "Rose of the Rancho."

Santa Fe Cathedral Scene Of Secular Concert On Pope John's Precedent

Santa Fe, July 14.

Archibishop Edwin V. Bryne here granted permission for a secular musical performance within the Roman Catholic cathedral on Sunday evening (12) and this is thought to be a precedent for the Catholic hierarchy in America.

Igor Stravinsky's "Treni: Lamentations of the Prophet Jeremiah" was the work. Robert Craft conducted the Santa Fe Opera musicians and singers.

Present Pope, John XXIII, when Patriarch of Venice, allowed St. Mark's Cathedral there to be used for another Stravinsky work, "Canticum Sacrum," thereby setting the precedent.

WALD SKEDS BOWLES NOVEL AS N.Y. LEGIT

Hollywood, July 14.

A dramatization of Paul Bowles' novel, "Let It Come Down," is planned for Broadway production next year by film producer Jerry Wald.

The project, slated to go into rehearsal next spring, will be developed and cast here.

Sked 'Quiz Kid' Musical For Liverpool Break-In Liverpool, Eng., July 14.

"The Quiz Kid," a new musical with book, lyrics and music by Jimmy and Nina Thompson, is set to preem July 27 at the Royal Court Theatre here. Cast will include Jimmy Thompson, the coauthor, and Diana Decker.

Wauna Paul will present the production in association with Howard Bourgein Ltd. Additional music is by John Pritchett, choreography will be by Alfred Rodrigues, and settings are by Pauline Whitehouse.

Opera Review

Kalchas

Amsterdam, June 29.

Opera in one act, composed by Jurriaan Andriessen, on play by Anton Chekhov. Producer: K.R.O. Directors: Ton Lutz, Ben Mettrop. Sets: Peter Zwart. Orchestra: conductor Benedict Silbermann.

One-act opera "Kalchas" was commissioned by the Cultural Dept. of the Netherlands Government and will be the Dutch entry for the opera prize for television opera at Salzburg. The libretto was taken from a story, later extended to a one-act play, by Anton Chekhov, about an old actor who thinks over his life after a benefit performance. He gets drunk and while on the deserted stage, imagines himself in great roles, King Lear, Hamlet, Othello. The realization that he was loved only once in his life, a love that he could not accept because it would have meant his giving up the theatre, overcomes him, and he dies on the stage.

Jurriaan Andriessen has set this story to music that underlines the action. A flaw is the unnatural and old-fashioned way of talking, that could have been avoided by editing the Chekhov dialogue. Guus Hoekman as Svetlovidov, the actor, gives a wonderful characterization, that is hindered only by the melodramatic words of the libretto. Chris Taverne and Henk Angement have secondary roles, as prompter and stagehand. Credit goes to Peter Zwart for his set of the theatre and stage. Tele-recording of the June 28 presentation will go to Salzburg to compete for television opera prize that is proffered by U.N.E.S.C.O.

Inside Stuff—Legit

Brooks Atkinson suggested in N.Y. Times that Queen Elizabeth "confer some sort of royal order" on Canadian directors Jean Gascon and George McCowan for their direction of "Othello" at Stratford, Ont., Shakespeare Festival. "They have played Shakespeare without trying to improve him," he wrote. "They have succeeded in placing emphasis on the play that Shakespeare wrote. In the self-conscious theatre of today this amounts to revolution. It also provides the most engrossing 'Othello' this playgoer has seen anywhere." Gascon and McCowan are first Canadians to direct a production at Stratford, Ont., in its seven seasons. Gascon is with Le Theatre du Nouveau Monde, Montreal group which has done Moliere in Paris to critical huzzahs. McCowan began as an actor with now-defunct Canadian Repertory Theatre of Ottawa.

"The death of Broadway, as it exists today" is predicted by actor Maurice Evans to Ron Johnson in Toronto Star. He says the new Lincoln Center "will change not only the physiognomy of theatres but the entire modern concept of drama." The intimate Broadway houses will fold, and intimate plays left to off-Broadway. "Huge theatres seating 3,000 or more, clustered—with their parking facilities—about the uptown Center will be filled with a new type of play, conceived and acted on a larger scale. When you are playing to 3,000 people, the acting and writing have to be on a new scale. You've proved at your Stratford that it hasn't hurt Shakespeare."

Henry Hewes (Saturday Review) has done the off-Broadway chapter for Louis Kronenberger's "Best Plays of 1958-59," due in October via Dodd Mead, and once again Harold Hobson and Claudia Cassidy cover the London and Chicago legit scenes respectively. Among Kronenberger's 10 "best plays" are "Pleasure of His Company," "Cold Wind and the Warm," "The Dischanted," "Epitaph for George Dillon," "Touch of the Poet" and "A Raisin' in the Sun"; the others yet to be selected.

London Notes

London, July 14.

George Baker, back from his U.S. stint in "Look After Lulu," is to join the Old Vic company for a season after wrapping up a tv series.

Unusually clear, hot summer is heading the Regent's Park Open Air Theatre toward a record season. Saturday shows are drawing over 2,000 people, higher than at any time last summer. "Midsummer Night's Dream," which opened last night (Mon.) for its 14th presentation in the outdoor spot, had a record advance sale.

Comedian Robertson Hare makes his revue debut Aug. 6 at the Palace Theatre, with Benny Hill in a new Bernard Delfont-Emile Littler show, "Fine Fettle." Also bowing in revue is dramatic actor Patrick Wymark, who opens tomorrow night (Wed.) in "One to Another" at the Lyric, Hammersmith.

Music by Cole Porter will be a main feature of this year's London Coliseum pantomime, "Aladdin," with Bob Monkhouse and Ronald Shiner.

The Moscow State Circus at Wembley Stadium, due to fold July 18, is extended another week. In the first four weeks more than 260,000 have seen the show.

The manuscript of Harold Fraser-Simson's musicomedy, "The Maid Of The Mountains," has been bequeathed by his widow to the British Museum.

Road Healthy for Slim Lineup; Ustinov $54,000 in S.F. Close

The road, with seven shows on tap, played to generally good business last week. There are only four entries running this week following the dropout last Saturday (18) of "Once More With Feeling," "Romanoff and Juliet" and "Sunrise at Campobello." The first two shows closed in San Francisco, while "Sunrise" is laying off until early September.

The touring list dwindles to three shows next week, with the fold Saturday (18) of "Two for the Seesaw" in Frisco.

Estimates for Last Week

Parenthetic designations for out-of-town shows are the same as for Broadway, except that hyphenated T with show classification indicates tryout and RS indicates road show. Also, prices on touring shows include 10% Federal Tax and local tax, if any, but as on Broadway grosses are net; i.e., exclusive of taxes. Engagements are for single week unless otherwise noted.

Stratford, Conn., $39,200 For 'Romeo'-'Wives' Split

Stratford, Conn., July 14.

The American Shakespeare Festival, scaled to a $5.75 top, grossed a good $39,200 last week for eight performances split evenly between "Romeo and Juliet" and "Merry Wives of Windsor."

The previous week's take at the 1,453-seater here was $31,000 for four performances of "Wives," three performances of "Romeo" and one of "Midsummer Night's Dream."

Cambridge Fest $24,000 in First 6

Boston, July 14.

"Twelfth Night," costarring Siohban McKenna and Zachary Scott, grossed a fine $24,000 last week in the initial six performances of the Cambridge Drama Festival season here. The potential capacity for the stand was $30,000 at a $4.50 top.

The potential capacity at the 1,772-seat operation on a regular eight-performance week is $41,000.

'TOM SAWYER' 54G, K.C.; PROSPECT FOR B'WAY

Kansas City, July 14.

"Tom Sawyer," the fourth production of the current outdoor musical season in Swope Park, grossed a tidy $54,000 for the week ended Sunday night (12). Virginia Gibson, Randy Sparks and Richard France were featured.

Show was scouted by John Shubert, who came from New York for that purpose. He told Starlight officials he sees Broadway possibilities in the show, and said his company is interested in giving the financial backing which would see the musical produced in New York.

"Say, Darling," is current, with Eddie Bracken, Johnny Desmond and Jane Kean.

Marlowe-Stevens $9,500 For 'Feeling' at Indpls.

Indianapolis, July 14.

Avondale Playhouse, 1,000-seat tent, grossed a satisfactory $9,500 last week with Hugh Marlowe and K. T. Stevens in "Once More With Feeling." All seats are one price, $2.75.

Current is "The Women," with Mary Beth Hughes, Irene Hervey and Miss Stevens.

Quick Re-Soaking

Within 48 hours of his return to London after undergoing what he described as a "drying out process" in a Dublin hospital, Brendan Behan was arrested and charged with being drunk in a public place.

On the night of his arrival in town he went to Wyndham's Theatre, where his latest play, "The Hostage," is a current hit. Before going inside he took over from the buskers to entertain galleryites who were waiting in line. Inside the theatre he interrupted the cast, declined to stand for the National Anthem and shouted, "Up the Irish."

DALLAS OPERA SET

Contracts For Use Of Hometown Symphony In Pit

Dallas, July 14.

A contract covering the services of the Dallas Symphony Orchestra for both the 1959 and 1960 seasons of the Dallas Civic Opera has been signed by William A. McKenzie, secretary-treasurer of the opera and by R. A. Goodson and DeWitt Ray, prez and secretary of the Symphony.

The opera season this fall will extend a little more than two weeks in November. The opening production will be "Lucia di Lammermoor" presented on Nov. 6 and 8, to be followed by "The Barber of Seville" on Nov. 12 and 14, with "Medea" closing the season on Nov. 19 and 21. All performances will be in the State Fair Music Hall.

Most of 13 B'way Shows Strong; 'Drum' Record $63,738, 'Destry' 60½G, 'Suzie Wong' $24,300, 'Bird' $38,200

Business was healthy for most of the 13 shows on Broadway last week. However, trade remained generally sluggish for the less sturdy entries. "World of Suzie Wong" has gone on twofers and "J. B." is also going on cutrates.

Sellouts and virtual capacity offerings last week included "Flower Drum Song," which set another house record for the St. James Theatre, and also "Gypsy," "Majority of One," "My Fair Lady" and "Raisin in the Sun." The resumption of "Redhead" last Monday night (13) after a week's layoff brings the total number of Main Stem productions to 14 this week. The count drops back to 13 next week with the fold Saturday (18) of "Make a Million."

Estimates for Last Week

Keys: C (Comedy), D (Drama), CD (Comedy-Drama), R (Revue), MC (Musical-Comedy), MD (Musical-Drama), O (Opera), OP (Operetta).

Other parenthetic designations refer, respectively, to weeks played, number of performances through last Saturday, top prices (where two prices are given, the higher is for Friday-Saturday nights and the lower for weeknights), number of seats, capacity gross and stars. Price includes 10% Federal and 5% City tax, but grosses are net; i.e., exclusive of taxes.

Stockbridge, Mass., July 14.

"The Diary of Anne Frank" grossed a strong $5,800 at a $3 top last week at the 480-seat Berkshire Playhouse here. The previous week's take for Cathleen Nesbitt in "Time Remembered" was $4,500 at the same scale.

"Once More With Feeling" is current.

'Lady' $3,800, Corn'g, N.Y.

Corning, N.Y., July 14.

"Who Was That Lady I Saw You With?" grossed a mild $3,800 last week at the Corning Summer Theatre.

"Third Best Sport" is current.

Crucial Road Season

the stretch in tryout time helps to fill the gap left by the decrease in the production of regular touring shows.

Meanwhile, the number of touring shows will hit a Summer low of three next week. The trio, all musicals, will be "Music Man," in Chicago; "My Fair Lady," in San Francisco, and "West Side Story," in Los Angeles. A fourth road entry, the second company of "Two for the Seesaw," closes next Saturday (18) in Frisco.

Touring activity will begin to pick up Aug. 1, when "The Gazebo," costarring Tom Ewell and Jan Sterling, opens in Central City, Col. That'll be followed by the scheduled Aug. 10 opening of "Odd Man" in La Jolla. A Coast edition of "Say, Darling," with Lisa Kirk, Orson Bean, Johnny Desmond and Jerome Cowan, is scheduled to bow Aug. 11 in L.A.

"Sunrise at Campobello," which began a layoff last Saturday (11) following the end of a six-week run at the National Theatre, Washington, will resume Sept. 10 in Columbus, with Ralph Bellamy continuing as star. Hal March, currently costarring in the Broadway production of "Seesaw," begins touring in the play Sept. 28 in Norfolk, Va.

Set for a Sept. 21 opening in Providence, R.I., is a new touring edition of "Dark at the Top of the Stairs." Also, "The Visit," costarring Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne in the roles they played on Broadway, is slated to join the hinterland lineup Sept. 23 in Wilmington. "Dear Liar," costarring Katharine Cornell and Brian Aherne, resumes touring Oct. 9, following a summer layoff.

"J. B.," currently on Broadway, is scheduled to launch a tour Oct. 28, with Basil Rathbone, one of the present costars, set to make the trek. "Pleasure of His Company," another Main Stem entry, is due to open Nov. 23 in Philadelphia. "Marriage-Go-Round," scheduled to resume its Broadway run Sept. 21 after a summer layoff, is also slated to tour, beginning the first week in January.

"Pleasure" costars Cyril Ritchard, Cornelia Otis Skinner, Charlie Ruggles and Walter Abel and "Marriage-Go-Round" costars Claudette Colbert and Charles Boyer. As yet, it's not definite whether the stars involved in the two productions will repeat their assignments on tour.

Also scheduled for a cross-country tour is "Hilary," starring Joan Fontaine, who's currently appearing on the strawhat circuit in a tryout of the play. The national tour will be co-sponsored by Miss Fontaine and Anthony Brady Farrell. The producers of the stock tour are Michael McAloney and Don Mankiewicz. A tour of "Look Homeward, Angel" is also planned.

Besides the regular productions skedded for the road, the lineup also includes concert-styled presentations of "The World of Carl Sandburg," costarring Bette Davis and her husband, Gary Merill, and Hal Holbrook in "Mark Twain Tonight."

Jan Leighton is performing at Tamiment, Pa., this summer.

'Mame' $7,150 in 9 Times At Willamstown, Mass.

Williamstown, Mass., July 14.

"Auntie Mame," in seven performances last week and two performances the preceding Friday-Saturday (3-4), grossed a record $7,150 for an opening production at the Williamstown Summer Theatre's 478-seat Adams Memorial Theatre here. The house is scaled to a $3 top.

"Look Back in Anger" is current.

San Diego Goes Equity

San Diego, July 14.

San Diego National Shakespeare Festival has gone professional. Members of Actors Equity are being employed for the first time by the operation, which launches its 10th season tonight (Tues.) at the Old Globe Theatre here.

"Henry IV, Part I" is the opening bill, with "Romeo and Juliet" bowing July 17 and "Love's Labour's Lost" debuting July 31.

CASTING NEWS

Following are available parts in upcoming Broadway, off-Broadway, and touring shows, as well as ballet, films, industrial and television shows. All information has been obtained directly by the VARIETY Casting Department by telephone calls, and has been rechecked as of noon yesterday (Tues.).

The available roles will be repeated weekly until filled, and additions to the list will be made only when information is secured from responsible parties. The intention is to service performers with leads provided by the managements of the shows involved rather than to run a lengthy list of blind items. This information is published without charge.

In addition to the available parts listed, the tabulation includes productions announced for later this season, but, for which, the managements, as yet, aren't holding open casting calls. Parenthetical designations are as follows: (C) Comedy, (D) Drama, (MC) Musical Comedy, (MD) Musical Drama, (R) Revue, (Rep) Repertory, (DR) Dramatic Reading.

Keith's Washington

bert was handicapped by its poor location, in contrast with Keith's, situated desirably in midtown.

Cafritz has offered to donate the theatre and the 10-story Albee Bldg. which houses it (and which, he declares, earns $265,000 annually in office rentals) to the city, if the municipal government or a citizens' group will pay off about a remaining $1,500,000 mortgage on the entire property. Cafritz values the package at $4,000,000 including land, but RKO sources (from which he bought the theatre and building some 18 months ago) claim he paid only about $1,500,000 for it.

Rep. Harris B. McDowell Jr. (D-Del.), one of the spearheads of the "save the Shubert" campaign, has hailed the Cafritz offer as rivaling the donation some years ago by Andrew Mellon of the National Gallery of Art. He predicts that a citizens' committee will be created to take care of the details of the Cafritz gift and raise necessary funds. He will be honorary chairman and said he has asked Cafritz to be chairman.

Another committee member is expected to be Garfield I. Kass, wealthy realtor and civic leader and an uncle of Cafritz, Kass, another leader in the proposal to find Washington a second local legit house, previously suggested the Tivoli Theatre, owned by Stanley Warner and also a former vaudeville showplace.

McDowell pledged an effort to get through Congress this year a bill he and Rep. Carroll D. Kearns (R-Pa.) are jointly sponsoring. The measure would require the District of Columbia to set aside one mill of each $1 tax revenue for cultural purposes. Experts figure this would make $175,000 available annually for maintenance and operational costs of Keith's as a municipal theatre. Funds, under the McDowell-Kearns bill, couldn't be used for buying mortgage obligation, however. That would have to come from gifts.

The drive for Keith's is not to be confused with Washington's proposed National Cultural Center, expected to cost about $35,000,000. Campaign to raise that money throughout the nation will get underway this Fall. The Cultural Center project is tied in with U. S. Government, while Keith's, under the Cafritz proposal, would be a District of Columbia undertaking.

If the Cafritz donation of Keith's materializes, those close to the situation believe, it could undermine local sentiment for the National Cultural Center, since it's figured that the two projects overlap, and raising $1,500,000 isn't like collecting $35,000,000. Another angle mentioned is the "free enterprise" effect of a municipal theatre, such as Keith's is proposed to be, in competition with the privately-owned (and financially successful now) National Theatre. The latter house has been a fixture in recent years for Broadway-bound and post-Broadway plays and musicals, as well as for such cultural offerings as Old Vic.

This Island's Mine

tained flavor while given a rhythmic modern touch. Play starts with a compelling first act enlivened by fine dialog and much suspense but bogs down in second when too much of the actual Shakespeare's "Tempest" is interjected.

With leads imported from the U.S. and Canada, the production is first class, Basil Langton who doubles as director and star (Shakespeare — Prospero) has turned in two-edged job in the classical field.

Meredith Dallas, featured, plays Burbage with gusto and makes a most terrifying and appealing Caliban. Jerry Hardin makes his Ariel a real ballet, and Pat Barnard, local girl with New York experience, gives a warm and professional reading to the daughter and Miranda.

Biggest hits are Brendan Dillon, from the Abbey Theatre, who scores in first act as Balladman with witty Elizabethan ditties, and the two drunken sailors, Donald Ewer and Roger Sherman. Latter is from U. S. airbase and held up well against Ewer from Stratford, Ontario. Both are clowns and the author and director have given them some sure-fire situations with Caliban.

Innkeeper is played for many laughs by Raymond Johnson, who spouts meaningless Latin proverbs and John Conrad get much as the Earl of Pembroke.

The lighting and sound effects by David Yeddeau give mystical effects against natural background of the trees and the costumes by Andrew Trimingham show imagination and color. Brief ballet by Penny Minorgan with local children adds movement.

Theatre and sets by John Kaufmann should remain in Bermuda as permanent fixture for annual festival of classics. It appears as if, for once, a government-sponsored project can be done in a manner of exacting private enterprise. Wagstaff.

The Land of Smiles

London, July 10.

Sadler's Wells presentation of three-act operetta; music, Franz Lehar; book, Ludwig Herzer and Fritz Lohner; English version, Christopher Hassall. General staging, Charles Hickman; choreographer, Peter Darrell; designer, Berkeley Sutcliffe. Stars Charles Craig, Elizabeth Fretwell, June Bronhill, Peter Grant. Opened July 9, '59, at the Coliseum, London; $3.50 top.

Gen. Goetz	Denis Dowling
Count Lichtenfels	Frederick Sharp
Countess Hurwitz	Barbara Howitt
Count Gustave Muller	Peter Grant
Lisa	Elizabeth Fretwell
Butler	Stanley Beedle
Prince Sou-Chong	Charles Craig
Lore	Diedree Thurlow
Fini	Rachel Conway
Valli	June Johnstone
Toni	Cynthia Morey
Franzi	Suzanne Steele
Fu-li	Alfred Oldridge
Tschang	Peter Bayliss
Mi	June Bronhill
Hum-yen	Gwilym Jones

The Sadler's Wells operetta season, having springboarded happily with Lehar's "The Merry Widow," is apparently continuing successfully with this new version of "The Land Of Smiles." Although the show would be expected to seem corny and dated (first produced in Berlin in 1929, it had its first London performance May 8, 1931, at the Drury Lane), it comes over as a naively sentimental story carried by the melody and spectacle.

The biggest challenge is for Charles Craig in the role of Prince Sou-Chong, since comparison's inevitable with Richard Tauber's memorably lush performance way back when. Craig comes through strongly, with voice and physique not unlike Tauber's, but dodging all charges of apeing and further aided by the fact that the lyric of the celebrated "You Are My Heart's Delight" has been changed to "Love, Let Me Dream Again."

Throughout, Christopher Hassall's new English version of the text is okay, though it could be charged here and there with being a shade pert. Where the whole show is more suspect, on strictly artistic grounds, is in its decor, as the costumes, design and movement several times blend into a garish, undisciplined splodge. But the impact's there.

As Lisa, the Viennese fraulein who weds Sou-Chong and travels to China, only to find that East can't meet West (that's about the whole plot) Elizabeth Fretwell is in fine voice and plays the part in the style of a Wagnerian heroine. Much more fluent, and offering delightful soprano work, is June Bronhill as Sou-Chong's sister who must renounce the lieutenant who comes to rescue Lisa.

Peter Grant, in this latter role, manages to inject some style in a who's-for-tennis conception, while also vocalizing excellently. There are also notable supporting performances by Barbara Howitt and Gwilym Jones, while the Sadler's Wells Opera Chorus and Opera Ballet pitch in with a workmanlike will.

With Vilem Tausky and Michael Moores alternating as conductors, the orchestra plays confidently throughout. Erni.

Buerger Schippel
(Citizen Schippel)

Berlin, June 25.

Schlosspark Theatre production of comedy in five acts by Carl Sternheim. Staged by Walter Henn. Settings and costumes, H. W. Lenneweit; technical supervision, Franz Gehrke. At Schlosspark Theatre, Berlin, $3 top.

The Prince	Lothar Blumhagen
Tilmann Hicketier	Benno Sterzenbach
Jenny, his wife	Gudrun Genest
Thekla, his sister	Lore Hartling
Heinrich Krey	Stefan Wigger
Andreas Wolke	Werner Stock
Paul Schippel	Friedrich Siemers

Net of this presentation of "Schippel," which the late Carl Sternheim wrote nearly five decades ago, is not much. Even so, Sternheim's characters and dialog are so amusing and humorous that it would probably take a lot to spoil them entirely. So despite production deficiencies, overly-broad direction and some unconvincing performances, "Schippel" has its enjoyable aspects.

Five-acter pokes a great deal of fun, at Babbitts, narrow-minded bourgeoisie and decadent authorities. Principal figures are a trio of class-proud citizens who badly need a fourth man to form a quartet with which they want to win a singing contest to please their sovereign. The fourth man is Schippel, a cad, and they take him, despite all class differences, as he possesses golden tonsils. Love and complications are woven in, plus a hilarious duel at the end. The cad Schippel becomes a sort of hero and the Babbitts finally "accept" him, much against his own will, as a citizen.

Sternheim's comedies, banned by the Nazis and before, have been neglected in postwar Germany. A pity that director and a number of players in this revival aren't equal to the task. Friedrich Siemers (Schippel) is excellent in many scenes, less effectful in others. A splendid performance is contributed by Werner Stock as one of the pompous pillars. Hans.

The Optimistic Tragedy

Paris, June 29.

Theatre of Nations presentation of the Pushkin Theatre of Leningrad presentation of three act (14 scenes) drama by Vsevelod Vichniewski. Direction, G. Tovstogonov; sets, A. Bossoulaiew; music, Kara-Karaiev. With Olga Lebzak, Igor Gorbatchev, Iouri Toloubeiev, Vladimir Erenberg, Alexandre Sokolov, Alexai Ian. At Sarah Bernhardt, Paris, June 28, '59; $3 top.

Commissar	Olga Lebzak
Alexel	Igor Gorbatchev
Meneur	Iouri Toloubeiev
Bering	Vladimir Erenberg
Hoarse Man	Alexandre Sokolov
Vainonen	Alexei Ian

This is a good example of the Russian massive, naturalistic, revolutionary theatre. Written in 1932, it sets out to sell and explain the revolution via a tale of a group of anarchistic sailors brought into line by a female commissar. Though the tale is an oft-repeated Russo staple in films, it takes on interest via excellent staging, acting and progression to make this topflight theatre of its kind.

Using an immense turntable stage with a big dip upstage making new decors seem to swim up into focus, and back projection clouds and sets, the scenes shift rapidly and adroitly from aboard a ship taken over by the sailors in 1918 to their development into a stern Red Army addition by the indomitable commissar.

Characters are stereotypic Soviet style, but the movement and action make them acceptable as in an oater film.

This Russian theatre group from Leningrad came in for a week of showings as part of the presently Theatre of Nations season. Interest was generally big and boxoffice good. Mosk.

Accuse Understudy

She had previously been in the chorus.

Schaefer asserts that Miss Donaldson was rehearsed all day Saturday and performed at both twilight and Saturday evening shows. When a bus brought the cast to the tent in Sunday's rain, the producer declares, Miss Donaldson announced from the bus that she wouldn't perform. Considerable arguing ensued, including a reported telephone call to an Equity executive in New York. On the scene during difficulties was Tom Plank, one of the union's field representatives, who declined to discuss what happened.

Schaefer first announced to the Sunday night audience at 8:30 curtain time that there'd be a delay because of rain. The audience waited about one hour. During that time, some of the customers heard angry voices and left the tent to evesdrop. Schaefer returned about 9:30 to announce that Miss Donaldson wouldn't perform. He apologized to the audience and promised that a full refund would be made in the final "Jamaica" night.

Miss Donaldson declined yesterday (Mon.) to discuss her side of the controversy by telephone, insisting on a face-to-face interview, which couldn't be arranged. Meanwhile, the cast went on to the Brandywine Music Box, Concordville, Pa., where "Jamaica" is scheduled to open an engagement tonight (Tues.). "This is too bad for Rosecroft," Schaefer said. "We were just getting going satisfactorily in Washington when this happened. We need the public's good will here, and we've been working to get it."

"Jamaica" was Rosecroft's second two-week musical. The first production, "DuBarry Was a Lady," had a sad public relations start. The opening performance started an hour late while construction of stage and lights were completed. Three sections without seats left many ticketholders looking for places to sit.

Rosecroft opens "The Merry Widow" tonight, hoping for the best.

being "folk." The traditional costuming, rich in fabric, scrupulously devoted to ethnic sources have all been commented on in considerable detail in previous VARIETY reviews.

3 Parts

The program at the Garden runs in three sections with two 10-minute intermissions. A large Local 802 pit orchestra is mostly mute in the first section dominated by the Piatnitsky Choir which carries its own native music, heavy on mandolins and accordions, and its own group of dancers, the first to amaze the customers with incredible crouching travel and spread-eagle leaps. The Piatnitsky group, founded 1911, thus pre-dating the Bolsheviki revolution, sings without a leader. There is a fine, clear, ringing gusto to their voices, notably the women. The volume swells to magnificence or quiets to a whisper. "Domuk Nad Rekoi," with music by Stephen Foster, proved to be the Russian version of "Way Down Upon The Swanee River." The singers threw in a few lines in, recognizably, English and the Manhattan audience was duly enchanted.

Russian Festival
(MADISON SQUARE GARDEN)

Sol Hurok presentation, in conjunction with Soviet Exhibit at N.Y. Coliseum. Opened July 7, 1959 at $5.50 top. Staged by Boris Pokrovsky. Conductors, Gennadi Rozhdestvensky, Arthur Lief.

Represented groups:
Piatnitsky Folk Choir, Dancers.
Kiev State Ballet & Opera.
Georgian State Dance Co.
Armenian State Dance Co.
Kazakhstan State Dance Co.
Uzbekistan State Ballet.
Moiseyev Dance Co.
Bolshoi Ballet & Opera.
Leningrad Opera.
Kiev State Opera.

There are some subdued interludes but not many, and never for long. A vigorous pace is maintained; indeed too much so when Taitania Borovikova and Valery Panov of the Mali Opera in Leningrad do their pas de deux from "Flame of Paris" and again when Nina Tomofeyeva and Yuri Zhdanov of the Bolshoi repeat the adagio from "Swan Lake." A sense of hurry was out of place in these classic pieces.

'Competitions'

Several of the ensemble dancing numbers are cast in the form of "competitions" and so labelled. The audience clamored for and got encores of the Piatnitsky Dancers' "Pereplias" and the incredible male toe-dancing (no padding in boots) of the Georgians. However, Liudmila Bogomolova and Stanislov (Bolshoi) did not encore in Alexander Lapauri's "Waltz" a wow at the Met some weeks ago, and provoking a gallery-stomp reaction opening night at the Garden.

Galya Izmailova, prima ballerina of the Uzbekistan State Ballet, excitingly rendered an oriental routine called "Zang" to a metallic tambourine called the bubna, manipulated by Avner Barayev. Another Asiatic event was the stimulation of a horse race and game by the Kazakh State Co. These far-away examples exemplify the scope of Soviet talent resources. Indeed the very opening when all of the ensemble serpentines about the stage (9th Avenue side of hall) was not only an artistic spectacle but "propaganda" for the sheer size and polyracial quality of the USSR.

In such a crowded program there is always the critics anxiety lest something that ought to be mentioned go unrecorded. And yet exact justice to the talents can hardly be rendered. There are just too many things happening. Almost like a circus. That producer Pokrovsky has manipulated so many people (over 200) on a relatively small platform is itself a considerable feat of showmanship. The freshness and cleanliness of the costumes also attracts notice.

Many conversational themes lurk in the program. Probably the handsome and vigorous, black-mustached Georgians will be hailed as very special. The new Gypsy routine, only recently debuted in Moscow at the Moiseyev, is also extraordinary in its accumulative impact. "The Washerwoman," also of Igor Moiseyev's choreography, is a hilarious spoof on the sexes.

Items seen in New York heretofore include "The Bashkir Hunter" (Shamil Yagudin) and "Two Boys in a Fight" (Yevgeni Semenov). One or two song soloists appear, notably a Ukranian, basso Andrei Kikot of the Kiev State Opera.

Scaled up to $6.50, the Russian Festival of Music and Dance cannot fail to do well in Manhattan, despite summertime and vacations. It is wonderfully entertaining all the way and frequently able to stir audiences to a tumult that has no reservations.

Would Any Actors Care To Cover These Shows?

Ottawa, July 14.

Platform productions, in which Canadian critics and professors would give readings of books with scenes from the works performed on stage by actors, are planned for presentation by Viviene Stenson's Program Associates here.

Meanwhile, local bookings lined up for next fall by Program Associates include Hal Holbrook in "An Evening With Mark Twain" and Howard da Silva in a program of Chekhov characterizations.

SPRUCE UP STOCKBRIDGE

Stockbridge, Mass., July 14.

The Berkshire Playhouse here, now in its 29th season, has undergone some changes. Air-conditioning has been installed and an awning has been placed over the front porch for the protection of patrons during rainstorms. The downstairs lobby and the second floor exhibition room have been repainted and a four-foot apron has been built as an extention to the stage.

The Three Arts Society, which sponsors the operation, also has a new stage curtain on order.

Paper Sues Pressmen

The Harrisburg (Pa.) Patriot-News Co. here has brought suit for damages against Local 123, International Pressmen & Assistants' Union, as result of a work stoppage last week which caused the Patriot to miss its first issue in 128 years.

The company charged in its suit that the union had violated its contract in that its members had refused to man the paper's presses in a dispute over how many pressmen the company should employ to put out the editions the day of the stoppage.

The action asks damages from the union and from each of the union members who were involved.

Mexico's Writer Grants

The Mexican Writing Center, directed by Margaret Shedd, has announced its annual contest designed to "improve literary production in Mexico." Both young Mexican and American writers can participate and scholarships include a 15,600 pesos ($1,248) grant to a single writer and 24.300 pesos ($1,944) for a married writer. Only condition is that writers must be resident in Mexico, with work of Americans considered if they remain in country as students for a year or more.

Applications are to be made to Margaret Shedd, Scholarship Committee, Centro Mexicano de Escritores, Rio Volga No. 3, Colonia Cuauhtemoc, Mexico 5, D. F., with expiration date July 20. Decisions will be made the middle of August. Scholarship seekers must provide copies of published or unpublished works in any of the literary forms.

'Theatre Chicago Annual'

James Weber, publisher of a monthly offset newspaper. Theatre Chicago, is preparing a retrospective of the 1955-59 legit season in the Windy City in book form under the title of Theatre Chicago Annual. It's due Sept. 1.

Roundup will cover stock, community, suburban, college and children's theatre, as well as the Main Stem activity. Feature articles will include a wrapup of the professional theatre season by William Leonard, feature writer for the Chicago Tribune and Chi drama critic for Christian Science Monitor; a recap of the summer theatre semester by Glenna Syse, drama critic of the Sun-Times; and others by Goodman Theatre director Dr. John Reich, Video Stage '59 exec director Bereniki Robbins, and Children's Theatre of Evanston director Rita Criste.

Publicists For Politicians

New Mexico politicos have taken a new view of paid publicists, with both parties having recently hired public relations men.

Democrats, the stronger group in the state, have just recently hired Ernie Mills on a part-time basis to promote party publicity, at $300 monthly.

Earlier this spring, Republicans hired Jack Holmes as a full-time man at $12,000 yearly.

Mills was formerly Santa Fe correspondent for pro-GOP Albuquerque Journal, largest daily in the state. He recently resigned job to form his own PR firm, Southwest Associates.

Demo Governor John Burroughs, at odds with the Journal since his inauguration in January, was reportedly instrumental in hiring Mills to handle party publicity.

Holmes, who holds a Ph.D. degree, was a statehouse worker under GOP Gov. Ed Mechem prior to his appointment as PR man for the party.

For R.R. Buffs

A footnote to the fanaticism of railfans, whose tribe increases both in numbers and intensity of devotion as the "iron horse" becomes extinct, may be read in the fact that when Lucius Beebe's "Mansions On Rails, The Folklore of The Private Railway Car" is published this fall there will be not one edition, but three, one of them costing $50 a copy. Two conventional printings, a trade edition at $10 and a signed, limited edition of 1,950 copies at $15 are advertised by the publisher, Howell North Books of Berkeley, Calif.

The third, a "President's Car Edition," bound in full morocco with the name of the purchaser in gold leaf on the cover, is being offered by Grahame Hardy of Carson City, Nevada, a specialist in Western Americana and railroadiana. Hardy, whose business is largely conducted by mail, has orders for 20 of this costly item without even circularizing his customers. Beebe and his partner, Charles Clegg, are publishers of the Territorial Enterprise, Virginia City, Nev. and are owners of the last private car in operation on mainline railroads, "The Virginia City."

Chi News & Sun-Times Merger

Chicago Daily News is set to merge with Chicago Sun-Times, Marshall Field Jr., prexy of Field Enterprises Inc. said this week. Merger was described as a "legal step" and it was indicated that operations of two dailies wouldn't be affected by the "technical change."

Two dailies would be independent divisions of Field Enterprises Inc. and stockholders meet on July 27 to vote on the proposal. Sun-Times and Sun-Times Syndicate are already divisions of Field Enterprises.

Field Enterprises bought Daily News from corporation controlled by John S. Knight for $24,000,000.

American Home's New Eds

The American Home (Curtis) has named a new associate editor, Mrs. Barbara Colvin Scribner, former associate features editor of McCall's.

Newly appointed assistant editor, in the home funishings division, is Mrs. JoAnn Ridgeway Barwick, formerly associated with textile and public relations firms.

Bill Stern & Bill Corum

Holt will publish biogs by two sports figures. Radio-tv commentator Bill Stern's autobiography, "The Taste of Ashes," includes a true confession on how he licked a 22-year dope addiction, and the postmortem autobiography of the late Bill Corum, "Off and Running," is slated for late in 1959.

N.Y. Times' South American correspondent, Tad Szulc, has a different type of memoir in his "Twilight of the Tyrants," story of the downfall of five South American dictators.

Chatterley Vs. Hecate

Despite recent rulings on "Lady Chatterley's Lover," Farrar, Straus & Cudahy's reissue of "Memoirs of Hecate County" is not for sale within the state of New York. This dates back to an old ruling.

Edmund Wilson's book of some years back created a literary and censorial stir. Reissue publication price (due in December) is $6.

Jack Paar's Book

Little, Brown will publish Jack Paar's autobiog which is currently serializing, in part, in Look magazine. It's in collaboration with John Reddy.

Paar's plugging sparked two bestsellers by his associates, Jack Douglas' "My Brother Was An Only Child" and "Charley Weaver's Letters" by Cliff Arquette.

Ariz. Ghost Town Giveaway

The Foxworth-Galbraith Lumber Co., Wickenburg, Ariz., has informed the Saturday Evening Post that the magazine's check for labor charges incurred on building repairs at Ulcer Gulch, Ariz., be made out to the L.D.S. Church, Wickenburg Branch. The lumber company suggests that the donation to the Mormon Church be considered "as an income tax deduction."

The Saturday Evening Post will give away the 10-acre ghost town, formerly known as Antelope Station and Stanton, complete with an 11-room hotel, postoffice and house, as first-prize in a contest—open through July 18—to advertising, marketing and sales people in the U.S. and Canada.

British Paperbacks

Two of John O'Hara's novels, skedded as top pic productions, have been bought as paperbacks by Panther Books of London. They are his current click, "From The Terrace," which Mark Robson will shoot for 20th-Fox this fall, and his nine-year-old "A Rage To Live."

Panther has also bought up the paperback rights of Thomas Randell's yarn about a group of alcoholics titled "The 12th Step," which Columbia is to film.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Hollywood, July 7.

It will presumably cost NBC a quarter of a million dollars for Uncle Miltie to show next fall in one of his spectaculars the changing styles of comedy through the years.

What changes?

Having watched the Three Stooges emerge from oblivion to eminence solely on slapstick, thanks to their old Screen Gems having been sold to tv, the changes wrought in the field of comedy are about as startling as the changes in the manufacture of tenpenny nails.

Many niteries are opening with folding chairs for a quick getaway but Philly's Latin Casino added two Saturday matinees to take care of the smallfry which had become the devoted public of Moe, Curley, and Larry.

Right now the Three Stooges are returning to earth after having completed "Have Rocket, Will Travel," a Harry Romm production which will enjoy a Columbia release, the same studio that ground out their Gems under Jules White far away and long ago.

I recently watched some small and mature fry view the primitive pummelers in a thing called "Half Shot Shooters." The laughs ticked off as if the nonsense had been freshly fabricated that very afternoon, though actually the short must have been pre-fabbed 20 years ago.

Stooges Rockets Much Cheaper

In taking off for outer space in "Have Rocket, Will Travel" the Stooges took along their essentials for survival—frightwigs, seat pads and a sound-effects man for those thunderous slaps on the puss when things went wrong. Though many rockets have failed to orbit since the Stooges took off last April, theirs made the full trip and returned to earth. The filmed results will be ready for release in August. I believe theirs was a cheaper trip than any of the feuding forces of the Army, Air Force or Navy.

It was not. however, without grief. But grief to the Stooges is grist to their low comedy mill. They were hired by the National Space Foundation, it seems, as maintenance men. When the rocket blasted off they were deep in maintaining their on-the-job quota of sleep. Something went wrong with the fuel. The rocket crashed to earth on the edge of a nearby crater. The resulting racket woke them up. It also, before the script was a minute old, established their characters.

On arriving at the scene of the fiasco Larry wonders if the rocket belongs to somebody. Curley Joe De Rita guesses maybe it's lost. Moe Howard points out that the rocket is one of ours and whacks Curley for not having made the discovery himself.

Soda Bicarb Can Solve Fuel Problem?

It will be no surprise to most of their public that from this dismal beginning the rocket is salvaged and sent on its way, once the problem of proper fuel is solved. And who solves it? Why the Three Stooges, of course. They prove once again there's no fuel like an old fuel. They resort to the belching qualities of soda bicarb.

There's a mad logic to their solution of the fuel problem, but then many scientific discoveries have been equally accidental. Did not Metchnikoff discover saccharine because his habits were so dirty he licked his fingers instead of washing them?

There is even logic behind Moe Howard's hairdo, which in turn explains why he has such small patience with stupidity and is always giving the back of his hand to any display of it. When he was a boy of 10 he still had a mop of beautiful curls. They brought him nothing but grief in the outside world, however much his mother may have adored them in the privacy of their hovel.

The curls were always being jerked and Moe had more fights before he was a teenager than Archie Moore has had all his life. One of his fights involved the son of a school principal. Moe got kicked out of school for not knowing enough to pull his punches in the presence of a vested interest.

He was so mad he grabbed his mother's scissors and hacked his curls into what they are today—a mess. Of course, now barbers have to work hours getting the results little Moe got in minutes. But that's the disadvantage of science over inspiration. Anyway, unruly hair has been the trademark of Moe and indeed all three of the stooges.

Students, Stoogents, Same Thing

There is a legend they got their billing from Ted Healy when they worked for him in Earl Carroll's Vanities. Actually stooges are as old as English legit. In the Shakespearean theatre actors were classified as principals, supporting players, spear holders and stooges. The stooges were the lower order of students, scene-shifters and floor-sweepers, the sort you see around summer stock today. In England they were called "stoogents," which is the way they pronounced students in those days, and from "stoogents" to "stooges" was but a step.

Whether Moe Howard and Joe De Rita, who are brothers, and Larry Fine ever were "stoogents" is not a matter of record, but there is no doubt they studied the basic elements of low comedy and have never forgotten their basic training. As Moe Howard says, "The stooge may be the low man on the totem pole, but without him there is nothing to hold up the pole."

Of Danish Parents, Maybe?

Another essential to their slapping each other around is to have a beautiful dame, beautifully gowned, and end with her gorgeous gown in a shambles in a brawl. In "Have Rocket, Will Travel" they are supported by a leggy Norwegian named Anna Lisa who plays the part of a Swedish scientist. If they don't come up with something, the $10,000,000 space project will be cancelled and she will be fired.

Of course, they do come up with something and she isn't fired. When they return from their conquest of space, she is there to welcome them. The celebration builds to a big ball and of course a brawl, and that's where the science of slapstick reduces the beautifully robed space-scientist to wreckage.

There will be critics who will point out that Raphael Hayes did not show much originality by including a monkey and having him survive a trip beyond our atmosphere, but actually Hayes' script was written long before those two primates took their 1,500 mile trip above the Atlantic seaboard.

Chavez Ravine On Venus Too

On their trip, however, the Three Stooges run into talking horses, unicorns, fire-breathing dragons, a talking automobile and three robots which are ringers for themselves. Much of this happens to them when they land on the planet Venus, which Curley says looks like the Chavez Ravine, a piece of rocky real estate in downtown Los Angeles where the exiled Bums of Brooklyn hope one day to play ball for L. A.

If it does, trips to Venus seem hardly worth the bother, because Chavez Ravine or indeed all Los Angeles isn't worth a bus ride. What actually is on the planet Venus is still a big mystery. It is supported by a cloud-formation which even the most powerful telescopes cannot penetrate, though one astronomer a century ago said he did see a break in the clouds and fantastic castles, moats, boats and goats were revealed to him.

'Bring On The Unicorn!'

The Three Stooges in their trip found none of these but they did find a lovely unicorn which they brought back to this earth. I'm afraid the smallfry which composes a vast part of their audiences are not going to be satisfied with a handshake or a pat on the head. They're going to ask to see that peace-loving unicorn and will not be satisfied when told that the picture is, after all, only a spoof on space travel.

Adults may want to see Anna Lisa, whom I assume to be a direct descendant of Mona Lisa, but children place more faith and belief in lower animals, especially the kind that can be trained into domestic pets and are not particularly interested in A-bombs or rockets.

Because of a superstition about a June wedding—Borrah Minevitch died within the same month that he married her four years ago—Lucille Littel deferred her wedding to French film-tv writer-director Alain Terouanne until July 7, in Paris, where she had been making her home. Miss Littel, an artist, was w.k. in show biz when she was Mrs. Deems Taylor and later as operator of Au Franc Pinot, Minevitch's famed Paris bistro which he left her, until conditions compelled her to give it up.

A current socialite stunt of celebrating "Christmas in July" recalls the heydays of the Freeport, L. I., theatrical colony, whose social activities revolved around the Lights Club. "Lights" was coined from the Long Island Good-Hearted Thespic Society and, because most showfolk were touring or playing away from their homes in midwinter, it was decided that "Xmas in July" would be a offbeat stunt. Christmas presents were exchanged in conventional manner and somebody like Victor Moore or Bill Gaxton usually played "Santa Claus."

OBITUARIES

RABBI BERNARD BIRSTEIN

Rabbi Bernard Birstein, 67, rector of Congregation Ezrath Israel, The Actors Temple, N.Y., which serves performers in the Broadway area, died July 9 in New York after a brief illness. Born in Poland, he was ordained in 1911 and migrated to the U.S. shortly thereafter. His first assignment in the U.S. was as an assistant rabbi in Atlanta.

Rabbi Birstein founded the Actors Temple about 35 years ago to administer to the needs of the migratory actors and Broadwayites in the area. He officiated at many funerals of actors. Frequently, the Temple provided a plot for a deceased actor.

Rabbi Birstein was extremely cognizant of show biz values. In terms of Broadway he was hep. Once annually, a benefit was given to raise funds for the Temple, which by virtue of the migratory habits of performers, has only a comparatively small permanent congregation. He knew the b.o. and performance values of most of the acts and worked closely with a show biz committee on the event. Rabbi Birstein started worrying as soon as the committee's work started. His first major worry was getting sufficient prime calibre talent to see the evening through. Toward the middle of the show, he started worrying about giving the lesser-knowns a showcase.

In addition, he was chaplain of the Cinema Lodge of the B'nai B'rith and the Variety Club. He was active in rabbinical circles having been a former executive secretary and vice president of the Hebrew Orthodox Rabbis in U.S. and Canada.

Survived by wife, son and four daughters.

ELMER RHODEN JR.

Elmer C. Rhoden, Jr., 37, independent film producer and theatre circuit executive, died of a heart attack July 5 in Kansas City, Mo. He had suffered a heart attack early in the spring, and in March resigned his position as president of Commonwealth Theatres, a circuit with about 65 theatres in a five-state area centering in Kansas City.

He had been with Commonwealth since 1937 when his first job was at the circuit's theatre in Garden City, Kans. He had been president since March, 1957. For several years he was the chain's exec v.p.

In recent years Rhoden had been active in feature film production through his independent company, Imperial Productions. His first picture was "The Delinquents," produced entirely in Kansas City. He also made "The Cool and the Crazy." Both pictures were sold outright to majors for distribution. Within the past few months he and a brother, Clark, had organized Premier Productions to make television films.

His father is Elmer C. Rhoden, former president of National Theatres, and a veteran Kansas City exhibitor. Also surviving are his wife, daughter, mother and brother.

'Baby Doe'

being sung in the precise premises of the Central City Opera where the original Baby Doe Tabor had once herself occupied an orchestra stall and that its actors portrayed factual personalities who only yesterday had played their parts in life gave the opera an astounding sense of continuity with the past. Only yesterday Augusta Tabor, a tall tower of whalebone and bombazine, had been discarded by Colorado's crudest millionaire in favor of a far younger competitor for his favor. There were those in the audience who had known all the protagonists at first hand. Almost everybody present was able to recall the ultimate coda to the Leadville saga when, in the 1930s, Baby Doe Tabor had at long last been found dead at the Matchless Mine she had guarded for so many decades.

History In The Making

The audience at this initial performance were elevated from the estate of mere patrons of fashionable music to that of actual participants in, or at least spectators at a tragedy of heroic dimensions which was their very own regional property. It didn't take much stretching of the susceptible imagination to feel the ghostly presence in the back of the house of not only Tabor himself, but of Dave Moffat, Spec Penrose, William Jackson Palmer, aye of John (Napoleon) Evans himself, all the mighty figures of the epic of Colorado's yesterday. The illusion was uncommonly compelling.

It is understandable that this sense of complete illusion may not have extended to Broadway audiences whose familiarity with the folklore of Leadville is limited, but the sense of reality was recreated faithfully by this year's performance. No small part of the illusion was immediately traceable to the makeup and attire of Mary McMurry and Clifford Harvout as Augusta and Horace Tabor. No scenic designer could ask a better assignment than that provided by the Leadville bonanzas and their accompanying splendors in the nineties.

The Tabor saga is something unique and very special in the legend of the Old West. Other bonanza kings of the Comstock, of Butte and of the Mother Lode itself have provided archetypal versions of the rags-to-riches theme, and yet dramas set in Virginia City or atop Nob Hill have fallen short of the grandeur implicit in their idiom. Nobody seems to have successfully evoked the spirit of John Mackay or William Ralston or Jim Fair or Marcus Daly on the stage, and yet each of these had something of the Tabor story in him: Mackay had openhanded grandeur, Ralston had tregedy and failure, Fair a combination of both.

The answer must be in the person of Augusta Tabor who, in "The Ballad of Baby Doe" at least if not in actual life, rises triumphant as the majestic symbol of survival in the Tabor saga. Her virtue was massive; her person formidable, but she dominates Leadville and later Denver in the age of silver as her masculine counterpart dominated the Augustan age of Rome.

Baby Doe was demonstrably a tart; Horace Tabor a savage at first elevated and then destroyed by fortune; but in Augusta Tabor there is nothing evasive, nothing equivocal. She stands foresquare for the sanctity of marriage and the inviolability of the home, and in a cynical generation when these are virtues more historic than contemporary, she has every ounce of audience sympathy with her as she goes down to defeat with all flags flying.

Nearly three-quarters of a century after it all happened, Colorado has embalmed Tabor in his multiplicity of vices and dubious virtues; it has peopled the Baby Doe Suite in Central's Teller House with the spirit of his second wife. And it has reared a monument in memory that transcends all the rest of the cast in the Rocky Mountains' classic tragedy to Augusta, a woman hewn from her native New England granite and one whose remembrance is just as enduring.

spondent Anthony Austin, there are many scenes of brutality (a motorcycle gang roars into an American town and beats up a bookstore owner) and there's a lynching. Vian's geography is somewhat mixed up. The picture has one scene, near the Canadian border, showing a Negro butler in riding boots serving tea in silver cups to whites sitting beneath palm trees.

The hero of the yarn, a light-skinned Negro, along with his white girl, are cut down by machineguns on the Canadian border. Austin notes that Vian obviously wasn't aware that the U.S.-Canadian border is the largest unguarded border in the world.

Pic contains several sex scenes, including one of a woman swimming under water and wearing "only the briefest bottom half of a bikini."

New York 36, N. Y.

Dear Johnnie:

Now that your engagement at the Latin Quarter is drawing to a close, Mr. E. M. Loew and myself, as Managing Directors, would like to congratulate you for a truly excellent job done.

Not only has your 1959 engagement exceeded all previous grosses, but you have established a new high for this season of the year - a high that surpasses all in the annals of the Latin Quarter in the 17 years of its existence! This surely is a tribute to your splendid artistry and tremendous appeal.

This season of the year will always be reserved for Johnnie Ray, and we sincerely hope that you will come back to the Latin Quarter for many more years.

The entire Latin Quarter organization, Mr. Loew and myself wish to convey our thanks.

Sincerely,

Ed Risman

E. R. Risman
Managing Director

Thanks again Mr. Loew, Ed Risman, Gigi, Joe, Billy, Ernie and all the gang for always making the Latin Quarter "home" for me.

Johnnie Ray

FILM STUDIOS' TV STATION BUYS

Loew's Inc. May Resume Dividends

On the basis of the hefty profit of $6,157,000 for the 40-week period ended June 4, there's a good chance that Loew's Inc. will resume dividend payments shortly.

As of the June 4 date, the company had large balances in excess of restrictions, due to sinking fund debentures, which prevent the issuance of divvy checks.

The company is jointly liable with Loew's Theatres, its former subsidiary, for a total of $24,869,000 in outstanding sinking fund debentures. Under the agreement of reorganization separating the two companies, Loew's Theatres is responsible for $5,000,000 and Loew's Inc. for $19,869,000.

Loew's ceased dividend payments in September, 1957. Previous to that time, the company had an unblemished record of paying dividends to its stockholders for 30 years.

'Fugitive Kind's' $2,300,000 Budget Represents $1,000,000 For Talent

Talent costs represent more than $1,000,000 of the $2,300,000 budget of "The Fugitive Kind," the Martin Jurow-Richard Shepherd production currently being filmed in New York for United Artists release. The film, which took two years to package, stars Marlon Brando, Anna Magnani and Joanne Woodward, and represents the second entry of the new young production team of Jurow & Shepherd.

Brando and Miss Magnani have percentage arrangements. Miss Woodward is on loanout from 20th-Fox. In addition, Brando's Pennybacker company is associated in the production.

Jurow and Shepherd, both former talent agents, having been with William Morris and Music Corp. of America, respectively, consider the talent investment well worthwhile in light of the fact that three stars, each of whom is an Academy Award winner, have tremendous appeal in the foreign market. The producers cited the importance of the overseas market and the necessity of penetrating this market for maximum boxoffice results. With Brando, Miss Magnani and Miss Woodward they feel they have the "chemistry" and "the combined marquee potential" that will draw worldwide audience interest.

The film, based on Tennesee

MARLENE'S $2,000,000 3-YEAR REVLON DEAL

Hollywood, July 21.

Marlene Dietrich will act as television spokesman for Revlon under terms of a $2,000,000, three-year deal being finalized with the cosmetic outfit. First assignment would be as hostess on Revlon's 15 Goodman Ace specials.

Deal is being worked out by Arnold Krakauer, her attorney, with William Jaffe, attorney repping Revlon. William Morris topper Abe Lastfogel was also in the negotiations.

Opera Tour's Smallest Auditorium, 3,700

Houston, Tex., July 21.

Metropolitan Opera has dropped Houston from its tour next season. There was the usual expression of "deep regret" by the N. Y. body.

With its 3,000 seats, Houston's Music Hall does not allow the Met a high enough boxoffice return, it was said.

Other cities with comparatively small halls have been dropped also. They include Washington, with a 3,000 seat hall and Baltimore with a 2,700 seat theatre. The smallest hall to be visited next season will be in Bloomington, Ind., where the auditorium accommodates 3,700.

If Another War, Gen. Jim Stewart A Press Agent

Washington, July 21.

Star James Stewart is a reserve brigadier. The only woman U.S. Senator has ended the controversy she kicked up two years ago over the film actor's promotion from his colonelcy in the Air Force Reserve.

Sen. Margaret Chase Smith (R-Me.) joined in the Senate Armed Services Committee's unanimous vote Thursday (16) approving Stewart's boost to general. But before she voted "yes," the Air Force was required to switch Stewart's assignment in case of national mobilization. He was moved from the staff of the Strategic Air Command's 15th Air Force to a Pentagon desk job in public relations.

SEE COL, 20TH SETTING TREND

Motion picture companies, with a growing multi-million dollar stake in tv film production, this week entered the tv station ownership field in a big way.

First to come under the wire are Columbia Pictures' subsid Screen Gems and 20th-Fox. In separate deals, to be announced shortly, SG bought out the Time Inc. station in Salt Lake City, KTVT, for a reported $3,500,000; and 20th-Fox bought KMSP-TV, Minneapolis-St. Paul, from National Telefilm Associates for $3,500,000.

The SG and 20th-Fox moves are no mere flirtations in the field of tv station ownership. Each company is motivated by a desire to acquire the maximum complement of radio-tv stations allowed by FCC regulations.

The spark ignited by SG and 20th-Fox also is expected to fire the tv ownership ambitions of other major Hollywood motion picture production companies.

Paramount Pictures currently owns KTLA, Los Angeles, having sold off its 20% stock interest in DuMont at the beginning of this year. (Paramount has been the lone motion picture producing company in the field of tv station ownership for quite some time.)

Metro entered the field about three years ago in conjunction with Steel Strike Puts Crepe on Pa. B.O.

Harrisburg, July 21.

The steel strike came, and as it arrived, the blossoming boxoffices throughout the Keystone State were in danger of watching a boom go bust.

Reaction to the strike came almost immediately in many areas of the state, which has wide industrial ties with steel, ranging from Pittsburgh eastward to the manufacturing ring which circles and encompasses Philadelphia. Forewarned, but unbelieving, many workers in the steel mills, the railroaders who stretch through the state and others whose paychecks depend almost entirely on the blast furnaces in Pennsylvania indicated there would be no more play until

'Lady Chatterley' Song

Tin Pan Alley is getting into the "Lady Chatterley" act.

L. Wolfe Gilbert and Joseph Myro have come up with a tune, "Lady Chatterley's Lover," named after D. H. Lawrence's novel which has run into some current trouble with the U. S. Postoffice.

RCA's '3 C's' & Tint TV Triggers Burns Agenda; Leaves for Moscow

By ABEL GREEN

John L. Burns, president of Radio Corp. of America, who took off yesterday (Tues.) for Moscow with his 16-year-old son and Tom Deegan Jr., RCA p.r. exec, is curious to see the Russians' reaction to color television, at first hand, although conceding facetiously "we're a cinch not to make one sale in the entire USSR." But he is sanguine about RCA color television's commercial chances this fall, on the anniversary of the fifth year of spectrum video. He is also bullish on the company's horizons in light of RCA's broadening base of electronic operations, not only as regards new Government contracts (RCA has $100,000,000 in defense work for this year alone) but the almost limitless expanding program of what he calls "the 3 C's."

These "3 C's" comprise communications, computations and controls on the industrial side of American business. As he spells it out, the magic of electronics can compute, control and communicate increasingly efficient utilizations of anything from the locks of the Panama Canal to actuating the pumping of oil fields to rolling railroad stock to highway toll gates to stock market brokerage calculations to department stores to life insurance companies and the like.

In actuality almost all of these already utilize the RCA 501 machine—an elaborated and transistorized version of the original Bizmac—which sells for $500,000 to $1,500,000, depending on its size and requirements. It is preferred to rent these on a $15,000-$30,000 monthly fee which figures around 2½% of the cost which thus is recovered in three and one-half years.

More about the "3 C's" below but, as RCA's second quarter sees a 17% tilt in business and new peak sales predicted for this year, the potential of color television is a must factor in RCA's planning from the entertainment viewpoint.

Director Bill Beaudine's 50th Anni in Film Biz

Hollywood, July 21.

William Beaudine, vet director, celebrates his 50th anniversary in motion pictures this week. Starting his career as a "general helper"—sweeping up the sets—at The Biograph Studios in N. Y., during his half century in films he has directed more than 500 features and scores of telepix. Among those he's helmed are such greats as Mary Pickford, Pearl White, Charlie Murray and Thomas Meighan.

He currently is directing the Walt Disney tv show, "Moochie of the Little League," two-part program for 1959-60 season of ABC-TV's "Walt Disney Presents."

Meredith Willson To Litigate Acts Using 'MM' Tunes

Hollywood, July 21.

Meredith Willson is so hopping mad at singers and comics who disregard the copyright laws that he has finally decided to take legal action. Particular targets of his ire at this time are Jack Cassidy, who appears in a nitery turn with his wife, Shirley Jones, and Joe E. Lewis. Said Willson over the weekend, "We've decided to institute an action for damages and cease and desist against Cassidy."

Willson, who wrote the words, music and libretto of the smash musical, "The Music Man," said he was prompted to take action against Cassidy because "he thumbed his nose at us when we asked him twice to refrain from singing 'Trouble' (from Willson's show) in his nitery act. This is special, unpublished material that requires permission for its use. He never asked for it and if he had we would have refused it as we have many other performers. He continues to flout authority and shows no respect for the copyright laws. I have instructed Norman Tyre to institute action against him."

Joe E. Lewis' case is different. Hit number of "Music Man" is "76 Trombones," which Willson says Lewis has parodied in his night club act with the title of "76 Hormones." Parodies require special permission but Lewis, according to Willson, has never made such a request. He indicated that similar action would be taken against Lewis if he further ignores Willson's cease and desist.

'DIARY' WAS TOP PLAY IN GERMANY IN 1958

"The Diary of Anne Frank" was the most frequently performed play in Germany during 1958. That was disclosed recently by the German Tourist Information Office in New York, which stated the drama had 3,400 performances in 122 theatres during the year.

It was also revealed that of plays by contemporary German authors, the most popular during 1958 was Karl Wittlinger's "Kennen Sie die Milchstrasse?" ("Do You Know the Milky Way?"). According to the Tourist Office, it played 661 performances in 35 theatres.

Foreign Stars' U.S. Publicity Tours; Femmes Favored; Lingo Problems

With foreign films gambling for higher stakes, more of the independents are thinking about bringing European stars to the U.S. to tour with their respective pictures. These personal appearances can be effective and pay off in a good deal of publicity, but they also raise certain problems.

When it comes to imported talent, particularly from France, the American public seems to be more interested in women than men. This was pointed up via press reaction recently when Mylene Demongeot hit N.Y. for a p.r. whirl and was followed by Alain Delon. Both were plugging "Women Are Weak," a National Telefilm Associates release current at the Paris Theatre. While Miss Demongoet got spotted on a good many shows and did a lot of interviews, Delon failed to excite much interest.

As a matter of fact, the two pointed up a sharp difference in the attitude of European performers when it comes to stumping the States. Some are perfectly willing to adapt themselves to American publicity ways. Others consider much of what is asked of them "undignified" and resent the type of exposure which a U.S.-type campaign usually requires. In this specific case, Miss Demongeot. cooperated to the hilt, giving out the kind of saucy interviews the public expects from a French star, while Delon balked at most of the suggestions made for his p.a.s and made it plain to interviewers that he wasn't interested in "fan" questions on his personal life.

Those who've handled European

RUBE GOLDBERG ZANIES TO RE-LIVE ON VIDEO

Hollywood, July 21.

George Productions Inc., has acquired rights to the Rube Goldberg inventions, and cartoon characters of Boob McNutt and Ike and Mike, They Look Alike, for a five-minute combo live action-animation teleseries. Dave Willock and Gordon Polk will star.

Three pilots will be lensed next week, with Lido Productions handling animation. George W. George, who wrote pilot scripts, will produce. George is Rube Goldberg's son.

Barraults' Film

Paris, July 14.

Jean-Louis Barrault and his wife, Madeleine Reynaud, will star in a film to be made here this summer, prior to taking charge of his new government-subsidized Odeon Theatre.

It'll be their first film in 10 years and he will once more play a whitefaced clown (mime) role, same as he had in "Les Enfants en Paradis" which first brought him to international attention a couple of decades ago.

Norm Corwin Adding TV

Hollywood, July 21.

Norman Corwin, radio, screen and stage writer, has been inked by Julian Lesser Productions to a multi-episode deal for unit's upcoming teleseries on the factual-supernatural, "The Unexplained." Corwin, currently working on script of "The Story of Ruth" at 20th-Fox, reports to Lesser immediately after this assignment—to start work on "The Other Lincoln," dealing with The Great Emancipator, first of probably 12 segments.

Shooting starts in Fall on series of 39 episodes, budgeted at $1,600,000. Ron Buck, assistant to Lesser, has been elevated to associate producer on new series.

Terper Brenda Hollis Has Degree in Divinity; Sez She's No Stripper

Evansville, Ind.

Editor, VARIETY:

I would like to take this opportunity to thank you for the writeup you gave me titled "Pious Fort Wayne Discovers Sex."

Please do not consider me ungrateful, but may I call your attention to the fact, that my name is Brenda Hollis, The Golden Girl, and not Bunny Hollis, as I was named in the article.

Also I should like to mention the fact, which is of utmost importance to me: I am not a stripper, but an interpretive dancer, telling stories in dance. You can understand that being called a stripper in that sense of the word, could limit the places I can appear. It is because I do the type of work I do, that I have been able to play many cities and towns very religious-conscious.

As a matter of fact I am disclosing to you something of a rather personal matter. My very purpose in life, in my work, is to project to my audience the beauty of the body, and to show that God created our bodies as well as our minds, and therefore, there is nothing evil in the body, or in sex. I am most sincere when I say this to you.

I hold a degree in Divinity, in Psychiatry, and Electropsychometry.

I will be appearing at the above hotel (The McCurdy) through Aug. 8.

Brenda Hollis

(The Ft. Wayne, Ind., story stated, "This churchgoing (heavily Catholic) burg is baring the flesh as well as the soul nowadays . . . Success of Miss Hollis has prompted (F. Harold) Van Norman (chain hotel operator) to sign her for his other Hoosier hotels, including the McCurdy in Evansville.—Ed.).

Jean Cocteau to Make 1st Film in 5 Years

Paris, July 14.

Active in all aspects of show biz, via theatre, ballet, films and music hall, oldtimer Jean Cocteau now wants to make his first film in six years. One of the forerunners of offbeat pix, however, producers still shy clear in spite of various film hits.

Result is that Cocteau is raising the needed $100,000 for his picture via investments by his friends. Yul Brynner has already kicked in $14,000. He proposed pic, "La Testament D'Orpheee," will be about the search for a man through a time machine.

How Not to Win And Influence Free Film Puffs

A reporter for the Knickerbocker News of Albany offers the following commentary on his attempt to cover the location company of "The Fugitive Kind" at Milton, 80 miles from Albany. Addressed to VARIETY by William Ingram, here's the verbatim:

"They treated cameraman Bob Paley and me like fish from Oshkosh. They let us know that our little sheet's publicity wasn't worth a row of snap-beans, that Brando and Woodward and Magnani were profit-sharing on the flick and that only Woodward would interview, that a N. Y. Times photographer and someone named Muky had all the still picture-taking tied up and that we were interlopers or at best sweet little picknose scissors-and-pasters anxious to regurgitate about what moviemaking means to a small community.

"We didn't yank our forelocks and cry Bhwana. We wrangled like hell with a pleasant little guy named Jerry Ludwig. He smiled at us and all the time the scarlet billows were spreading.

"Ludwig said Paley would have to take his stills from where the crowds were roped back, 50 or 60

'Lady Chatterley' Now Has U.S. Mail Rights

The U. S. Post Office ban on D. H. Lawrence's "Lady Chatterley's Lover" was declared "illegal and void" by N. Y. Federal District Court Judge Fredercik Van Pelt Bryan yesterday (Tues.) Judge Bryan signed an order restraining N. Y. Postmaster Robert K. Christenberry from denying the mails to the book or any circulars announcing the availability of the book. Judge Bryan decided that he found that "Lady Chatterley's Lover" was not obscene within the meaning of Federal laws. He further stated that the book is entitled to the protections guaranteed to the freedoms of speech and press by the first amendment to the U. S. Constitution.

The suit was brought by Grove Press, publishers of the book, and Reader's Subscription, a book club, after the postal authorities tabbed the book obscene and lifted its right to be distributed via the mails.

Boston Common's Ready Automobile Rathskeller

Boston, July 21.

Downtown deluxers are being cheered by reports that the long-delayed 2,000-car garage to be built under historic Boston Common will become a reality. Work is skedded to start Aug. 1 for Jan., 1961, completion.

The garage would be adjacent to the theatre strip, and film house mgrs. have long decried the poor parking facilities in downtown Boston. Latest detriment to taking the car in town and parking it to go to the flickers have been towing raids staged by the gendarmes.

"We went to the picture show and when we came back to our car, it was gone" has been a bad beef for the downtown deluxe houses to cope with.

War Pictures Fascinate Japanese With an Exception—No A-Bomb Echo

The Japanese filmgoing public has the (expected) fascination of the loser for screen fare dealing with the last war, but absolutely rejects pictures with atom bomb themes that act as a reminder of Hiroshima horrors.

According to Kiyoshi Takamura, managing director of Japan's Shochiku Co., one recent film dealing specifically with the Hiroshima holocaust—the French "Hiroshima, Mon Amour"—was a complete dud at the boxoffice. So was a semi-documentary about the "Lucky Dragon," the Japanese fishing vessel contaminated by fallout from a test-bomb explosion in the Pacific.

"The Japanese audiences want to be entertained by films. They don't want to see anything about Hiroshima and they don't want to be reminded," Takamura said. "It would be absolutely foolish for us today to make any picture that revives the Hiroshima memory."

By contrast, the Japanese aren't staying away from pure war films, some of which have been quite successful. The same has been true in Germany, where both the West and the East Germans are continuing to produce pictures that view the war in retrospect and often very unflattering from the German position. Nevertheless, such films appear to fascinate the men who fought in the war, and who now are learning who bungled it and sacrificed them.

Another taboo topic in Japanese films is the present emperor. However, several companies are planning pictures involving the romance of the recently-married Prince and Princess.

Found: John Dos Passos (And Only Because Of 'Bubble' Invention)

Washington, July 21.

Lost and Found Dept.: John Dos Passos, one of literature's lost generation, who has been lost to public view for some time was found this week doing a writing-farming job at his Westmoreland County, Va., family home.

The 63-year-old Dos Passos, to whom fame and acclaim came at 25 and who prefers solitude and anonymity in his later years, came to light when his name appeared on a routine application at the U. S. Patent Office for a device that would blow bubbles. Washington Post reporter Phil Casey spotted the familiar name, the Virginia County residence and after three months searching and persuasion finally arranged an interview.

Today, Dos Passos supervises the timber operations on his farm, works the garden, and devotes seven days a week to writing.

"I've been trying for years to knock off on Sundays," said Dos Passos, "but I can't seem to. It's a race with senility. When a man gets to be my age, he really has to settle down and work." The work is on a novel which the author won't talk about "because it's bad luck," and on an illustrated history which he has just completed.

Since his postwar novel, "Three Soldiers," brought him instant attention 40 years ago, he has written more than 30 books and plays and numerous magazine articles.

He doesn't read many reviews of his books and, he told Casey, is not concerned with the sales.

"I used to argue with Scott Fitzgerald about that," he said. "He

'ANATOMY' AS YANKS' OFFICIAL IN VENICE

Otto Preminger's "Anatomy of a Murder" is heading for the Venice film festival as the official American entry. The Columbia release has been picked and is about to be approved by the fest authorities.

It's considered very likely that Venice will invite a second U. S. film to enter in the competition.

Oil Boom Town's New Aud

Albuquerque, July 21.

A new $250,000 auditorium in the New Mexico oil boom town of Farmington, about 200 miles northwest of Albuquerque, has been formally dedicated.

The new structure, to be called the San Juan County Auditorium, was a joint project of the county commission and the Farmington Chamber of Commerce.

The building is skedded to be uesd to house oil shows, grand opera, ice shows and similar large-scale attractions.

Yanks Do Well In Shorts Contest

Venice, July 21.

American entries picked up the largest number of awards of any participating nation at the just-ended Venice Festival of Documentaries and Short Subjects.

A first prize wen to John Hubley's "Moonbird" in the cartoon section, while "Skyscraper," by Shirley Clarke, Willard Van Dyke, and Irving Jacoby topped the "countries, people, and folklore" section of the event.

Another Yank first prize went to Phil Lerner's "My Own Yard to Play In" (Social Documentation Section); while still a further kudo was awarded to Nathan Kroll-produced "Apalachian Spring" by Peter Glushank and Martha Graham based on Aaron Copland's score. This was submitted among the films in the television section.

Jury for the event, the 10th in a series, was presided over by British film director Thorold Dickinson, with Yank director Lionel Rogosin sitting in as the U.S. juror.

One of Biggest British Film Groups Going To Moscow Film Festival

London, July 21.

One of the biggest British delegations ever to participate in an international film festival is to take part in the Moscow Film Fests Aug. 3-17. Largest individual contingent will be sent by Associated British Picture Corp. On the executive side, the delegation will be headed by Eric Fletcher, M.P., deputy chairman of the corporation; C. J. Latta, managing director; J. J. (Jack) Goodlatte, head of group's exhibition; and MacGregor Scott, in charge of home and foreign sales. Additionally, there will be a talent lineup, including Tommy Steele, Carole Lesley and Peter Arne; a small newsreel unit and publicity department reps.

Arthur Watkins, president of British Film Producers Assn., will be attending as a guest of honor. The official industry delegation will comprise Phil Hyams, head of Eros Films, whose company's "A Cry From the Streets" is the official entry; Robert Clark, representing the BFPA; and James Carr, managing director of World Wide, repping the Assn. of Specialized Film Producers.

A World Wide short, made on behalf of the World Health Organization in Geneva, entitled "People Like Maria," also will be screened at the fest in a Russian version. Dana Wilson, the moppet star of "Cry," is being flown over especially from Australia to join the British delegation in Moscow.

Colan MacArthur, managing director of Rank Overseas, is also likely to attend the fest, and definitely committed for part of the fortnight is Kenneth Rive, managing director of Gala Films, the company which has a long-term deal with the Russian film industry.

Prescott Exits WBZ For Embassy Film Job

Boston, July 21.

Norm Prescott, w.k. and vet disk jock, ankled WBZ Sunday (19) to become a veep of Joe Levine's Embassy Film Corp., Hub based film distrib, importer and producer. Prescott, who was involved with some of the "Hercules" promotion, will work on merchandising tie-ins and promosh on "Hercules" and Levine's new acquisition, "Jack the Ripper."

Prescott, who started in radio at WORL and WCOP, Boston and went to WNEW, New York, came back to Boston four years ago from WNEW to head the platter spinning team at WBZ. To replace Prescott, WBZ is bringing in Jack Murphy from Scranton, Pa., who will be billed simply as "Murphy," no first name.

Americans Agin 'Age' Disqualification On Films Circulating In Germany

The Motion Picture Export Assn., while conscious of the longstanding German complaint that West Germany is "flooded" with too many imports, nevertheless opposes the idea of an arbitrary "age" limitation on foreign pictures brought into Germany.

Proposal for such limitation was made recently in the annual report of the German producers and distributors. It was suggested that no imports older than 30 months be permitted to circulate or to get licenses. The Germans, noting that the Yank outfits are "hungry" for revenue, said they feared that the 1939-46 product might be dumped on the German market.

Acknowledging that it might be difficult to get the Government to impose the desired age limitation, the Germans suggested a voluntary system and agreement. MPEA maintains that this isn't feasible, not only because it'd be difficult to get all of its member companies to go along, but also because companies outside the MPEA are concerned.

While a limitation would, theoretically, apply to all imports, those hardest hit by it would be the Americans. Yanks in 1958 232 films into the West German market, an increase of six over 1957. However, despite the larger import volume, the per-picture earnings of the U.S. films went down.

More U.S.-USSR Rapport

Negotiations for a one-year extension of the Soviet-American cultural exchange agreement will start in the late summer.

State Dept. considers the exchange deal to have greatly profited Yank interests via Soviet exposure to American cultural achievements.

J. J. Frankel's Plan To Tradeshow Par's 'Orchid' During Moscow Festival

A second American film may be seen during the Moscow film festival, if plans of J. J. Frankel of MJP Corp. jell. The picture would be Paramount's "Black Orchid."

While the U.S. Government has decided not to let any Hollywood picture participate in the Moscow competition, "The Diary of Anne Frank" will represent the U.S. out-of-competition. It was chosen by the State Dept.

Frankel's plan involves the leasing of a Moscow theatre to "tradeshow" "Black Orchid" to the Soviets and other Communist delegations. Frankel's outfit represents both Par and Warner Bros. in Iron Curtain country sales. "Black Orchid" has been cleared by the State Dept. for possible sale to the Russians.

AL DAFF, NEW YORKER

Former U Exec Veep Has Some Film Deals Pending

Hollywood, July 21.

When Alfred E. Daff, former executive vicepresident of Universal Pictures, and his wife arrive tomorrow (Wed.) aboard the Swedish liner Golden Gate (Johnson Line), sailing here from Sweden, he will pick up their car at the Beverly Wilshire Hotel which has been parked there for seven months. They motor back to their New York base in about two weeks. Daff, while on his global perigrinations, set up some picture deals. He will headquarter in the east, where he has long maintained a 5th Ave. apartment, and not in Hollywood, as previously expected. The vet film exec is not a country-dropper but an ocean-dropper as he details that since leaving Hollywood for his native Australia last winter they have been through the North and South Pacific, the Australian Bight, Indian Ocean, Red Sea, Suez Canal, Aegean Sea, Adriatic Sea, North Sea, Baltic Sea, English Channel, North and South Atlantic, the Caribbean and home via the Panama Canal.

Lana Turner as Mother Of Maurice Utrillo

Hollywood, July 21.

Allied Artists inked Lana Turner to star in "Streets of Montmartre," which prexy Steve Broidy terms "the most elaborate and important film in the company's history."

Based on Stephen and Ethel Longstreet's "Man of Montmartre," pic will be directed by Douglas Sirk in Paris next Spring, in color and CinemaScope. Yarn biopics Suzanne Valadon, Parisian model-turned-artist and mother of maurice Utrillo, genius and drunkard.

Loew's Execs Get Moderate 'Options'

The board of directors of Loew's Inc., at recent meeting, voted to grant restricted stock options to "certain" key personnel. The options, subject to stockholder approval, cover 113,000 shares at an option price of $30.25, representing 100% of the average daily market price of the stock from March 12, 1959 to May 27, 1959.

Notes to the third quarter financial report, issued Monday (20), also disclose that through purchases on the open market subsequent to June 4, 1959, the company acquired by July 10, 1959, 18,600 shares of its common stock at a total cost of $568,533.

Under the provisions of a previous stock option plan, approved by the stockholders in 1951, 7,829 shares are under option to certain executives at $22.04 per share.

Hub Yawns 'Chatterley'

Boston, July 21.

"Lady Chatterley's Lover," riding on the wave of Supreme Court publicity, opened at the Trans-Lux here with nary a murmur from the censor or anybody else.

Film had previously played the Beacon Hill. While biz was okay on the picture, it didn't make as much of a dent as expected in Hub, which was pretty placid about the whole thing.

Allied of Indiana Sez UA Holding Back Dating Johansson Bout Films

Exhibitors have charged United Artists with "pulling out" bookings of the Johansson-Patterson fight films and with withholding the pix from subsequent runs until they have completed first-run engagements.

According to Allied Theatre owners of Indiana, this is contrary to usual policy. In the past, it's contended, fight pictures were handled like newsreels and fight pix were permitted to run simultaneously in first and second run situations.

UA's alteration of the precedent, exhibs say, makes it questionable how much value the fight films will have after the news impact dies down. The exhib unit urges its members to check later grosses before deciding to book the films.

EYES OF TEXAN UPON U. S.

Gordon McLendon As Own Distrib Operating Nationally

Dallas, July 21.

McLendon organization is moving into the field of motion pic distribution. Following a successful Texas premiere of "The Killer Shrews" and "The Giant Gila Monster," in Dallas, Fort Worth and in 11 theatres in smaller nearby communities, Gordon McLendon, prez of McLendon Radio Pictures which produced the films here in their own studios, has set up McLendon Radio Pictures Distributing Co.

McLendon says that the new company will distribute McLendon pics nationally as well as other feature length product. A field force already is signing contracts with film exchanges throughout the country for the handling of the adventure-action double bill and is establishing a network of sales representatives. The company will also handle nationwide distribution of the third McLendon made feature, "My Dog, Buddy," which is already completed and scheduled for release Thanksgiving.

He also stated that he is looking for additional indie product for the new distribution company.

Return of Grandeur to France

[ON BASTILLE DAY]

Paris, July 21.

Now trying (1) to set French films on their own feet via the new Film Aid Law, and after having already (2) transformed the state-subsidized theatres, for bolstering of French prestige and grandeur at home and abroad, Culture Minister Andre Malraux took a third significant step on the July 14 French Independence (Bastille) Day festivities to give them a showy flourish.

Malraux remarked that his Bastille Day ceremonies symbolizes the return of grandeur in France under General de Gaulle and the Fifth Republic. For two days there were torchlight parades before gigantic reviewing stands, public concerts and resurrecting of old revolutionary songs and music, dancing in the streets to better bands, appearances of top singing stars at the many public dance spots spotted in the many Parisian street squares, fireworks, and a big carnival-type exposition on the Esplandade Des Invalides to collect money for public works.

BUT EXHIBS STILL BUYING STOCK

By HY HOLLINGER

Cherished hope of theatre operators to own stock in the major film producing companies to have some say-so in policy decision, particularly those affecting the welfare of theatres, is making some progress. But even the most ardent proponents of the stock-buy plan have admitted that the surface has only been scratched and it's still a long way off before theatremen can elect a man to the board of one of the film companies. Further distant is the time when exhibitors can exert important pressure on a board via stockholdings.

Making the most headway currently is the Motion Picture Investors Inc., an open end mutual fund organized by a group of midwest exhibitors and equipment dealers for the purpose of investing in the securities of motion picture production-distribution firms.

MPI, which last week elected circuit head Walter Reade Jr. president at its annual meeting in Kansas City, has an investment of approximately $100,000 in various film companies, for which investors have received a 15% dividend. It has set as its new goal the disposal of $2,000,000 worth of MPI stock.

Realistic industryites maintain that even if MPI reaches its $2,000,000 goal, the sum will have little effect in influencing film company policies. The aim is to spread the stockholdings around, and $2,000,000 invested in eight companies would not give MPI much of a voice. Even if it were decided to employ the entire $2,000,000 to buy the stock of one company, the result would be inconclusive. For example, it would take at least $12,000,000 to obtain a 15% interest in Loew's Inc., a position sufficient to demand a seat on the board.

Need To Join Forces

If MPI can combine with other groups and induce individual shareholding exhibitors to throw in their stock with MPI, it's figured that some dent can be made into the corporate structures of film companies where the stock is not tightly held by the management group.

Ever since Trueman T. Rembusch first advanced the idea of exhibitors acquiring stock in the film companies at an Allied States convention some seven years ago, exhibitor groups have been intrigued with the suggestion. More talk than action has followed. It appears now that exhibitors, feeling that they are facing serious consequences unless they stem the product shortage, are more inclined to pursue the idea realistically.

Theatre Owners of America is an ardent supporter of the policy and has backed its enthusiasm with stock purchases in all the film companies. The exhibitor organization, however, has not disclosed the extent of its holdings. The American Congress of Exhibitors, and particularly its chairman, S. H.

London's Empire Losing 72% Capacity for '65' Process Used by 'Hur'

London, July 21.

Empire Theatre, in preparation for the long engagement of Metro's "Ben-Hur," is removing 72% of its seating capacity—1,800 of the 2,500 seats—for greater effectiveness of film's Camera 65 process.

Side seats will be lined up with the sides of the screen, so not a seat in the house will have an angle-on view of the screen. Plans call for projection equipment to be on main floor instead of its regular placement in balcony.

Metro, which is picking up tab for alterations, apparently feels that long playoff will make up the difference at b.o. for the 1,800 missing seats.

A New, Happier Paramount Lot

Paying for Stars — Not Heedless Anymore to Disgruntled Technicians—Bill Perlberg's Views

By ABEL GREEN

William Perlberg -Seaton Productions) sees an analogy in "the new Paramount studio operations" to his own method of doing business—to wit, "you got to meet the competition." Samplings of some salaries in his upcoming P-S pictures is being interpreted now on the Par lot by new studio production head, Jack Karp, in like manner.

"For example, we're no longer letting good technicians get away to television just because it was a difference of a $25 or $50 salary, because a good unit manager can save you that and much more. And we are all heartened by Barney Balaban's OK apparently to Karp in making deals, digging for properties, and the like."

The sparking of Par production has been trade-interpreted before, and favorably, from all sides, not the least of this cheering section coming from theatreowners who are increasingly concerned about the dwindling production line.

As for "meeting the competition," these are some salary samplings: Debbie Reynolds will get $150,000 a picture for two pictures against a percentage; Tony Curtis, opposite her in her first for Perlberg-Seaton, "Rat Race," which starts shooting in New York in September, gets $100,000 against 10% of the gross. Clark Gable, starring in P-S' soon due "But Not For Me" (based on an old stageplay, "Accent On Youth"), is on a straight 10%-of-the-gross contract. Carroll Baker, his femme lead in this particular picture, for example, got $200,000—the contracted 150G, plus another 50G when the shooting schedule stretched.

When P-S shoots "Pleasure of His Company," the current Sam Taylor-Cornelia Otis Skinner Broadway legit hit, Fred Astaire will be in the Cyril Ritchard role; Miss Reynolds will do the Dolores Hart part; Charles Ruggles will film his stage original; Lilli Palmer in Miss Skinner's role; and Gary Merrill in the second male lead. The boy has not yet been cast.

No Product Shortage Here; Automatic Caramel Corn Gear Hitting the Lobbies

Chicago, July 21.

With candy counters the profit margin for many of them, exhibitors will soon be offered the first fully automatic caramel corn machine. Its developers expect the unit to effect time-and-labor savings from $5,000 to $10,000 per annum for theatremen and confection shops.

The revolutioner, brainchild of three Chicagoans, including vet show trader Dan Goldberg, will be offered exhibs and others only on a lease basis starting right after Labor Day. Machine will be marketed by the Hi-Jinx Caramel Corn Co., which partners Goldberg with Louis Price and Charles Cretors, latter the head of Cretors Popcorn Machines, oldline manufacturers. Goldberg, an ex-legit producer whose career spans an assortment of show biz ventures, is currently associated with theatreman (arty World Playhouse) Charles Teitel, primarily in their imports distributorship.

According to Goldberg, Hi-Jinx has also developed a packaged prepared mix for caramel corn which, unlike the machine, is to be sold to lessees.

First demonstration of the machine is planned here for three days, July 28-30, in the Congress Hotel, and in November at the joint Chi confab of TOA and the National Assn. of Concessionaires.

Lutherans as Distribs

Los Angeles, July 21.

Family Films' inspirational motion pictures will be distributed to churches by Concordia Publishing House, subsidiary of Lutheran Publications, headquartered in St. Louis.

Among Family Films' product is "This Is the Life" teleseries (not to be confused with "This Is Your Life").

John Wayne Meets Texas Coin-Bags Re 'The Alamo'

Houston, July 21.

Over a billion dollars in Houston capital sat down in the back room of the Club Maxim's at noon last Wednesday (15) and talked filmmaking with John Wayne. Wayne explained they could drop something like $3,000,000 in the kitty to produce a riproaring film about the Alamo and some of Houston's most fabled names listened.

In the group listening to Wayne discuss his forthcoming pic, which is scheduled to start shooting at Brackettville, Tex., in September were Glenn McCarthy, Frank Waters, William A. Smith, Wilbur Ginther, Claude Hamill, Temple Hargrove, Dr. Hampton Robinson, Ralph McCullough, Sid Adger, Vernon Frost, Grover Geiselman, A. W. Larkin and Dave Wallace. O. J. and I. J. McCullough, tool tycoons, were hosts for the meeting and brought Wayne to Houston. The two are investing in the film.

In his discussion Wayne explained that he was not trying to "promote" the money. He wants to let some Texans in on the deal. His associate in Batjac Productions, Jim Henaghan, stated that money actually is no problem in any film involving Wayne.

It was understood locally (the usual secrecy of Tex biz) that Clint Murchison, Dallas oil tycoon, has invested $1,500,000 in the Wayne work. Some $3,500,000 has already been raised. Henaghan said the production would cost $6,500,000 or more.

Picture Company Chiefs Wire State Legislature; Ask Blue Law Repeal

Harrisburg, Pa., July 21.

In what is believed to be a first, several presidents of major film companies intervened in a state matter when they sent wires to key members of the legislature here urging them to support a bill easing the "blue law" restrictions on Sunday operation of theatres.

The telegrams were sent at the suggestion of Theatre Owners of America prexy George G. Kerasotes. Pennsylvania Motion Pic. Assn., local TOA affiliate, is in the forefront of the fight for the bill which would permit Sunday films in any community where 20% of the registered voters petition for them. Under existing law, Sunday showings are on a local option basis only after a referendum.

Telegrams from film toppers—including United Artists' Arthur Krim and Bob Benjamin, Warners' Jack Warner, 20th-Fox's Spyros Skouras, Allied Artists' Steve Broidy and Universal's Milton R. Rackmil—went to Sen. Harvey M. Taylor, Senate President pro-tem, and Sen. Douglas Elliot, chairman of the Law and Order Committee, regarded as key men in getting the bill moved to the Senate floor for a vote. It's expected that other film company presidents will take similar action.

Handling Plan on Film Re Seaway and Queen

Toronto, July 21.

With 20th Century-Fox to handle Canadian and international distribution of "Royal River," the National Film Board of Canada Ltd. has camera crews whipping together scenes of the St. Lawrence Seaway for Aug. 1 release. This will dovetail the departure of Queen Elizabeth II for Britain.

A three-reeler project, produced in wide-screen and Deluxe color, "Royal River" will incorporate scenes of the Queen and President Eisenhower jointly opening the St. Lawrence Seaway, plus sequences of John Diefenbaker, Prime Minister of Canada; Vice-President Nixon and Governor Rockefeller of New York State.

The three-reeler will be released in Canada, the United Kingdom and the Commonwealth nations by 20th Century. Shortened versions for United States and world distribution.

National Boxoffice Survey

Bumper Summer Biz; 'Hole' New Champ, 'Story' 2d, 'Murder' 3d, 'Hercules' 4th, 'Train' 5th

There are probably more strong pix out in circulation this week than in any summer session in the last eight years, according to reports from VARIETY correspondents in some 24 key cities. Not only are there 12 big productions scoring in key spots, but some six other pix are also contributing to the overall strong boxoffice lineup.

"Hole in Head" (UA), around for first time to any extent this stanza, is moving into No. 1 position by a narrow margin. It is supplanting "Nun's Story" (WB), which was champ for the two previous weeks. "Story," of course, is a strong second-place winner.

"Anatomy of a Murder" (Col) is winding up third. It was second a week ago. "Hercules" (WB), which was fifth last week, is finishing fourth. "Last Train From Gun Hill" (Par), a newcomer, is capturing fifth place. "Horse Soldiers" (UA), fourth last round, is taking sixth money.

"Big Circus" (AA), which loomed promising last week, is capturing seventh position. "Five Pennies" (Par), sixth a week ago, will finish eighth. "South Seas Adventure" (Cinerama) is landing ninth money.

"Earth Is Mine" (U), third last session, is capturing 10th place. "Darby O'Gill" (BV), will take 11th spot while "Middle of Night" (Col) is rounding out the Top 12 pix.

The six runner-up pix, a big majority of them grossing less than $65,000 each, are, in order of strength, "Say One For Me" (20th), "Room At Top" (Cont), "Sleeping Beauty" (BV), "Diary of Anne Frank" (20th), "Gigi" (M-G) and "South Pacific" (Magna).

"Porgy and Bess" (Col), which has been capacity at the N.Y. Warner since it opened more than three weeks ago, preemed socko in L.A. "North by Northwest" (M-G), which is due into the N.Y. Music Hall early next month, looks great in Minneapolis, big in Chi and great in Detroit. "Love Is My Profession" (Kings) continues lively in some seven key cities.

"H-Man" (Col), good in K.C. and Washington, is rated hotsy in L.A. "Ask Any Girl" (M-G), which has played the bulk of its bigger city first-runs, currently is hep in K.C. okay in Boston and solid in Frisco.

"Al Capone" (AA), looms big in Chi. "Imitation Of Life" (U) looks good in Louisville on a record run in that key city.

"Around World in 80 Days" (UA), on a return date, still is sockeroo in L.A. "Hound of Baskervilles" (UA), is rated dull in Seattle.

"Windjammer" (NT), shapes big in Portland and Cleveland. "Sad Horse" (20th) looks okay in Boston.

JAPAN'S EXPORT TACTICS

Loew's Inc. Moves Solidly Into Black With $6,157,000 Profit for 40 Weeks; 'Cat' Returns Big Factor in Upsurge

Loew's Inc. is definitely over the hill. In one of the most remarkable financial recoveries in the recent history of the film business, the company, which faced near liquidation on at least two occasions in the past four years, chalked up a whopping net profit of $6,157,000, equal to $2.31 per share, for the 40-week period ended June 4. This is in marked contrast to the $683,000 loss in the corresponding stanza of a year ago.

For the 12-week period ended June 4, the Joseph R. Vogel management team showed consolidated net earnings of $1,359,000, or 51c per share, as compared with a loss of $106,000 in the previous year's third quarter.

The turnabout, in the face of harassment by dissident stockholder groups, represents a vote of confidence in the policies of the Vogel management group. The recovery is attributable to a number of factors, chief of which is the elimination of the type of pictures on which the company could suffer severe losses.

It is also a culmination of a general cost-saving and reorganization of the management and operational policies. A total of $8,000,000, of which $5,700,000 represented salaries, was eliminated from March, 1957 to the end of 1958. These costs were never reinstated. Although some divisions of the company have higher operational costs at present, these divisions are now earning more because of the policy changes instiuted.

Lovable 'Cat'

Perhaps the most significant contributor to the overall profit was the boxoffice power of the pictures released during the 40-week stanza. "Cat On a Hot Tin Roof" was the most potent help to the treasury. Brought in at a cost of $2,500,000, the film grossed $8,000,000 domestically and $5,000,000 abroad. "Gigi," on hard ticket last year, scored hefty returns in general release and was further aided by winning the Academy Award. Other entries, although not in the blockbuster category, also contributed steadily, bringing in a fair share of the revenue in relation to the negative investment. These included such films as "Imitation General" and "The Reluctant Debutante," holdovers from last year, "The Mating Game," "Some Came Running" and "Tom Thumb." "Mating Game," for example, cost $900,000 and tallied $2,000,000 in film rentals. Point emphasized by a Metro spokesman is that there were "no big failures."

All Segments Up

All divisions of the company, including film production, distribution, foreign theatres, television, records and music, are all profitable in the current year and each division is showing an improvement over least year, according to Vogel. The difference is highlighted by the operations of the production - distribution division which earned $5,423,000 before interest and taxes in the 40 weeks of fiscal 1959 as compared with a loss of $7,114,000 in the same 40 weeks of 1958.

"Our objective is to maintain and strengthen the company's profitable operations and to resume the payment of dividends," Vogel declared in his financial report to stockholders.

The third quarter financial report reveals that gross television income for the 40 weeks included $8,632,000, as compared with $7,478,000 last year, for the licensing of pre-1949 feature films and shorts to television. Filmed series and commercials produced for television brought in $3,373,000 as against $2,279,000 a year ago.

Location-Wise?

Hollywood, July 21.

In this day of diversification, Warner Bros. is going somewhat far afield . . .purchase of a herd of 3,000 sheep in Australia. Baa-baas have been acquired for Fred Zinnemann's "The Sundowners," to assure a full herd and with wool the proper length for start of pic in October.

Original cost will probably be recouped by studio selling not only the sheep when pic is finished, but the wool as well.

PRODUCT AND JOBS BOOST SUMMER B.O.

St. Paul,July 21.

A sharp rise in employment in Minneapolis and St. Paul gets part credit for the fact that the Twin Cities' summer boxoffice is performing better than for the corresponding periods in recent years. Stronger average product, however, still is believed to be the most important factor by far, of course, in local industry leaders' opinion.

In mid-June, when the latest compilation was made, employment in the Twin Cities' metropolitan area was 13,000 higher than a year ago, according to the Minnesota employment security department's statistical report.

For the five county area, employment reached 533,788, compared with 520,714 in June, 1958, the department announced.

In Minneapolis alone mid-June employment totaled 272,925, a 4,700 increase over a year ago.

This summer's boxoffice gain for the territory's largest theatre circuit, the Minnesota Amusement Co. (United Paramount), over a year ago amounts to approximately 20%, it's estimated by Charles Winchell, MCA president-general manager.

SIDNEY JUSTIN'S ROLE

Is Karp Aide Though Still Par Studio Counsel

Hollywood, July 21.

Sidney Justin, who succeeded Jack Karp as resident counsel of Paramount Studios when latter became exec assistant to Y. Frank Freeman, now retired, is now exec assistant to Karp, who replaced Freeman as Par studio chief. He will also continue to function as r.c. and head up studio's legal department, post he's held since 1946.

Justin was transferred to Coast in 1935 from Par home-office in N. Y. He previously was asociated with Gotham law firm of Phillips & Nizer, specializing in theatrical law.

Honor Len Greenberger

Cleveland, July 14.

Cleveland showmen last week organized the Leonard Greenberger Memorial Committee to honor and perpetuate the memory of the exhibitor who died recently.

Greenberger not only founded and operated the Fairmount, de luxe nabe theatre, for a score of years but also helped originate the Cleveland Film Critics Circle's annual awards for "best film of year." One of the earliest prizes brought the late Cecil B. DeMille

Revived by the memorial com- land's "showman of the year." to bestow annual awards to Cleve- here, the Critics Circle also plans mittee, headed by Frank Murphy, division manager of Loew's houses to Cleveland to accept it.

HAS GOV'T OKAY FOR O'SEAS SELL

By FRED HIFT

The Japanese Government has changed its policy and now is encouraging the Japanese film industry to establish representation abroad, Kiyoshi Takamura, managing director of Japan's major Shochiku Co., said in Manhattan at the weekend. As a result, the Japanese are hopeful of opening up a number of new markets and strengthening those where they already are in the running.

Takamura said the plan was for three or four companies to get together and maintain an office which not only will promote Japanese films, but will also sell them. In the U. S., where Japanese pictures already are established, no such setup is contemplated. However, Shochiku intends to open a New York branch office and will make it available to other Japanese companies which may wish to join in this representation. Shochiku for the moment has its headquarters on the Coast, where most of the Japanese-language houses are located. Takamura said he hoped to open the N. Y. office by the end of 1959.

The Japanese generally are optimistic about their export chances. Their export revenues are up and Japanese pictures are enjoying wider acceptance. One of the handicaps till now was the Government's hesitancy to allocate foreign exchange to maintain foreign representation on a permanent basis. Noting the income potential of Japanese picures, Tokyo now feels differently.

'Film Weeks'

Takamura said the industry, with the support of the Japanese Government, planned to hold a film week in a different country every year. Next year, one will be staged at Sao Paulo, Brazil, where—according to the Japanese exec—there are 400,000 Japanese living. The Japanese twice had film fests in Manhattan. The Shochiku exec said the intention was for Japan to participate in as many foreign film festivals as possible, particularly now that the Japanese Government was actually encouraging all moves leading to intensification of exports.

In the U. S., if the science-fiction films are counted in, the income of Japanese films so far this year is up over 1958, Takamura reported. Without the sci-fi films, however, it's down. There hasn't been a single topflight Japanese grosser in the art houses so far in '59. Several Japanese "horror" features have been dubbed and released successfully.

Takamura, who's been to the Berlin and San Sebastian festivals and this week leaves for the Coast and thence to Sao Paulo before returning home, is the business head of a company that produces, distributes and is in exhibition too. Shochiku this year will turn out 90-95 feature films which, according to Takamura's own estimate, is quite a few too many. However, he explained, the problem lies in the new double-billing policy which the Toei Co. started and which has spread.

Particularly in the rural areas, the double-feature attraction is drawing the customers. Some companies have even cut down films into featurettes, thus getting triple-features on the bill. Meetings have taken place at the Motion Picture Assn. of Japan in an effort to curb the double feature trend and Takamura said there was "strong sentiment" for a return to the single feature policy.

One of the results of double featuring in Japan has been a drop in the screen time racked up by foreign features, Takamura reported. "If an import doesn't do well, some theatres will quickly shove in a Japanese picture," he said. On the other hand, the important foreign films, virutally all of which comes from the States, tend to do better than ever.

Swiss System Aim: Closed-Circuit; CIBA-20th-Fox Joint Company, Telepatent, to License Eidophor

CIBA, the Swiss-based drug, dye and plastics concern, and 20th-Fox have established a joint company in Switzerland to license and to sell the Eidophor large-screen tv projectors. Outfit is called Telepatent and is owned 50-50 by CIBA and 20th.

New arrangement doesn't cut out the Gretag Co., which originally developed Eidophor, has produced units and retains the right to do so.

This was reported in N. Y. last week by Roderic L. O'Connor, president of Eidophor Inc., a CIBA subsidiary. O'Connor also said that negotiations were continuing for General Electric to sublicense manufacture of the Eidophor units in the United States.

Main interest of Eidophor Inc. is in the business meeting, industrial and educational closed-circuit market. The presently developed model is not suitable for theatre television and 20th continues work on a new and larger unit that would be suitable for theatre tv. However, 20th does get a cut on every Eidophor model sold, regardless of who sells it or for what purpose.

According to O'Connor, who's a former U. S. Assistant Secretary of State, it's hoped that the Swiss will be able to deliver 40 Eidophor units by next May or June. All of these will go to Eidophor in the States, which thus will get the jump on the competition which is bound to develop once Telepatent licenses manufacture.

B&W or Color

The Eidophor units are capable of delivering both black-and-white and color images, though—for the moment—it's impossible to transmit color on standard channels and it's therefore impossible to send a tint signal on a network. O'Connor said that Phillips of Holland was working on the problem and that it was hopeful of solving it. Involved is a simultaneous transmission of the three color elements, thus fitting into the standard and narrower band.

Though Eidophor's total budget hasn't been set, O'Connor estimated that $800,000 was being spent on the 40 units which are on order. The Swiss plant is starting to turn out the Eidophor models on something resembling an assembly-line basis next month.

Huckster Interest

A great deal of interest in the Eidophor on the customer side was being evinced via Madison Ave., O'Connor said. Some 20 agencies have asked for demonstrations. Only two units are currently available. A third, still a prototype model, has just arrived. Outfit hopes to be moved into its own office and ready for action by September.

O'Connor cited a survey undertaken by Dr. Philip Eisenberg on the industrial and business meet market for Eidophor. It showed that the business meeting potential alone was around $34,000,000, which is more conservative than some other estimates.

Eidophor is closely watching the situation with the Winter Olympics in Squaw Valley. If the American Broadcasting Co. withdraws, Eidophor may be very interested to bring the events to various places in the Valley, allowing spectators to participate without having to climb up the mountainside, O'Connor said.

50c Size Now—Popcorn

Minneapolis, July 21.

Popcorn, which used to be only a nickel and dime item in local theatres, now is purchasable in a 50c quantity in some of the showhouses.

While the 50c size container for the buttered edible at the theatres' concession counters also has hit a new size high, its price nevertheless is considered a reflection at least of America's inflation generally.

The State theatre, leading United Paramount house here, sells in addition to the 50c buttered popcorn container, smaller ones at 25 and 35c. For the kids who are short of the funds necessary for de luxe indulgence there's also a very small 15c box of non-buttered popcorn—the latter kept out of view at the concession counter.

NATIONAL THEATRES TO BEVERLY HILLS

Los Angeles, July 21.

National Theatres has taken a 15-year lease, repping an aggregate rental in excess of $3,500,000, on a Wilshire Blvd. building, now in construction stage, in the center of Beverly Hills for its new headquarters.

Circuit, which plans to move Oct. 1 from its present Film Row headquarters, occupied for more than 25 years, will take over three upper floors and penthouse of four-story structure, giving it 51,000 square feet of space. Ground floor will be occupied by Fidelity Bank of L. A.

In addition to NT, new building will house exec office of Fox West Coast Theatres and other subsids, including National Telefilm Assocates, NTA International and NTA Pictures, latter three moving from present N. Y. headquarters.

Key NTA execs transferring from Gotham to Beverly Hills headquarters include Ely A. Landau, board chairman; prexy Oliver A. Unger, exec v.p. Harold Goldman and v.p. David J. Melamed.

QUICK BIT OF BARDOT

Union With 'Profession' Rues Tricks of the BB Trade

Union Films, distributor for Kingsley-International of the Brigitte Bardot starrer, "Love Is My Profession," was doing a burn last week over some competitive BB ads.

United Motion Picture Organization, opening "Grand Maneuver" in Chicago, took out large ads plugging Miss Bardot in the film, which is an oldie. It's true that the actress is in the picture, but in a very small role. It was made when she was far from a star.

Argues Union Films: Not only is the ad misleading the customers, but it's helping to "kill the goose that laid the golden egg." It so happens that "Love," which is BB's latest, opened just a day ahead of "Grand Maneuver" and Chicago got its fill of the French star's allure in the ads.

Commerce Re Dividends

Washington, July 21.

At the half-year mark, dividends paid by film firms were more than $1,000,000 ahead of the same period in 1958, according to a new report of the Commerce Dept.

Commerce said film companies distributed $12,331,000 in dividends through June this year, compared to $11,195,000 during the first half of the year before.

There was a slight dip for the month of June, with $3,303,000 paid out this year, against $3,325,000 in June, 1958.

Cartoonery for Kiddies Frees Mom to Purchase

Houston, July 21.

A Kiddie Cartoon Theatre where shoppers may leave their children to watch 45 minutes of the latest movie cartoons is one of the highlights at the new Weingarten supermarket which opened here last Wednesday.

Benches are provided in the small theatre for the benefit of the small fry.

The Enchanted Mirror
(KINOPANORAMA—COLOR)

Imaginative documentary treatment of various aspects of Soviet life. Informative and entertaining, but technically still short of the mark.

Ministry of Culture of the USSR presentation of a Sovexportfilm release. Shown in conjunction with the Soviet Exhibition of Science, Technology and Culture at the Coliseum, N.Y. Produced at the Central Studio for Documentary Films, Moscow, with cartoon sequences photographed at Soyuzmultfilm Studio. Direction and script, I. Kristi and V. Komissarjevsky; camera (Sovcolor), V. Voronzov, I. Gutman, A. Koloshin, S. Medynsky; cartoon director, I. Aksenchuk; cartoon photography, A. Astafiev and N. Klimova; cartoon artists, L. Milchin, I. Shwarzman, A. Vinokurov, T. Sazonova. Appearing in the film are artists from the State Bolshoi Theatre of the USSR, the Peking Classical Opera, the Dance Ensemble of the Piatnitzky Chorus and the ensemble ARF. Previewed in N.Y., July 20, 1959. Running time, 90 MINS.

For their second Kinopanorama offering at the Mayfair Theatre, N.Y., supplementing the Soviet Cultural and Scientific Exhibition at the Coliseum, the Russians have chosen "The Enchanted Mirror," a lively, far-ranging and at times quite beautiful screen tour of the Soviet Union and its people. Technically, at the U.S. CineMiracle projection end, the picture suffers from severe defects, as did its predecessor, "Great Is My Country." Artistically, and from an entertainment point-of-view, it's a lot of fun and very well done.

It's as if the Russians, having limbered up with their first picture, and having lived down the "thrill" approach to the wide screen, had gotten down to work on putting their Kinopanorama process to best use. Much of the photography is impressive, and in a couple of sequences it's even stunning. It's obvious that no effort has been spared to do justice to a widescreen system which, inherently is capable of marvellous effects. Here, the determination to make a documentary with a human interest touch has paid off.

A good deal of Russia, and something also of Red China can be gleaned from the film which has been cut into four separate segments and built into an intriguing cartoon frame that has symbolic overtones. If there is propaganda in this second picture it's either so obvious as to be valueless, or else it's so subtle that the vast majority of people won't even get it. Through it all comes the tremendous pride of the Soviets in their achievements in science and industry, and their well-developed sense of joint effort and success through Communism.

"The Enchanted Mirror" pulls together a great many facets of Soviet life though, as in "Great Is My Country," no individual ever really comes alive and identification is impossible. These people look good, they smile when they go to work and when they come from work, they love children and they're all very hard at work to build, construct and devote themselves to the arts. If they have private thoughts of their own, they don't share them with the camera.

Kinopanorama is projected on a very large screen from three synchronized projectors working out of the same booth. Nine-channel stereophonic sound is used and in spots very effectively, too. But Kinopanorama simply isn't very good. The matchlines are more pronounced than ever and one—separting the left panel from the center one—is so wide that a person passing it on the screen appears to be going into one side of a door and coming out on the other. There's also considerable distortion as a result. Yet "Enchanted Mirror" has plenty to balance these imperfections.

The first part, "Snow Queen," starts with an indication of the Hans Christian Anderson fairy tale and then spreads out for a breathtaking view of the North Pole, a visit to a Soviet Scientific Station on an ice floe, a tour of the Siberian Taiga forest where bulldozers and tractors are at work clearing the bottom of the future Obsk Sea. The scene concludes with an exciting and very real ride in which a Russian "Troika" comes galloping towards the camera at full speed.

Part two is called "A Fairy Tale of Wondrous Transformations" and prominently features the superb Galina Olanova performing both the white and the black swan in "Swan Lake." Part three deals with Red China and offers some revealing glimpses of Chinese at work building the huge Shisanlinsk Reservoir. Since so little of Red China is seen in the States, the scenes take on unusual interest. There's also a bit of a performance by the Peking Classical Opera Co. Here, as in other scenes, the excellent Sovcolor process helps.

Picture winds up with a tour of the Brussels Fair of 1958 and a whirling and beautifully coordinated folk dance number. "Enchanted Mirror" is again Russia putting her best foot forward, but this time the tour is rich and varied and the pace is just right. Kinopanorama for the most part makes a very clear image with good depth and a strong sense of participation, with dizzying panning shots avoided. Hift.

The Scapegoat

The look-alike substitute plot makes off-and-on Alec Guinness mystery puzzler. Fair for his fans.

Hollywood, July 17.

Metro release of a Michael Balcon production. Stars Alec Guinness; features Nicole Maurey, Irene Worth, Pamela Brown; guest star, Bette Davis. Director-writer, Robert Hamer; screenplay based on Daphne DuMaurier's novel as adapted by Gore Vidal; camera, Paul Beeson; music, Bronislau Kaper; editor, Jack Harris. Previewed at the studio, July 16, '59. Running time, 92 MINS.

Jacques De Gue	Alec Guinness
The Countess	Bette Davis
Bela	Nicole Maurey
Francoise	Irene Worth
Blanche	Pamela Brown
Marie-Noel	Annabel Bartlett
Gaston	Geoffrey Keen
Dr. Aloin	Noel Howlett
Aristide	Peter Bull
Lacoste	Leslie French
Inspector	Alan Webb
Maid	Maria Britneva
Barman	Eddie Byrne
Gamekeeper	Alexander Archdale
Customs Official	Peter Sallis

Alec Guinness indulges his interest in portraying multiple characters in "The Scapegoat," an unusual mystery story with undertones of murder. Both characters played by Guinness look alike, although their personalities are radically different. Impersonation, when one man is the identical image of another, and the effects it produces, provide the interesting story of Michael Balcon's production for Metro.

The filmization of Daphne DuMaurier's novel will be partially satisfying to Guinness fans, although the excellence of its production is subverted by an abrupt and unsatisfactory conclusion and a screenplay that leaves too much unexplained.

Guinness plays a colorless English teacher of the French language on vacation in France. While there he is tricked into assuming the identity of a very colorful, decadent and amoral French count who is his physical twin. There is humor, suspense and mounting interest as he takes his place in his twin's setting — a la Anthony Hope's old "Prisoner of Zenda."

He discovers his mother is Bette Davis, the Dowager Countess, a morphine addict. His daughter, Annabel Bartlett, is a religious minded teenager, fascinated by the gorier martyrdoms; his sister, Pamela Brown, hates him so much she doesn't speak to him; his wife, Irene Worth, is psychopathic with fear (not without cause) that she is likely to be murdered, and his brother-in-law, Peter Bull, is a crafty boozer who is diverting the profits of the family business to himself. On the bright side, Guinness finds his alter ego has a lovely Italian mistress, Nicole Maurey, stashed away in a town adjacent to the family chateau.

The screenplay by Robert Hamer, from an adaptation by Gore Vidal from Miss DuMaurier's novel, displays these exotic characters with unflinching zeal. It does not, however, give much if any indication of how they got that way, or why. The ending is bad. Guinness has a gun duel with himself when the English teacher character decides he makes a better French count than the French count, and Hamer's method of showing which man won is strictly old-hat and a letdown.

The film would not be disappointing if it were not, as it is, so interesting and well-done in some individual portions. Guinness, again, seems unable to give less than a superior performance. Bette Davis, as the ravaged countess, gives a baroque and fascinating portrayal. It is possible to sympathize with both the wife, Miss Worth, and the mistress, Miss Maurey, so expert are their performances. Pamela Brown suffers from an insufficiently developed role, but is good within limits imposed on her. Others contributing, sometimes strikingly, are young Miss Bartlett, Geoffrey Keen, Bull and Leslie French.

Except for the final trick, Hamer's direction is discreet but pointed. The fault of the film is that either through too-stringent editing or too-loose writing, scenes of motivation and background, and some of development, have been omitted. This creates, for a mystery, too much unsatisfactory confusion.

French locations are useful and they have been captured with perception by cameraman Paul Beeson. Powe.

Desert Desperadoes

Desert caravan tries to make its way to Alexandria (Egypt) against the forces of King [illegible] with trouble along the way, entertainment-wise.

RKO release (via franchise dealers) of John Nasht production. Stars Ruth Roman; features Akim Tamiroff, Othelo Toso, Gianni Glori, Arnoldo Foa, Alan Furlan. Directed by Steve Sekely. Story and screenplay, Victor Stolloff and Robert Hill. Other credits unavailable. Previewed in N.Y. July 2, '59. Running time, 81 MINS.

The Woman	Ruth Roman
The Merchant	Akim Tamiroff
Verrus	Othelo Toso
Fabius	Gianni Glori
The Chaldean	Arnoldo Foa
Rais	Alan Furlan
Metullus	Nino Marchetti

Listed by Principal Film Exchange, the New York franchise distributor, as an RKO picture presented by John Nasht, "Desert Desperadoes" is a meller of the old-fashioned cinema school set in Biblical times. The theatrical values are limited this modern day; the approach to picture making, as observed from the uncertain print shown, goes back some years.

Project undertakes to combine what looks like routine action-on-the-sands stuff with a strong inference that the infant being carried on the desert safari could well be the Judean Saviour.

And intertwined with this is the story of the rich merchant Akim Tamiroff) who makes passes at a sultry and gammy (Cleopatra-type) unkown-origin femme who is found stranded in the desert. Tamiroff is sponsor of the caravan, which has a group of Roman soldiers as convoy. The girl is Ruth Roman, not particularly appropriate as the siren who has both Tamiroff and at least one of the Romans in a flesh-and-blood tizzy.

Print shown indicates some cutting has been done and this impairs the organization of the story, sometimes to the point of disconcerting the onlooker.

Technical work on the feature, which was made in Italy and on location in Egypt, is of modest proportions. Gene.

A Private's Affair
(C'SCOPE-COLOR)

Screwball service comedy with an attractive young cast. Good entertainment and o.k. boxoffice prospects.

20th-Fox release of David Weisbart production. Stars Sal Mineo, Christine Carere, Barry Coe, Barbara Eden, Gary Crosby; features Jim Backus, Jessie Royce Landis, Robert Burton, Alan Hewitt. Directed by Raoul Walsh; script, Winston Miller, based on story by Ray Livingston Murphy; camera (De Luxe color), Charles G. Clarke; songs, Jimmy McHugh, Jay Livingston and Ray Evans; music, Cyril J. Mockridge, conducted by Lionel Newman; editor, Dorothy Spencer. Previewed at the Paramount Theatre, N.Y., July 20, '59. Running time, 92 MINS.

Ever hear of a private marrying a lady Assistant Secretary of War at her request while he's snoring away under the influence of drugs, and all this to save a little Dutch girl who's father is dying and who otherwise would be shipped back to Holland? It's that kind of a plot that they've cooked up from a story by Ray Livingston Murphy and the result is a featherlight comedy that pretends to be little more than a good show for a hot summer night.

Since the customers aren't burdened with having to take any of this zany routine seriously, the young and attractive cast works away at it with an unconcerned gusto that's good for some hearty laughs and very funny situation comedy. A dash of romance and a couple of nice song-and-dance routines are thrown in to fill the formula bill.

Almost from the very start, director Raoul Walsh aims for the yocks, and after that he doesn't care how he gets 'em, a necessity since it's a small joke milked to exhaustion and farce is a tough thing to maintain. Winston Miller has written some genuinely funny lines and they've put over with a good sense of timing that makes 'em explode like firecrackers.

Almost the best thing about "A Private's Affair" is its introduction of a bunch of new faces. Sal Mineo, Barry Coe and Gary Crosby play a trio of soldiers in basic training who win a chance to compete for their camp on a national tv show. That gives them a chance to do a couple of amusing routines, that should earn them a teenage following. The gals are played by Christine Carere, Barbara Eden and Terry Moore.

Mineo is good as a sort of modified beatnik type. Coe has an appealing personality and clearly is a comer. He's the fellow who, through a mixup, gets to marry Jessie Royce Landis, the Assistant Secretary of War. Crosby obviously has a good sense of humor and is given some of the best lines, but he misses in affecting his father's easy casualness. He should find a style of his own.

Miss Carere, playing a French miss, is charming in an undemanding role. Miss Eden, acting in her first theatrical film role, is a natural comedienne and easy on the eyes. Miss Moore has virtually nothing to do, but looks pretty. All of them have one thing in their favor — they're attractive and they're young, and that's a big asset today.

The talented team of Jimmy McHugh, Jay Livingston and Ray Evans has written three songs for the film, with "It's the Same Old Army" as the lead refrain. Mineo, Coe and Crosby create a smart routine for it early in the picture, singing it while on K.P. duty.

In the smaller roles, Jim Backus is his reliable self as the tv producer, Miss Landis somehow manages to infuse a sense of dignity into the part of the Secretary and Robert Burton is broadly comic as the general. Alan Hewitt skillfully handles the role of the camp psychiatrist.

Charles G. Clarke's lensing has quality and the DeLuxe color is all one could wish for. Dorothy Spencer's editing keeps everything rolling along just fine. This isn't the kind of picture that will win prizes, but it shapes as a very satisfactory grosser in a market that always seems to be able to stand another service comedy, be it even a slim one. Hift.

Llegaron Dos Hombres
(Two Men in Town)
(HISPANO-SWEDISH)

Madrid, July 14.

Paramount (Spain) release of a Molino-Terrafilm production. Stars Francisco Rabal, Ulla Jacobsson, Christian Marquand, Moulodji, Ana Esmeralda; features Fernando Sancho, Felix Defauce, Roberto Camardiel. Directed by Arne Mattson and E. F. Ardavin from story by Volodja Semitjoy; adapted by Enrique Alarcon and Jose Lopez Rubio. Camera, Alfredo Fraile; music, Cristobal Halffter. At Roxy "B," Madrid. Running time, 91 MINS.

Spanish village is locale for the familiar theme of cornered criminals holding a stunned schoolmarm (Ulla Jacobsson) and her terrorized moppets as hostages. After a good suspense jump-off, main action is played in townsquare where Guardia Civil (Spain's feared rural police) and townsfolk assemble to parley with two homicidal lunatics (Marquand and Moulodji) for the urchins' lives.

From there in, it's mostly meller stuff bordering on farce. Police chief (Francisco Rabal) and lieutenants give an inept demonstration, the desperados stretch their tyranny to king-for-a-day limits and the villagers emerge as panic-stricken seeds. The non-pro kids are fine.

Tri-nation thespian talent labors hard but fails to cope with the fuzzy direction of a potential thriller. Spain's Ana Esmeralda alone reveals depth. Cristobal Halffter score and Alfredo Fraile's lensing surpass.

All Yank companies here are now releasing locally one Spanish film for every four imported. Which explains the Paramount trademark. Werb.

Imperia release of Iberia production. Stars Jean-Claude Pascal, Juliette Mayniel, Charles Vanel; features Michel Garland, Georges Poujouly, Joelle Bernard. Directed by Pierre Schoendoerfer. Screenplay, Andre Tabet, Schoendoerfer from novel by Pierre Loti; camera (Eastmancolor), Raoul Coutard; editor, B. Menapard. At Cameo, Paris. Running time, 90 MINS.

This pedestrian pic is about the young captain of an outdated fishing boat who ends up landing the boss' daughter after proving himself at sea. Film has some good production values in its exteriors but the old hat tale is not given enough feeling, depth or characterization to keep it from dragging along.

Actors can do little with their roles which are too routine. Fishing scenes have scope (via Dyaliscope) and the color and technical aspects are good. But this looks like largely local fare. Mosk.

Berlin Fest Reviews

Tierra Magica
(Magic Country)
(VENEZUELA)

Berlin, July 14.

Elvi Films and Tiuana Films production. Directed by Vittorio Valentini, Massimo Dalla Mano. Screenplay, Mano, Elso and Vittorio Valentini; camera, Mano. At Berlin Film Fest. Running time, 92 MINS.

A spectacular documentary leading the viewer this way and that through Venezuela. Pic gives an impressive insight into this country and makes one familiar with the people living there. Apart from overly intensive mood music. Film deserves the compliment of being a good one in its class. Could be a good programmer for matinees. Hans.

Herren Og Hans Tjenere
(The Master and His Servants)
(NORWEGIAN)

Berlin, July 14.

Norsk Film A/S Oslo production. With Claes Gill and Wenche Voss. Directed by Arne Skouen. Screenplay, Axel Kielland and Arne Skouen; camera, Finn Bergan. At Berlin Film Fest. Running time, 84 MINS.

This film's central-figure is a bishop who's been accused of having libelled his theological rival via anonymous letters. Although he's innocent (his secretary wrote the letters) in a legal sense, he calls himself guilty as he's the spiritual initiator of the letters and thereby shows his Christian responsibility and attitude.

Execution of plot is interesting but suffers slightly from conventional direction. The producers deserve the compliment for having dedicated themselves to a daring subject which is an attack against the hypocrites who say God and mean business. Hans.

Dorp Aan De Rivier
(Village on the River)
(DUTCH)

Berlin, July 14.

Nationale Film Productie Maatschappij production. With Max Croiset, Mary Dresselhuys, Bernard Droog, Jan Teulings. Directed by Fous Rademakers. Screenplay, Hugo Claus, Rademakers; camera, Eduard van Dalsum. At Berlin Film Fest. Running time, 91 MINS.

This Dutch feature was one of the better films shown at the Berlin festival. It primarily benefits from outstanding direction (Fous Rademarkers) which is somewhat reminiscent of that of Swedish Ingmar Bergman, only not so hard-hitten. Pic should be a good bet for the arties.

It's the heart-warming tale of a country doctor who is both loved and feared. His friends are the little people, his opponents are the members of the village council, in particular the burgomaster. Latter succeeds in chasing him out of the village to which the medico had dedicated his entire life. Good acting and fine technical credits. Hans.

Berlin, July 14.

A/S Nordisk Films (Copenhagen) production. Stars Henning Moritzen and Helle Virkner; features Ove Sprogoe, Lis Lowert. Directed by Erik Balling. Screenplay, Balling; camera, Poul Pedersen. At Berlin Film Fest. Running time, 97 MINS.

Denmark often has come along with amusing comedies in recent years. This one doesn't quite reach the standard of some such pix but it's still an enjoyable piece of entertainment. Mixture of wit and slapstick contains general appeal. This has found a German distrib already.

Story has to do with a young poet and his wife who have to struggle along with financial difficulties. Then they suddenly win 10,000 crowns but this also is gone in less than no time. Hans.

Telesme Schekaste

(IRAN—COLOR)

Berlin, July 14.

Studio Pars-Film (Teheran) production. Directed by Syamak Yassami. Screenplay, Ibrahim Zamani; camera (Agfacolor), Mah'-moud Koushan. At Berlin Film Fest. Running time, 91 MINS.

Iran, last year repped at the Berlin festival, came along with a fairly well made adventure yarn which obviously tries to follow the American western pattern. Subject and acting are somewhat on the naive side but there's a certain plus factor in the lensing. Not much for the world market.

Story revolves around a Khan who doesn't notice the intrigues around him. Then his nephew decides to track down the evil-doers. Despite technical and artistic deficiencies, this hints that the young film industry of Iran is progressing. Hans.

Gallagher comments that mags are looking up. Some 83 periodicals gained 1,295 pages of ads over the same half-year period of 1958. There were 57 ahead in pages for 8.4% gain, 26 off in pages for a decrease of 5.4%. Sports Illustrated (Luce) was in the top 10. Reader's Digest, a newcomer to advertising, jumped from 47th to 25th niche in the Gallagher compilation. That's a page gain of 61.8%.

2 Inter-Negatives Asked by USSR

Costs Rise for Yanks Who Sold 10 Features for $621,000 While Buying Seven for $434,000

The Soviets have asked the American companies selling them films to supply Moscow with two color inter-negatives on each of the pictures they are acquiring. That's in addition to one music and effects track and one answer print on each film.

The demand for the two inter-negatives has come as something of a shock to the Yanks, who're watching the costs of their Russian deal rise steadily. They've sold the Soviets ten films for a total of $621,000. Seven out of the ten are in color. The Americans have purchased seven Russian features of which six are tinters. The U.S. is paying $434,000 for these.

The Soviet demand for two (expensive) inter-negatives on each Hollywood color film they buy is contained in their draft proposal of the film agreement which has just been submitted to the Motion Picture Export Assn. and forwarded to the individual companies. Yanks some time earlier sent their own proposals to Moscow.

On paper, the Russians are in the right. The basic pact calling for the respective purchase of films by the Soviets and the Americans says specifically that preprint material is to be supplied. It doesn't break down what this material consists of. There has been no explanation of why the Soviets should require two inter-negatives.

Not only have the latter to be made, but their contrast has to be adjusted to Soviet specifications. In order to be able to establish these specifications, the Russians have received from the U.S. companies a series of test reels. Moscow, in turn, has sent in their own test footage.

Problem of color is entirely on the Soviet side. They usually shoot in Agfa color and print on Agfa stock. It appears that the Eastman negative, to be supplied by the Americans, isn't compatible with the Agfa positive; at least, for it to be so, contrasts in the negative must be adjusted. Oddly enough, when the Russians sent in their color samples, they were printed on Eastman stock. It is assumed that, when the Soviets ship their inter-negatives — from which the U.S. companies will strike prints—these negatives will be on Eastman stock.

Request for two inter-negatives would be particularly costly to Metro, which is selling the Soviets three films, and two 20th-Fox, which is selling one in CinemaScope ("Beneath the 12-Mile Reef"). Understanding is that 20th must supply both a C'Scope and a 2-D negative. If the Soviets have their way, 20th would have to send two of each, plus answer prints, etc. The lengthy "Oklahoma" also would cost a pretty penny to prepare.

The Soviets have proposed to account to MPEA on the number of prints to be made on each U.S. films and to indicate how many people saw each picture. They've nixed, however, a suggestion that they pinpoint the location of the American prints. They were asked to do this in order to make sure that none of the prints found their way into Red China, Bulgaria or some other Communist territory. The Soviet position was that they'd contracted for the Soviet Union only and that this was sufficient assurance.

Under the basic deal, each side pays $60,000 for regular pictures and $67,000 for widescreeners. Pact made no differentiation between color and black-and-white films.

COMMUNITY PLAN BEFORE TRIBE

Albuquerque, July 21.

A modern American community, including a film drive-in and supermarkets, is being talked for Navajo Indians of western New Mexico and eastern Arizona, at Window Rock, Ariz., their capital city.

Royalties from Navajo oil and uranium are financing the big step forward from a primitive economy based on agriculture and sheep grazing.

Two San Francisco firms are helping the Navajos make the big leap to suburban living and make sure that while they improve their way of life and make it more comfortable, they steer clear of what they consider the evil aspects of "citified" life that are the white man's burden.

The frims are Livingston and Blayney, whose specialty is community planning, and John Carl Warneke, architect.

The sketch plan for the capital city of the 62,000 Navajos has been presented to the tribal council.

John McFee, a spokesman for the council, said that the project is in what he termed "the talking and planning stage." No funds have been appropriated for it yet and he has no idea when a decision will be reached, McFee said.

The sketch shows the new tribal administration office and council chamber situated on a height, overlooking a motel, shopping center, fairgrounds, elementary schools, high school and winding residential streets.

Sketch plans for three other Navajo towns—Tuba City, Shiprock and Fort Defiance, will follow if the council ok's. Later a planning program for the whole reservation is anticipated.

"We are not trying to impose a white civilization on the Navajos," Livingston explained. "The Navajos, themselves must decide for themselves what kind of a community they want."

"They don't care for the white man's ulcer-producing speed and pressure. We hope to give them a modern living, but without the ulcers."

Say Managerial 'Autonomy' Fine

Kansas City, July 21.

Commonwealth Amusement Corp. is finding its plan of theatre manager's "autonomy" working out well, according to a report of Richard H. Orear, recently elected president of the circuit. Plan was introduced last fall involving several steps among them a profit-sharing arrangement for each manager.

Purpose of the plan has been to give each manager greater freedom of action and greater responsibility in an effort to establish more outstanding personality for each individual theatre. Circuit has about 65 in five-state area.

Workings of the plan have been watched closely through the winter and spring season. Recently the circuit instituted its annual "King of the Sun" drive which runs through summer and winds in the fall as its biggest annual promotion. Success of the early phase of the broadened autonomy policy has encouraged the theatre execs to endorse these for the "King" drive, Orear said.

'Ivan In—14 Years Late

Vancouver, July 14.

Part II of Sergei Eisenstein's "Ivan the Terrible," unreleased for 14 years, will have North American preem at International Festival of Arts here, Aug. 3-15.

Its European premiere was in Brussels last year, after it had been rumored the negative had been destroyed.

30-Year Booking Policy, Which Set Films on Associated British Chain, Coming to End; Metro Loses Its 'In'

By HAROLD MYERS

London, July 21.

A 30-year booking policy, which, in effect, pre-determined the films which played the Associated British circuit, is coming to an end. No longer can Metro reckon on its quota of 15 to 17 features a year on the corporation's 400 strong circuit. Back in the late 1920's, the ABC chain gave regular playing time to top Metro product. With the subsequent Quota Acts and the affiliation with WB, the 52 annual dates were divided more or less equally between British pix to fill the quota, Warner output from Burbank and Metro releases.

In recent months, ABC toppers have reportedly become concerned at the lack of b.o. value in some recent Metro pix and the automatic booking system is gradually to end. That will open the doors to other distribs and give them, for the first time, the prospects of a reasonable outlet on one of the most important theatre chains in Britain.

Since the introduction of the Rank rationalization plan and the ending of the Gaumont British circuit, prospects for American distribs on British circuits have been considerably restricted. The Odeon group, which remains as a major outlet, has after fulfilling its quota commitment, some 34 dates a year available for foreign releases, including Hollywood product. These limited dates have to take care of the output of all the majors, among them Paramount, United Artists, Columbia, Universal International, 20th-Fox and, from time to time, Metro, giving each, on average, a maximum of five to six a year.

There is also the National circuit, which is a revise of the former 20th-Fox outlet, which comprises part of the booking strength of the major indie chains, plus some of the Gaumont and Odeon theatres. That group, too, can tackle a comparable number of pictures, but the return, on average, is less than either the ABC or Odeon circuit releases.

The acute booking situation within ABC was evidenced during the year when one of Allied Artists' top grossers, "Al Capone," was forced on to the National circuit. Although AA output is released through AB-Pathe, the distributing arm of ABPC, there was no room for the pic on the ABC circuit.

The ending of the Metro-ABC association will mean a reversion to open market trading between Hollywood and the British circuit and will put an end to the tied deals which were a feature of the business for the last 30 years or so. It also means that the important ABC circuit is open now to the remainder of the world and not restricted to a small, but influential, group of producers.

A Filmed Dissertation

Los Angeles, July 21.

USC and UCLA cinema departments, both of which permit graduate students to produce motion pictures for their masters and doctoral dissertations, will each be granted $1,500 by Screen Directors Guild Educational and Benevolent Foundation for this student assistance.

David Butler is new chairman of SDG group.

Pub Loathed His Stuff, Printed It

Washington, July 21.

Death Friday (17) of Eugene Meyer, whose expansive activity in the world of finance included ownership of the Washington Post, stimulated the Post's amusements editor, Richard L. Coe, to write about his differences of critical opinion with Meyer. Coe also had something to say about other film critics.

"The beauty of Mr. Meyer as a publisher and board chairman," said Coe, "was that he believed in freedom, and my own personal opinion. Much of the time, I suspect he thought that what I wrote was insufferable, certainly the time I wrote about 'The Ten Commandments.'"

Coe recalled he considered the Cecil B. DeMille film "terrible" and said so in the same issue of the Post which carried a "huge advertisement" proclaiming Meyer's personal admiration of the motion picture.

Coe said the incident illustrated Meyer's sincerity in granting freedom of expression to his staff.

Coe added: "Because I do read the reviews my colleagues write across this fabulously rich country of ours, I often feel regretful they have not enjoyed the same freedom of expression which has been given to this department.

"Elsewhere," he continued, "editors fear loss of advertising revenue. Several threats were once made to this newspaper that if Coe 'kept it up,' ads would be dropped. That mattered not to Meyer, who never once even referred to threats with which I was acquainted."

Mags, Sunday Supps Still Losing Moving Picture Advertising Lineage

General entertainment advertising, including motion pictures, in magazines and Sunday supplements dropped sharply again during the first five months of 1959.

Slide came in the face of an overall 5% increase in the advertising revenue of these media during the same period.

Film ads, virtually all of them in the magaznes, accounted for $476,453 on 24 pictures. Film company expenditures in the national mags and the Sunday supps has been going down steadily.

Figures supplied by Publishers Information Bureau for the January through May, 1959, period show entertainment ads in the magazines down to $1,076,780 from $1,329,804 and in the Sunday supps down to $19,296 from $89,702. Overall total for entertainment ads was $1,096,076 as against $1,419,506 the prior year.

While the overall ad revenue of mags went up 8%—from $281,676,717 in 1958 to $303,138,198 in '59—the Sunday supplement income dropped 11%, i.e. from $44,777,914 to $41,622,058. Combined rise of the two newspaper media was up 5%, to $365,382,473 from $348,298,205.

In the breakdown of the entertainment industries' ads, the weeklies and by-weeklies went to $720,976 during the first five months of '59 from $879,960 in '58. Monthlies showed a rise to $139,998 from $88,011, women's magazines took a cut to $60,938 from $168,000, fashions dried up to $1,180 from $10,450 and the movie romance group slid to $135,008 from $155,610.

Individually, the biggest cuts were taken by Life, which went down to $85,102 from $186,919, and Look which took in $74,720 as against $152,205 last year. Playboy was up to $18,537 from $5,466, but Seventeen lost, going to $16,025 from $20,835.

Again taking total advertising revenue, both Life and Look registered a 1% gain from all sources.

In the film field, Metro was the biggest spender during the first five months of 1959 with $197,000 and Universal was next with $123,000, including a whopping $107,078 for "Imitation of Life." Walt Disney spent $34,368, Paramount $42,115 on two, 20th-Fox $44,805 on five, Warners $19,732 on two, and United Artists $3,740 on three. On both "Naked Maja" and "Some Like It Hot," UA spent only $3,200 in national ads.

Some in the industry say a more intensive use of the national magazine medium is due. 20th, for instance, is going to splurge big on "Blue Denim" in Life Magazine, part of one of the company's most hardhitting campaigns in months. So far, however, films' use of the magazines is still declining, with the coin being spent on point-of-sale advertising.

REEVES SOUNDCRAFT ON AMERICAN BOARD

Reeves Soundcraft Corp., which owns 17% of Cinerama Inc., has been admitted for trading on the American Stock Exchange. The company, which manufactures magnetic tape and is involved in other acoustical activities, is headed by Hazard E. Reeves, who is also president of Cinerama Inc. At its admission to the little board, 3,800 shares of Soundcraft were traded at the opening price of 10⅝.

The company recently opened a new plant in Danbury, Conn. Its tape product has wide use in high fidelity reproduction, in the missile field, and in telemetering.

L.A. Continues Big; 'Porgy' Sock 22G, 'Train' Bangup $28,000, 'H-Man' 12G, 'Murder' Rugged 18G, '80 Days' 17G

Los Angeles, July 21.

Two strong openers plus flashy staying power displayed by a number of holdovers continues to spell lusty business for local first-runs this round. "Last Train From Gun Hill" looks bangup $28,000 in three theatres. "Porgy and Bess" is heading for socko $22,000 or near opening week at Carthy on hard-ticket.

"H-Man" is rated hep $12,000 in two spots. "South Pacific" heads the holdovers, with tall $19,000 in three houses, fourth week, "Anatomy of Murder" is expecting a lush $18,000 or a bit over in third Warner Bev week.

"Around World in 80 Days" should hit rich $17,000 in fifth round, two spots. "Nun's Story" is holding at bright $16,000 at Hollywood Par, fourth week. "Some Like It Hot" is shaping for hotsy $16,000 or close in three spots.

"Hole in Head" should hit fine $12,000 in fifth at Fox Bev while "Darby O'Gill and Little People" is rated soft $10,000 at Chinese in fourth.

'Pennies' bright $18,000 In Frisco; 'Night' Lusty 16G, 'Darby' Good 16½G

San Francisco, July 21.

First-run trade shapes strong here currently, with some new product shaping up well. "Five Pennies," outstanding new pic, is rated nice at the Golden Gate. "Middle of Night" looms dandy at Paramount while "Darby O'Gill and Little People" shapes good at the huge Fox. "Nun's Story" continues smash in third stanza at St. Francis. "Horse Soldiers" looks neat at United Artists for fourth frame. "South Seas Adventure" continues big in 34th round at Orpheum.

Estimates for This Week

Golden Gate (RKO) (2,859; $1.25)—"Five Pennies" (Par) and "Floods Of Fear" (U). Nice $18,000. Last week, "Earth Is Mine" (U) (3d wk), $11,000.

(Based on 24 cities and 245 theatres, chiefly first runs, including N. Y.)

Last Year $2,673,200

(Based on 23 cities and 250 theatres.)

'Murder' Hotsy 8G, L'ville; 'Herc' 5G

Louisville, July 21.

Usual summer heat, relieved now and then by showers, is favorable to downtown film trade. Cool interiors are inviting for patrons, and topnotch product is a sure plus factor. Holdovers are the rule at all houses this week. "Anatomy of a Murder" at the United Artists looks to lead the town in second stanza. Looks like "Imitation of Life" has taken up permanent residence at the Kentucky, now in 12th week. "Hercules" is stout at the Mary Anderson in third round. Abbreviated Amphitheatre season opened Wednesday (15), with Carol Channing Show.

Estimates for This Week

Brown (Fourth Avenue) (1,200; 60-90)—"Love Is Profession" (Kings) (4th wk). Nice $4,500 after third week's $5,000.

Kentucky (Switow) (900; 75-$1.25)—"Imitation of Life" (U) (12th wk). Steady $5,000, same as 11th week.

Mary Anderson (People's) (1,000; 75-90)—"Hercules" (WB) (3d wk). Stout $5,000 after second week's $6,500.

Rialto (Fourth Ave.) (3,000; 60-90)—"Say One For Me" (20th) (3d wk). Fair $6,500 or near after second week's $9,000.

United Artists (UA) (3,000; 75-$1.25)—"Anatomy of a Murder" (Col) (2d wk). Healthy $8,000 after first week's $13,000.

'Pennies' Powerful 10G, Cleve.; 'Hole' Wow 18G

Cleveland, July 21.

"Last Train From Gun Hill" is hauling a good load of freight for State, and gaining a h.o. Ranking as topper of current stanza, "Hole In Head" shapes great for Stillman among newcomers. "Hercules" in third week at Allen has slowed up a bit but still rated strong. Final chapter for "Windjammer" boomed. "Five Pennies" is great at the Ohio.

Estimates for This Week

Allen (SW) (3,800; 85-$1.50)—

'Hole' Rousing $20,000, St. Loo; 'Ship' Sturdy 18G, 'Story' Big 15G

St. Louis, July 21.

Best bet here currently is "Hole in Head," mighty at Orpheum. Also new, "Don't Give Up Ship," at Fox, looks stout. Continuing strong on holdover are "Darby O'Gill and Little People," in second stanza at Loew's, "Sleeping Beauty" in sixth week at the Pageant and "Nun's Story" in second at the St. Louis. Last-named is especially strong.

Estimates for This Week

Apollo Art (Grace) (700; 90-$1.25)—"Forbidden Fruit" (Indie). Nice $3,000. Last week, "Gold Rush" (Lopert) (reissue), $3,200.

Fox (Arthur) (5,000; 60-90)—"Don't Give Up Ship" (Par) and "Hangman" (Par). Splendid $18,000. Last week, "This Earth Is Mine" (U) and "Silent Enemy" (U) (2d wk), $10,000.

Loew's (Loew) (3,600; 60-90)—"Darby O'Gill" (BV) (2d wk). Hep $10,000. Last week, $15,000.

Orpheum (Loew) (1,900; 60-90) —"Hole In Head" (UA). Mighty $20,000 or near. Last week, "Go, Johnny, Go" (Indie) and "From Outer Space" (Indie), $6,500.

St. Louis (Arthur) (3,800; 60-90) —"Nun's Story" (WB) (2d wk). Big $15,000. Last week, $20,000.

Shady Oak (Arthur) (760; 60-90) —"Gigi" (M-G) (14th wk). Sturdy $2,500. Last week, $3,000.

'Hole' Socko 21G, Pitt; 'Train' 9G

Pittsburgh, July 21.

"Hole in the Head" shapes socko at the Penn this stanza to lead the new entries by a wide margin. Other is "Last Train for Gun Hill," sluggish at the Stanley. All other first-runs have hold-overs and business is off. However, no manager even suggested that the steel strike as the reason for the downbeat. Fulton has "This Earth is Mine," okay in fourth round. The Harris is rated weak in fourth with "Say One for Me." Warner is still excellent with "Nun's Story" in third week. Squirrel Hill is having a disappointing second stanza with "Love is My Profession."

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Shea) (1,635; 85-$1.50)—"This Earth is Mine" (U) (4th wk). Still satisfactory at $4,500. Last week, $6,700.

Harris (Harris) (2,100; $1-$1.50) —"Say One for Me" (20th) (4th wk). Fair $5,000. Last week, $9,400.

Penn (UATC) (3,300; $1-$1.50)—"Hole in Head" (UA). Mighty with $21,000. Last week, "Horse Soldiers" (UA), $8,000.

Squirrel Hill (SW) (824; $1.25)—"Love Is My Profession" (Kings) (2d wk). Weak $2,500. Last week, $3,500.

Stanley (SW) (3,700; 85-$1.25)—"Last Train from Gun Hill" (Par). Slow $9,000. Last week, "Hercules" (WB), $9,500.

Warner (SW) (1,500; $1-$1.50)—"Nun's Story" (WB) (3d wk). Excellent $16,500. Last week, $18,000.

'Hole' Boffo $13,000, Balto; 'Circus' NSG 6G, 'Room' $5,000, 'Story' 8G

Baltimore, July 21.

Bright newcomer is "Hole in Head" which shapes socko at the Town. Others which are pleasing include "Lady Chatterley's Lover," still big in second at Cinema; "Big Circus," fancy in second at Hipp and "Room at Top" which shows no signs of fading in 12th frame at Playhouse. It's shaping as all-time champ for house. Another long run is "Milkmaid" which is now in 10th round at the Little, 300-seater.

"Nun's Story" is good in third session at the New. "Mummy" and "Curse of the Undead" are sluggish in first at the Century. "This Earth Is Mine" looms fine in third Stanley round.

Estimates for This Week

Century (R-F) (3,200; 50-$1.25)—"Mummy" (U) and "Curse of Undead" (U). Slow $6,000. Last week, "Horse Soldiers" (UA) (3d wk), $5,200.

Cinema (Schwaber) (460; 90-$1.50)—"Lady Chatterley's Lover" (Kings) (2d wk). Hefty $5,500 after $8,000 opener.

Five West (Schwaber) (460; 90-$1.50)—"Happy Is Bride" (Indie) (3d wk). Nice $2,500 after $3,000 in second.

Hippodrome (F-F) (2,300; 50-$1.25)—"Big Circus" (AA) (2d wk). Fair $6,000 or near after $13,000 in first.

Little (R-F) (300; 50-$1.25) —"Milkmaid" (Indie) (10th wk). Steady $1,100 after same in ninth.

Mayfair (R-F) (900; 50-$1.25) —"Don't Give Up Ship" (Par) (4th wk). Oke $3,500 after $4,000 in previous week.

New (R-F) (1,600; 50-$1.25) —"Nun's Story" (WB) (3d wk). Good $8,000 after $10,000 in second.

Playhouse (Schwaber) (460; 90-$1.50)—"Room at Top" (Cont) (12th wk). Big $5,000 after $5,400 in last frame.

Stanley (R-F) (2,800; 50-$1.25)—"Earth Is Mine" (U) (3d wk). Nice $6,000 after $9,000 in second.

Town (R-F) (1,125; 50-$1.25) —"Hole in Head" (UA). Wow $13,000. Last week, "H-Man" (Col) and "Woman Eater" (Col), $4,000.

K.C. Perks; 'Hole' Whopping $18,000, 'Circus' Giant 11G, 'For Me' 7G, 4th

Kansas City, July 21.

Whopping week is in store for "Hole in Head" at the Midland, with gross looking like the height of wartime biz and twice the usual first-run figure of these days. Also great is "Big Circus" at Uptown. Holdovers include "Last Train From Gun Hill," modest at Paramount. "Nun's Story," nice at the Missouri and "Say One for Me," sturdy at Roxy. Rolling along with good long-runs are "South Pacific" at the Roxy and "Love Is My Profession" at the Kimo. Weather has been sultry and rainy.

Estimates for This Week

Capri (Durwood) (628; $1.50-$2.25, $2.50) — "South Pacific" (Magna) (17th wk). Steady $6,000. Last week, same.

Iris, Fairway, Vista (Fox Midwest) (1,360, 700, 1,217; 85)—"H-Man" (Col) and "Woman Eater" (Col) as usually sub-run Vista is joined with other two first-runs. Oke $8,000. Last week, trio included Granada instead of Vista, "Go Johnny Go" (Indie) and "Lone Texan" (20th), same.

Kimo (Dickinson) (504; 90-$1.25) —"Love Is My Profession" (Kings) (5th wk). Brisk $1,600. Last week, $1,800.

'Hercules' Record 90G, Toronto; 'Earth' 13½G

Toronto, July 21.

With a 10-house tiein of downtown and nabe theatres, "Hercules" looks to break house records at all 10 houses plus the first time that a picture has been held over at Downtown, showcase here of 60-theatre chain run by N. A. (Nat) Taylor. This week's gross of "Hercules" may be biggest for any one week in Canada.

Other newcomers are not as exciting. "Woman Obsessed" looks especially poor. Wham in turnaways is "This Earth is Mine," in second stanza, and "Diary of Anne Frank" in fifth frame. "Room at Top" still is sensational in eighth stanza.

Estimates for This Week

Carlton (Rank) (2,518; 75-$1.25) —"Woman Obsessed" (20th). Very sad $8,000. Last week, "Horse Soldiers" (UA) (3d wk), $8,000.

Century, Downtown, Glendale, Kingsway, Midtown, Oakland, Odeon, Prince of Wales, Scarboro, State (Taylor) (1,338; 1,059; 995; 697; 1,089; 1,393; 752; 1,200; 684; 694; 50-75) — "Hercules" (WB). House record in all situations at wow $90,000.

Eglinton, Palace, Runnymede (FP) (1,080 1,485; 1,385; 50-$1)—"Rhapsody" (M-G) and "Flame and Flesh" (M-G). Okay $10,000. Last week, "Sleeping Beauty" (BV) (2d wk), $15,000.

Hollywood (FP) (1,080; $1-$1.25) —"Diary of Anne Frank" (20th) (5th wk). Still turnaway at $11,000. Last week, same.

Hyland (Rank) (1,037; $1)—"Captain's Table" (Rank) (6th wk). Hefty $5,000. Last week, $5,500.

H.O.s Help Chi; 'Train' Sockeroo 31G, 'Diary' Hot 12G, 'Murder' Great 38G, 'North' Smash 35G. 'Story' Hep 34G

Chicago, July 21.

First-runs, continuing their recovery, are climbing to stylish totals in current round, albeit new arrivals are scarce. It's the holdovers that are pushing up the take. Top opener is Roosevelt's "Last Train from Gun Hill," expecting a smash $31,000. "Love Is My Profession" at World shapes boff $7,800 in first. "Diary of Anne Frank," on first-continuous performance run, looks big $12,000 at the Surf opening session.

"Anatomy of a Murder" is great in Woods second week while "North by Northwest" is rated sockeroo in third United Artists frame. "Horse Soldiers" is figured mild in State-Lake fourth. Third week of "Five Pennies" is trim at the Esquire, Garrick is taking sock coin for ditto round of "Darby O'Gill and Little People." "Nun's Story" is rated big in third at the Chicago.

"Hole in Head" is hep in Oriental fifth while "Al Capone" looks nice in 11th stanza at Todd's Cinestage. "Gigi" is still sock in 21st week at the Loop. Lone hardticketer is "South Seas Adventure," which is fancy in 43d round at Palace.

"Room at Top" still is torrid in second week at Carnegie after nine weeks at Esquire, where pushed out by locked booking.

Heat Hits Hub; 'Hole' Smooth $15,000, 'Earth' Sock 16G, 'Soldiers' 9G

Boston, July 21.

Heat and holdovers predominate again with slow action at many spots currently. First hot weekend in some time caused Hub exodus to alfresco spots. Slim new entries, "Sad Horse" at Pilgrim is just okay. "Hole In Head" leads the holdovers with big pull at State. "This Earth Is Mine" still is socko in second at Memorial. "Nun's Story" is holding fine in fourth at the Metropolitan. "Horse Soldiers" is sturdy in fourth at the Orpheum. "Anatomy of Murder" looms lively in second round at Gary. "Room at Top" continues amazing pace in 10th week at Kenmore. "Don't Give Up Ship" is fine in third at Astor.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (B&Q) (1,381; $1.25-$1.50) —"Don't Give Up Ship" (Par) (3d wk). Fine $8,500. Last week, $11,000.

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net; i.e., without usual tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include the U. S. amusement tax.

'Earth' Rich 19G, D.C.; 'Hercules' 12G, 'Circus' 7G

Washington, July 21.

Boff initialers and classy holdovers are making the mainstem purr here this stanza. "Earth is Mine" at Palace shapes big, and likely in for a run. "Anatomy of Murder" is setting phenomenal pace among holdovers, with smash take in second week at small Trans-Lux. "Horse Soldiers" is still hefty in fourth week. "Say One For Me" looks oke in second Capitol stanza. "Hercules" is very big in third week, day-dating in two houses.

Estimates for This Week

Playhouse (T-L) (458; $1-$1.80)— "Middle of Night" (Col) (3d wk). Fat $12,000, same as last week.

'Circus' Crisp $11,000, Omaha; 'Story' 8G, 2d

Omaha, July 21.

Biz is robust at downtown first-runs this week despite only one new entry. That's "Big Circus," smasheroo at the Omaha. Second stanza of "Nun's Story" is good at Orpheum and "Sleeping Beauty" is ditto in fifth at State.

Estimates for This Week

Cooper (Cooper) (708; $1.50-$2.20)—"South Pacific" (Magna) (39th wk). Strong $6,300. Last week, same.

Omaha (Tristates) (2,066; 75-$1) "Big Circus" (AA). Socko $11,000. Last week, "Last Train From Gun Hill' (Par), $6,500.

Orpheum (Tristates) (2,877; 75-$1)—"Nun's Story" (WB) (2d wk). Good $8,000 after $12,000 debut.

States (Cooper) (743; $1.45)— "Sleeping Beauty" (BV) and "Grand Canyon" (BV) (5th wk). Big $5,000. Last week, $7,000.

'Story' Lofty $9,000 In Port.; 'Train' Only 5G

Portland, Ore., July 21.

Downbeat in biz is blamed currently on the terrific heat and many transient shows. "Windjammer" holds for a big 11th inning at the Hollywood. "Nun's Story" moves into a solid second session at Fox. But elsewhere, trade is weak to dull, with "Last Train From Gun Hill" not moving to any extent at Paramount.

Estimates for This Week

Broadway (Parker) (1,890; $1-$1.50) — "Mysterians" (M-G) and "John Rocco" (AA). Sad $4,000. Last week, "Sleeping Beauty" (BV) (reissue) and "Last Stagecoach West" (Rep). $4,800.

Fox (Evergreen) (1,536; $1-$1.49) —"Nun's Story" (WB) (2d wk). Lofty $9,000. Last week, $10,100.

Hollywood (Evergreen) (1,200; $1.49-$1.75)—"Windjammer" (NT) (11th wk). Big $6,000. Last week, $6,200.

Orpheum (Evergreen) (1,600; $1-$1.49)—"Diary of Anne Frank" (20th). Slim $6,000. Last week, "Horrors Black Museum" (AIP) and "Headless Ghost" (AIP), $5,800.

Paramount (Port-Par) (3,400; $1-$1.50)—"Last Train From Gun Hill" (Par) and "Young Captives" (Par). Dull $5,000. Last week, Don't Give Up Ship" (Par) and "Hangman" (Par) (2d wk), $7,000.

'North' Great 13G, Mpls.; 'Darby' 7G

Minneapolis, July 21.

Film emporiums currently have their year's toughest opposition in the 10-day Aquatennial, annual local summer mardi gras. However, the only two newcomers, "North By Northwest" and "Darby O'Gill and Little People," particularly the former, look to be as hot boxoffice as the weather. "North" looms great at small-seater Gopher.

It's the fourth week for "Love Is My Profession," "Don't Give Up the Ship" and hard-ticket "South Seas Adventure." Last is especially great. Another blockbuster is "Nun's Story," now in third week.

Estimates for This Week

Academy (Mann) (947; 85-$1.25) —"Darby O'Gill" (BV). Good $6,000 or close. Goes another week. Last week, "Diary of Anne Frank" (20th) (5th wk), $3,500 in 5 days at $2-$2.25 scale.

Century (SW-Cinerama) ($1.75-$2.65)—"South Seas Adventure" (Cinerama) (4th wk). Getaway has been sensationally fast. Helped by Aquatennial visitors. Wow $22,000. Last week, $23,000.

Gopher (Berger) (1,000; 85-$1)— "North By Northwest" (M-G). One of year's best bets at this house. Great $13,000. Last week, "Hound of Baskervilles" (UA), $6,100.

Lyric (Par) (1,000; $1-$1.45)— "Nun's Story" (WB) (3d wk). Stiff scale helping this to such big coin. Socko $9,000. Last week, $11,500.

RKO Orpheum (RKO) (2,800; 85-$1)—"Last Train From Gun Hill" (Par) (2d wk). Not so hot at $6,000. Last week, $8,500.

RKO Pan (RKO) (1,800; 85-$1)— "Don't Give Up Ship" (Par) (4th wk). Good $4,500. Last week, $5,500.

State (Par) (2,200; $1-$1.25)— "Horse Soldiers" (UA) (3d wk). Moderate $4,000. Last week, $5,500.

Suburban World (Mann) (800; 85)—"Room At Top" (Cont) (2d run). Here exclusively for nabes after long, profitable Loop run. Big $3,000. Last week, "Happened to Jane" (Col) split with "Pork Chop Hill" (UA) (2d runs), $2,500.

World (Mann) (400; 85-$1.25)— "Love Is Profession" (Kings) (4th wk). Strong $6,000. Last week, $5,000.

'HOLE' SOCKO $24,000, DENVER; 'DARBY' 14G

Denver, July 21.

Downtown film biz is soaring this week, with a batch of new strong product which is proving good insurance against powerful outdoor competition. "Hole in Head" looks wham at Paramount, to pace city. Also big is "Darby O'Gill" at Orpheum while "Last Train From Gun Hill," with Pioneer Village Gunfighters (from Colorado's Centennial celebration) on the stage, at Denham looks strong. "Say One For Me" and "Nun's Story" are holding firm on

New Pix Perk B'way; 'Hole' Wham 80G, 'Circus'-Stage Hep 70G, 'Hell' $15,500, 'Horse' Fast 32G, 'Story' 152G, 5th

Launching of several new pictures in current session is giving Broadway film biz a bright glow this week despite some torrid weather. Great strength of numerous holdovers, of course, was a plus factor as were several rainy days.

Ace newcomer is "Hole in Head," which looks like wham $80,000 opening session at the State. While not as big as initial week of "Some Like It Hot," which was Easter week, it is terrific trade for a straight filmer in the summer. Another newie on Broadway is "10 Seconds To Hell," barely good at $15,500 opening week at the Victoria.

"Big Circus" with stageshow, another new entrant, is heading for a fine $70,000 at the Roxy. "Anatomy of a Murder" continues mighty with $47,000 or close in third stanza at the Criterion. It is comparatively as big at the Plaza at $21,500.

"Nun's Story" with stageshow still is getting the greatest coin total with a socko $152,000 probable for current (5th) week at the Music Hall. Pic is holding up so strongly that it will stay two more stanzas.

"Horse Soldiers" still is very much in the chips with $32,000 in fourth rour \ at the Astor. "Porgy and Bess" continues capacity with $37,000 for third frame at the Warner.

"Diary of Anne Frank" still is thriving on continuous-run at lower scale at the Palace, with $15,000 in 18th session just finished. "Middle of Night" was nice $13,000 in fifth stanza at the Forum and $9,000 in same week at Trans-Lux 52d Street.

"Five Pennies" looks like okay $25,000 in fifth session at the Capitol, and stays another. "Say One For Me" is heading for okay $25,000 in fifth-final round at the Paramount, where "Holiday For Lovers" moves in next Friday (24).

"Grand Illusion" still amazes for an oldie, with solid $8,100 likely for fourth round at arty Baronet.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,094; 75-$2)— "Horse Soldiers" (UA) (4th wk). This round winding up tomorrow (Thurs.) is heading for great $32,000. Third, $36,000.

Capitol (Loew) (4,820; $1-$2.50) —"Five Pennies" (Par) (5th wk). This stanza ending today (Wed.) looks like okay $25,000. Fourth was $32,000. Stays another.

Criterion (Moss) (1,671; 90-$2.40) —"Anatomy of a Murder" (Col) (3d wk). This week winding today (Wed.) likely will hit wow $47,000. Second, $51,500. Stays, natch!

Palace (RKO) (1,642; 90-$2)— "Diary of Anne Frank" (20th). The 18th session finished last night (Tues.) with fine $15,000. The 17th week, $16,000, being second round on popscale.

Forum (Moss) (813; 90-$1.80)— "Middle of Night" (Col) (6th wk). Fifth round completed last night (Tues.) was nice $13,000. Fourth week, $14,000.

Paramount (AB-PT) (3,665; $1-$2)—"Say One For Me" (20th) (5th wk). This stanza finishing tomorrow (Thurs.) is heading for okay $25,000. The fourth, $31,000. "Holiday For Lovers" (20th) opens Friday (24).

Radio City Music Hall (Rockefellers) (6,200; 90-$2.75)—"Nun's Story" (WB) with stageshow (5th wk). This session looks to hold with sock $152,000. Fourth was $162,000. Holds until "North By Northwest" (M-G) comes in Aug. 6.

Rivoli (UAT) (1,545; 90-$1.25)— "John Paul Jones" (WB) (6th wk). Fifth round concluded last night (Tues.) was dull $6,500. Fourth was $7,500. Fifth week was hurt by having last Thursday out because of press preview of a new pic.

Roxy (Indie) (5,705; 90-$2.50)— "Big Circus" (AA) with stageshow. Initial stanza ending tomorrow (Thurs.) looks like fine $70,000 or close. Holding. In ahead, "This Earth Is Mine" (U) with stageshow (3d wk), $44,000.

State (Loew) (1,900; 90-$2)— "Hole in Head" (UA) (2d wk). First session completed last night (Tues.) hit a smash $80,000 or close. In ahead, "Some Like It Hot" (UA) (15th wk-10 days), big $35,000.

Victoria (City Inv.) (1,003; 50-$2) —"10 Seconds To Hell" (UA). Initial round ending tomorrow (Thurs.) looks to hit good $15,500. Stays. In ahead, "Hound of Baskervilles" (UA) (2d wk), $11,500.

Warner (SW) (1,600; $1.50-$3.75) —"Porgy and Bess" (Col) (4th wk). Third frame ended Saturday (18) night was capacity $37,000. Second was capacity at same figure. Stays indef.

First-Run Arties

Baronet (Reade) (430; $1.25-$2)— "Grand Illusion" (Cont) (reissue) (4th wk). This week ending tomorrow (Thurs.) looks like solid $8,100. Third, $9,300.

Fine Arts (Davis) (468; 90-$1.80) —"Room At Top" (Cont) (17th wk). The 16th session concluded Sunday (19) was socko $13,600. The 15th week, $13,800.

Beekman (R&B) (590; $1.20-$1.75) — "Wild Strawberries" (Janus) (5th wk). Fourth stanza ended Sunday (19) was fancy $10,900. Third, $11,300.

Normandie (T-L) (592; $1.80-$2.80)—"Darby O'Gill" (BV) (4th wk). Third week ended Monday (20) dipped to trim $9,000. Second, $12,500. Sharp dip in third week blamed partly on presence of "Sleeping Beauty" (BV) around now in neighborhood theatres.

Guild (Guild) (450; $1-$1.75) — "World of Art" (Indie) (2d wk). Initial week ended last night (Tues.) was good $9,500.

Paris (Pathe Cinema) (568; 90-$1.80)—"The Possessors" (Lopert). Opened Monday (20). Last week, "Women Are Weak" (NTA) (6th wk), was fair $5,000 after $5,100 in fifth session.

Plaza (Lopert) (525; $1.50-$2) — "Anatomy of A Murder" (Col) (3d wk). This session winding up today (Wed.) is heading for smash $21,500. Second, $23,800.

Sutton (R&B) (561; 95-$1.80) — "Gigi" (M-G) (38th wk). The 37th round completed Saturday (18) was great $17,400 after $16,900 in 36th week. Continues on indef.

Trans-Lux 52d St. (T-L) (540; $1-$1.50) — "Middle of Night" (Col) (6th wk). Fifth stanza ended last night (Tues.) was fancy $9,000 after $11,500 in fourth week.

Mayfair (Indie) (1,386; $1-$1.50) —"Great Is My Country" (Indie) (4th wk). Third session ended Monday (20) was good $25,000 after $24,000 for second. Scale was cut from $1.50-$3.50 for this Russian-made pic after first week.

'Darby' Dandy 12G, Prov.; 'Story' 9G

Providence, July 21.

"Darby O'Gill and Little People" shapes standout currently at RKO Albee with smash take. Majestic is also lofty with "Nun's Story." State's third of "Horse Soldiers" is mild as is Strand's second of "Don't Give Up Ship."

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (2,200; 65-90)— "Darby O'Gill" (BV) and "King of Wild Stallions" (AA). Smash $12,000. Last week, "This Earth Is Mine" (U) and "I Mobster" (20th) (2d wk), $4,500.

Majestic (SW) (2,200; 65-80)— "Nun's Story" (WB). Lofty $9,000 or over. Last week, "Hercules" (WB) and "Island of Lost Women" (WB) (2d wk), $7,500.

State (Loew) (3,200; 65-80)— "Horse Soldiers" (UA) (3d wk). Mild $5,000 after $9,000 in second.

Strand (National Realty) (2,200; 65-80)—"Don't Give Up Ship" (Par) and "Gunmen From Laredo" (Col) (2d wk). Fairly good $5,000. First was $10,000.

'Ship' Strong $11,000, Seattle; 'Hole' Hep 7G

Seattle, July 21.

Summer weather is sloughing biz currently. However, "Hole in Head" is hep at Music Box and "Don't Give Up Ship" is rated great at Coliseum. "Nun's Story" is heading for a big take opening round at the Blue Mouse. Elsewhere, trade is fair to dull. "Hound of Baskervilles" shapes drab at Orpheum in first week.

Estimates for This Week

Blue Mouse (Hamrick) (739; 90-$1.50)—"Nun's Story" (WB). Big $7,000. Last week, "Ask Any Girl" (M-G) (2d wk), $4,300.

Coliseum (Fox-Evergreen) (1,870; 90-$1.50)—"Don't Give Up Ship" (Par) and "King of Wild Stallions" (AA). Great $11,000. Last week, "Horse Soldiers" (UA) (3d wk), $5,300 in 5 days.

Only Last-Minute Compromise Can Prevent Most Serious Labor Strike In Mexican Film Industry History

Mexico City, July 21.

Barring a last-minute zero hour compromise, it looks as though the Mexican picture industry is heading for its most serious labor dispute. A strike call has already been issued in the distributorship end, to take effect Aug. 1.

More than 30 films in various stages of completion will be affected by a strike if other talks between the Mexican Assn. of Film Producers and the Union of Film Production Workers break down.

Jose Rodriguez Granada, secretary of the technical and manual workers division of STPC, said there will be no "gallantry" in this strike and that no concessions will be granted to permit producers to carry on with laboratory work, sound dubbing, recording, etc.

Producers themselves are jittery and shooting of new films generally has been postponed pending the outcome of the labor dispute. The Mexican Assn. of Film Producers, for its part, revealed that total Mexican production for the half year came to 56 films with this nine less than for the same period in 1958. The drop is attributed to "strike fears."

Shutter Before Acceding

Pedro Elizalde Canales, Maximino Molina Carrillo and Miguel Mora Baez, the high command of Section 1 of the Union of Film Industry Workers (STIC), controlling exhibitor and distributor personnel, have decided that they will shut down all cinemas if distributors do not accede to their terms. Formerly it had been agreed to permit Mexican official distributorships to operate. A total shutdown, union leaders believe, will bring distribs into line.

Distributors, including Metro, 20th-Fox, Columbia, Universal, WB, Paramount and United Artists have more or less reluctantly agreed to a 21% wage hike and fringe benefits. But the union is trying to force them to agree to take on 30 additional workers. Distribs flatly refuse to do this under the present situation where Hollywood product is losing exhibition time to Mexican in first-runs.

No Sports Car for Tarzan

Albuquerque, July 21.

Gordon Scott, the screen's 11th version of Tarzan, came to Albuquerque Sat. (11), gave an assist to the Soap Box Derby finals, was feted at a Sears Roebuck "jungle party" and managed a few plugs for his latest pic, "Tarzan's Greatest Adventure."

At the same time, Scott described the new Tarzan concept, now being used in the scripts for the jungle pix.

"Tarzan was getting too civilized," Scott said. 'He had a wife and a son and a jungle house; all he needed was an automobile to be just like anyone else."

The new concept allows greater freedom in the script and the stories are to be more realistic and believable, he said.

Do Bureaucrats Chill Pic Loans?

Some regional offices of the Small Business Administration have been charged with discouraging exhibitors from applying for SBA loans. The complaint was made by Philip F. Harling, chairman of Theatre Owners of America's SBA committee.

Harling asserted that despite all the pubilcity that resulted when the SBA changed its policies and made theatres, both conventional and drive-ins, eligible for loans, some SBA offices have been turning away applicants.

This condition, according to Harling, may be one of the reasons for the small number of theatre applications being processed by the SBA since loan coverage was extended to four-wall theatres about four years ago and enlarged a year and half ago to include drive-ins. Harling's committee had been instrumental in getting the SBA to change its regulations which previously barred loans to any segment of the amusement industry.

According to Harling, local SBA offices have been telling exhibitors that they are not eligible for loans because they are part of the entertainment industry. "Perhaps some of the regional office personnel do not read their mail or directives, because if they did, they would know that the SBA now covers theatres," Harling declared.

Harling urged theatreowners applying for loans to insist that the staff of the regional offices check its own directives. He told theatremen to get in touch with TOA's office if other difficulties were encountered on loan applications.

ILE DE FRANCE FLAYED BUT STILL FLOATING

Hollywood, July 21.

Ile de France played a key role in filming of Metro's "The Last Voyage," but producer Andrew L. Stone didn't sink her. Stone, as a matter of fact, and a matter of contract, is still not supposed to mention he heaped considerable indignity on the former queenship of the French Line. But he did.

Stone, who produces, writes and directs his independent productions for Metro, with his wife, Virginia, as film editor (billed) and production associate and general aide (unbilled), returned last week from more than two months in Japan filming "The Last Voyage."

Despite some draw-backs, certain individual Japanese who harried his production, Stone is enthusiastic about the country and its people as aids to U. S. filmmakers.

Japan is a first-rate location site, he says. Wages are reasonable, authorities and technicians are cooperative and efficient, and there is no concentrated effort to soak American film companies. Mrs. Stone seconds the reactions.

The Stones needed plenty of cooperation, too, because their rough handling of the Ile de France, now owned by a Japanese scrap salvage concern, was highly hazardous. Sinking of the vessel, called in the picture the SS Claridon, called for some tricky camera setups. Although the "Claridon" was not actually sunk, some shipping experts thought Stone's plans for the beating he gave her might result in capsizing.

He blew up interiors, blew out the sides, flooded portions and toppled one of the giant smokestacks. When the "Claridon" was returned to her owners she was considerably down in the bow, Stone says.

Film Importer Group Gets 20-Member Start

Formation of the Independent Film and Importer and Distributors of America Inc. has been virtually assured. New group, taking in the independent distributors of foreign films, needed at least 20 members to get under way. It's got those members now, Ilya Lopert having been the latest to join.

According to Richard Brandt of Trans-Lux, temporary chairman of the unit, the first organizational meeting to elect a president, directors, etc. is to take place soon. IFIDA will concern itself with censorship and a host of other issues that concern the indies. It will have a paid executive secretary.

8 Latin Lingo Houses

San Antonio, July 21.

There are now a total of eight local theatres in the city showing Spanish language films. This includes the regular indoor theatres and drive-ins. The local theatres show the films on single bills as well as double bills with English language films.

There are some 300,000 Spanish speaking citizens in the city.

Properties, Stars Monopolized

Takes Plenty of Old Entrepreneurial Courage To Brave Independent Status Today: Fleischer

A producer or director, shifting from contract to independent status, is faced with a frightening scarcity of material, according to director Richard Fleischer, who is stepping out on his own under his Nautilus indie banner. With another year of his contract to go at 20th-Fox, Fleischer, who directed "Compulsion," is enroute to Europe to scout locations for a number of projects he plans to do in the future.

With the major companies gobbling up so many pre-sold properties, Fleischer said that a producer such as himself must depend on original material or must comb the library shelves and find properties that the major studios have missed. As his first indie project, Fleischer, son of cartoon pioneer Max Fleischer, plans to film "Willing Is My Love," an original screenplay by Richard Murphy, who did the film adaptation of "Compulsion." The story, dealing with a father falling in love with his son's fiance, will be filmed in France. So far Fleischer has not made a releasing deal, but he envisions no difficulty based on preliminary talks with a number of major companies.

While abroad, Fleischer will make an attempt to work out an arrangement with the Russians to film "Rusurrection," by Leo Tolstoy, in Moscow. If he can't convince the Soviet authorities as to the value of such co-production, he said he'll seek a deal in Yugoslavia. Also on Fleischer future schedule is a film version of Erskine Caudwell's "Trouble In July."

New York Sound Track

London intelligence: John Osborn has done a film script for his "The Entertainer," legit starring vehicle for Sir Laurence Olivier.

Roman film world shocked and saddened by death, at 34, following injuries sustained in an automobile accident, of Augusto Borselli, who headed the Dino DeLaurentiis press office in addition to numerous other p.r. chores. He was known both nationally and internationally as one of the best men in his field, and had only a few days ago received a "Gold Pen" award for his longtime services on behalf of the Italian film industry.

Breakdown of United Artists' worldwide billings for the first six months of this year (as of last week's issue of VARIETY) should have read 1959, not 1958. Domestic rentals were $21,842,000, foreign $18,213,000.

Addendum to the just concluded Ninth Berlin Film Festival: More than 700 "filmbuyers" from all over the world (last year: 508) came to the city.

Maurice "Red" Silverstein, v.p. of Loew's International, off to Europe to join Metro production chief Sol C. Siegel in co-production deals abroad. Silverstein is the company's specialist on foreign deals . . . Universal producer Ross Hunter in town to discuss release plans for "Pillow Talk." . . . William Goetz's "They Came to Cordura," a Columbia release, will have a royal premiere in London on Oct. 29 for the benefit of the British Empire Cancer Campaign. Princess Margaret has consented to attend . . . Alan Freed, accompanied by a group of recording personalities, will head a caravan scheduled to visit 20 Loew's Theatres in the N.Y. area in connection with the opening of Hal Roach Distribution Corp.'s "Go, Johnny, Go!" on July 27 . . . Loew's Theatres' Ernie Emerling sending out do-it-yourself "Hole in the Head" brain surgery kits in connection with the picture's opening at Loew's State. Kit includes a coconut for the purpose of practicing "brain surgery at home." . . "Spinster," novel by Sylvia Ashton-Warner, has been acquired by Metro and placed on Julian Blustein production schedule for 1960. Locations are planned for New Zealand . . . Metro's "The Scapegoat," starring Alec Guinness and Bette Davis, set for the Guild Theatre, N.Y. . . . Oscar Doob back from Coast "Ben-Hur" conferences . . . Columbia v.p. Paul N. Lazarus Jr. returned to New York from the Coast following a week of conferences with studio executives . . . Jonas Rosenfield Jr., Columbia's pub-ad chief, to Europe to confer with the company's European-based indie producers.

Samuel Bronston Productions Inc., of Delaware, filed a statement and designation that its New York State office for a motion pictures and amusement business is 15 East 48th street, New York City. Margulies & Heit were filing attorneys at Albany.

Standard 35m version of "South Pacific" is clicking along at such speed that it should accumulate $10,000,000 in the domestic mart, 20th-Fox figures . . . They're still trying to find a new starring vehicle for Millie Perkins whose only pic so far was "Diary of Anne Frank" . . . East Germany's DEFA is the latest foreign outfit to send elaborate brochures on its available product, a good proportion of it dealing with the Nazi era. East German pix aren't being released in the States . . . Eugene Vale to script "Life of St. Francis of Assissi" for 20th release . . . Les L. Persky, prez of Product Services, Inc., in Europe to seek a couple of Czech features for his Yorke Productions.

Michael O'Shea, Virginia Mayo and Leonard Oliver are partnered in O'Shea Enterprises Inc., for production of a program of indie features and tv-radio packages . . . Anthony Franciosa into Jerry Wald's "The Story on Page One."

Eugene Vale, screen and video writer, due in July 23 from Hollywood for the ballyhooliganism attendant upon his maiden novel, "The Thirteenth Apostle," which Scribner's releases to the bookstalls Aug. 5.

Glendon Swarthout's new novel, a story of college students invading Florida during spring vacation, has been acquired by Metro and will be produced by Joe Pasternak . . . Joan Copeland, who plays Fredric March's daughter in "Middle of the Night," has been given billing in the New York advertising of the Columbia release as a result of the critical kudos she received.

Ron Johnson, Toronto Star film critic, says that Canadian money may be involved in "the most ambitious motion picture in history." It would be a 4½-hour life of Christ, called "The Son of God," and would cost $30,000,000, with cast of 50,000—including 150 principals and 100 top Hollywood names; with an uncredited actor as Christ. Report is that script, already completed, will be dubbed in 40 languages.

At Exhib-Distrib Summit Meet, Toll TV Will Be 'Tactless' Theme

With representatives of the American Congress of Exhibitors reaching an agreement with Eric Johnston, president of Motion Picture Assn. of America, on which topics would be "excluded" from the summit meeting between exhibitors and distributors, the most educated guess in industry circles is that the subject of toll television is one of the hands-off issues.

The joint session, which will be held early in August, was firmed after both exhibitors and distributors agreed that certain subjects would not be introduced at the meeting. Significantly, the subject of trade practices, which at first had been considered a stumbling block, was not excluded.

It's believed that toll television was eliminated because of the conflict of interests on the pay-tv issue between exhibitors and distributors. The Congress of Exhibitors is on record as opposing all forms of pay-tv, the cable as well as the over-the-air type, and has been in the forefront in attempting to obtain Congressional legislation banning tollvision.

With the exception of Paramount, which is active in advocating a toll-tv system via its subsidiary, the International Telemeter Corp., the other film companies have maintained a discreet silence on the subject of pay-tv, neither opposing or favoring it officially. Rather than incur the ire of their exhibitor customers in a period already marked by bitter buyer-seller relationships, the majority of the film companies have considered it wise to say nothing on the subject.

It's known, however, that many company toppers and individual production executives are keenly in favor of the introduction of a pay-tv system, feeling that a national pay-tv linkup would again result in full-scale film activity at the major studios. Individual independent producers — Samuel Goldwyn, for example—have come out forcefully for tollvision, but the major film companies, even including Paramount, have managed so far not to be counted when the chips are on the subject.

To be sure, Par's position is well known, but so far exhibitors have not singled out the film company for any type of boycott, official or otherwise, because of its activity in tollvision. One reason offered for this position, despite the adamant opposition of theatremen to pay-tv, is that the market is so short of pictures that theatres have to accept product from whatever source it is available. Thus Paramount has been able to continue unmolested despite the clamor of exhibitors in official Washington.

Par apparently played a major role in ruling out tollvision as a subject for discussion at the joint meeting.

LIFE ON THE PLANET LOCARNO

Locarno's Hillside Al Fresco

[FOR FESTIVAL UNSPOOLINGS]

Locarno, July 21.

Locarno a small resort town on Lake Maggiore near the Italo border, where a Film Fest has been operating 12 years now, uses a 2,500-seater open air theatre created on the grounds of the Albergo Grande Hotel which has a hilly back yard.

A screen-called the biggest in Europe—has been set up against this hill with seats before it on the ground and a balcony for invitees on the Albergo porch. People in the hotel with windows on that side can see everything.

If rain, the festival is adjourned to the nearby casino where afternoon and retrospective films are regularly shown.

See Cimex Chief's Resignation As Tipping Mex Govt. Distrib Revamp

Mexico City, July 14.

The resignation of Cimex head Alfonso Pulido Islas last week, touched off the long-reported reorganization not only of this official distributorship, handling product abroad, but also of Peliculas Nacionales and Peliculas Mexicanas. These latter handle distribution within Mexico and Central and South America.

What brought matters to a head was a discrepancy in accounting of Cimex subsidiaries in the U. S. (Clasa Mohme and Azteca Films), with a difference of several million pesos noted. The Cimex special commission headed by producers Cesar Santos Galindo and Alfonso Rosas Priego was careful to state that this discrepancy was nothing but "a bookkeeping error." It will all be cleared up after an expert crew of accountants make a thorough revision of Cimex accounts here, and a similar check of Azetca and Clasa Mohme books.

It was said here that the error may be traceable to different functioning systems for Cimex and its U. S. subsidiaries. Azteca was bought out by Mexican producers some six or seven years ago and Clasa Mohme was incorporated into the Cimex setup scarcely a year ago, according to Galindo.

While the Islas resignation caused no furor here (it had been expected since last December) the industry has long known that a complete overhaul of the Mexican distributor organization was necessary. Cimex, for example, it has been charged by producers again and again, has not been able to assure collection of production budget money advanced by Film Bank and producers in the U. S. market in many cases. And where exhibition revenue has been collected, invariably this has been eaten up by exploitation expenses and other costs.

Diminishing Returns the Rule

This same picture of diminishing returns from Mexican material has also been the rule abroad, with very few exceptions. In France, Paul de Charnissay, head of Cimex-France also has turned in his resignation. In this case, however, it will not be effective until December. Meanwhile, the Cimex board here plans to send inspec-

Okla. Syndicate Sells Hawaiian Consolidated

Honolulu, July 14.

A non-theatrical Oklahoma syndicate has sold Consolidated Amus. Co., which it acquired only last March for about $8,000,000, to William Forman, who owns and operates theatres in California, Oregon, Washington and Arizona.

Hialand Development Corp., however, is retaining Consolidated's 75% interest in the lucrative Hawaiian Broadcasting System as well as its midtown drive-ins. Latter is located on land that very possibly could be sold for a potential $1,000,000. Forman will operate the ozoner for Hialand.

Consolidated owns 18 theatres and operates a 19th house on a lease arrangement. It has 15 theatres on Oahu, one on Kauai island, and three on Hawaii island, latter being little more than marginal operations, profit-wise.

LOCARNO LUMINIERE

Locarno, July, 21.

Paulette Goddard, Erich-Maria Remarque and Robert Sidomak were listed as Locarno fest guests but never showed . . . Those who did appear were German thesps Hardy Kruger and Anna Sova, French producer Joseph Lisbona and French thesps Charles Aznovour, Nicole Berger and Andrea Parisys . . . Lisbona, whose first pic "Les Drageurs" (The Girl Hunters) is a Paris hit, was somewhat abused by official French reps who felt the film's theme of youth searching for the ideal in the midst of immorality was not a fitting one to be shown on July 14, the French independence day. But Swiss authorities at Locarno thought differently . . . Swedish producers were against the Ingmar Bergman retrospective as they feel the fest attention given to him has unfairly obscured other Swedish filmmakers and he works for only one producer, Svensk Film. But fest went ahead with it and got no Swedish boycott . . . There are no autograph hunters here, only a handful of starlets, and none of the photog bustle of Cannes, Berlin and Venice. The emphasis remains on the screen here . . . A rich German industrialist hired the biggest restaurant for a day just to invite fest people so he and his wife could meet people . . . Only one French starlet, Clara Clark, made the trip on her own. But she is of Swiss origin . . . Twelve countries took part at the Locarno fest, U.S., France, Italy, West Germany, Czechoslavakia, Poland, Russia, Sweden, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Great Britain, Spain . . . Yugoslavian entry was a last year's winner at the Yugoslav Film fest in Poola. It is "The Black Pearls."

Bill Dieterle Signed To Direct Two German Films, 'Mistress' First

Berlin, July 14.

Another ex-German Hollywood film director is due to make a film here. William Dieterle has been hired by Artur Brauner (CCC) to direct "Herrin der Welt" (Mistress of the World). Shooting is to start Sept. 15. UFA will release.

Another project is "Geliebte der grossen Baerin" (Lover Of the Great Bear). Latter is to be a three-country deal. Film's cast may include a foreign name star. Also on Dieterle's German agenda is a staging job at one of West Berlin's municipal theatres. Dieterle, incidentally, recently staged Goethe's "Faust" at the West German Hersfeld Festival.

Dieterle, who left Germany in 1929 and made about 70 films in Hollywood, said: "I think 30 Hollywood years are enough." However, his return to the German film scene doesn't mean that he'll give up his U. S. citizenship.

Dieterle's last directorial jobs were "Dubrowski," an Italian-Yugoslavian coproduction, and Paramount's "Omar Khayam." Reflecting upon his career, he calls "Life of Emile Zola" (1937) his best film.

A VISIT TO A SMALLER FEST

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Locarno, July 21.

The 12th Locarno Film Festival, here in Switzerland, spanning July 9-19, is a "recognized," not "recommended," festival per the Federation of International Film Producers Assns. And yet it is the second festival in seniority, having started in 1946 two months before the first Cannes Fest.

It has remained a fair-like affair and gets only about a $30,000 budget, one-fifth that of the big brother fests. Funds are donated by the city of Locarno and surrounding towns situated on Lake Maggiore.

Film festival is primarily a resort hypo (as in Cannes and Venice and indeed most of the film events).

There is an international jury. Prizes are golden sails mounted on bronze hulls.

A kudo can mean something in Swtizerland and some intramural prestige for prizewinners abroad. About 100 journalists from various European countries are deadheaded plus sundry film personalities, but big names rarely show in Locarno. They still talk wistfully of Linda Darnell's appearance in 1947 when "My Darling Clementine" (20th) was shown.

Swiss distrib branches of Yank companies send features after first checking with Paris, which has to check with New York in many cases. Most American majors participate except Metro which bears a grudge against the festival. Swiss exhibs are divided on whether the fest hinders or helps them. It does get big press coverage in Switzerland itself.

Locarno's director, Vinicio Beretta, underlined the Swiss awareness of "stepchild" treatment by Hollywood in having this visiting VARIETY reporter "accept" the prizes going to Americans. Ordinarily the Swiss exchanges would do so. Beretta also singled out VARIETY because of its "international" news coverage.

It's pointed out that Switzerland takes 200 Yank films annually, out of a total importation of some 500.

Yank Entries

Yanks sent "Warlock" (20th), "Al Capone" (AA), "The Rabbit Trap" (UA), and the 1953 Stanley Kubrick opus "Killer's Kiss" (UA), which got him a major studio release and a Hollywood shot.

Lack of strict rules gives these secondary film fests off-beat interest. There's a certain catch-as-catch. Some features previously had shown at other fests or were not necessarily contemporary works. No matter.

Entered features are usually just ready for Swiss release. "Warlock" got a good public response as did "Capone" and "Trap." "Kiss" was lauded as showing the first promise later confirmed by Kubrick in his Hollywood pix.

Few Parties

French, Italians and Germans were the only ones who bothered to send spokesmen and provide good documentation on their product. Of course they all cater to the multi-lingual aspects of the Swiss. Only parties given were also by French, Italians and Germans.

French official entries were two feature documentaries. "Four of the Moana" (Gaumont), is a simply made affair on how a group of four sailed a little sailing boat around the world. It is somewhat long and repetitious but an okay unpretentious item. "I, a Negro" follows two young Ivory Coast natives around in a day in their lives after transplanting themselves from primitive life to the swirling aspects of the growing cities. It has insight and a poetic perception of Africa, its peoples and changing aspects.

Two other French features were invited "Les Dageurs" (Rivers), a

Heat Sloughs London Film Biz But 'Gigi' Capacity $9,800 in 22d Week; 'Ferry' Smash 11G, 'Tempest' Ditto

London, July 14.

An exceptional heatwave, which kept the temperature up in the 90's for nearly a week, severely hurt most first-run situations last week. The only film to emerge unscathed was "Gigi," which continued its capacity run at the Columbia with another $9,800 for its 22d stanza.

Although roundly panned by the press, "Ferry to Hong Kong" showed surprising stamina to push to a great $11,000 or near in second session, ahead of first week, at the Odeon, Leicester Square.

"Tempest" opened in fine style at the Plaza with a smash $11,000 or more in first full week. "Some Like It Hot" also maintained its boff positon with a $7,500 in its ninth frame at the London Pavilion.

"Man Who Understood Women" shapes neat $9,000 or near for opener. "Darby O'Gill and Little People" looks brisk in second week at Studio One.

Estimates for Last Week

Carlton (20th) (1,128;; 70-$2.15) —"Operation Bullshine" (ABP) (2d wk). Fair $4,800. First was $4,500. "Bobbikins" (20th) follows July 23.

Casino (Indie) (1,155; 70-$2.15) —"Seven Wonders of World" (Robin) (77th wk). Healthy $13,700.

Columbia (Col) (740; $1.05-$2.50) —"Gigi" (M-G) (22d wk). Another capacity week at $9,800.

Dominion (CMA) (1,712; $1.05-$2.20) — "South Pacific" (20th) (64th wk). Solid $12,500.

Empire (M-G) (3,099; 55-$1.70)— "Mating Game" (M-G) (3d wk). Fair $7,500. Second was $6,400. "Tunnel of Love" (M-G) opens July 16.

Leicester Square Theatre (CMA) (1,376; 50-$1.70)—"Man Who Understood Women" (20th). Neat $9,000 or near. "Bridal Path" (BL) preems July 23.

London Pavilion (UA) (1,217; 50-$1.70)—"Some Like It Hot" (UA) (9th wk). Big $7,500. Last week, $7,200. "I Want to Live" (UA) follows July 24.

Odeon, Leicester Square (CMA) (2,200; 50-$1.70)—"Ferry to Hong Kong" (Rank) (2d wk). Surprise $11,000 or near, great. Opening week, $8,400.

Odeon, Marble Arch (CMA) (2,200; 50-$1.70)—"Heart of a Man" (Rank) (3d wk). Mild $3,000 or near. Second $2,800. "Mouse That Roared" (Col) preems July 16.

Plaza (Par) (1,902; 70-$1.70) — "Tempest" (Par). Heading for smash $11,000.

Rialto (20th) (592; 50-$1.30) — "Diary of Anne Frank" (20th) (2d wk). Average $3,000.

Ritz (M-G) (432; 50-$1.30)— "Look Back In Anger" (ABP) (4th wk). Fair $3,000. Third, $2,200 previous week. "Left, Right and Centre" (BL) follows July 16.

Studio One (APT) (600; 30-$1.20) —"Darby O'Gill" (Disney) (2d wk). Brisk $4,200 and better than opening week.

Warner (WB) (1,785; 50-$1.70)— "Gidget" (Col). Light $5,000 or near. "Nun's Story" (WB) follows July 23.

Gene 'Bop-a-Lula' Vincent Would Quit R&R for Farm; Draws 112,000 in Tokyo

Tokyo, July 14.

Rock 'n' roller Gene Vincent wants to quit. Tired of traveling and being away from his family for extended periods, the 22-year-old Capitol disker told VARIETY, "I won't go on very much longer. I'll be quitting soon. I may go on about a year and then I'll stop. I'd rather be a plain old farmer."

Currently appearing in Japan on a swing around the Pacific area, Vincent was the picture of dejection. Overseas phone calls had just told him of conflict between his agent and his parents in Los Angeles. And locally, while Vincent expressed pleasure with the crowds and general reception that attend his performances, he was irritated by the confusion of his schedule.

The warbling wiggler said he wanted to go to Los Angeles immediately and straighten out the differences between his agent and his parents. He'd then return in about a week to resume his Japan performances before moving on to Korea, Manila and possibly Hawaii. On his Far East bookings, he said with disgust, "It's kind of a bidding process."

If Vincent does retire to a farm, he would abruptly end one of the most meteoric recording careers of recent years. While in the Navy three years ago, he entered a contest at Capitol by submitting a tape of something he came up with called "Be-Bop-a-Lula." Although he had never performed publicly, Vincent's tape won first prize. Four months later he recorded the song in Nashville and it was a top seller. Two of Vincent's followup disks, "A Lot of Lovin'" and "Dance to the Bop," each hit big, too.

At this city's Nichigeki Theatre, Vincent averaged 16,000 daily during his seven-day stand in the teeth of fading interest in rock 'n' roll here. His audiences also bent the walls at the Umeda Koma in Osaka.

Malachandra Productions Inc. has been authorized to conduct an entertainment and sound equipment business in New York, with capital stock of 100 shares, no par value. Abraham L. Wax was filing attorney at Albany.

French Film Week For Buenos Aires July 23-29

Buenos Aires, July 14.

Unifrance Film, the Lococo Circuit and the Assn. of Film Critics are organizing a French Film Week for July 23-29 at the circuit's major showcase, the Opera.

The seven films to be exhibited are "Orfeu Negro," winner at the Cannes Festival; "La Loi est la Loi," with Fernandel and Toto; "Les Quatre Cent Coups"; "L'Inspecteur Maigret," with Jean Gabin and Annie Gorardot; "Les Miserables," with Jean Gabin and Bernard Blier; Brigitte Bardot's latest, "Yeux de Chatte."

Many Obstacles to Free Exchange Of Films Hurting British Product In Foreign Field, Says Federation

London, July 21.

British pix, which have been making steady progress in the export markets during the last few years, are currently threatened by "mounting obstacles to the free exchange of films." That's the conclusion reached in the annual report of the Federation of British Film Makers which observes that import quotas, multiplication of high taxes, currency restrictions, freezing of earnings, monopolistic trading, censorship and political suspicions are the problems which have to be countered in various territories.

The report states that without expanding overseas sales the future of British production is precariously dependent on a declining market. The success of distriubtors' efforts was reflected in the growth of the overseas earnings of British films from $17,920,000 in 1956 to $19,320,000 in 1957 and $21,560,000 last year. The Federation notes the help it has received from British Embassies overseas and by direct assistance from the Board of Trade, which has directly negotiated on behalf of the industry in certain foreign areas.

The authority of a government department is frequently needed when dealing with the official bodies responsible for negotiations in foreign countries, particularly when films are included as part of larger negotiations.

"It is, for instance, only the government which can directly point out to foreign governments the inadequate number of licenses allocated to the British as compared with, say, the American industry," the report adds. "In Japan, Western Europe has had 44 licenses and the U.S. 122, though this formula was altered at the end of April 1959; in Formosa, Western Europe has 73 and the U.S. 327; in Argentina and other countries there is a similar disparity. This is all the more unjustified when one remembers that European production is of the order of 500 films a year while American production of feature films is likely to be well under 260 in the current year."

The report reviews the problems and restrictions which have been the subject of negotiations in France, Germany, Italy, Japan and Argentina. In the last territory, the British film industry faces an acute quota problem, as a result of which current pix are not likely to be released in the Argentine until 1961 unless the number of licenses is increased.

The FBFM report also analyses the possibilities of bilateral and global quotas arising from the European Common Market area and, has suggested to the BOT, that the situation in the ECM area could be eased by promoting Anglo-European co-operation under the proposed new Quota Act.

Indie Stross Stresses Daring of Yank Prods. With Standpat British

London, July 14.

Pat-on-the-back view that Hollywood is "apprehensive enough" about the world market situation to take a chance in the kind of pictures it makes, while Britain is at times too complacent, is voiced by independent producer Raymond Stross, who this week started a program of four pix intended for distribution by American majors.

The first, "A Terrible Beauty," is being shot at the Ardmore Stu- Artists world release with Robert Mitchum, Anne Heywood and Dan O'Herlihy topping under Tay Garnett's direction.

Stross, who declares that he's certainly not anti-certain kinds of pix which have been cleaning up in the domestic market (such as the "Carry On" comedies which have clicked here) holds that it's more than tough to get a setup of pleasing films. And as for hitting that U.S. market, he contends that nowadays this can be guaranteed only by having American investment in a project. Hence, his spending most of the last three months in the U. S., gearing things for the quartet that'll occupy him for the coming 18 months.

The four pix, Stross estimates, will come out at around $4,500,000 budget-wise. In order of production, the other three are "The Mark," due to start in November either at Ardmore or in Canada, "Passport," skedded for March or April; and the tentatively titled "Leave Them To Heaven," to be shot in Singapore and in a British studio.

Stross, who subscribes heartily to the theory that if you've got the stories, you've got the chance, is apparently spending heavily on screenplay commissions. On "Leave Them To Heaven," for example, he claims that in getting a David Lord script from the Pierre Boulle novel, "White Man's Test," some $98,000 has been laid out.

Jerry Robbins' Tour

Leland Hayward, who sponsored "Ballets: U.S.A." in America last fall, is presenting the present Robbins company abroad. Following Spoleto and Paris itinerary is: Monte Carlo, July 22, 23; Tel Aviv, July 26-Aug. 8: Salzburg Festival, Aug. 12-17; Belgrade, Aug. 20-23; Dubrovnik, Aug. 25-27; Athens Festival, Aug. 31-Sept. 3: Salonika, Sept. 4; Edinburgh Festival, Sept. 7-12; London, Sept. 14-19; Copenhagen, Sept. 22-25; Stockholm, Sept. 27, 28; West Berlin, Oct. 2-5; Warsaw, Poznan, Krakow, Oct. 7-14.

Exact dates of "Ballets: U.S.A." engagements in Portugal, Spain and Iceland are being worked out.

There are 20 in company.

Two Yank-Italo Pix Italian Hits

Rome, July 14.

Updated seasonal boxoffice totals covering local first-run situations show four Italo-made pix in the lead (though two of them are twin Yank-Italian efforts), while four runner-ups are American subjects. Also in the top nine pix, all of which grossed over $300,000 to date, is a single French-made.

As of June 1 the seasonal winners are in this order: "The Tempest" (DeLaurentiis - Paramount); "Naked Maja" (Titanus-UA-Metro); "Europe by Night" (Avers); "I Soliti Ignoti" (Lux); "The Vikings" (UA-DEAR); "Cat On a Hot Tin Roof" (M-G); "The Big Country" (DEAR); "Les Tricheurs" (French-M-G) and "Vertigo" (Par).

While "Tempest" wound up with $600,000 Italo initial-run gross, runners-up "Maja" and "Europe" both topped a very high $450,000 for their first time round.

Japan Ministry Okays Pix Import Re-Division

Tokyo, July 14.

The Finance Ministry reversed itself and authorized MPEA to redivide its 1959 import quota allocations among its member companies on a consignment basis.

The Ministry stipulated, however, that such a new division shall be limited to this year only and that the allowance for 1959 does not mean any change in the credit of the basic allocation.

Florentine Music Festival Comments

By TRUDY GOTH

Florence, July 14.

Since the Maggio Musicale Fiorentino excavated the Cherubini "Medea" several years ago, it seems that every Italian longhair season has to have at least one musical-archeological rarity on its program. This year there were actually two. "Dido and Aeneas" by Purcell was performed by the Chamber Opera of Villa Olmo and the success of the evening was the American Negro soprano Gloria Davy as Dido. Her partner, Edoardo de Falce, gave his Aeneas role a much too Italianate style. The conductor was Ennio Gerelli who presented the transparency of the score well.

A second rarity was "Orlando" by Handel, a poor choice since Handel could have been commemorated on his 200th anni more fittingly by one of his well known and best works (none of which has been heard in Florence in the last decades).

Jazz—It's Italian!

Modern Jazz Quartet (John Lewis, pianist-composer, Milton Jackson, vibraphone, Percy Heath, bass and Conny Kay, percussion) gave two concerts memorable for the fact that for the first time since its existence jazz was included in a Florence Festival program. The only form in which jazz has appeared so far outside of night clubs in Florence, was Jerome Robbins' Ballet last year via Robert Prince's music for "New York Export: Opus Jazz." Modern Quartet was a big success, local critics calling it "music, real music—at times recalling certain forms of early Italian (sic) music of the 17th century." The musicians were acclaimed as "exquisite artists making music in an imminently elegant way." Most liked were "A Night in Tunis" and the encore "I'll Remember April."

'Nabucco' a la DeMille

The closing performance (July 10) of this "May Festival" was a spectacular presentation of Verdi's "Nabucco" staged by Aurel Milloss very much in the Cecil B. DeMille style but theatrically effective in the vast space of the Boboli Gardens. Doubts must be voiced as the orchestra under Bruno Bartoletti's baton failed in balanced sound, with only brass evident and all beautiful string sections, so important in Verdi operas, nearly inaudible. Also the singers had difficulties to cope with space and sound and forced their voices as no amplification system was in evidence. Nevertheless Ettre Bastianini in the lead and Margherita Roberti as Abigail as well as basso Paolo Washington in the role of the highpriest Zaccarias focused their voices well and the famous choral parts of this opera came over perfectly.

Scenery and costumes of the masses, Hebrews versus Assyrians, were effectively and style-consciously designed by Orlando di Collalto. For five warm July nights the cool Boboli Gardens with Nabucco" can count on 20,000 payees.

'Bridge' Official Brit. Venice Festival Entry

London, July 21.

"The Boy and the Bridge," Kevin McClory's Xanadu Production for Columbia release, has been chosen as the official British entry for the upcoming Venice Film Festival.

Hecht-Hill-Lancaster's "Summer of Seventeenth Doll," filmed in Australia, but ranking as British quota, is likely to be named as an invited British entry.

Mex 'Fair Lady' in Foldo

Mexico City, July 14.

The Mexican company of "My Fair Lady" has folded. A week's notice was posted on the bulletin board, with shutdown taking effect July 12. There are to be no tours either of the provinces.

Malolo Fabregas, associated with American producers in the local venture, refused to make any comments outside of repeating the fact that South America is out now because of political disturbances and reductions in foreign exchange quotations. Learned that the company here was always in the red because of 12 pesos (96c) price freeze imposed by authorities.

British Co., Disney Deal With RKO Japan Hailed By British Film Prods.

London, July 14.

Deal by which the British Commonwealth Film Corp. and Disney Productions become 50-50 owners of RKO Japan Ltd. is hailed as a triumphant example of Anglo-American cooperation by A. W. Watkins, president of the British Film Producers Assn. The arrangement gives RKO Japan a present total of 13 import licenses —five Disney, eight BCFC—and solves for British producers a problem that's been causing a headache for months.

British pix producers began wrinkling their brows in the spring of 1958 when Japan decreed that, as from April 1, 1960, licenses would be issued only to properly constituted distributing outfits, defining such as having at least five branches and a specified minimum staff. The BCFC didn't fit into the category, since it's been operating by handing over pix to Towa for local distribution, and the costly prospect arose of setting up a fully-manned outfit with local exchanges.

The buy into RKO Japan doesn't, of course, prevent any British producer from taking his product instead to a local distributor in Japan if he so wishes, but the outlook is that most interested pix makers will use the new setup. The BCFC branch in Tokyo will eventually be wound up while consideration's being given to British reps sitting on the RKO board.

ISRAELI FILMS BADLY REQUIRE DIRECTORS

Israel's greatest current film need is for directors, Yaacov Cochey, executive producer of Ramah Films in Tel-Aviv, opined in N.Y. last week. Company, which so far has been active only in the documentary field, is planning two theatrical features and a tv series in Israel.

Established six months ago, Ramah plans to set up a very modern unit in Israel and expects to operate in Israel, Greece, Turkey and Cyprus. Purpose of its Israeli films will be to show what Israel is and what it has to offer. It may also be engaged in coproduction.

Cochey, a born Israeli, said that, at the moment, there are no film directors in Israel. He attributed the lack of good Israeli features partly to this fact. The Israeli Government appeared eager to help the growth of native production, Cochey reported.

Disney Animation Show Quits London for Road

London, July 14.

Disney's "Art of Animation" exhibit, currently at the London store of Selfridge's, is skedded to travel to Manchester and Glasgow before heading for the Continent. Much the same as that mounted in America, the show was opened at Selfridge's last week by the Duke Of Bedford.

The Disney men making the installation had a high-pulse half-hour a day or so before the opening when Selfridge's was cleared following a "bomb in the store" call from a hoaxer.

W. German Film Board To Expand Functions

Berlin, July 14.

West-German Filmbewertungsstelle (film classification board) is trying to expand its functions. Until now its function has only been to classify pictures whether they are "artistically valuable" or "particularly valuable" (which means tax relief). Now the board wants to become a "house of open doors" or to become a contact office for consultation and practical help.

There has been some misunderstanding with regarding cuts imposed by the board. "That's not the way to put it," the board chairman Gerhard Prager said. "We never force companies to cut their pictures. We only inform them that this or that film would be declared 'valuable' on condition that this or that scene has to be cut. They can reject this but in this case the film had to run without the classification 'valuable' and consequently without tax relief."

Yank Distribs Would Develop Africa Market

Paris, July 21.

There is a Point 4—type of program brewing for Yank film majors, through their representative body, the Motion Picture Export Assn., to help develop areas which are not organized with proper film houses and distribution in order to create more new markets. This is to be no charity affair but strictly show biz to shore up vacillating foreign marts and act as insurance when second channels make burgeoning European video the menage to films it became in the U.S. and Great Britain.

General idea of this type of action has been brought up often by U.S. major reps, plus MPEA people, and Fred Gronich, MPEA Continental head here. It is now tagged for immediate action and has pinpointed the first action on Africa—all of it except areas which are serviced by Yank offices or subsids. Gronich will make an inspection tour sometime in October and cover all of this vast area.

From all of these African countries so far the Yanks, through sales reps or representational companies, only take about $250,000 to $350,000 per year. Gronich feels that if these areas are properly handled they could give more than $3,000,000 annually. He is interested more in the densely-populated areas where actual film houses might be built through local capital or Yank investment as an outlet for product. Gronich stresses this would be non-political and all filmmaking countries would be welcome on this both for investment or supplying films.

Take Advantage of Growth

He points out that with the growing, new countries in Africa, there will be a demand for more entertainment which films can supply. The ex-colonial countries rarely built theatres in most of the African holdings. Ambulatory 16m outfits could also be lucrative, according to Gronich. Most film entrepreneurs in these underdeveloped areas are usually local tradesmen.

Yanks usually have rented a print but reports have it that when prints are returned they show plenty of scratches. Gronich feels that a sort of MOPEX operation eventually, with two big installations each handling four of the majors, would be an ideal solution when a more direct and controlled distribution can be created in Africa.

Make It an Example

If it works in Africa, it could spread to other underdeveloped sectors of the world like Asia, the Near East and South America. This is now only in the study phase, but if Gronich's plan shows a rising income from new African territories it would be a plus factor in the general American Overseas picture. As Common Mart and rising national film production, with resulting quotas, threaten Yank offshore takes, this looks like the right track for evening out any eventual losses.

However, it is felt here that Yank foreign income is still high and lucrative and that this is just important insurance so necessary in all biz setups. Gronich makes it clear that this would be only in its early stages and primarily a service with a purpose to help these countries form a basis to make worldwide film distrib there worthwhile.

More O'Seas Visitors For Pitlochry's Legit

Pitlochry, Scotland, July 14.

Number of overseas visitors at the summer legit operation here, Pitlochry's Festival-in-the-Hills, is increasing. Many U.S. and Canadian tourists are accepting the theatre's invitation to "stay six days and see six plays." Boxoffice returns to date are keeping pace with last year when 57,000 attended the plays in the 500-seat semi-canvas theatre.

Pitlochry, in the heart of Scotland, is a rural town well off the beaten track. With its mountain situation, it has strong appeal for the tourist trade.

Open Conflict Between Two British Producers Assns. Over Quota Changes

London, July 21.

Open conflict between the two production associations in Britain over the proposed amendment of Quota Act is confirmed in the annual report of the Federation of British Film Makers, just published here. The FBFM reveals the terms of the representations it has made to the Board of Trade, answering submissions made by the British Film Producers Assn.

The Federation's criticism of the BFPA memorandum was mainly concerned with the proposed revision of section 25 of the Films Act, which was designed to impede Anglo-American co-operation. The Association's suggestion that all except one of the producers and directors of a film should be of British nationality or resident in the UK for the film to qualify as quota and for Eady was described by the Federation as a retrograde step.

There were some cases, not large in number, but generally of considerable importance, the FBFM noted, when finance would be available for a film with a foreign producer and a foreign director, but would not be available otherwise. The Federaton thought it was quite unreasonable that drastic action should be taken because of a handful of cases, particularly in view of agreements concerning the employment of foreign producers and directors between the Motion Picture Assn., the BFPA and the FBFM with the Assn of Cine, Television and Allied Technicians. "We simply cannot afford to drive away from our studios these important productions," the report adds.

The Federation also comments on the BFPA suggestions to avoid the practice of "guinea pig" producers and directors. It was understood that persons so employed should be required to make a statutory declaration that they had actually performed such duties. FBFM believes the extent of that practice had been greatly exaggerated and that insofar as it does exist the statutory declaration proposed would be very doubtful value and effectiveness.

Another BFPA proposal criticized by the Federaton was that the makers of a film should be required by the Act to bind themselves contractually to give the producers and directors full screen credits throughout the world in the capacities in which they had been ostensibly employed. The federation regarded the proposal as unenforceable and considered it unwise for an Act of Parliament to make such a requirement which could not be enforced when a foreign distributor decided on a change.

A further BFPA proposal was that all negatives and copies including those dispatched for distribution abroad should bear the legend "This is a British Film." Everyone would have sympathy with the motive behind the suggestion, the Federation commented, but it considered it neither practicable nor profitable.

MEXICO CLOAK-AND-DAGGER

Govt. Agents Reported on Trail Of Alleged Filmite Smugglers

Mexico City, July 14.

Real life cloak-and-dagger atmosphere is permeating the reel life in Mexico City. Film artists, directors, producers and sundry others in the industry are sneaking furtive looks backward as they go about their picture chores, wondering if they will surprise a shadow on their trail. Cops-and-robbers excitement has been caused by reports that a number of unspecified top rank actors and directors are suspected of being involved in the contraband traffic on a big scale.

Treasury and Attorney General's Office agents are supposedly trailing the "suspects" to pin them down to a lucrative contraband trade in wines and whiskeys, expensive fashions for men and women, perfumes, English woolens and other fabrics including a long list of so-called "luxury" goods now worth so much because of crippling ad valorem taxes that run 100% and more.

Hakim Forms Prod. Unit

Paris, July 14.

Andre Hakim, who has produced pix in the U. S. and England, now will become a producer in the country of origin. Along with associate Daniel Anselme, he has formed a production company, Sumar, which will roll its first pic here in September.

It is "L'Epouvantail" (The Scarecrow), to be directed by Louis Malle who made the controversial "Les Amants."

Mex Producers Singing Blues Over Prospect Of Cutback of Film Coin

Mexico City, July 14.

There are woebegone faces in the ranks of Mexican producers these days because confronted with a drastic cutback by the official Film Bank, the federal "angel" of the picture industry. While the bank is keeping secret its new financing operations, an official announcement is expected in the next few weeks.

However, indications of things to come have been given by Film Bank head Federico Heuer, a man who has been outspoken in his criticism of film quickies. It is learned that the bank will sharply curtail its financing of this sort of production and favor "quality" scripts as well as producers, directors and talent who have won their spurs nationally and internationally.

Further, the bank will be disposed to gamble with producers who show a serious intent to launch new faces on the screen. But always with the reservation that the new talent has acting ability and not just a pretty face and figure in case of female aspirants, or a so-so voice and good looks for males. More money will be available for pictures of serious worth for the national and international market.

With nothing official released as yet, film industry leaders are reserving comment. Only Raul de Anda, head of the Mexican Assn. of Film Producers said that imminent federal curtailment of financing can have serious repercussions. His private opinion is that the Film Bank has done nothing at all for the Mexican film industry in the past. While it is true, he added, that it has loaned money, it has done this at interest rates ranging from 10% to 12% annually, with de Anda terming this as "an excellent business venture for the government since it makes certain that producers present all sorts of guarantees which insure that it will not lose on its investments."

But as federal aid shrinks, de Anda said that "a dangerous moment for the film industry is approaching in which producers will not be able to produce motion pictures because all money required for this will have to be provided by them." And Mexican producers cannot raise the average of 1,000,000 pesos ($80,000) now required for a three to four-week shooting schedule.

Just what is in store for Mexican pictures as a result of the announced Film Bank policy of loaning less and less budget money, de Anda refused to say.

RUMANIAN MAESTRO'S DATES

Concerts In Mexico Follow 25 Down-Under

Mexico City, July 21.

Rumania's Constantin Silvestri (director of the Bucharest Opera Theatre and Ballet as well as the Radio Symphony Orchestra) has arrived here from Australia to direct five concerts with the National Symphony Orchestra, under the sponsorship of the National Institute of Fine Arts.

In Australia the conductor directed a series of 25 concerts in principal cities of the down under island.

This is Silvestri's first visit to Mexico, with his series of concerts ending Aug. 11. After that he returns to Europe for contracts in London and Paris.

Berlin Bears to Shorts

Berlin, July 21.

Four prizes — one Golden Bear and three Silver Bears—were given to short pix at the just terminated Berlin Film Festival. The highest trophy, the Golden Bear, went—as generally expected — to the Dutch film "Prijs de Zee" (Praise the Sea). This is documentary about Holland, excellently photographed.

Silver Bears went to the Danish "Summer Holidays of a Horse," the Indian "Rhadha and Krishna" and the German "Das Knalleidoskop." Of these three, the German item deserves foremost attention as it's strictly an offbeat creation. Producer Priebe just used pieces of broken glass and composed a variety of strange and comical figures of them. The result is an amusing piece of general appeal.

Cimex Exit

tors to go over contracts signed by the French subsidiary and also go over the books. Only when this work is completed will de Charnissay's resignation take effect.

Taking over provisional charge of Cimex, until a successor is appointed, is Luis Anciola, who was assistant manager. There is no criticism of Islas, and the industry actually is condemning him for his efforts to bring order out of chaos. But the fact remains that exploitation of Mexican pictures abroad was termed "deficient" on more than one occasion by disgruntled producers.

Whoever takes over as the new head of Cimex will face a hard task to put the distributorship on an even keel, and to iron out existing difficulties with producers. Most touted for the job are Miguel Aleman Jr., son of the ex-president, who has been working hard within the industry the past few years, and Jesus Ruiz Chavez, assistant manager at Clasa Films.

Aleman Jr. has considerable experience in the international field, engineered the celebration of the silver anniversary of Mexican pictures, is connected with the popularizing of the World Review of Film Festivals, which is to be an annual affair, has opened up the Japanese market, and has beat publicity drums for the Mexican industry in other parts of the world, too. Chavez, for his part, is a good production chief, is thoroughly versed in international publicity and has been one of the industry's executives agitating for a sound exploitation and publicity program for Mexican pix in the foreign field.

Visit to Locarno

tale of two youths hunting for their ideal women on a Saturday night in Paris beset by disillusion and faint hope, and "L'Ambitieuse" about a group of hardbitten people fighting over money and mines in Tahiti.

Italy sent the amusing "I Soliti Ignoti" "unknown Thieves", a clever takeoff on "Rififi" laced with wit and observation. It already copped a prize at San Sebastian last year. Also in was "Mogli Pericolose" (Dangerous Wives) a comedy-drama about marital troubles. Venezuela sent its Cannes prizewinning documentary on life among salt miners and their hopes for a better future in "Araya."

Czech entry was an amusing sketch called "Supernatural Things," the Poles sent a solidly made drama "The Farewells," and the Russians their version of Gogol's tale, made by the Yanks as "The Tempest" (Par), in "The Captain's Daughter." England sent the late Henry Cornelius' comedy "Next to No Time" with Kenneth More, Spain entered a drama with "A Glass of Whiskey," ditto Sweden with "Line Six," an affair between an aging man and a younger girl, and West Germany a tale of the "good" Germans during the last war in "Until Dawn."

There was also a retrospective showing of the early works of the now renowned Swedish director Ingmar Bergman.

Nat'l Film Finance Loses 1/2 Capital

Britain's Films Bank Admits Having Only About $1,000,000 Left in Kitty

London, July 21.

In the 10 years since it was set up by the Labor Government, the National Film Finance Corp. has lost one-half of its $22,400,000 working capital. Of the balance, some $8,500,000 has been advanced or committed and a further $1,680,000 has been invested in the new British Lion Co.

Although there is, in consequence, little over $1,000,000 in hard cash left in the kitty, there is no immediate prospect that the films bank will have severely to curtail its activities as it expects to receive back substantially more than $3,000,000 in repayments and interest for past loans during the current trading year. John Terry, managing director of the NFFC, in introducing the 10th annual report, expressed the hope that the funds would last as long as the statutory life of the Corporation—i.e. until 1967.

Losses sustained by the government banking agency during the last year at over $600,000 were substantially above the yearly average of around $340,000. But this Terry attributed to changing tastes of the public as well as the competition of tele.

Although the report reiterates the statement made at the end of last year that the "for sale" boards have been taken down in respect to British Lion, the following comment is included: "It nevertheless remains the opinion of the Corporation that this is an inappropriate investment for the Corporation and that ultimately the shares in British Lion should be held by suitable private interests."

Explaining that observation, Terry confirmed that there was definitely no immediate intention of putting British Lion back on the market, but the possibility of its return to private enterprise had to be considered as a future prospect. The decision to withdraw the company from the market was taken because of the disturbing effect it had on the management and staff. The report reveals that the next British Lion accounts for the year ended March 31 last will again show a loss, but this is likely to be smaller than the $930,000 loss incurred in the previous year.

The report comments on the method of finance used by the American companies in Britain, whereby the distributors' guarantee ranks pari passu with the end money for repayment, whereas most British companies and banks insist that the 70% distributors' advance gets preferential repayment and the "end money," usually provided through NFFC sources, has to take its place in the queue. Informal talks have been held with some British distributors and with the banks to see whether a change can be introduced.

The NFFC also hits out against the high cost of production, particularly in regard to star salaries. Terry said he would like to encourage a new kind of professional snobbery among stars. Instead of fighting to achieve the highest possible cash payment, he would like to see them settling for a modest cash down payment in the region of $14,000 per picture and accept a deferrment for, say, 25% of the profits.

Terry also wanted to see independent producers taking some financial risks themselves in the projects which they promoted. The Corporation considered it reasonable that in cases in which the NFFC was being asked to lend "risk money," the producer himself should contribute at least 5% of the cost.

Altogether, since it went into business, the NFFC has advanced almost $50,000,000 towards 475 features, 102 shorts and 441 vidpix. in the past year it loaned around $550,000 for telefilms.

Karachi Bans 4 Yank Pix

Karachi, July 14.

Four U. S. films have come under the axe of the Karachi Board of Film Censors having been declared unsuitable for public exhibition.

These pix are "Pork Chop Hill" (UA), "Warlock" (20th), "Bandit of Zhobe" (Col) and "Unconquerable Tibet," an U. S. Information Agency pic.

Callasthetically Lovable Is Report on Concert Of Diva in Holland

Amsterdam, July 21.

Holland saw a lovable, humble and honest Maria Meneghini Callas, not the much-publicized difficult diva of tantrums. The Holland Festival's artistic director Peter Diamand, friend and admirer of La Callas, had persuaded her to appear for one concert in Amsterdam's Concertgebouw, and she consented. Concertgebouw is the biggest hall available, with 2,000 seats and accoustics that suit the event, though the lighting equipment is inadequate.

The lighting system of the Concertgebouw was improved. During Callas' appearance the house lights would be dimmed, leaving the stage and Callas lighted by a dazzle-light. This stage device was blown-up to a scandal, as one of Callas' new machinations to act difficult, but the singer herself knew nothing of it, as she was vacationing in her villa at Lake Como, preparing herself for the concert learning of "the scandal" only from the newspapers. It meant much to her to appear in the Holland Festival and she had refused to sing extra performances in the London Covent Garden Opera House production of Cherubini's "Medea," in order to spare her voice and be able to be in topform at ther Dutch Holland debut.

In the light of two spotlights, specially installed for her appearance, following her down the 30 steps, the Dutch public gave her a 30 seconds ovation.

The evening proved to be an experience. She started acting and miming while the Concertgebouw Orchestre, conducted by her own conductor, Nicola Recigno, went through the introductions.

Audience including the Princesses Beatrix and Irene and many top Government officials, rewarded every aria with an ovation, and at the end of the evening an unheard-of eight minute hurricane of applause. Callas sang "Tu Che Invoco" from Spontini's "La Vestale," "Ernani!" from Giuseppe Verdi's "Ernani," "Tu Che Vanita Del Mondo Conoscesti" from Verdi's "Don Carlos," and concluded with the final scene from Vincenzo Bellini's "Il Pirata," finding herself in better form, and gaining confidence, as the evening went on.

Holland Festival press office had selected 100 foreign and Dutch critics to attend the concert; photographers were barred but for one who was admitted at the last moment and made photos during the concert, from his seat, working with soundless cameras—though in two places in the audience clicks were heard from amateurs who clandestinely had taken their cameras with them. Only after the performance press photographers were allowed to work. The neighborhood around the Concertgebouw swarmed with police, at foot and horse, to control the public.

'HERCULES' KARACHI RECORD

Karachi, July 14.

"Hercules" has set an all-time boxoffice record for foreign pix (except Indian) in its 11-week run here. Film has grossed (excluding entertainment tax) approximately $25,000.

It has also broken another record since this is the first foreign pic (excluding Indian) to play first-run in any Pakistani city for 11 weeks. Pic also is enjoying a smash run at Lahore, another major key in this country.

Mutual Theatrical Corp. has been authorized to conduct an entertainment business in New York. Capital stock is $4,500. Directors are: Morris C. Lipsen, Sylvia Ross, J. G. Briton. Milton A. Morrison is attorney.

Buff Big; 'Hole' Lively $15,000, 'Hercules' 12G

Buffalo, July 21.

Although there is only one newcomer this round, strong holdover fare makes the boxoffice pictures very solid here. "Hole In Head" is rated huge at the Teck. Elsewhere it's entirely h.o. "Anatomy of a Murder" and "Nun's Story," both in second sessions are great. "Hercules" looms powerful at Paramount in second but "Sleeping Beauty" is not so good in second at Lafayette.

Estimates for This Week

Buffalo (Loew) (3,500; 70-$1.25)—"Horse Soldiers" (UA) (3d wk). Slow $5,000. Last week, $6,400.

Center (AB-PT) (3,000; 70-$1)—"Nun's Story" (2d wk). Lofty $13,000 or near. Last week, $18,000.

Lafayette (Basil) (3,000; 60-$1)—"Sleeping Beauty" (BV) (2d wk). Dull $4,500. Last week, $7,000.

Paramount (AB-PT) (3,000; 70-$1)—"Hercules" (WB) and "Island of Lost Women" (WB) (2d wk). Powerful $12,000. Last week, $23,000.

Teck (Loew) (1,200; 70-$1.25)—"Hole in Head" (UA). Huge $15,000. Last week, "World, Flesh, Devil" (M-G) (2d wk), $2,000.

Cinema (Martina) (450; 70-$1)—"This Earth Is Mine" (U) (2d wk). Neat $1,800. Last week, $2,500.

'Hercules' Brisk 17G, Indpls.; 'Hole' Hot 12G

Indianapolis, July 21.

Promotion has paid off on "Hercules," which is drawing big crowds to lead first-runners here this stanza. "Hole In Head" is equally smash at Loew's, and will hold. "Last Train From Gun Hill" at Circle looms nice. "Nun's Story" in second week at Keith's also is sturdy.

Estimates for This Week

Ozoner Cops Not Needed

Concord, N.H., July 21.

Senate Bill 163, which would have required drive-in theatres to hire full-time police officers, has been killed by the upper branch of the New Hampshire Legislature here.

The legislation reportedly was introduced as the result of a "feud" in the town of Newington.

A chief opponent of the bill was Mayor Melvin Morrison of Dover, himself an ozoner operator.

BENNIE BERGER PANS BIG AFTER-FIVE HIKE

Minneapolis, July 21.

At a time when it has been the leading local loop theatres' custom to boost admissions from their regular and standard after-5 p.m. $1 to $1.25 or $1.45 for nearly every important picture, circuit owner Bennie Berger has issued a declaration of aversion to such policy.

And fitting the deed to the word for "North by Northwest" at his Gopher here currently he's charging only the regular $1, although he points out that other local exhibitors have been tilting the ante for pictures of this stature. Currently, for example, "The Nun's Story" and "The Horse Soldiers" have a $1.45 and $1.25 scale, respectively, instead of the regular $1 at their theatres. "Love Is My Profession" and "Darby O'Gill and the Little People" also are charging $1.25, but at houses where that's regular.

With four different circuits having loop firstrun houses here there's stiff competitive bidding for nearly every "important" picture and many of the bids have been including offers to boost admissions as an added inducement for landing the attraction.

"The Gopher never has and never will commit itself in any of its bids relative to admission," declares Berger who won "North by Northwest" on such competitive bids without doing so.

"I believe that one of the reasons why exhibition has had some difficulties the past few years is that its trend has been away from entertainment for the masses. With living costs so high and still rising it behooves the film industry to hold down theatre prices to the utmost extent possible.

"Besides, in my opinion, $1 is a high enough admission for 99% of pictures that have been released the past few years and that now are coming on to the market. And it has been hurtful to exhibition and the entire industry, I feel certain, to have been charging more than that in Minneapolis for a considerable percentage of them —a percentage that has been rising. I'm sure it has driven a substantial number of people away from the theatres—many of whom would like to attend at least occasionally, but can't afford to do so."

Sam Goldwyn Jr. Among Pros Addressing Scripters

Athens, Ga., July 21.

Sam Goldwyn Jr. will be among the speakers at the third annual Southern Writers Conference to be held here at the week of Aug. 2 at the Georgia Center for Continuing Education. Workshop is sponsored by the U. of Georgia.

This year cash prizes and literary fellowships will be awarded four outstanding manuscripts submitted by registrants before July 21. The workship is open to anyone interested in writing.

Other speakers will be Charles L. Ferguson, a senior editor of Reader's Digest; Daniel M. Hobart, veep of Curtis Publishing; Kennett Rawson, president of David McKay Co. and Annie Laurie Williams, N. Y. literary agent.

Susan Hayward, winner of this year's Academy Award and a resident of Carrollton, Ga., will be guest at a reception to be given by University President and Mrs. O. C. Aderhold.

John Selby, novelist and editor will conduct a fiction workshop. Emmett Rogers, theatrical producer, will be in charge of stage, film, radio and television writing. James Playsted Wood, of the Saturday Evening Post, will head the nonfiction class; and Edd Winfield Parks, poet and critic, will conduct the poetry classes.

Still Argue Over French Aid Law

Paris, July 21.

Since the Minister of Culture, Andre Malraux, announced the aims and workings of the new Film Aid Law, governmental and industry officials have been meeting to define the exact workings of the new Law and make amendments before it is put into effect next January. Main aims are to air all grudges and try to reach a modus vivendi. But the government seems firm in its intention of making the industry practically self-sufficient in eight years.

First point under discussion is the sticky problem of the cutting out of all exhib aid, after June, 1961, which has caused the greatest industry outcry against the Law. About $5,000,000 in Aid coin will finish off exhib handouts for house renovation till June of 1961. However, most theatres have utilized their funds for this aim and counted on handouts to cover fluctuating filmgoing. Government's promise to slowly lower the amount of dough taken from admission taxes, by reducing it over the period, may alleviate this somewhat by leaving the remainder with exhibs.

Another drawback, in industry eyes, is the splitting of collected Aid money, on admissions and on film release taxes, between the Ministries of Finance and Culture. Antoine Pinay, heading Finance, is against subsidy, and the industry feels they may lose out on this aspect of aid monies too.

Industry is also worried about Aid on the local and foreign gross sans taxes, which will be slowly lowered over the eight years. Since income fluctuates, producers feel they may find themselves in hock before they can reach the point where they can take advantage of low interest loans which will be given by government guarantee from national credit coffers or as bank guarantees.

Sources have it that the Centre Du Cinema may become primarily a film directorial arm of the Ministry of Culture sans the powers it held when it controlled Aid strings. Quality handouts for unusual prestige pix will also be handled outside the CDC. Coin for newsreel aid, for technical needs, for French film hypo orgs both here and abroad, and for small exhibs, will still continue.

Yanks, now negotiating for a new French-American Film Accord (old one ran out this month), feel a more self-sufficient French industry may mean more need of Yank pix and more visas over the present 110. This summer's industry-government huddles will tell the story on the workings of the new Aid Law and the Yank bargaining position here.

Williams' play "Orpheus Descending," is being shot at the Gold Medal Studios in the Bronx after having completed location work at Milton, N.Y. The screenplay was written by Williams in collaboration with Meade Roberts. Williams, according to Jurow, has been almost a daily visitor to the set and has been helpful in offering suggestions as the production proceeds.

Production started at the end of June and it's the aim of the young production team to have the film ready for release early in December. Production winds up in mid-August. Director Sidney Lumet, who has specialized in shooting pictures in New York, is cutting the film as he goes along. In addition, the producers already have Kenneth Hopkins working on the musical score. One of the songs Hopkins has completed will have lyrics by Williams.

Despite the southern setting of the film, Jurow and Shepherd said they were able to duplicate the atmosphere at Milton, N.Y. They said they selected New York, for both the location and the interiors, because of the availability of the creative talent involved, including director Lumet, cameraman Boris Kaufman and associate producer George Justin. Latter is one of the foremost experts in assembling production units in the east.

THE SUMMER'S BIG BLOCKBUSTER FROM ALLIED ARTISTS

Chi Public Markedly Insisting Upon Viewing 'Anatomy's' Start; 'Six Widows' Help Boxoffice

Chicago, July 21.

Although it's a smash here, in part due to the "Six Widows" censor noise that greeted it, Columbia's "Anatomy of a Murder" has created a curious pattern at the Woods boxoffice. Almost all who see it do so from the pic's start, and it's only for this reason, claims house manager Jack Belasco, that it hasn't set a new record for the Eddie Silverman flagship.

"They (the public) know it's a courtroom picture," says Belasco, "and they want continuity." Same situation developed here when "Witness for the Prosecution" (UA), which also featured a trial, played downtown. What the trade puzzles about, though, is that the pattern seems to have an affinity mainly for the courtroom features, but not necessarily all suspensers. Metro's "North by Northwest," for example, is meeting with much less of the we'll-see-it-from-the-start attitude in its preem date here, though as a mystery it would seem a logical recipient of such resistance.

Problem faced by the Woods, incidentally, reportedly is duplicated at the Criterion, N.Y., and the United Artists, Detroit, where "Aantomy" is likewise torrid in both situations. The matter would probably be less vexing were it not for the picture's long two hours and 40 minutes running time.

As Belasco dopes it, it's a case of the public having become educated in large numbers to seeing films from their beginning, especially those pix with heavy plotting. This education, the manager contends, is due chiefly to the practice by many theatres of posting a schedule of starting times in the ticket booth and in their display ads (a practice, he points out, the Woods has never engaged in). It can, he avers, only hurt the grind situation.

New Mexico Locations

Albuquerque, July 21.

Cast and crew of 20th Fox' "Journey to the Center of the Earth" recently spent several days filming scenes in big Carlsbad Caverns in southeastern New Mexico. Based on Jules Verne story it was shot in caverns entirely at night, so as to not upset regular summer schedule for tourists.

Commencing Aug. 1, cast and crew of tv's "Rawhide" is due to arrive in Tucumcari, in eastern New Mexico, for six weeks shooting on local ranches in area.

Gerlach Realty Projects

Albuquerque, July 21.

Charles R. Gerlach, former VARIETY Hollywood advertising official, has moved to Albuquerque and last week started construction on a new $400,000 luxury apartment building.

The 25-unit structure, of brick and frame, will surround a patio containing lawns and a swimming pool. Futurama Corp. of Albuquerque designed the building for Gerlach and is handling the actual construction work.

Rents are expected to range from $150 to $275 per month for units in the new building, it was announced. The rents are slightly above average for the city.

Gerlach also is owner of the Bel Air Motel on Highway 66 in Albuquerque.

BEN GRADUS PLOTTING ONE AS THEATRICAL

Ben Gradus, producer-director of business and industrial films, is planning to shoot a theatrical feature film in conjunction with Martin Ransohoff, executive producer of Filmways Inc., a business film firm. Gradus, who made "Crowded Paradise," with Hume Cronyn and Nancy Kelly, in 1956, has completed the shooting script of his new project.

It is described as a psychological thriller based on Fan Nichols novel, "The Loner," which Simon & Schuster published. Shooting is planned for the early spring in New York under the Filmways banner.

'YOU'RE JUST LOCAL YOKELS'

Detroit Exhib on Top Court Angle Will Show 'Lady'

Detroit, July 21.

Al Dezel, owner of the Surf and Coronet arties, has notified police authorities here that he will screen an uncut version of "Lady Chatterley's Lover" day-and-date Thursday (23) despite objections of the Police Censor Bureau. The bureau had ordered 800 feet of dialogue clipped.

Through his lawyer, Dezel notified the police commissioner and the City's Corporation Counsel that since he believed the Supreme Court decision overruled any local police censor action, he would insist on screening the uncut version.

Bateman Coast Manager For New Inter Continent

Los Angeles, July 21.

Francis A. Bateman has been appointed Pacific Coast district sales manager of newly-formed Inter Continental Releasing Organization, prexied by James R. Grainger. Territories will be L.A., Frisco, Portland, Seattle, Denver and Salt Lake City, the same as he supervised while holding down similar post with Republic Pictures for 19 years.

First release will be "Jet Over the Atlantic," latest production by Benedict Bogeaus, partnered in ICRO with Grainger.

Maryland Forms New TOA Unit

Washington, July 21.

A Maryland chapter of Theatre Owners of America has been organized, with 60-odd theatres represented and with John Broumas of Chevy Chase, Md., a Washington suburb, as prexy.

Broumas is general manager of Trans - America Theatres with eight houses in Maryland, Virginia and Pennsylvania; prez of Queen City Enterprises owning two Maryland theatres; and in association with others owning Washington's Georgetown Theatre.

Other officers are George A. Brehm, Baltimore, v.p.; T. T. Vogel, Riverdale, secretary; Douglas Connellee, Elkton, treasurer; Art Shaftel, Takoma Park, assistant treasurer; and Sam Mellits, Denton, Jack Frutchman, Baltimore, and William Fisher, Baltimore, board members.

Florida Meets Oct. 4-6

Jacksonville, Fla., July 21.

Motion Pictures Exhibitors of Florida, a Theatre Owners of America affiliate, will hold its annual convention at the Robert Meyer Hotel here Oct. 4-6, prexy Arnold Haynes reported.

Arvin Rothchild, of National Theatre Enterprises here, is chairman of convention arrangements.

Montana Rallies Sept. 29

Livingston, Mont., July 22.

Montana Theatre Assn. will hold its semi-annual conference and convention at the Placer Hotel in Helena Sept. 29-30, according to president Finus L. Lewis.

Agenda will include planning for the first joint meeting of the Mountain States Theatres Assn. and the Montana unit in March of 1960 at Salt Lake City, at which theatremen from Utah, Idaho and Montana will participate.

Pathe's Scholastics

New and voluminous library of educational film subjects will be unveiled by Pathe News at the National Audio-Visual convention in Chicago July 25. Some 103 subjects, running between five and 11 minutes, will be offered.

Reels are selected from the Pathe News Magazine of the Screen and supplemented by Pathe's newsfilm library. Project is under the direction of Robert Kranz, former exec of National Telefilm Home Movie.

Included in the groupings of the films are America's Heritage, National History, Science, The Arts, U.S. Government, Personal Histories, Far Away Places, Transportation, etc. Shorties are sold to the schools at a flat rate and on an outright sale basis.

Exhibs Bid to Neuberger

Portland, Ore., July 21.

Sen. Richard L. Neuberger, D., Ore., has been invited to address the annual convention of the Oregon Theatre Owners Assn., a Theatre Owners of America affiliate, at its annual convention at the Benson Hotel here on Aug. 11.

According to Albert Forman, president of the unit, the two-day program will be tied in with Oregon's 1959 Centennial Celebration and it's hoped that the premiere of 20th-Fox's "The Oregon Trail" will be staged at the same time.

The convention will be followed by the group's annual golf tournament and fund raising drive for the Will Rogers Memorial Hospital.

'Big Picture' Concept Now Enthroned, Staffers Told At Chicago Meeting

Chicago, July 21.

Universal panjandrums assembled here last week to size things up and liked what they saw. "Imitation of Life" and "This Earth is Mine," they said, have given Universal a "new look." There seemed nothing counterfeit in prexy Milton R. Rackmil's statement to his sales execs that the studio's "transition period" is behind it and the company eyes the future "with continued optimism and realistic confidence."

Pep-talking topper indicated U is firmly linked now to the big picture concept, embracing major literary properties, top stars, directors, producers—and, of course, budgets. The biggest of those in preparation or already completed is "Spartacus," a $9,000,000 coproduction with Bryna, and due for release next spring. In October the studio will bring out Ross Hunter's "Pillow Talk" (Rock Hudson-Doris Day starrer), and in November "Operation Petticoat" (with Cary Grant and Tony Curtis).

As the slate would indicate, the Chi happy talk was not without substance. And added evidence of U's zest for adrenalin was the recent inking of Marlon Brando to star in "The Ugly American," based on the hot-sellng novel of feckless American diplomacy. Company has also completed a deal, Rackmil disclosed, for John Houston to produce Kipling's "The Man Who Would be King," and Rackmil said dickering is in progress for several other top books as star vehicles.

Says Henry H.

Henry H. Martin, studio's general sales chief, said "Imitation's" successful promotion pattern will be the blueprint for selling future U blockbusters. Initially, the technique (calling for intensive re-sell at the early sub-runs level) will be applied to "Pillow" and "Operation," with Rackmil adding a prediction that both pix would emulate "Imitation's" exciting boxoffice.

Martin also told his minions of a deal with Britain's Rank that will have U handling U.S. release (in November) of "Sapphire," current in London. Slated for December is "Snow Queen," based on the Hans Christian Andersen fable. And just into production s "The Private Lives of Adam and Eve" with Mickey Rooney.

The Universal word, said Martin, is quality instead of quantity. Studio's "new look," its policy henceforth, he added, is to distribute and merchandise "on the premise that there's a great market for outstanding entertainment and this kind of entertainment, costly in production, big in cast and story values, deserves planned release and long pre-sell."

Wald Pushing Seven

Hollywood, July 21.

Jerry Wald, who will put a total of seven films before the cameras by end of the year, will have four of these in 20th-Fox release before start of 1960. Quartet includes "The Best of Everything," "The Beloved Infidel" and "Hound Dog Man," all now shooting, and "The Story on Page One," to roll first week in August.

Remaining trio, to be made under Wald's Company of Artists' banner, include "The Billionaire," "Sons and Lovers" and "Wild in the Country."

PENNSY'S NEW LAW, IF PASSED, REAL CRIMPER

The new motion picture censorship bill, now before the legislature in Pennsylvania has been tagged an impractical and unjust measure by the Council of Motion Picture Organizations. COMPO issued a long list of objections to the bill, noting above all that all theatres in the state "would be in constant danger of having to go dark for long periods" if the bill should pass.

The Council called exemption of television from censorship "viciously discriminatory" and took the odd position that, while no picture has ever incited anyone to crime, "it is notorious that children stay glued to television sets in all their spare time, watching original television stories that certainly incite to crime."

The bill of the Pennsylvania State Senate, passed after the State Supreme Court unequivocally ruled illegal and unconstitutional the present censorship statute, would permit the banning of pictures if they are either obscene or incite to crime. Three-men censor board would be created with the power to ban pictures after their initial exhibition. Board also could rate films unsuitable for children.

COMPO's view is that this procedure, which in effect no longer would constitute pre-release censorship, might leave a house dark for an indeterminate period. It wondered what would happen if two pictures, the original and its replacements, were to be banned after their first showing. Also, noted COMPO, "The bill would make it infinitely more difficult for any drive-in theatre to operate as disapproval of a picture for persons under 17 would make it impossible for married couples to take their small children with them."

Quite apart from that, COMPO reminded that the enforcement of classification is difficult and the fines provided in the bill for admitting a person under 17 to a film classified only for adults are much too tough. An exhibitor could be sentenced to pay a fine of up to $1,000 and serve six months in jail. "How any exhibitor can determine the age of a boy or girl without examining their birth certificate is beyond explanation," the COMPO analysis held.

It noted, too, the difficulties of putting on advertising campaigns in view of the uncertainties of the censorship arrangement, and pointed to the section of the bill that prohibits the advertising of a picture that has been banned. "Newspapers carrying advertising of pictures could be innocently put in jeopardy of a fine or jail," the Council complained.

But it reserved its greatest outrage for discrimination between films and tv. Whereas original tv stories incite to crime, "it is equally noteworthy that old pictures shown on television do not incite to crime," the comment read. "An outrageous example of the discrimination in motion picture censorship is the fact that in Maryland the state movie censors cut the picture 'Forever Amber' to ribbons, but the picture was later shown over television in thousands of Maryland homes without a single scene or word eliminated."

COMPO didn't cite any authority for either its charge that tv incited to crime, not its rejection of the suggestion that films did not.

The Hub of the Rub

Disclosure last week of the "who's got the 'Fabulous Fifties'?" NBC vs. CBS rhubarb apparently is only one incident in a round-robin program jockeying that, to hear them tell it, has created no little bitterness between Hubbell Robinson Jr. and his ex-bosses at CBS-TV. In his new role as an independent producer masterminding the Ford specials on NBC-TV, Robinson announced "Fabulous Fifties" as the Ford curtain raiser on NBC with Jess Oppenheimer producing; Dore Schary as consultant. On the other hand CBS said that the same idea and same title were blueprinted as a "GE Theatre" special for CBS-TV next season with the selfsame Robinson in his capacity of exec veepee in charge of CBS-TV programming sanctioning the enterprise.

Apparently the initial Robinson vs. CBS miff was precipitated by the announcement that "Hubbell's got Ingrid Bergman." That's unquestionably a coup for the Ford series. But the CBS brass says the signaturing of Bergman for CBS was on the Robinson agenda only a few days prior to his resigning his CBS berth. Columbia tells it this way: Robinson sent Tom Ryan, his programming legal aide, to Europe to pact Miss Bergman. Robinson quit his job to set up the Ford series, took Ryan with him and within a couple of weeks, had Bergman tied up for Ford.

Whatever the which way, one thing's for sure—that gap in the CBS-Robinson relations grows wider and wider.

When Is a Special Not a Special? Either Way, NBC & CBS Are Loaded

CBS-TV is giving NBC-TV a run for its money on "specials" for the coming season. For awhile it looked like NBC would win the "numbers game" with better than 200 specials listed for 1959-1960, while a month ago, it appeared as if CBS-TV wasn't going to get many more than 60 on the boards. But now that the full count is in, and all departments at CBS have been heard from, that web will have a total of 185 tv specials (maybe more) next season.

In addition to 69 entertainment shows already scheduled by day and time and 55 more entertainment shows which will be given time periods before long, CBS-TV also has 43 public affairs and news specials and 19 sports specials, including the Summer Olympics coverage from Italy.

Remaining to be skedded are two Phil Silvers specials, four Jackie Gleason specials, five Westinghouse Lucille Ball-Desi Arnaz specials, four additional (to those slotted) Arthur Godfrey specials, perhaps as many as three additional "Woman!" specials, six "The Great Challenge" specials, eight "Playhouse 90" specials, five additional Sid Caesar specials, four

Block Drug Into ABC-TV Daytime

Block Drug Co. has lined up as the first new client for ABC-TV's "Operation Daybreak" for the fall, plunking down a $750,000 deal for sponsorship of four one-quarter hours.

Deal was credited to ABC-TV's climbing Nielsen share of audience curve in its 2 to 4 p.m. programming bloc. Web's share of audience has grown from a 13.3 in October to a 20.6 in the latest June Nielsen. Renewals on current sponsors are not due for awhile. The 2 to 4 bloc is about 85% sold out at present.

Also General Foods and Toni, current sponsors, extended their spread for another quarter hour each. Ex-Lax is another recent addition—marking ExLax's first network buy—buying a quarter hour.

There have been programming reshuffles since "Operation Daybreak" started on the web last October. "Liberace" and "Chance for Romance" were yanked, with "Day in Court" and "Music Bingo" substituted and the "Gale Storm Show" added. Present combo, which also includes "Beat the Clock" and "Who Do You Trust," looks strong in comparison.

The 12 to 1:30 slot in the fall will include "Restless Gun" and the "Bob Cummings Show" stripped across the board. The Block Drug buy includes the 12 to 1:30 period, the commercially weakest to date of "Operation Daybreak."

Squaw Valley's Squawk Forcing Olympic Airing?

Decision by ABC-TV not to air the 1960 Winter Olympics has, almost needless to say, got the American Olympic Committee from Squaw Valley, Calif., hoppin' mad. But there is also the reaction of the American public for television at large to contend with. Result is that maybe the games will be aired after all—by somebody.

Early reaction from some civic quarters is that failure on the part of ABC-TV or all three U.S. tv webs to air the Winter Olympics will act unfavorably on U.S. prestige. This, because the 1960 events from California constitute an important international event and, moreover, it would have marked the first time an American Olympic event was carried on video. Add to this the fact that the Italian-based summer Olympics are assured a berth on CBS-TV.

ABC decided not to carry the Squaw Valley show, which would have cost somewhere around $1,000,000, because of the cost itself and, too, because the network was under the erroneous impression that a commitment for Squaw Valley would also give it a crack

Warner Lambert Buys 'Gale Storm Show'

Warner Lambert has bought full sponsorship of the "Gale Storm Show" on ABC-TV, now slated for the fall at 7:30 on Thursdays, as a lead-in to the "Donna Reed Show."

The buy is a 26-week deal, with the usual options. Warner Lambert product which primarily will be sponsored on the show is Listerine.

FUTURE DEPENDS ON OPTION TIME

By GEORGE ROSEN

"Take our option time away" say the networks, "and you might as well close up the tv networks." Those are meaningful, even fateful words, though perhaps carried a point or two beyond credulity. But, in the wake of the "passing the buck" script that was written into the recent agency-studded Foley Square Frolics and the FCC-inspired look-see at network practices, it's a good time to do some hard reappraising of what all the shouting is about on the long pending issue of option time.

Without going off the deep end in copping a plea for the "poor networks," who happen to be turning a pretty penny in profits (and with expectations of peak earnings in '59-'60), it nonetheless must be conceded that were Washington to divest the networks of the lucrative option time periods which in the aggregate tote up to millions of dollars in revenues, a good deal of the vitality would go out of television.

Option time, the networks will argue, isn't about whether the handful of unaffiliated television stations can cut their affiliated competitors across the street down to size, or which set of legal eagles reads the antitrust laws the right way. Nor is it about whether the film syndicators are going to get a bigger piece of the billion dollars television advertising pie (although this is a facet that can't easily be shunted aside, for once you take the fringe periods away from the networks and return them to the stations it's a cinch that the syndicators will be in there for the kill).

The Tie That Binds

What option time is about, the webs hasten to add, is whether the tv networks, as that term is ordinarily understood, can continue to exist at all as the vital operations they've been in the past. Maybe option time is a lawyer's delight, and there are a lot of legal technicalities; but the long and short of it isn't a matter of legalistics and contract mumbo-jumbo; rather it's a matter of practical common sense. Since a network is more than 150 separately owned tv stations scattered throughout the country, it would be no easy job figuring out how those stations could be put together as a network without option time, something to unify these 150-plus stations into an entity.

The question has frequently been asked: "Who needs networks?" It's true that the networks are big and conspicuous and so successful that they're fair targets. Their transgressions can be (and have been) whoppers, frequently justifying the dailies having a

Frankenheimer's CBS Waiver Nix

NBC-TV had high hopes of teeing off its new Sunday night 8 to 9 hour drama series with John Frankenheimer as producer-director. It won't happen, however, because CBS, to whom Frankenheimer is still contractually committed (he's out of the "Playhouse 90" stable), has refused to give him a waiver.

NBC had originally hoped that this would be a mere formality on the part of the William Morris office. But because of the CBS refusal, the Frankenheimer—NBC pacting for the Sunday night series is somewhat up in the air. He may move into the series at a later date or shift over to the Tuesday night Ford series on NBC.

The Sunday night shows, incidentally, are being budgeted at $125,000 each.

Firestone, at FCC Hearing, Accuses NBC & ABC of Runout on 'Voice'

Washington, July 21.

NBC and ABC were pictured as backtracking on previous assurances in their treatment of "Voice of Firestone" as the FCC's programming inquiry resumed here today (Tues.).

Trials and tribulations of the ill-fated program were recited in detail by Firestone advertising director Charles B. Ryan who, despite his testimony, insisted he was appearing under subpoena and had no desire to "put the networks on the spot."

Ashbrook Bryant, FCC attorney in charge of the probe, at the outset stressed that the commission at present was making no assertions on the celebrated case, but merely wants to "explore the problem and get the facts on the record."

Ryan, under questioning, was led through "The Voice's" happy years with NBC starting in 1929 until 1954 when then prexy Sylvester L. Weaver Jr. informed the tire and rubber company that its traditional 8:30 to 9 p.m. Monday time slot was being preempted to make room for the Sid Caesar show.

The Firestone exec said this came as "most surprising" because several years earlier Weaver's predecessor, Niles Trammell, and other web officials, had spoken so glowingly of the program and urged its continuance. Ryan made plain that he regarded such assurances of web support of the program as binding, despite the change in officers. In subsequent conversations with Weaver and Robert Sarnoff, Ryan related, he was told that "The Voice" was being "clobbered" by Arthur Godfrey on CBS and the low rating made it impossible for the network to sell the 9 to 9:30 p.m. period following "The Voice" slotting.

NBC refused, Ryan testified, to make any other time available that was suitable to Firestone. Ryan said he was "shocked, astonished and surprised" that NBC would "treat its oldest customer in that

'Lineup' Formats 'Sex With Supper' In Hour Version

"Lineup" is going to get "some sex at 7:30" for its expanded hour version during the 1959-1960 season on CBS-TV. Tom Tully, whose been with the detective hour since its start some seasons ago, is going to be written out and will be replaced by two younger actors and probably a "sexy secretary."

It shapes up as though CBS, which reportedly hasn't been too wild about the initial segments of the new hourlong form, plans to play it like "77 Sunset Strip," a rival ABC-TV show. Unique aspect of the deal is, unlike the later-in-the-evening "Strip," "Lineup" is planned for a 7:30 spot, when the kiddies are still around to learn a thing or two.

New leads will be actors Floyd Simmons and Bill Leslie as young cops. Warner Anderson, Tully's sidekick, will become something akin to a chief of detectives or a commissioner, a stationary character to whom the new men report. They'll be fronted, while Anderson's new role sizes up as a background piece, with the "sexy secretary" working for him, obviously as a foil for the boys.

Two or three hours are already in the can with Tully and Anderson fronting. They along, with the others (up to five) will be spotted irregularly throughout the season, with the departing Tully getting "guest star" billing.

'Devil & Daniel Webster' Shows Up on Both NBC, CBS Rosters for '59-'60

CBS and NBC have scheduled rival versions of Stephen Vincent Benet's "The Devil and Daniel Webster" for next season. CBS will present a 90-minute musical version of the short story on "Playhouse 90" in the fall, with John Houseman producing. NBC has pencilled in a straight dramatic version for its hourlong Sunday drama series on Feb. 14, with Rexall as sponsor and David Susskind's Talent Associates the probable producer.

Houseman version is the one with music by contemporary opera composer Douglas Moore ("The Ballad of Baby Doe") which Houseman directed on Broadway in 1939. It was revived this spring by the New York City Center Opera Co. as a highlight of its American Opera series. Benet wrote the libretto for the musical from his own short story.

"Devil" is one of six "Playhouse 90" shows Houseman will produce for CBS next season. He's currently serving as producer and artistic director of the American Shakespeare Festival & Academy at Stratford, Conn.

NBC Vets 'Retired' In Streamlining

About a dozen technical supervisors are being laid off in a "streamlining" move by NBC-TV. The majority of them are 20 and 30-year veterans, and the network, in affecting the economies during the past few days, declares that it is attempting to work out an early retirement plan for them.

The network said it is trying to find other company jobs for the few remaining supervisors who are being laid off. What successes have been made so far toward this end were not disclosed.

Originally, it was reported that four times the number actually dismissed was being let go. But NBC insists that 11 men at the most are being removed, with all of the old-timers getting some kind of cash settlement.

'PLAINSMAN' GETS THURS. NBC-TV NOD

"Tales of the Plainsman," a half-hour telefilm stanza with Michael Ansara essaying an Indian marshal, is set for a 26-week ride on NBC-TV in the network's 7:30 time slot. Until last week, web was hot after another show called "Whispering Smith" for the same anchorage.

There are no sponsors for "Plainsman" yet, but it goes on the air just the same on Oct. 1. NBC closed the pact with Four Star-Sussex. "Plainsman" pilot was shown last season on ABC-TV's "Rifleman," also produced by Four Star-Sussex.

Susskind Doesn't Like the Way M-G Lion Roars on Use of Properties

Talent Associates has been having its troubles clearing rights for televersions of old Metro feature films. Al Levy and David Susskind of TA, when on the Coast recently, were reportedly promised by the major their choice of any or all of 16 Metro properties but, when it got down to details and straightening out rights, it seems that the tv production firm is limited, for at least the present, to the use of six former MGM theatrical films as tv specials next season.

Originally, there was reliable talk that as many as nine former Metro pictures would be adapted next season for television. Situation on rights may have had a bearing on the fact that only five will be used next season under the joint banner of Westclox and General Mills, plus one for Westclox alone.

First of the so-called Metro specials, which are being spread across all three networks, will be "Bells of St. Mary's," produced by Leo McCarey for RKO, not Metro. That'll be Oct. 27 on CBS. Rest of the sked is all-Metro, but the sponsors have chosen to cluster the shows under the banner of "Special Tonight," rather than use the Metro name prominently.

Sked reads: "Philadelphia Story," Dec. 7, NBC; "Mrs. Miniver" or "Valley of Decision" (depending, again, on availability of the property), Jan. 7, CBS; "Ninotchka," Feb. 19, ABC; "Citadel," March 20, CBS, and "Valley of Decision." April 20 on ABC. Westclox will sponsor solo "Miracle on 34th St.," the remaining Metro, on Nov. 27 on NBC.

Incidentally, the Levy-Susskind combine will run up against itself the night of Dec. 4 between 7:30 and 9, when on CBS it produces "Oliver Twist" for DuPont. Same night, between 8:30 and 9:30, on NBC, TA will be doing one of the Art Carney specials.

'Body & Soul' As DuPont TV Bow

David Susskind of Talent Associates has properties lined up for five of the nine DuPont Shows of the month slated for telecasting over CBS-TV.

First of the DuPont specials will be "Body and Soul.," an Eliot Asinof adaptation of the screen play that starred John Garfield. It will be seen Monday, Sept. 28 from 8:30 to 10 p.m. Susskind has not yet cast the hourlong drama.

"Fallen Idol" is set for Wednesday, Oct. 14 at 8:30 p.m. Sinclair Lewis novel, "Arrowsmith" will get a telecasting on Monday, Nov. 9 at 9:30 p.m. and "Oliver Twist" is set for Friday, Dec. 4 at 7:30 p.m. and "Ethan Frome" on Sunday, Jan. 17 at 9:30 p.m.

No DuPont properties are sealed for Feb. 11, March 5, April 7 and May 3.

U. S. Steel will salute the American automotive industry with Sid Caesar in the lead on Wednesday, Oct. 21 at 10 p.m.

Mort Wagner Points To New 50G Home To Refute Sale of KYA

San Francisco, July 21.

To reports, published in last week's VARIETY, that the Bartell-owned KYA radio station was on the block, manager Mort Wagner, exec v.p. of the Bartell stations, says "would I be buying a new $50,000 home in Frisco if we're blowing the station?"

Wagner says the station never had it so good, particularly on the billings front, and points to some happy Pulse ratings (third place); second place in other rating areas and even first place on some quarter hours. Wagner in fact signals out Frisco and the New York market (WOV) as key Bartell operating areas.

G&T's 3 Out of 10

Goodson & Todman shows cop three of the Top 10 in the July 1-7 Trendex report, "What's My Line?" and "I've Got A Secret" holding down the first and third positions and "Price Is Right" in the No. 10 spot.

Here's the lineup:

What's My Line, CBS	21.7
This Is Your Life, NBC	20.7
I've Got Secret, CBS	20.4
You Bet Your Life, NBC	20.3
77 Sunset Strip, ABC	19.9
Desilu Playhouse, CBS	19.7
U. S. Steel Hour, CBS	18.9
Bat Masterson, NBC	18.9
Wagon Train, NBC	18.8
Price Is Right, NBC	18.7

Lee Pogostin Just Nuts About People

"People Kill People Sometimes" is going to be the first 60-minuter on NBC-TV's fall lineup on Sunday dramatic originals. And Talent Associates and BBDO are still playing with doing "People, People, People" as the first original ever to be done by "DuPont Show of the Month," 90-minute series. Both have been—or to be more exact are being—written by S. Lee Pogostin, who, in point of fact, yet remains to actually get his own first original drama on network television.

Last week NBC picked Pogostin's "People Kill" as the choice for the "Sunday Showcase" preems, and immediately set Pogostin away in an isolated N.Y. apartment to rewrite his teleplay in time for production within the next few weeks. That should leave Pogostin time to spend on reworking and completing the initial "People, People" submission, which DuPont rejected some weeks ago (Pogostin was paid $10,000 in advance for the yarn.)

Pogostin, who is well established as an adapter in television, will also be among the first of the original writers for CBS-TV's Robert Herridge series, "Theatre for a Story," if and when the half-hour vidtape skein is sold. Two of Pogostin's scripts are to be used.

Have Travel, Will Gun Up

NBC folded its own travel department last December, only to find this month that it's probably more practical to open it again. It's understood that within the next few days the network will drop the outside travel agency.

Consequent move back to the inside, to prevent what has been called "mounting confusion" in getting NBC execs plane, train and boat tickets, is expected to create a few old-new jobs at the network.

Dale Robertson Turns Up on 'Colgate Theatre' And P&G Does a Burn

NBC-TV's "Wells Fargo" star Dale Robertson had Procter & Gamble's ad men in a lather last week. And he probably didn't know it.

Situation bubbled over with NBC's scheduling of "The Hole in the Well Gang," Schlitz Playhouse rerun featuring Robertson on the "Colgate Western Theatre" Friday night. P&G this fall replaces Buick as an alternate sponsor of "Wells Fargo" and the company's marketing men did not take kindly to their western spokesman to be stumping of the competition's products. "Well Gang" two years ago was lifted out of the Schlitz series and used as a pilot to sell "Wells Fargo."

P&G apparently was not aware of the rerun until the day it was scheduled. Firm's complaint was relayed to Colgate by NBC. But the latter refused to lift the show, begging the time element on a replacement and noting its earlier contract for "Colgate's Western Theatre" than P&G's fall firming of "Fargo."

Barry Gray in TV Return Via WNTA

Barry Gray is going back on television after a layoff of nearly four years. The radio gabber will add a nightly show on WNTA-TV to his other New York chores, a nightly stint on WMCA Radio.

On Monday (27), Gray is going to take over the WNTA-TV 10:30-11 p.m. slot, directly after Mike Wallace's interview strip. Gray's tv format calls for five or six minutes of news each weeknight, followed by a regular "editorial" by the commentator, thus following pretty much the format he had in a 15-minute evening stanza he once did for WABD (now WNEW-TV, N.Y.). But beyond that, for the second half of the program, Gray intends incorporating a programming facet that appears similar to his regular radio job—guest interviews or, as they've otherwise been called with Gray's approval, nightly guest "arguments."

A technical problem arose as the result of the upcoming tv show, because Gray's WMCA stint begins at 11:06 p.m., six minutes after his tv show is scheduled to end. To solve the problem, Gray plans to tape in advance the first nine minutes of his radio program, thereby allowing himself 15 minutes to get from WNTA's 42d St. and Broadway tv studios to WMCA's 48th and Madison Ave. radio centre.

Ad agent Budd Getschal, whose client Sealy Mattress will probably ride the new WNTA-TV entry, will produce the tv edition. Gray said that despite the new job he intends sticking with WMCA.

AFTRA Powwow's St. Loo Siesta

No Major Contracts Up for Renegotiation; Virginia Payne Elected New Prexy

The most exciting characteristic of last week's St. Louis annual convention of the American Federation of Television & Radio Artists was that it ran only 62 hours, including time taken out for sleep and a whole evening of play. Generally, the AFTRA conclaves run at least three full days, with the last night—all night—devoted to intensive last-minute contract writing, but this one ended promptly at 6 p.m. Saturday (18).

Dullness of the meeting was laid chiefly to the fact that it fell in an odd numbered year, which means that only one of the many AFTRA contracts comes up for renegotiation during 1959. Considerable time in St. Louis was devoted to discussion of that contract, the Phonograph-Recording Code, to be dickered with industry in October.

Remaining time was devoted to general discussion on the possible merger with Screen Actors Guild, and on an investigation of what steps can be taken to clarify the performers' role and salary in the syndication of tape programming. The SAG situation has always been explosive during the AFTRA conclaves, but this year, due to a new attitude of friendliness between the organizations in the hope that it will aid a merger plan, things were limited principally to a report from national executive secretary Donald F. Conaway on the technical steps being made toward merger.

Virginia Payne, from AFTRA's N. Y. branch, was elected the new national president of AFTRA, replacing Clayton (Bud) Collier who held the office two terms.

Elvis Presley special on ABC-TV in February or March; ABC-TV also has three more Sinatra specials upcoming, but no dates set.

WROW Saratoga Spree

Albany, July 21.

WROW and sister station, WTEN-TV, will stage their fifth annual "Timeout For Timebuyers" at the Saratoga racetrack Aug. 6, with dinner at Shaker Ridge Country Club in Colonie (Albany suburb).

Approximately 200 timebuyers and other broadcasting and advertising executives, will attend.

ATV'S $14,886,000 PROFIT FOR YEAR

London, July 21.

Group profit of Associated Television Ltd., before tax, was $14,886,000 for the year to last April. This is a shade lower than the board's forecast made in February.

Final dividend of 60% will make 100% for the year.

DRAMA—'SEASON OF CRISIS'

Three Hits—All Casualties

Each year the television networks strive to come forth with at least one summer show that will prove qualitative enough to win a permanent berth on the program rosters. CBS-TV this summer finds itself in the embarrassing position of having three such hits, but all facing extinction come September.

CBS' major problem concerns the Tuesday night hourlong Andy Williams variety show, which is doing summer duty for Garry Moore. It not only got generally good notices but has been cutting some fancy rating capers. When Moore returns there will be no place on the schedule for Williams.

Then there's the case of the two-half hour entries, the Tuesday night "Peck's Bad Girl" and the Saturday night "Brenner" show. Both have been garnering some enviable ratings, and despite the network's wish to retain them, the sponsors are planning to replace them in the fall.

'January's For the Birds'

Dick Powell Tells Why He'll Never Negotiate Series at Mid-Season Mark

Hollywood, July 21.

Four Star Films will stay out of the January replacement sales market because it's virtually impossible to be sure of continuing on the networks the following season even if a replacement show is a hit.

That is the thinking of Four Star prexy Dick Powell, who adds this factor to the customary difficulties of getting ready on time for a January start. Powell speaks from his experiences with the David Niven show and "Richard Diamond."

On the Niven stanza, he states that though Four Star made a 26-week deal with Singer, NBC yanked the time away even before the show went on the air, leaving Singer and Four Star with time for only 13 firstruns and 13 summer repeats. It's a deal he'd never have made if he'd known about the time bump, says Powell.

On "Diamond," Powell admits the current cycle didn't get off to a particularly auspicious start, "but I think we've straightened it out in the last five shows, and we've really got it now." He also points to the show's current Top 10 Nielsen status and the fact that it's "clobbering" the Loretta Young reruns. But CBS has no time for the show in the fall. For-

Oppenheimer's NBC & Elsewhere

Hollywood, July 21.

Jess Oppenheimer has renegotiated his five-year NBC contract to enable him to take on outside assignments, first of which will be to produce the opening Ford special of the season on NBC Oct. 6, "The Fabulous Fifties."

His new deal calls for his nonexclusive services to NBC, as a program consultant and pilot producer, and allows him to work for CBS and ABC or any other competitor. But in the event any projects be initiated at NBC, such as the "Ten Commandments" series of specials, are reactivated, he would be bound to devote his time to them. New arrangement covers the remaining 21 months of Oppenheimer's original five-year pact.

"Fabulous Fifties," which will open the one-hour Tuesday night Ford skein, will be a review of the past 10 years in entertainment. Oppenheimer has set no cast or staff assignments on the show yet. Hubbell Robinson Jr. will be exec producer. There's a possibility of a title change due to conflict with a similar CBS project.

Oppenheimer, original producer of "I Love Lucy," has been champing under his NBC staff pact for some time because of inactivity. Aside from the "Commandments" series, of which he's done one, he did the pilot, "The Jacksons," last spring and initiated other projects which never got off the ground. He was also exec producer of the Emmy Awards telecast last spring.

2 Sponsors For NBC-TV Sun. Golf, So 'Omnibus' Out

Chicago, July 21.

NBC-TV has taken on Screen Gems' new hourlong golf series, "World Match Play Championship," making casualties of "Omnibus" and "Kaleidoscope" in creating a sports block on Sunday afternoons. Show will be slotted at 4:30 p.m. immediately following the NBA pro basketball games, beginning in mid-October.

Two sponsors are in tow, American Safety Razor Co. and Alberto-Culver, leaving one alternate half hour still to be sold. ASR has bought half the series and Culver, for its hair dressing line, a quarter.

Latter's billings with the network this year are expected to exceed $6,000,000, the midwest client having been cultivated from a $200,000 spender three years ago. Save for an experimental regional buy on ABC-TV last season, its purchases have been entirely on NBC. Culver is particularly heavy

ABC ON 'PARADISE': 'LET'S MAKE IT 36'

Hollywood, July 21.

ABC-TV has ordered 10 additional segments of the hourlong "Adventures in Paradise" vidpix series from 20th-Fox Television and Martin Manulis Productions, bringing the total order from the networks to 36 shows. Additional segments will add nearly $1,000,000 to the studio's tv production schedule.

Original order from ABC was 26 shows, but following the web's sales success with the James Michener property—it's virtually SRO for the season with Liggett & Myers, Reynolds Metals, Armour and Luden's—network flashed the okay for 10 more.

Series is now filming its sixth episode, with Julie London as guestar opposite Gardner McKay. Latter's option, incidentally, was picked up by the studio. Next segment will guestar Paulette Goddard and Susan Plechette.

LAST CHANCE FOR SURVIVAL

By ART WOODSTONE

Live television drama faces its "season of crisis."

There are several regularly scheduled programs of that species marked for the 1959-1960 television season, and if CBS-TV's Thursday "Playhouse 90" along with the alternating U. S.-Steel-Armstrong Theatre dramatics, manage to hold their own and, more pointedly, if NBC-TV's "Sunday Showcase" is successful, the estimate is that live drama—after the fashion of most tv trends—may have a resurgence by 1960-1961. If "Sunday Showcase" proves a dud, it probably will be years before live drama will get another chance from networks, much less sponsors.

NBC-TV in itself has created a climate favorable to live plays, but the network is working against heavy odds. "Sunday Showcase" will contain 17 network-produced dramas, but not one of them yet has a single sponsor for either moral or financial support. Network nevertheless plans emphatically to go ahead and do them, even if it means that NBC has to absorb the entire time-talent budget of some $2,000,000.

Even though NBC brass hope to add still further dramatic programs of the old "Philco"-"Kraft" variety, to hypo the network's image, it recognizes the fact that it can't go on sacrificing $2,000,000 at a clip for the sake of a dream. It needs sponsors, and, perhaps by gaining an initially high audience response for the upcoming Sunday session, hopes to get them.

Web figures that there actually doesn't have to be a tremendously high rating to put over "Showcase." Instead, NBC has considered the possibility that if there is still a sufficient "special audience" for live drama some advertiser or another is going to go along.

In the case of CBS-TV, it doesn't seem to possess beyond "Playhouse 90," any great desire to indulge in heavy dramatic expenditures. NBC brass, on the other hand, are speaking more and more of a "totality of programming," a meaningful euphemism, and a eu-

117 Canadian TV Aides Lopped Off; Union in Protest

Toronto, July 21.

The Canadian Broadcasting Corp. laid off 107 of its tv employees in Toronto over the weekend and 53 in Montreal but denied any economy wave had arisen from complaints to parliament about CBC spending. Said James P. Gilmore, CBC controller of operations: "The seasonal layoff is a result of a careful study of operating loads for the next three months or so and the Corporation cannot justify having people stand about without assignments." Affected are Toronto-Montreal employees working as stagehands, carpenters, property men, costumers, scenic artists and other technical people.

But many union officials said they were "shocked," that "they would protest most vigorously," that a "certain CBC group in management has become jittery and wants to assert that they can act and manage." They predicted a wholesale slashing of personnel in August and claimed that "many of the CBC employees would not be returning to their jobs." Union officials claimed the layoffs had come without warning and during negotiations for a contract to succeed one that expired May 31. Said a CBC spokesman: "Not all the employees would be taken back."

Robt. Alan Aurthur Itching to Let Go With 'Point of View' on TV Dramas

By JO RANSON

Drama as striking as the crop tilled on the rich acreage of "Studio One," "Robert Montgomery Presents," "Alcoa Theatre," "Playhouse 90" and "Kraft Theatre" may yet be seen again.

If David Levy, veep of NBC-TV programming and talent, and Robert Alan Aurthur, recently named exec producer of the upcoming "Sunday Showcase" dramatic specials, carry out only a portion of their objectives, the 1959-60 season will have foisted on the showbiz scene another covey of creative writers. As Aurthur puts it: "What is there left to do but excite people and I think we'll do this in the 'Sunday Showcase' specials."

Aurthur, with a string of redoubtable writing and producing credits, is savvy about the literary market and confident that he'll come up with fresh writing talent possessed of a point of view! He also is angling to bring back some of the big name tv dramatists who, in recent times, strayed into other pastures, the films and theatre, in particular.

Then, too, he has a couple of big name novelists in mind he'd like to win over to his side of the writing dodge and he hopes to do all this and more because there's a budget at his command that will allow him to flush out the already established topnotchers now playing the other side of the street as well as the young creative minds currently banging away on their battered portables. He says he can do it because there'll be a top of $10,000 for scripts and a similar sum for actors.

With the $10,000 bait for scripts, Aurthur figures on accomplishing something worthwhile. In the past few years, he observed this week, there was no impulse on the part of video programmers to seek out new talent but things should be different now, thanks to the sufficient budget on "Sunday Showcase." "I'm not afraid to go out and look for talent today," he said.

Pogostin's Teeoff

Aurthur expects to launch his Sunday night series on Sept. 20 with S. Lee Pogostin's play, "People Kill People Sometime" and he's seeking John Frankenheimer to produce and direct. "Pogostin is an enormously talented fellow," the "Sunday Showcase" exec producer said.

Later in the series he expects to present a two part dramatization of Budd Schulberg's astringent portrayal of a Hollywood heel, "What Makes Sammy Run?" The video script should be in Aurthur's possession within a week and casting will start almost immediately. Delbert Mann will produce and direct "What Makes Sammy Run?"

Furthermore, Aurthur has been huddling with such scripting craftsmen as J. P. Miller, Reginald Rose, David Shaw, Roger Hirson, Lloyd Richon, Merle Miller, Alfred Bes-

NBC-TV's Dearth In the Afternoon; Cueing Reshuffle

Between 2 and 5 in the afternoon, NBC-TV has come upon rather hard times. It may just be due to summertime viewing habits, but whatever the reason, the network, for one of those rare times in its daytime program history, has a three-hour block of programming where only one-quarter hour on the last Nielsens got better than a 30% share of audience and that was a 30.7%.

How much impact this has had on the network's program plans for fall is hard to discern, but just the same NBC has a variety of shuffles on tap between 2 and 5 p.m. As detailed last week, NBC is iffy about the future of "County Fair" at 4:30 p.m. It was understood that Goodson & Todman's "Split Personality" might replace it by fall, but now there's also a reported chance that the GT package might go at 4 p.m. instead, in place of the tinted "Truth or Consequences," although the latter program could also be moved to another time during the day.

Though the network has no immediate plans to boot "Court of Human Relations" at 2:30, the A. L. Alexander stanza has taken a severe drubbing from the press since it began a few weeks ago, and there is doubt in some quarters that NBC will hold onto it.

NBC-TV has in reserve a Ralph Edwards pilot, an audience participationer called "About Faces," which could be utilized at 4:30 vice "County Fair." It also went into production over the weekend on a full 13 weeks of the unscheduled "House On High Street," a Ted Granik package.

NBC lays the decline in the 2-5 strip ratings in good part to the fact that it is programming for adult females, even though chil-

Jewison's Hot Year

A 27-year-old Canadian has just gotten one of the juiciest directorial plums in all U.S. television, being handed the Goodman Ace hourlong shows on the Thursday night Revlon-sponsored series of specials on CBS-TV. His name is Norman Jewison.

Exactly a year ago, on the strength of a kinnie shipped in from Canada and viewed by CBS-TV veepee Mike Dann, he was chosen to direct the half-hour "Hit Parade Show." Because of this directorial chore, he was given the nod on the summer Andy Williams hour series. This week came the nod for the Goodman Ace series.

90-Min. Kern TV Spec by Brewers

The Brewers Foundation of America is going to lift a glass in "A Toast to Jerome Kern." Bankroller has the 90-minute tv special lined up on NBC-TV, based on music from the late composer's catalog, for the 9-10:30 slot the night of Sept. 22.

MCA is handling the package, with Robert Wells doing the writing and actual production work. Talent is being lined up, but there are no names listed yet.

"Toast" will mark the Brewers' second major network entry in four months. In June, the foundation underwrote "Summer On Ice" via NBC, and with such success that it decided to do a second show as soon as possible.

Canada's Bigtime Telefilm Setup As Trans-Video Productions Is Formed

Toronto, July 21.

Involving an immediate $500,000 investment in studio and lab facilities, plus a $4,000,000 option until Fall on the former Toronto setup of Audio Pictures Ltd., the formation of Trans-Video Productions Ltd. was announced by Joseph B. Dunkelman, president of the latter new company. Reportedly the largest tv setup outside of Hollywood, the installation includes three sound stages in Toronto, together with outdoors locales, and is reputed to be the largest privately-owned tv studios in Canada.

Combining his Canadian capital with Hollywood experience, Toronto-born Dunkelman is vice-president of Screen Gems of Canada Ltd., the Canadian distribution head of Columbia Pictures Inc. In his formation, as president of Trans-Video Productions Ltd., Dunkelman's chairman of the board is Peter Wright, Q.C.; Robert Maxwell, executive vice-president; William Hamilton, general manager and comptroller; James W. Annett, secretary-treasurer.

With the taking in of Robert Maxwell, producer of such tv series as "Lassie," "Superman" and "Cannonball," the new company plans an immediate lensing of 13 episodes of "Lloyds of London" and 26 episodes of "National Velvet." Currently underway is 13 episodes of "Shariland," this featuring Shari Lewis, puppeteer-ventriloquist; and reputed to be the first kinescoped film musical series done in Canada.

Dunkelman, who produced the "Last of the Mohicans" and "Tugboat Annie" in Canada as head of Normandie Productions Ltd., the first two American-financed filmed tv series in Canada, has a co-production deal with MGM. The first U.S.-Canada originated product, "Lloyds of London" will have 13 episodes (each) made in Hollywood, Britain and the Toronto studios of Trans-Video Productions. (Flying over from Toronto (18) to London, England, for final details with the Lloyds insurance people was Peter Wright, chairman of the board of the new Toronto setup.)

Dunkelman and Maxwell also plan immediately an as yet untitled series in Canada dealing with the forest rangers and sports car racing, the two series to be made by Trans-Video Productions of Toronto.

The unit production manager is Rudy Abel, formerly of Republic Studios and later production superivsor for Harry Sherman Productions.

In addition to the three sound stages, Trans-Video also plans to produce tv film series throughout the world, plus documentaries, commercials and industrial films.

Yen for Stripping Booms Economee

A healthy jump in rerun grosses was reported by Ziv's Economee division, headed by Pierre Weis, who credited the upbeat to the growing use of stripped programming by stations. Economee was reported to have boosted its total volume 62% in the first six months of this year against a comparable time last year.

Independent Television Co.'s rerun division, Arrow Productions, also recently reported on an upsurge of biz.

Economee's Weis cited a number of cases of afternoon and morning stripping of Ziv shows to good rating results. He also cited an instance when the slotting of a Ziv show in the late afternoon changed the composition of the audience to take in more adults. One station, WCHS-TV, Charleston, W. Va., apparently opens up its day at 8 a.m. with the stripped "Boston Blackie" skein, another indication of how deep the telefilm stripping yen has caught on with stations.

Option Problems Bother SAG; On Contract Agenda

Hollywood, July 21.

Controls over players' option provisions in television pilot and series deals will be one of the key demands by the Screen Actors Guild next fall when it begins negotiation of a new TV Entertainment Program Contract. Present pact, which expires March 31 of next year, contains no provisions governing options.

SAG is concerned over the growing complexity of the option problem, which centres principally about length of option and exclusivity clauses. Problem, briefly, is this:

When a star or supporting player is signed for a pilot, he is placed under option to star in the series if the pilot is sold. There are no restrictions on the length of this option; it may range from three months to a year. Moreover, the option contains exclusivity clauses which prohibit the actor from appearing in another pilot while under option, from appearing in a running part in another series, and usually, from appearing even on a one-shot basis in a series that is "competitive" to the pilot. The length of exclusivity covers the period of the option.

Moreover, in some cases a player is placed under option, the pilot is subsequently sold but the sponsor decides not to use that actor. The thesps then finds himself having been precluded from other work or other pilots while at the same time unemployed despite the success of the pilot he did make. The reported abuses in this area include failure to notify the actor of the decision not to use him, and failure to release him from the option.

In the case of series, a player may be signed for a minimum of 13 shows with option for a full year or more. Often, a sponsor will cancel at the end of 13 or 26, but the producer will refuse to release the actor for other work because he attempts to find another sponsor for the series. Consequently, an actor may have done 13 shows and then finds himself unemploy-

MGM-TV Speeding Up 'Thin Man' Syndication

MGM-TV has brought in its field force of six sales execs for confabs on launching "Thin Man" into syndication.

Off-network entry, which marks MGM-TV's entry into the market-by-market field, will be sold on a 37 plus 15 repeat basis. Syndication sales department is headed by Richard Harper who, heretofore had handled feature sales. MGM-TV plans to expand its sales force as its property portfolio increases. Loew's subsid is understood to be negotiating for other syndicated entries.

In addition, it has 26 episodes of "Northwest Passage," another off-network property.

Bad Timing

London, July 21.

A BBC-TV series about the war against Japan, entitled "Crusade in the Pacific," has been postponed while the Japanese prime minister is on an official visit to Britain.

The first of the eight films was due to have been shown last weekend, but will be presented after the premier leaves the country within a fortnight.

Desilu's 6-Month Record Net; Twice Last Year's Total

Hollywood, July 21.

Firts-quarter profit of Desilu Productions Inc. will equal or exceed the total profit for the entire previous fiscal year. Desi Arnaz, president, told stockholders at the company's first public holders meet here today (Tues.). Total net return for the year ending May 2, 1959, was $249,500, or 22c per share.

The Desilu chief also predicted that second-quarter profits will exceed even those of the record first quarter, bringing Desilu's six-month profit mark to more than double the whole of last year's net.

Arnaz said: "Gross income for the current tv season will not be less than $23,500,000, an increase of $3,000,000, or 15% over the last fiscal year."

Also announced at the first stockholders meeting of Desilu was that the producer has sold "The Untouchables," an upcoming hourlong telefilm series on ABC-TV, to commercial tv in Australia.

NBC PARTNERS WITH 4 STAR ON 'SHAYNE'

Hollywood, July 21.

NBC-TV will partner with Four Star Films in filming of the hourlong pilot of "Michael Shayne," series based on the Brett Halliday mysteries. Pilot, still uncast, rolls later this summer at Republic, with NBC sharing in the financing and holding an option on the show.

Halliday himself is scripting the pilot, the first screenplay he's ever done. Four Star prexy Dick Powell said several writers had essayed the pilot script unsuccessfully. He expects to use Halliday's script.

Max Cooper to Cuba For Baseball TV Segs

Chicago, July 21.

Max Cooper is in Havana this week setting up studio facilities for his upcoming vidtape syndicationer "Winter Baseball," at Goar Mestre's CMQ. Cooper and his associates have just purchased a pair of Ampex Videotape consoles, which will be delivered to the Havana facility, for the new series. Having the rights to tape record the Cuban League winter ball games, Cooper is syndicating a "game of the week" in the States.

So far he has sold the show in three markets, the newest ones being WOR-TV, New York; KHOU, Houston, Tex.; and WRVA, Richmond, Va. Other markets already in tow are Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Pittsburgh, Milwaukee and Provo-Salt Lake, Utah.

ITC's 'Stallion' Sponsors

Independent Television Corp. pulled a neat trick in the N.Y. market, lining up two sponsors for its off-network entry "Brave Stallion."

Skein, which will be telecast on WPIX starting this fall, was bought by Drake Bakeries and Chunky Chocolates. Deal marks Drake's entry into tv. There aren't many program buys of syndicated product in the N.Y. market, with the few such buys going on WCBS-TV and WRCA-TV mostly.

PAR PIX IN 59 CITIES

The Paramount library, distributed by MCA TV, now is in 59 markets.

Latest two stations to sign for the Para pix are KCMO-TV, Kansas City, Mo.; and WTRF-TV, Wheeling-Steubenville.

Tom McDermott Entrance May Cue Four Star's Era of Expansion

Hollywood, July 21.

Tom McDermott will function primarily in the creative areas as exec v.p. of Four Star Films, prexy Dick Powell said last week. Powell himself will continue to run the business end of the operation, with McDermott aiding the William Morris office in sales but concentrating primarily on programming.

"McDermott is one of the best show doctors in the business," in Powell's opinion. The ex-Benton & Bowles tv topper bailed Four Star out of trouble on "Zane Grey Theatre" in its first year, according to Powell, by spotting the flaws in the format and straightening them out. He did the same for the "Ann Sothern Show" last season, Powell feels.

Principally, McDermott will ride scripts and casting, and will sit on top of editing as well, functions that Powell presently undertakes on top of his other Four Star duties and his producer-director work at 20th-Fox. McDermott will also figure heavily in program development and in the company's expansion plans.

Four Star, according to Powell, has seriously considered expansion in the past, but hasn't had the time to pursue each situation. With McDermott to handle the creative load, Powell and his partners now can turn to expansion. One possibility is live specials—"we've got all the manpower, Alvin Cooperman to produce, people like Jack Smight (under a multiple director pact) to direct."

Another area which will receive serious consideration is distribution. "Every year we've talked about having to set up our own distribution company, but then it hasn't proved necessary. Eventually, though, we're going to have to do it." Powell states he's received distribution offers for as low as 20%, but has turned them down.

"It only costs the syndicators 9 to 11% of the gross, and the rest is profit. There's no reason why we can't do the same thing with our shows." Most of the Four Star stanzas, according to Powell, have not been assigned for distribution under their network contracts; Four Star retains rights to them.

Powell says Four Star made money on its recent sale of its huge block of Official Films stock, which it received some years ago in exchange for rerun rights to it's "Four Star Playhouse." Although market price had dropped considerably since Four Star's acquisition, the size of the block was enough to control the company, and to keep a rival bidder out of the picture, Official paid Four Star well above the market price to get the stock back. Four Star itself never wanted to control OF, Powell states.

Direct-to-Client Sales Cue Ziv's Upswing in Biz

A rising curve of direct-to-sponsor sales is being mapped by Ziv. Company reports that the first six months of this year saw a 12% increase in sales made directly to sponsors compared to a year ago.

Although most other telefilm houses now are hot on the trail of direct-to-sponsor deals, with regionals breaking out all over the map, the prior few months have been a relatively lull period. In those months, most other telefilm houses found holding on to their direct to sponsor ratio a tough proposition.

Speaking for Ziv, Len Firestone, manager of Ziv's syndicated sales department, said that several factors are influencing this upswing in buys by advertisers. "First, the advertiser in multi-station markets appears to prefer to do his own shopping for a choice time slot for the syndicated series. Often a station cannot offer the sponsor the particular day or night desired. He is able to pick it up on another station." Firestone then cited the traditional need for sponsor identification and the ability of Ziv to find co-sponsors.

In the sales department, John Davidson has been promoted to sales manager of the southeastern division headquartered in Atlanta. Jerry Kirby has been promoted to sales manager for the northeastern division. Stuart Halliday has been upped to sales manager of the syndication sales staff in Chicago. Allen Martini takes the spot as sales manager of the western division, John Louis has been promoted to spot sales manager, north central division, and Harry Littler has been promoted to spot sales manager of the south eastern division.

DR. BRADLEY SERIES FOR SYNDICATIONS

Chicago, July 21.

Dr. Preston Bradley, noted lecturer and philosopher, is being groomed for the syndication marts via an inspiration vidfilm series to be lensed at United Film Studios here and underwritten by a non-profit Preston Bradley Foundation. Pilot, which runs 30 minutes, will be adapted to five or 15-minute lengths in order to determine which form will be most acceptable.

Dr. Bradley is currently on a speaking tour in Europe, on which trip he will garner additional material for his tv series. Filming will resume when he returns in September. Series will not be religious in nature but will take up in the 52 installments such subjects as brotherhood, democracy, juvenile delinquency and the humanities.

William L. Klein, prez of United Film Studios, is exec producer of the series. Jack Gibney is the directer and Harry Birch, chief cameraman.

'This Man Dawson' Into 31 Markets

Thirty-one markets have been racked up by Ziv for its latest syndication entry, "This Man Dawson."

Key regionals inking include American Tobacco and H. P. Hood & Son of New England. American Tobacco, as an alternate sponsor, took 11 markets, including Buffalo, Roanoke, Grand Rapids, Indianapolis, Louisville, Peoria, St. Louis, Houston and Memphis.

In a firm 52-week deal, H. P. Hood dairy products took the skein for six New England states. Weidemann Brewing inked for Cincinnati, Dayton, Columbus, and Indianapolis. Dow Brewing took the show for Buffalo and Watertown. Standard Oil of Indiana inked for Detroit, alternating with the R. G. Dunn Cigar Co. on WWJ-TV.

Station sales include KSTP, Minneapolis; KOB, Albuquerque; KSYD, Wichita Falls; and WDSU, New Orleans.

Loew's $813,570 Judgment Vs. KTVR

A summary judgment of $813,570 was granted to Loew's Inc., in its suit against KTVR, Denver, by Justice Henry Epstein of the N.Y. Supreme Court. Payment, however, is withheld pending outcome of a show-cause order issued this week by the judge. Date of reargument has not been set.

Defendants were Radio Hawaii Inc., Gotham Broadcasting Corp., and Founders Corp., stockholders in KTTV. Justice Epstein overruled defense claims that Loew's, when it sold the station its library, was indulging in "block booking" and had violated New York State anti-trust laws.

Justice Epstein found that the station had faulted on its payments to Lowe's according to its 1956 contract for the library.

The three defendants were guarantors of the KTVR agreement, but had sought to stay the N.Y. decision until a KTVR suit filed against Loew's in N.Y. Federal Court in May had been decided. The court overruled this move also.

Justice Dept. Action

In preliminary trial maneuverings, the Justice Department and defendant feature distributors were directed by Federal District Court Justice Archie O. Dawson to negotiate the factual and legal issues which will go to trial. Dawson turned down a government motion asking the court for a pre-trial order which sought to frame the factual and legal issues of the upcoming trial.

The Justice Department in its anti-trust suit is charging feature distributors with "block-booking" and other anti-trust allegations. Defendants include Loew's, Screen Gems, C & C Television, Associated Artists Productions, National Telefilm Associates and United Artists.

20th-Fox TV Readies Flock Of New Pilots; 'Belvedere' to Roll

Hollywood, July 21.

Although 20th-Fox Television is already underway on full production of three series, the television arm of the studio has not completed its development work on additional new shows for the year by a long shot. 20th is planning to film at least four more pilots during the summer, and will buy a minimum of 22 additional scripts on series for which pilots were made but sales not consummated.

Studio's tv arm under Martin Manulis went into full swing last week with commencement of production on 26 "Five Fingers" hours under exec producer Herb Swope Jr. "Adventures in Paradise" is in full swing on its roster of 36 hours. "The Many Loves of Dobie Gillis" is also well under way on its 39 half-hours at Fox' Western Ave. studio.

But besides these, the studio will film four pilots by mid-September. On July 27, "Mr. Belvedere," pilot, with Hans Conreid starred, Norman Tokar directing a script by Michael Pertweet, and Swope producing, starts. In August, Swope will produce the Peggy Lee pilot and Dominick Dunne will exec produce Daystar Productions' "Formula for Adventure," with script by Leslie Stevens. In September, Daystar's "Arsenal Stone,"

'Shotgun Slade' Sales Piling Up

MCA TV appears to be racking up sales on "Shotgun Slade," the Scott Brady starrer, at a nice clip.

Jax Beer, via the Fitzgerald Advertising Agency of New Orleans, has bought the series on an alternate week basis for 19 markets throughout Louisiana, Texas, Oklahoma and Alabama. R. J. Reynolds for Camels bought the series for a number of cities. Holsum Bakeries for all of Arizona; Schoenling Brewing Co. for Dayton, and Donovan Coffee for the state of Alabama.

MCA TV reports that the series also has been bought by 15 tv stations on the Coast, and by 10 other stations elsewhere, including WGN-TV, Chicago; and KDKA, Pittsburgh.

Series was kicked off by a 28-market regional inked by P. Ballantine and Sons.

Brady will leave the cast of the Broadway musical "Destry Rides Again" later this summer to begin his starring role in "Slade." Series will be shot at MCA's Revue studios.

'MANHUNT' LOADED WITH BEER COIN

Jax Beer, in the south, and Drewry's Beer, in the midwest, have been added to the Screen Gems lineup next fall on "Manhunt," new syndicated telefilm series.

Jax bought 30 markets in the southern U.S., Drewry's markets were unlisted in the midwest. Regardless, that makes four regional beer companies which have bought into "Manhunt." Others are Genessee in N.Y. State and Coor's Beer for the Rockies.

"Manhunt" makes the first time in five years that Jax has bought a syndicated telefilm stanza on a regional spread. SG also has Miles Labs for 11 Coast markets, with still more markets pending.

GLOBAL VISTAS CUE CBS EXIT

Leslie T. Harris is resigning from his present executive post as v.p. of CBS Films, Inc., which he has held for the past six years, to become managing director of a newly-created International Television Production Division of ITC (Independent Television Corp.). He will be berthed permanently in London with headquarters at the Lew Grade-Val Parnell-helmed Associated Television, Ltd., the British "arm" of Jack Wrather's ITC.

Operating with ATV, Harris will develop co-production and co-financing deals with all American networks and sponsors for tv shows to be filmed in England and other overseas countries, and distributed through ITC internationally. (He leaves N. Y. in a few weeks for London but takes off almost pronto for Australia and Hong Kong on two new series to roll in those respective countries.)

The creation of the new division accentuates anew for the industry the "global vistas" and economics of tv film making. Thinking behind the Harris switchover has multi-faceted ramifications, i.e.:

1) Develop television programming on an international basis through co-production and financing;

2) Improve the acceptability of British programs for the U. S. market and develop writers and directors—particularly in the half-hour film field;

3) Encourage American producers to utilize foreign locations in British Commonwealth both for films and live productions;

4) Create and encourage American producers of the 60-minute and 90-minute dramatic program and specs to take advantage of foreign talent and material;

5) Since the economics clearly indicate that the half-hour syndicated film cannot recoup unless it is sold overseas, quotas and restrictions can be eliminated by producing a portion of the series overseas. Example NTA - BBC's "Third Man."

Demand for new ideas and personalities, it is felt, will encourage producers to think in terms of doing occasional drama and specs overseas. It will also provide an economic cushion, since ATV and others want hour shows. (ATV programs London on Saturdays and Sundays and the Midlands Monday through Friday. It also produces and feeds the British commercial network throughout the week a number of programs and is the largest buyer of U. S. programs in England, including "Lucy," "Gunsmoke," "Wagon Train," etc.).

Selection of Harris in the expansion of the scope and structure of ITC's global operation stems from his extensive knowledge of all phases of tv which, it is felt, will help create greater confidence in tv production being filmed abroad. (Appointment marks the first instance of a U. S. broadcasting exec of such wide and varied experience being placed in charge of overseas productions designed for U. S. world markets.)

Harris has served in major executive posts at both CBS and NBC (back in '49 he was named national programs director of NBC Radio). He was formerly with Benton & Bowles, later was director of radio-tv for Colgate and was an independent producer of radio-tv shows. He joined CBS Films as veepee-general manager in 1953.

Film shows the Globetrotters in action on Moscow courts as well as in tours of famous Russian sites.

Telefilmeries in Transition As Rumbles, Mergers, Revampings Help Liven Up Summer Dog Days

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

Telefilm houses, ranging from the major to minor distributors, are being beset by vital changes. Hardly a week goes by now without some alteration in ownership of a company, without some plans for consolidations, without rumbles of acquisitions, etc.

Especially affected are the syndication houses. Now there are about a dozen active syndicators in the field. The forecast is that these will be whittled down with time, with the syndication biz characterized by a few majors and a number of minors. Facing distinction, according to the crystal ball gazers, are the middle-sized companies. These are deemed to be very vulnerable. On one hand, they have a comparative large overhead and on the other hand, they haven't a large enough sales field force to sell off product quick enough. The small guy, figuratively speaking, can operate out of his hat, carrying a can of film under his arm. He will always be around.

Some of the sell-offs have little to do with the in-fighting for survival. Thriving Ziv was recently sold to F. Eberstadt & Co. and Lazar Freres & Co., two Wall Street investment houses, for a reported $14,000,000. Management and operation of the company remained intact, with Frederick W. Ziv, chairman of the board, and John L. Sinn, prexy, retaining a reported 20% stock interest in the company.

But a company in deep trouble and in need of fresh capital was Guild Films. It was merged with the $21,000,000 gymnasium chain Vic Tanney under the combined name of Vic Tanney Enterprises. That odd combination of a gymnasium firm in the telefilm biz is matched only by the Buckeye setup. Buckeye, a midwestern firm manufacturing farm implements, now owns Flamingo Films.

Under the heading of consolidations, National Telefilm Associates, with the exception of a few departments, is moving to the Coast. NTA and its parent company National Theatres will combine their physical operation under one roof in Beverly Hills. NTA will move out of its present large offices in the Coliseum building and find smaller N. Y. quarters.

Columbia Pictures is integrating all Coast activities of its Screen

ABC Films Pacts Agreements With 4 Foreign Orgs

ABC Films has signed agreements with four foreign film organizations in the company's first major move to facilitate sales, production, dubbing and titling on the international scene.

Deals were firmed by Edwin J. Smith, who was brought into the company early this year as vice prez in charge of international operations. ABC now claims representation in every tele market in the world. Foreign companies which will now have an association with ABC are Merman Entertainments Proprietary, Ltd. in Australia and New Zealand; Leo Lax Films (with exclusive sales agents and offices in Paris, Rome, Brussels and Munich); TV Inter-Americana with offices in Mexico City, and Kane Lynn and Edward Romero in the Philippines and Far East.

Head of Merman is K. R. Murdoch who is publisher of News Ltd., Australia, which owns tele station NWS in Adelaide (set to air in September) and which publishes several newspapers and magazines, including Tv Week. The ABC-Merman link has future plans for feature and program production and theatrical road shows.

Leo Lax, head of ABC's European rep firm, is a veteran French film distributor and producer.

TV Inter-Americana will rep ABC in South America as well as Mexico. Company is sales rep for several U. S. film producers.

Philippines and Far East rep Lynn-Romero is currently co-producing with ABC Films the Manila-locationed series "Counterthrust."

'HIGHWAY PATROL' HOT ITEM IN JAPAN

Tokyo, July 21.

"Highway Patrol" (NHK) will go into its fourth year in Japan. Other shows pacted for renewals by Ziv veep Millard Segal were "District Attorney" (JOKR) and "Bat Masterson" (NET). New entries sold by Segal on current trip include "Space" (NHK), "Lockup" (NET), "Challenge" (NET) and "Eddie Cantor Comedy Theatre" (Fuji TV).

On this, his fifth annual Pacific swing, Segal said he noticed an increased interest in U.S. telefilms. "Buying officials are a lot more sophisticated," he added. "They're not just buying film. They're more selective and are looking for quality."

Because of the increased number of stations in Japan, Segal thought he might step up his visits to semi-annually.

Ink 3 Regionals On '4 Just Men'

Independent Television Corp. has lined up three regionals for its "Four Just Men," each regional in a different section of the country. North of the border, ITC sold the show to the Canadian Broadcasting Corp.

Skein was made by U.K.'s Sapphire Films, as a coproduction with Jack Wrather Organization. It stars Dan Dailey, Richard Conte, Jack Hawkins and Vittorio DeSica.

In the east, Schaefer Brewery inked for nine markets, exclusive of N. Y. Markets taken by Schaefer include Philadelphia, Syracuse, Albany, and Hartford.

Drewry's Beer inked for 15 midwest markets, covering Indiana, Michigan, Ohio and Iowa and including such cities as Chicago, Detroit and Indianapolis. Standard Oil of Texas took the show for 110 markets spread throughout the Southwest.

U.S. deals written to date was put at about $750,000. Shooting on the series, one of the most expensive to come out of England, has been completed. Editing and scoring on the 39 episodes now are underway.

Too Much Carping at TV, Sez Keesely, Bullish About '59-'60 —On Other Ad Agency Fronts

Lennen & Newell's senior veep and tv chieftain Nicholas E. Keesely, with one eye on the program charts and the other on the client till, sees this fall as "the most exciting tv season ever."

In the prime nighttime hours of 7:30 to 11 on the three networks, Keeseley says advertisers will be spending $14,000,000 a week for time and talent. That's $1,000,000 a night for each and a total of $546,000,000 for the regular 39-week season—"The highest budget yet undertaken."

"When you add to this the shows on independents that the public can tune in and expenditures prior to 7:30 and during the day," says Keesely, "it represents a diet of entertainment for American homes which is greater than the rest of the world combined."

As Keesely sees it, the fall lineup breaks down this way: westerns, 22%; drama (anthologies and action), 35%; variety and musical, 15%; comedy and situation, 12%; participation and panel, 6%; sports and miscellaneous, 10%.

Future percentages, he says, will be gauged on what the public is going for. "Adjustments will come seeing what happens this fall. If in the top 20 we see more comedy, more variety, rest assured fall a year will see less of the other types of shows."

Summing up the fall schedule, aside from the many specials, Keesely feels there's too much carping at the medium. "Overcriticism might destroy what's good about it. We shouldn't let anybody get away with thinking the medium is going down hill. We must recognize the fact that when you get so much of anything, the public is bound to become more fussy and critical. We should also be mindful of the fact that with television eating up material and creative people at the rate it does, you are bound to have a certain percentage of shows that don't live up to expectations."

On the move to hour shows and multiple sponsorships, Keesely is middling. "If this is a successful formula and the public likes it, why not givie them more of it?" That's the way he put it at the FCC's Foley Square investigation. But, like many other agency men, he does not want to see the advantages of sponsor identification and peripheral program control go completely by the boards.

"In fact," he says, "the alternate half-hour is beginning to bother me no end. Less and less people remember who sponsors what." where advertisers can afford it, he would like to see more single sponsorships. "It would remedy a lot of the headaches of living with the other guy on product and show taste."

Keesely's own agency is so far in on eight shows for fall, "Hennesey," "Johnny Ringo," and "Playhouse 90" on CBS; "Arthur Murray" and "Riverboat," on NBC; and "Adventures in Paradise," "Bourbon Street Beat" and "World of Talent" on ABC.

Chevrolet Drive

Chevrolet cars were the leading brand on web tv during May, according to the Television Bureau of Advertising. The cars topped even Procter & Gamble with gross time billings at $796,534.

Media Promotion Study

Motivation Research Assoc. has completed a survey of media's direct mail campaigns. As regards the flood of media-sponsored research, the report says, "Our respondents have indicated to us that much of the research data sent by media is either filed and forgotten or lost. There is one very apparent explanation—"Because its uses are not immediate."

Forty-four execs were questioned Out of the hundreds of research reports sent by media to agencies annually, only 32 received favorable mention in the course of interviews. Life and Look headed the list. Two orgs received only negative comments. They were the Saturday Review and TvB.

Stripers: Royall Smith becomes a vice president and creative group head of Lennen & Newell in the first of a series of veep appointments in the creative department.

Donald Carter and Donald S. Devor are appointed veeps at Wm. Esty. Carter is account exec for Thos. Leeming & Co. and Pacquin, Inc. Devor is the agency's musical director in the tv commercial department.

Switches: Jack Thomas, formerly ad director of the Tussy division, Lehn & Fink, joins Grey as an account exec.

Robert C. Pearson, formerly with Ketchum, MacLeod & Grove, elected a veep at Landon Advertising.

Herbert A. Kuscher joins Kameny Assoc. as marketing and sales development director. He was with Allied Purchasing Corp. and before that ad manager of Detecto Scales.

Chi Agencies

William C. Lyddan, Norman F. Best and Paul E. Morgan, all veepees, elected to the board of Campbell-Mithun.

Compton Advertising plucked the Schulze & Burch Biscuit Co. account.

Tatham-Laird has added three to its staff and promoted five following the acquisition of the $6,000,000 Dristan account from Whitehall Labs. Val Ritter signed on with the agency's New York office as associate media supervisor on the account, and Joan Wilke, ex-Burnett, joined the Chi office as a creative writer. A. R. Menzies also joined as an account exec. Promoted were Annette Malpede to broadcast manager; John Gilhn Jr. to broadcast manager on special assignment; and Ray McWeeny, Sylvia Sallen and Bill Conrad all to print managers.

Ladd, Southward & Bentley Inc. merged with M. Glen Miller Advertising, with latter functioning as a division of the new agency, continuing to service its previous accounts. Whole operation will go under the LS&B tag. Sidney A. Wells, formerly with McCann-Erickson as veepee and Chi office manager, joined the new agency as chairman of plans board.

Frisco Agencies

San Francisco, July 21.

Major shifts are taking place in Frisco offices of big agencies. The rundown:

Guild, Bascom & Bonfigli—Media buying for accounts serviced in agency's New York office, previously handled in Frisco, will now be centered in New York. But Lyn Gross gets additional responsibility as administrative head of the media department in Frisco. Creative activities on all accounts continues to be centered in Frisco under Board Chairman David Bascom. New creative administrator is William B. Franklin, who's being replaced as co-ordinating account executive on Ralston by Richard Tyler.

Foote, Cone & Belding—Vice-President William C. Matthews, out of New York, has been assigned to become general manager of agency's Frisco office, replacing John R. Little, who's being sent to another post.

Cunningham & Walsh—John B. McLaughlin, ex-marketing vice-president for Purex Corp. and ex-director of sales and advertising for Kraft Foods, has been named v.p. and director of marketing for the agency's Western Region. At the same time, Stanley T. Peterson, who's been v.p. and marketing director for the agency's Frisco office, has been appointed director of marketing planning for the agency's Western Region.

McCann-Erickson—Fredcrick H. McCrea, group supervisor on the California Packing Corp. (Del Monte label) and Diamond Walnut Growers accounts, has been named manager of the agency's Frisco branch.

New N. W. Ayer account eecutive, on the Hills Bros. coffee account, is Charles H. Brennan, Jr., from agency's Chicago office.

Geo. Schlatter's Prowl For All-Far East Talent On Dinah's Chevy Show

Tokyo, July 21.

NBC-TV's George Schlatter is combing Southeast Asia and the Pacific area for talent to guest on an all-Orient edition of the "Dinah Shore Show" to be presented in color on Nov. 11. Project is a followup to the all-Japanese Chevy show of last Feb. 1. Miss Shore will perform with the imported talent as well as act as mistress of ceremonies.

Schlatter expects to select one or two acts from Japan and one each from Hong Kong, Bangkok, the Philippines, Korea and Hawaii. He already has the Fiji military band in line. He originally expected to make the swing in one month, but last seen buried under Oriental formalities, he believed he'd have to extend his tour by two weeks.

He disclosed that there is a strong possibility that NBC will make a telefilm series in Japan. "I don't know what kind," he said, "but I have had a very exciting reaction to Tokyo. It's been tremendously stimulating. The situation lends itself to an original concept and original setting for American viewers."

Bob Horn Paroled

Philadelphia, July 21.

Bob Horn, former Philadelphia television disk jockey, was paroled from Holmesburg Prison after his wife and three daughters pleaded that they are in dire financial straits and needed what Horn could earn in an advertising job in Texas. The family pointed out that the job might not be open if Horn stayed much longer in jail.

Judge Vincent A. Carroll, who had sentenced Horn for drunken driving after convicting him in a non-jury trial in 1957, granted the parole. Horn had served three months and 10 days of his six months' sentence.

STAR-OWNED INDIES IN FASHION

The B & B Alumni Assn.

Through the years there have been three radio-tv kingpins at Benton & Bowles—Walter Craig, Les Harris and Tom McDermott. And by an odd coincidence, this summer will find the trio almost simultaneously shoving off permanently for distant climes (Craig to Florida, Harris to London, McDermott to Hollywood).

Craig left B&B for a partnership in Norman, Craig & Kummel agency. He's going into semi-retirement, residing in Sarasota, Fla. Harris left B&B to join NBC and later CBS Films. He leaves in a few weeks to reside in London as managing director of International Television Production Division of ITC. McDermott quit B & B and leaves for the Coast next week as exec veepee of Four Star Productions.

Some Mornings It Doesn't Even Pay to Get Up, FCC's Doerfer Finds

Washington, July 21.

All parties apparently got up on the wrong side of the bed last Thursday (16) as the Senate Communications Subcommittee ended hearings on legislation to regulate VHF boosters and community antenna systems.

The final session consisted mainly of edgy-tempered wrangling between Federal Communications Chairman John C. Doerfer and Subcommittee members.

Doerfer was hit by charges from Subcommittee Chairman John O. Pastore (D-R.I.) and Sen. Gale McGee (D-Wyo.) that FCC has been dragging its feet on problems posed by the two secondary tv services. Neither CATV nor VHF boosters have been regulated by FCC, although the two systems of bringing tv to more remote communities are in widespread use.

"We can't just sit here and throw up our hands and say it's none of our business," Pastore told Doerfer, referring to testimony that CATV has put local tv stations out of business. He suggested FCC "take the bull by the horns" and assert regulatory authority over both CATV and VHF boosters.

McGee termed FCC's policy on boosters an "attempt to administer by postponement" and a "forefeiture of responsibility." After previous decisions against authorizing boosters in the VHF band, FCC under Congressional pressure early this year reconsidered and offered legislative recommendations which would pave the way for licensing such operations.

Doerfer, for his part, took the line that FCC should remain aloof from such economic struggles as that between CATV and small town tv stations. He maintained that the Communications Act is couched in free enterprise concepts.

When Pastore pointed to the RCA Earnings Up 44% for 6 Mos.

RCA upped its first half earnings by 44% over 1958 and sales increased 17%, David Sarnoff, chairman of the board, and John L. Burns, prexy, revealed this week.

Profits after taxes were $19,400,000 on sales of $633,700,000, described as a new sales record for the first six months.

Earnings per common share rose 50% from 86c in the first half of 1958 to $1.29 for the same period this year.

Company profits, in the first half of last year, totalled $13,500,000 on sales of $542,600,000. Sales in the second quarter of this year came to $311,900,000 compared with $264,200,000 in the comparable 1958 period. Net profit after Federal income taxes amounted to $6,500.000 for the second quarter as compared with $4,500,000 for the same period last year—an increase of 44%. Common share earnings in the three months ended June 30 amounted to 41c compared with 27c in the comparable period last year—an increase of 52%.

'TV Image' Boys Get Rolling On Coin, Plot, Staff

Television Information Committee got an initial $270,000, also made plans to get the newly-named Television Information Organization under way by Oct. 1, 1959, and then mapped strategy to pick up a total annual budget of $700,000. At an organization-budget meeting in N. Y. last week, station and network execs assigned to the Committee got down to specifics on the budget and appointed three new sub-committees before it ended its one-day session.

NBC and CBS each contributed $75,000 to a network total of $195,000 for the first year of TIO, ABC, which insisted the contribution be in line with its lower network billing figures, gave $45,000. At this juncture, it was later reported, the entire TIO, to "improve tv's image," might have exploded if the other webs insisted that each of three networks contribute an equal $65,000. NBC, it's believed, would have gone along for even more than $75,000 since it was that web which first promoted the TIO concept. But CBS, which at that point might was an unknown quan-

WABC-TV's Upsurge In Biz With Second Quarter Profits Best in History

Upsurge of ABC-TV is being reflected also at the web's N. Y. flagship. WABC-TV reports a net profit of 13% higher in the second quarter of this year against the comparable period in '58. First quarter also was a shade higher than last year.

Station, which plays its figures close to its chest like most other outlets, finds itself in the best profit picture in its history. Each quarter thus far in '59 is a new profit high for the outlet, according to the brass.

Highlights of the flagship's local fall outlook includes: 7 to 7:30 syndication strip could consist of all first-runs this year. With the web eating into the 10:30 to 11 p.m. period, station will have to give up

HUNK-OF-THE-PIE EXTENDED TO TV

Hollywood, July 21.

The independent star-owned production company is becoming fashionable in television particularly as an expedient toward settlement of contract hassles between the star and the network or production company.

Latest case was CBS-TV's settlement of its differences with "Gunsmoke" star James Arness by awarding the actor's new company the production assignment on "Gunsmoke." Arness' still unnamed company will produce "Gunsmoke" in association with CBS Television. In addition, it will undertake to develop and produce other properties for the network.

Just a week earlier, Ziv settled a hot and heavy fracas with "Bat Masterson" star Gene Barry by agreeing to finance several pilots to be produced by Barry's new company, Barbety Enterprises. Ziv in this case couldn't cut Barry in on the series, already jointly owned by itself and partners Andy White & Frank Pittman. But it could and did set up Barry in business for himself, through his agents, Goldstone-Tobias.

Situation is getting to be chronic, in terms of television making a star virtually from scratch, with the actor then itching for compensation more commensurate with his new stature. It's the old case of the "unknown," or semi-known, scaled at $1,200 or so a week, hitting it big and demanding more money. Or in the case he's reached a high level through salary hikes, finding a way of keeping it from going for taxes.

Similar situation caused Clint Walker to do a walkout from Warner Bros. last season, resulting in his replacement by Ty Hardin. That worked out for the best for all concerned, since with Walker's return, WB was able to keep Hardin on the air in "Bronco" as well as restoring Walker and "Cheyenne" to ABC. On Walker's side, he got more loot and a chance to do several features.

Hugh O'Brian, star of "Wyatt Earp," did some public grousing last year about his contract, but he was iron-bound under his deal, and some arrangements were made by producer Bob Sisk to give him a chance for more outside work.

Arness' current pact still had several months to run; it wasn't due to expire until completion of the 39 "Gunsmoke" stanzas now filming for next season. But the actor had threatened to exit "Gunsmoke" at the end of his pact unless CBS came across with a hunk of the pie, so the early deal was the result.

Friendly's Plum On News-Pubaffairs

After considerable speculation for three weeks and some fancy dickering on the part of CBS-TV, it's been settled that Fred Friendly will act as executive producer for the 12 prime time news-public affairs specials planned by the network between next fall and September of 1960.

It was previously reported by the web that Friendly was definitely scheduled to produce two of the 12 shows himself—which he will still do, despite his new over-

D.C. Reacts to Humphrey Nix On 'Face the Nation' as 'Cheap Publicity Stunt'; Backwash on 'Equal Time'?

By LES CARPENTER

Washington, July 21.

To Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn.), a highly verbose Presidential possibility accustomed to having the last several thousand words, "Face the Nation" didn't face the facts.

And therein lays the stormiest "equal time" interlude of the month.

It started Thursday (16) when CBS v.p. Sig Mickelson "regretfully . . . upon the advice of counsel" cancelled Humphrey's scheduled Sunday (19) appearance on "Face the Nation," saying his lawyers believed Humphrey "would be held to be a (Presidential) candidate within the meaning of Sec. 315."

Not so, roared back Humphrey as he filed an immediate protest with CBS by telephone—and then kept talking. Humphrey declared he isn't an announced Presidential candidate until he announces—and he hasn't.

Complicating matters, NBC disagreed completely and skedded Humphrey for "Today" the next day, Friday (17). NBC said its lawyers didn't consider Humphrey to be a Presidential candidate under Sec. 315 bugaboo.

On "Today," Humphrey swatted CBS, contending he was kicked off "Face" to dramatize the "high-pressure lobby" for legislation re-

Agencies Pitch For $3,000,000 Demos Account

The Democratic party, which in the last presidential election had a hard time lining up an advertising agency, has already screened the pitches of more than half a dozen ad shops as regards the 1960 national elections.

Demo national committee chairman Paul Butler and radio-tv advisor J. Leonard Reinsch were in N. Y. last week to view presentations of agency candidates for the account which could bill close to $3,000,000.

Agencies visited were Norman, Craig & Kummel, which handled the campaign in '56; Kastor, Hilton, Chesley, Clifford & Atherton; Doyle, Dane, Bernbach; Al Paul Lefton; Geyer, Morey, Madden & Ballard; Doner & Peck; Fletcher Richards, Calkins & Holden.

Butler hopes to name an agency by October. Four years ago the Democrats were without an agency until January of election year while the Republicans were wheeling and dealing in network and spot buys through BBDO. It was said that most the big ad shops were afraid to take the Democratic business for fear of irritating Republican clients (and there's a notable lack of big billers in the list pitching the Democrats now).

Norman, Craig & Kummel finally stepped forward after losing the Revlon account. Personnel left dangling by the loss of business were tossed into the political fray in the interests of Stevenson &

Milt Meyers, John Walsh Tapped by NBC, CBS To Coordinate TV Specials

Handling the specials, if only because of their sheer weight and the persistent fact that talent (both of the on-camera and production variety) remains hard to line up, has created additional jobs at both CBS-TV and NBC-TV.

Milt Meyers, an established unit manager for NBC-TV, has been shifted by Herb Sussan, NBC's director of tv specials, to coordinator of specials. Besides, Meyers, it's understood that Sussan is negotiating with one or two other executives to become special coordinators under his aegis.

And last week, John Walsh was named as coordinator of special programs under Richard Lewine at CBS-TV. Walsh, who has been manager of special projects in the web's press repartment for better than three years, got the nod for the shift from press to programming last week.

Vote on Harris Bill Today (Wed.)

Washington, July 21.

After lengthy debate on compromise "equal time" legislation Monday (20), the House Commerce Committee postponed vote on the Harris Bill until Wednesday.

Harris predicted the bill will be passed then, but there'll be votes against it by a vocal committee minority not wanting to give broadcasters any additional freedom.

The group numbers about five congressmen who complain they got some type of raw deal from broadcasters during their past political careers and want radio-tv owners under "equal time" control. One committee member said of broadcasters: "experience has taught me not to trust 'em."

Harris reports no known sympathy within his committee for a bill more broad than that under consideration: one exempting from Sec. 315 coverage only "any newscast (including news interviews) or any on-the-spot coverage of newsworthy events."

Harris' original bill freed from Sec. 315 from "any news, news interview, news documentary, on-the-spot coverage of newsworthy events, panel discussion or similar type program." But Harris had to junk most of those words to get a bill he felt his committee would accept. As he said: "the important thing is to get a bill which can pass." It means leaving panels and documentaries within Sec. 315's tangled web.

VARIETY -ARB FEATURE CHART

VARIETY's weekly feature chart, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, covers two markets. Each week the 10 top rated features for the two markets will be listed.

Factors which would assist distributors, agencies, stations and advertisers in determining the effectiveness of a feature show in a specific market have been included in this VARIETY chart. Listed below is such pertinent information regarding features as their stars, release year, original production company and the present distributor included wherever possible along with the title. Attention should be paid to such factors as the time and day, the high and low ratings for the measured feature period and share of audience, since these factors reflect the effectiveness of the feature and audience composition, i.e., a late show at 11:15 p.m. would hardly have any children viewers, but its share of audience may reflect dominance in that time period. In the cities where stations sell their feature programming on a multi stripped basis utilizing the same theatrical throughout the week a total rating for the total number of showings for the week is given, the total rating not taking into account the duplicated homes factor. Barring unscheduled switches in titles the listed features for the particularly rated theatrical filmed show are as accurate as could be ascertained.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Ed Sullivan Show

Filmed at the "Festival of Two Worlds" at Spoleto, Ed Sullivan's show on CBS-TV Sunday night (19) gave an interesting glimpse at some of the musical and dramatic productions being presented in the Italian town under the direction of Gian Carlo Menotti. While the one-hour stanza was necessarily a fast o.o., the coverage was done in excellent taste. Standout were the shots of Spoleto's piazzas, stone staircases, cathedrals and theatres, which were the backgrounds of the various turns.

The accent of the stanza was on the longhair side, but the most striking bit was the presentation of operatic singer Eileen Farrell doing a socko jazz vocal on "Sunny Side of the Street" with members of the Louis Armstrong combo. She was filling in, more than adequately, for Satchmo who was taken ill in Spoleto. Later in the show, Miss Farrell, shown in her own metier, delivering a Verdi aria in an amphitheatre setting.

Sir John Gielgud, reading a solioquy from "Richard The Second," was effective in his brief slot. A short sketch from a Tennessee Williams play, with a cast of U.S. players, was flavorsome, even if somewhat mysterious. An excerpt from a Donizetti opera, "Duke of Alba," slowed down the show's pace as did the overmannered singing of an Italian thrush, Ornelle Vavone.

Several ballet routines also were spotlighted on the show, the best being "Romeo and Juliet," with Nora Kaye and Scott Douglas. The bit from Jerome Robbins' "Ballet U.S.A." and John Butler's "Five Senses" were okay in the modern vein.

Sullivan was also on film, handling the intros and one interview with Menotti. Herm.

U.S. Steel Hour

The one about the frustrated mother who's out to hold her daughter in her own unattained movie star image is about as new to dramatics as the wheel is to transportation. "The Pink Burro," however, adds a number of new turns to this old melodramatic route, all illogical and all winding up in emotional blind alleys. It's as feeble an offering as one is likely to encounter on a supposedly "prestige" hour-long "live" television program.

Rescuing the hour from almost total medoiocrity was the work of June Havoc in the central role. Miss Havoc took an unlikely, unsympathetic character and gave it all she could, which was considerable. But even an actress with the vigor of Miss Havoc cannot lend substance to such an incomplete pivotal character as was dreamed up by playwright Jean Riley and embellished by adaptor Kay Arthur.

Struggling through the motivational maze to earn a difficult buck were some very capable players. None were even remotely successful. Edward Andrews lurked about aimlessly as a bewildered boob of a father-husband. Jane Withers had nothing tangible to grab hold of as a bland sister to the strange Miss Havoc. Jan Norris was required to posture prettily and weep periodically as the daughter-victim who is freed from maternal bondage in the anticipated last-minute sensible gesture by the mother. Others in the cast, most of whom served no useful purpose other than filling stage space and padding the hour, were Elizabeth Wilson, Camilo Carrau, Marc Sullivan, Gene Hackman and Ronald Nicholas.

The Theatre Guild production had the artificial atmosphere of studio confinement. Only in the relaxed attitude of the leading lady did Paul Bogart's direction spring to life. Exec producer George Kondolf whipped together something of a dud on this attempt at enlivening a dismal television summer with some in-the-flesh theatrics. Tube.

Court of Human Relations

Human relations is such a vital, complex, dramatic phenomenon in real life. In contrast, how relatively dead the subject appears on A. L. Alexander's "Court of Human Relations," stripped on NBC-TV from 2:30 to 3 p.m.

Show caught for a followup review was Friday (17). Coming before the "court" was a family, a truck driver, his wife and teenage son. It was a troubled family whose crisis was reflected in the son's decision to quit high school, a decision concurred in by the mother and opposed by the father.

What robbed the program of its drama was mediator Alexander's persistence in taking up abstract issues with his guest panelists time and again rather than focusing the panel's attention on the family crisis. Alexander, too, oftentimes became wordy and ponderous without shedding much light.

The inherent drama is in the people before the "court." And in this outing the applicant family on the whole was given the brush in favor of foggy intellectualizations.

A word, too, about good taste. If adults want to appear before the "court," that's their business. Grant them the best of motives. Perhaps they have a mission, to speak freely about their problem so that other people watching the show will gain insights and perhaps avoid their pitfalls. But why subject a kid in a mess to the glare of the screen. (Show purports that the applicants before the board are the real McCoy.)

As guest panelists novelist Fannie Hurst and Robert James McGracken, Minister of Riverside Church of N.Y., came off best. Walter J. Degnan, principal of DeWitt Clinton H.S., came in as a consultant. Dr. Ralph E. Davis also was a panelist. Degnan and Dr. Davis didn't come off with the same sparkle.

Mediator Alexander, in summarizing the sentiments of the "court" on the use of corporal punishment in the schools, seemed off base. Alexander said the sense of the panelists was that the use of corporal punishment was a local school affair, to be decided by local school officials. This viewer for one didn't hear the panelists say that on the show. Most of them said that hitting the kid wasn't the way to teach him. Corporal punishment was part of the issue of Friday's case. Horo.

ST. PAUL POPS CONCERTS

With Bob Ryan, Margaret Grant, Mary Lou Goodwin, Bobby Macy, Leo Kopp orch, Can-Can Skaters, Vocal Chorus
Producer: Ken Barry
Director: Bill Sears
30 Mins.; Wed. (9), 8:30 p.m.
EMIL JANBRIC CONSTRUCTION CO.
KSTP-TV, Mpls.-St. Paul

This telecast of the opening of the St. Paul municipal Auditorium's 23rd annual summer pops season of three nights-a-week concerts-ice shows, sponsored by the city of St. Paul, the St. Paul Civic Opera Assn., the St. Paul Musicians Assn. and the St. Paul Skating Club, marked the first time one of the concerts ever has been on video. Produced skillfully by KSTP-TV which picked up a bankroller for it, it not only stacked up as a pleasing show for dialers, but also undoubtedly must have been a great publicity medium for the series.

While the concerts' talents are largely recruited from the city's own ranks, the participants impressed in this initial offering as entirely professional in calibre. The skating chorus of 20 pretty girls from the St. Paul Skating Club executed precision and other numbers in a manner which would have done credit to one of the big ice shows, and soloists Margaret Grant, Mary Lou Goodwin and Bobby Macy did themselves proud with their dancing and other difficult routines on the silver blades. The 50-piece orchestra's rendition of a "Gigi" medley was pleasant to the ears and the mixed chorus of 30 was heard to advantage in the "Day Is Done" opener. It all added up to firstrate sight and sound.

In his narrator-emcee role, personable KSTP-TV staffer Bob Ryan contributed a commendably workmanlike job, describing the pop season and interviewing guests. Camera work, some of it showing the large audience and the Auditorium layout, and direction were topdrawer.

Since the 1936 start the St. Paul pops has drawn a paid attendance of 1,750,000 through last season. Last year's spectators came from 39 states, three Canadian provinces and 13 foreign countries. Rees.

U. S.-RUSSIA TRACK MEET

With Marty Glickman, Don Dunphy, Bob Richards, Bud Palmer, Jesse Abramson Producer: Perry Smith
Director: Jack Dillon
Writer: Barney Nagler
90 Mins., Sun. (19), 4:30 p.m.
GENERAL MILLS, PHILLIES
NBC-TV, from Phila. (tape & live)
(Knox Reeves, Werman & Schorr)

This sports event had an implicit value because of the Russian-American competitive angles, but NBC-TV failed to capitalize on it quite fully enough. Missing was any coverage of the track & field fight between the distaffers. The men got plenty of time, and that was just fine, but when a woman can fling a shot-put 55 feet, just a foot shorter than one of the male competitors, that deserves tv's attention. Besides, the women make good material on television; they even eat Wheaties.

Also lacking on the 90-minute tape and live wrapup was a real sense of cohesiveness. The tapes of the main field events on Saturday were nicely integrated with the live field events of Sunday, when the telecast was made, yet somehow the full force of this rugged international competition was not brought home by the various commentators.

On the actual play-by-play, Marty Glickman was tops. On field interviews, Bob Richards and Bud Palmer, who was seen more rarely, were excellent. Less can be said for the verbose play-by-plays of the fourth member of the NBC-Wheaties-Phillies team, Don Dunphy. Incidentally, a by-product heroine of the telecast was a handsome young American female (last name, Husted) who did the Russian translations during the interviews by Richards and Palmer. Her ease and winningness classed her with the pros.

Several major events were aired, most of them field events, since things like javelin (once cut off in the middle of a throw for a commercial), discus, weights and high jumps, etc., were kind of strung out through the day and, consequently, hard to recapture on video. Of the races, they were all rather exciting, and handled adequately by the NBC cameras.

Whether two advertising products as disparate as Wheaties cereal and Phillies cigars could both fully benefit from such a sports program it is tough to say. It seems that more adults would be interested in the meet than kids. But, probably counterbalancing this, is that Wheaties had fine blurbs (delivered by Richards) and the cigar commercials were, at very most, painfully pedestrian. Art.

EXPEDITION

Producer: V. Fae Thomas
Writer: P. T. Furst
30 Mins., Wed., 7 p.m.
KCOP-TV, L.A.

There's no better vantage point from which to see a cobra charmed than a cozy living room armchair. "Expedition" is the newest in a long line of travel-adventure shows which have transformed quiet Americans into eager world-wide nomads minus the discomforts of European plumbing, primitive transportation by Indian elephant, and bug-infested tropical jungles. From the sanity of home, the world rarely looked more fascinating than it does on this new program.

The show is off to a flying start with its premiere episode, a journey by film to the wilds of the Burmese interior. Enchanting footage, particularly that of a native "priestess" in an extraordinary death-defying traditional ritual with a king cobra, keeps the viewer alert throughout.

The new series is produced by V. Fae Thomas, written by P. T. Furst, and hosted by noted explorer Norman Dyhrenfurth, who appeared in spots as if he'd have felt more secure at the peak of Mt. Everest than in front of a KCOP camera. These opening night jitters figure to vanish, and certainly few are better equipped to put in a few innocuous words about expeditions than Dyhrenfurth. The "live" portion of the program is directed adeptly by William Stierwalt, but the star of this show is unquestionably the informative, interesting film. It's a pleasant way to absorb obscure facts about parts of the world that never heard of garbage disposals or one-cent sales. Tube.

JOAN FAIRFAX SHOW

With All-Girl Orch, Van Dorn Sisters, Don Gillies & Connie Campbell; Dino Vale, guest.
Producer-Director: Bill Davis
Writer: Sol Ilsom
30 Mins.: Mon. (6) 8:30 p.m.
MATINEE CIGARETS
CBS, from Toronto
(Cockfield-Brown)

Signed up on option for two years by the Canadian Broadcasting Corp., Joan Fairfax has her own show for the next 13 weeks, with the alternate sponsorship of Matinee Cigarets and Texaco. Series goes to 40 CBC-TV stations and is a summer replacement of "Cross-Canada Hit Parade." As hostess-singer-pianist, the blond Miss Fairfax, in her teeoff, is using an 11-girl orchestra of violins, cello, harp and piano (with Samuel Hersenhoren doing the off-camera batoning and not billed); the Van Dorn Sisters, a harmony trio; Gillies & Campbell in for ballroom dancing and Dino Vale as the male guestar.

Miss Fairfax naturally gets top billing in this well-mannered, all-girl novelty show, plus the production values of Bill Davis but he could, in future, give the girl band some of the camera closeups for their solo stepouts. As it is, he concentrates on Miss Fairfax throughout in long shots and head-and-shoulders.

At the white grand, Miss Fairfax not only has her own first show in the teeoff; she proves that she can belt out a song in contrast to her ballad style singing. She has also lost her previous coyness and is now a talkative actress with style. She started out with "Every Day Will be a Dream" to her own accompaniment; later did an undulating duet of "I Get a Kick" with Dino Vale; another duet with Vale of "Two Sleepy People."

Miss Fairfax was also on for a solo of "Just in Time," with backgrounding of the all-girl orch. The brunet Van Dorn trio, who really are sisters, sing "It Might as Well be Spring," complete with ambulatory styling, and encore with "Them Their Eyes," with Miss Fairfax fronting and all in good voice.

Gillies & Campbell were on for a ballroom ballet, with lifts, to "I Could Have Danced All Night" and a hot cha-cha-cha; once again show that they have not lost their salesmanship and are even better than last season. Miss Fairfax finished with the surefire "Melancholy Baby." Obviously, it's "The Joan Fairfax Show" and she is featured, but her surrounding cast has been astutely chosen by Davis and is notable for his tasteful backgrounds and gownings. All that Miss Fairfax must do in the ensuing weeks is keep up her good work to make her show a continued success. McStay.

WHO KNOWS?

With James Bannerman, Walter Kenyon, John Lunn; Glyn Daniel, guest
30 Mins.; Fri.; 9 p.m.
CBC-TV, from Toronto

This new summer object-identification quiz on Canadian Broadcasting Corp. network looks promising, despite its formidable array of archaeologists. It's spotted between a light half-hour film and "Country Hoedown" but should hold many viewers.

Emcee is erudite, toothy ex-prizefighter James Bannerman; panelists Walter Kenyon and John Lunn, both bearded tomb tappers from Royal Ontario Museum; and guest was Glyn Daniel, eminent British dig man. He's also moderator of the BBC-TV quiz "Animal, Vegetable or Mineral?" now six years old. This week's guest is Dr. Margaret Mead, w.k. U.S. anthropologist.

Daniel wet his feet by goofing on a first-century Italian gladiator's helmet, which he claimed, must be post-Renaissance. Lunn got it easily, then pulled a boner by guessing that an Egyptian ivory wand was an Eskimo snow knife. Nobody doped that one.

Christine Jorgensen got into the act, by remote proxy, when Bannerman asked if that entertainer reminded them of a displayed Nigerian fertility goddess. All were baffled until he explained that the latter, really a god, had become confused with a same-name goddess. And when Daniel turned the tables by producing a little old Spanish doll for the others to identify, and made it whistle, Bannerman feared possible repercussions from the Musicians' Union.

All were relaxed, no one flaunted erudition, and the conversation was cultivated rather than cultural. Production was a credit to Vincent Tovell. And Bannerman, quite a deadpan wit, nobly refrained — even when his guest misguessed — from any reference to "Daniel in the lion's den." Gord.

OH BOY!

With Tony Hall, John Barry Seven, Cudley Dudley, others
Producer: Jack Good
Director: Rita Gillespie
Writer: Trevor Peacock
30 Mins., Thurs., 7:30 p.m.
Participating
ABC-TV (kinescope by Associated Broadcasting, England)

ABC-TV of the United States, to save money until it gets something better to fill the Thursday, 7:30-8 time, and maybe to give the ideas that it is in support of the international cultural movement, imported this 30-minute "Oh Boy!" kinescope dud from ABC of Great Britain. It premiered on the American tv network last week (16), and it was a regrettable imitation of something the English learned from Americans—rock 'n' roll.

There were some Negro singers on the initialer who sounded pretty good—or, to put it another way, seemed to sound pretty good; the sound quality on the imported kinnie was awful. So was the sight portion. (The audio was tinny and the print was flaky.) And, because the program was made under alien aegis. ABC-TV (the domestic one) had trouble inserting commercials, since it interrupted the continuity.

It seems the British instrumentalists had a fair grasp of the r & r beat and the r & r stylized body movements but the vocalizing was generally awkward. And whether American teenagers like their music dished up by precious short-shorted females, of which there were many on "Oh Boy!", is anybody's guess—anyway, it ain't like Dick Clark, and ABC-TV shouldn't get up its hopes too high. Art.

UNITED NATIONS IN TRANSITION

With Dr. Robert Hayton, moderator; panelists Norman Cousin, tor; panelists Norman Cousins, shall, Max Beer
Producer: Amram Novak
Director: Frank Jacoby
60 Mins., Sun. (19), 2 p.m.
WABC-TV, New York

The UN came in for a thorough going-over by a group of knowledgeable individuals on WABC-TV Sunday (19). Titled "The United Nations in Transition" it gave viewers fortunate enough to be home an uptodate picture of what was happening to the complexion of the world organization founded in 1945.

Panel consisted of Norman Cousins, editor of the Saturday Review; Dr. Robert M. MacIver, professor emeritus of sociology at Columbia Univ. and author of "The Nations and the United Nations"; C. B. Marshall, visiting research scholar at Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, and Dr. Max Beer, UN correspondent of Swiss daily, Neue Zuercher. Moderator was Dr. Robert Hayton, associate prof of political science at Hunter College.

Dr. Hayton opened the hour-long discussion with a careful account of the progress of the UN, tracing the organization's handling of such ticklish situations as the Palestine question, Korean War and the Suez Crisis. His commentary was backed up with interesting news clips of UN meeting, anent these questions plus other visual aids, all contributing to the lucid hour.

Experts advanced many theories about how best to improve the General Assembly and Security Council. It was noted that the complexion of the UN had changed radically since its inception. Today it has a large representation from both Africa and South Asia and appears to be a platform for propaganda purposes rather than constructive uses and that its Secretary General is expected to be a veritable wizard and diplomat's diplomat.

The "cold war" and nuclear weapons also have changed the spirit behind the organization and a suggestion was made that there be a revision conference on the UN. Viewers were left with the depressing impression that what was lacking in the UN today was a feeling of common purpose and common trust.

Too bad "The United Nations in Transition" was telecast on a Sunday afternoon when most mankind was sunning itself on the beach. This META produced show under the auspices of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace certainly deserved a better hour.

Program, by the way, closed with a disclaimer by the station that the views expressed were those of the speakers. It was indeed an imbecilic signoff on the part of ABC-TV's flagship station. Only a bare-bottomed citizen of the Pleistocene ice age could have taken umbrage at the remarks uttered on this program. Rans.

VARIETY-ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top ten network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top ten syndicated shows in the same particular market. This week ten different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top ten shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting, competitive programming in the particular slot, etc., is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 150 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top ten network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U. S.

THE JO STAFFORD SHOW

With Paul Weston, Teddy Johnson, Roger Price, Lionel Blair, Jean Muir, Lionel Blair Dancers, Barney Gilbraith Singers, Jack Parnell Orch
Director: Bill Ward
Dance Director: Lionel Blair
60 Mins., Sat. 8 p.m.
ATV Network Production, from London

The telefilmed Jo Stafford Show stood out as one of the brightest stellar entries in this particular field of tv entertainment and was convincing proof of what can happen when a show's built around a real pro, with a ton of experience to set off her natural ability and personality. There was never any doubt that this was the Jo Stafford show. She seemed to be on hand continuously, yet, in retrospect, she and the producer gave the rest of the cast ample opportunity to show off their wares.

The 60 minutes got away to a gimmick start, opening in the foyer of ATV House and then proceeding to show the star and Jack Parnell's orchestra, informally dressed, at a disk session as Miss Stafford gave with "The Gentleman Is A Dope" and "That Old Devil Moon." This sesh also introduced Lionel Blair and Jean Muir in a trick photog dance and Teddy Johnson and Miss Stafford singing "The Moment I Saw You," a ditty that they once recorded as a duet though 6,000 miles apart. Next skein of the show largely consisted of Miss Stafford singing in that warm, nostalgic manner of hers. She introduced her husband, Paul Weston, who accompanied her as she sang a number of his songs such as "Shrimp Boats" and "I Should Care." A standout spot in this third of the program was the carefree dancing of Lionel Blair, Jean Muir and the Blair dancers in a gaily filmed scene on Westminster Bridge with the dancers as GI's and their girl friends.

Finally, the show switched to a Stage Door Canteen which was the only false note in the spectacular. Nostalgia is all very well but the sight of Johnson as a matelot singing excellently such oldies as "White Cliffs Of Dover" and "Wish Me Luck As You Wave Me Goodbye" set the clock back too many years and to very little purpose. However, it gave Miss Stafford a chance to put over "I'll Walk Alone" and "I'll Be Seeing You" and also introduced Roger Price, the zany doodling artist in a most amusing lecture on bird watching.

Against some colorful decor by Tom Lingwood, Bill Ward's direction was fluent and showed every evidence of long, painstaking rehearsal which certainly paid off. Miss Stafford, Weston, Ward and Parnell must have had many huddles and they paid off in a high-standard hour. Rich.

FAREWELL MY CITY

With Michael Hordern, Pamela Alan, John Dimech, Ishaq Bux, Laurence Hardy, Robert Lang, Noel Dyson
Writer: Dorothy Lang
Adaptation: Michael Voysey
Producer: Brandon Acton-Bond
90 Mins., Sunday (12); 8:45 p.m.
BBC-TV, from West of England

Michael Voysey's adaptation of Dorothy Lang's "Farewell My City" has strong dramatic values which could have been enhanced with some background shots of the Middle Eastern city in which the play was enacted. However, all the action was confined to a couple of interiors which had a stifling effect, not entirely out of character with the subject itself.

The pivotal character of the play is Michael Hordern in the role of a political adviser to the city of Sheman. As the play opens he's packing his bags and is planning to head for England and retirement. During his long stint in the East he had taught the native the elementary principles of democracy and justice; now his teachings were being put to a critical and emotional test. His house boy, who had been with the family since infancy, had been promised a lift "across the mountains" away from dead city of Sheman when Hordern and his wife left the country. But the boy is wanted as a defense witness in a murder trial and the politician insists that he remains behind. This leads to major clashes of principle between Hordern and his wife.

Brandon Acton-Bond's production confidently maintained the interest, although neither of the principal characters was completely sympathetic. The husband, a stickler for tradition, was unyielding, even though it could mean separation; the wife, on her side, could equally be unreasonable knowing that what she demanded was in complete conflict with her husband's principles. Even the boy himself, likeable though he was, resorted to murder to avoid being held as a witness.

In what has now become a familiar role for him, Michael Hordern played the politician in tight-lipped unrelaxed style. Pamela Alan's portrayal of the wife was sincere but with heavy emotional overtones. Laurence Hardy, a film director house-guesting with the family while filming a documentary on Sheman, became involved with the wife's plot to help the boy and, in consequence, found himself in conflict with the husband. Myro.

HENRY IV

With Paul Scofield, Margaretta Scott, Andre van Gyseghem, Martin Miller, Joy Parker, Derek Godfrey, Denis Quilley, Bernard Kay, Brian Smith, John Southworth, Gordon Phillott
Producer: John Harrison
Writer: Pirandello
Translation: Edward Storer
90 Mins., Tues., 9:30 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Pirandello's intellectual exercise in what constitutes madness and what doesn't made a powerful addition to BBC-TV's "World Theatre" series, albeit offering unlikely viewing for the masses. Produced with scrupulous care, counting admirable sets and effective use of sound among its many virtues, it suffered one dramatic defect: the outside world's way of life wasn't depicted with sufficient effect to provide the necessary, pointed contrast with the claustrophobic existence of the actor (Paul Scofield) who has deliberately let it be thought for years that he's insane and believes himself to be King Henry IV.

Scofield's fine performance dominated the proceedings, the actor getting utmost worth from every line of dialog and admirably crossing the line between pseudo-madness and sanity. As the woman he loved and her new consort, Margaretta Scott and Andre van Gyseghem were excellent, too, while Martin Miller as the psychiatrist who also comes to visit the "King" and remains to learn the truth scored with a restrainedly comic reading. All other players, chosen with care, came up to demands. Erni.

MR. BROWNE COMES HOME

With Donald Pleasence, Gwen Watford, John Arnatt, Nigel Lambert, Paul Castaldini, Avril Conquest, Edward Dentith, Anthony Snell, Barrie Ingham, Philip Broadley
Director: David Boisseau
Writer: Paul Jones
60 Mins., Fri., 9 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion, from London

Writer Paul Jones, penning a sequel to his own successful "Fate and Mr. Browne" which was aired last year, dodged all pitfalls and came up with a firstrate job, keeping faith with his situation and, more importantly, his characters. And the chief character, the titular Mr. Browne, is a wonderfully well observed human being deserving to rank high in the creations of fiction.

The piece is more of a chronicle than a drama, its main conflict deriving subtly from clash of class than from anything else. Browne (Donald Pleasence) is a shy, 40-year-old, unsure man who clings to a somewhat pseudo military background and bearing to give himself some kind of stature. He owns a suburban house wherein lodges Anna Cooksley (Gwen Watford) who is separated from her husband Geoffrey (John Arnatt). Browne falls in love with Anna, whose two sons (Nigel Lambert, Paul Castaldini) look askance at the suburbanite. Though Anna returns Browne's affection to a degree, she realizes that marriage wouldn't work. And refusing reconciliation with her husband, she departs for her native Italy alone.

Scenes between Browne and the boys and Browne and the upper-class husband were intensely effective, capturing an awkwardness and never-the-twain-shall-meet atmosphere in masterly style. Throughout the emphasis was placed on Browne, which meant that actor Pleasence had to carry a lot of weight. He carried it effortlessly, trotting out his trite little sayings and often being a bit of a bore without ever losing sympathy. Gwen Watford gave a sympathetic portrayal of Anna, though she was a bit free with the gentle smile. While the two boys played like veterans. Production throughout was excellent. Erni.

THE NAKED LADY

With Andrew Osborn, Lana Morris, Daphne Anderson, Richard Pearson, Patrick Throughton, Robert Urquhart, Charles Morgan, Martin Boddey, others
Writer: Duncan Ross
Producer: Campbell Logan
30 Mins., Monday (13); 9:30 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

A four-part serial by Duncan Ross, "The Naked Lady" shapes as good suspense drama. The plot was quickly established, but it took some time to bring the main characters on to the scene.

The principal setting is a fishing village on the south coast. In the local inn a mystery woman is found hanging from a beam in her room. It looked like suicide, but the police medico insists it's a case of murder. Scotland Yard is brought in to help establish the identity of the woman and Andrew Osborn, as a detective-inspector, traces her roommate Lana Morris, who works in the same night club in which the dead girl was formerly employed.

The first episode was smoothly directed and a good all-round cast gave some credibility to the proceedings. Film excerpts were used to advantage in giving the subject a wider canvas. Myro.

CONCERTO DI PROSA

(Prose Concert)
With Enrico Maria Salerno, Giancarlo Sbragia
30 Mins., Sat., 10 p.m.
RAI-TV, from Rome

New and presumably experimental show, obviously inspired by some similar (Stateside) ventures in the legit field, consists of readings of suggested dramatic items by two of Italy's best young actors, Enrico Maria Salerno and Giancarlo Sbragia. The two alternate in announcing and "acting" out their material, said to be culled from "thousands of letters" sent in with suggestions, with each in turn taking on material best suited to his personality.

While the dramatic impact is undoubtedly great and the effectiveness of the various readings, also thanks to the undoubted ability of Salerno and Sbragia, undiscussed, the following of such a show on the one-channeled RAI-TV operation is more in doubt. It's for the afficionado, who will relish such items as Salerno's extremely effective excerpting from Rostand's "Cyrano de Bergerac," in which he mimes all roles as he reads them from his podium, but it's very questionable if the general Italian video public will last through the half-hour presentation.

Slotting of show on popular Saturday night, immediately after a high-rated and lightweight musical-variety show, also appears a mistake. A different time and day would be more suitable in order not to jar low and medium-brow viewers with such highbrow fare. Hawk.

THE CASE BEFORE YOU

Writers: Geoffrey Bellman, John Whitney
Director: David Willmott
Producer: Elwyn Jones
30 Mins., Monday (13); 8:45 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

A "typical day" in a magistrate's court anywhere in England is featured in this new BBC series. Within the half-hour time span some dozen offenders are dealt with; the cases are mainly of a petty nature, but the procedure of the courts and the contrast in the offenses makes it an interesting and absorbing program.

One offender is a common prostitute, entrusted to the care of a probation officer, and another is a religious crank who had waylaid people in the street trying to persuade them to go to church. There was a Greek drunk whose case had to be deferred until the arrival of an interpreter, an elderly man who accosted a girl in a park and posed as a policeman, and a young Teddy Boy caught with a flick knife. There was another woman who was found trying to photograph a witness in the court for a continental magazine and for this she received the maximum penalty of a fine of $140.

The magistrate, who was only heard and not seen, dealt with the offenders briskly, showed firmness and sympathy and carefully explained the legal procedure to the offenders. A long cast of professional actors was recruited for the succession of minor roles. Myro.

NICK OF THE RIVER

With George Baker, Martin Wyldeck, Lane Meddick, Eric Nicholson, Michael Nightingale, Frank Sieman, Sydney Vivian, Emrys James, Edward Cast, Edward Malin
Director: Bill Hitchcock
Writer: Jack Roffey
30 Mins., Mon., 8 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion from London

There's a change of background but not much change of pattern in "Nick Of The River," nine-strong once-a-week skein. It's established cops-and-robbers stuff, staged this time on and around London's River Thames. But lest the contributory importance of the setting and atmosphere be underrated, let it be added that the first episode under review gained considerable lift therefrom. And, additionally, a good attempt was made to make the characterization of the River Police down-to-earth. All in all the series looks promising, if a shade prosy and in need of pace-quickening.

The yarns are based on the reminiscences of Ex-Detective Inspector D. H. C. Nixon, played in businesslike fashion by George Baker. Curtain-upper had the 'tec hounding (or, on water, sharking?) a couple of lead-bar thieves, without over-resort to melodramatics. Construction allowed for introduction of some solid character cameos, while the marriage of prefilmed and studio material was well handled. Erni.

THE SUBMARINE MENACE

With Neville Barker, Admiral Jerauld Wright, Rear-Admiral G. B. H. Fawkes
Director: Jim Pople
Writer: Neville Barker
15 Mins., Mon., 10:45 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion, from London

Without adding much to common knowledge—the Russians have a fleet of 450 submarines, and counteraction in the event of war would be tough—this 15-minute program did its job of summing up the situation succinctly by using film clips, straight-at-viewer address, and a couple of interviews with naval experts, one U. S., one British (retired). It was scarcely reassuring, but the facts couldn't allow it it much optimism or complacency. Wherein lay its great virtue.

Neville Barker earns credit for a salutary little item, not only as writer but as principal on-screen character. Direction was competent. Erni.

FULL HOUSE

With Roy Ward Dickson
Director: Tig Roe
Producers: Roy and Shirley Dickson
30 Mins., Thurs., 7:30 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion, from London

A straigtforward quiz game of the simplest kind, shifted to the network from a local station, "Full House" is adequate for rainy summer evenings. Idea is that two engaged couples are fed with general knowledge questions, and points are awarded according to the correctness or otherwise of each individual's answers—with forfeits or compensations if he's wrong when she's right, and so on. Prizes consist of furniture and such suited to the needs of the engaged.

Quizmaster Roy Ward Dickson has an easy enough personality and an uncomplicated chore. Production is straightforward. Erni.

IF YOU LOVED ME

With Helen Cherry, Michael Goodliffe, John Cairney, Dilys Laye, Barbara Everest, Georgina Cookson, Jane Grahame
Writer: Elspeth Eric
Producer: Sydney Newman
Director: Jack Dixon
65 Mins., Sunday (12); 10 p.m.
ABC-TV, from Birmingham

All the female characters in Elspeth Eric's comedy have one common philosophy: the ultimate aim in a woman's life is to get married. Spread over 65 minutes, that theme becomes tedious by repetition and there was hardly enough sparkle in the dialog or diversion in the development to relieve the monotony. In other words, this ABC "Armchair Theatre" entry was only a so-so attraction.

Dilys Laye played a young girl madly in love with John Cairney, a French cartoonist. Her price is marriage, but he prefers to settle for a long weekend in Capri. Her father, Michael Goodliffe, had, she believed, married Helen Cherry after the death of his first wife, but it turned out they never actually got around to getting the licence. Miss Cherry, too, then decides to get the marriage fever and while she's badgering her "husband" to make it legal, the girl makes a direct and almost hysterical pitch towards the man.

Within the limitations of the script the cast does well enough and Jack Dixon's direction concentrates on keeping the action rolling. Georgina Cookson, well-known character actress, is completely wasted in a minor part. Myro.

SKYPORT

With George Moon, Lisa Gastoni, Gerald Harper, Barry Foster, Philip Ray, others
Director: Stuart Latham
30 Mins., Thurs., 8 p.m.
Granada-TV, from Manchester

This skein, skedded to run weekly till September, relates complete yarns against the background of a giant airport. Which, natch, ensures an interesting environment and ought also to offer chances of good human situations. First specimen was fairly good in the latter department, spinning a tale about a young man whom the cops are waiting to question on landing and several well-wishers' attempts to hide the shock from his waiting parents—who know all the while, anyway.

Constant characters in the series are travel agency (George Moon) and an interpreter (Lisa Gastoni). Moon's already established in viewer eyes via a recent Granada-TV show "Shadow Squad," and he perpetuates much the same role well. Miss Castoni is decorative and competent. Whole project looks promising as a popular lightweight entry. Erni.

Foreign TV Followup

The Verdict Is Yours

Granada-TV's skein of unscripted "court cases" has returned to the British networks with its pattern apparently unchanged, though the cameras now look in on what purports to be Hull Assizes instead of, as of yore, Birkenhead Assizes. Program aired Wed. (15) revealed the virtues and faults of the conception: information about the processes of English law, plus entertainment from the reactions of witnesses under cross-examination, together with some irritating muffing and groping on the part of players previously given an outline but no firm dialog.

Proceedings on this occasion had a usefully piquant ring. "The Case of the Admiral's Secretary," as it was styled, involved an action for defamatory libel alleging that an ex-Admiral of the Fleet was adulterous and morally unfit to hold public office. Show is aired on two consecutive nights weekly, so there's a mild cliffhanger element also on the credit side. Erni.

Val Parnell's Startime

It's still an amazing voice, and though Gracie Fields may not be as sure of it as once she was she still outwarbles dozens of 'em. And her personality and showmanship are tops. In brief, the longish (over 10 minutes) spot she had in this vaude show from Associated TeleVision aired Wed. (15) was entertainment. "Dipping into my old disks," and with homely chat interspersed, she came up with favorites such as "My Blue Heaven," "Our Avenue," "When I Grow Too Old To Dream" and "Put Your Shoes On Lucy" to get encore cries from the unseen audience. Bill Blazzard accompanied on piano.

Rest of the bill was so-so, by and large, with Enrique del Rey and Winnie offering some competent juggling, Hattie Jacques and Eric Sykes doing a couple of mildly funny skits, Jimmy Lloyd singing pops pleasantly and 13-year-old violinist Florica Remetier attacking the instrument with immense zest. Last-named looks like a potential bet, with a flair for composition as well. Clifford Davis interlinked with some good patter, some corny stuff and a conjuring trick or two.

Desi Deplores Critical Brushoff Given Comedy; 'Mighty Tough to Do'

By BOB CHANDLER

Hollywood, July 21.

Since comedy is the toughest of all program types to bring off successfully in television, Desi Arnaz can't help but wonder why critics tend to "look down their noses at it" and awards juries tend to overlook it entirely.

Comedy, he points out, is "all black or all white. It's either funny or it's not. In dramatic shows, there are all kinds of shades of gray, but comedy has to be just right."

To Arnaz, a good comedy script must be able to go "either way, as a comedy or as a drama." The premise has to be drawn, the situation set up in a straight, logical manner. Then the story "takes off" into comedy, but it must be so constructed that it could just as easily be played straight. "If you throw a piece of pie in a man's face, there's got to be a good reason for doing it if it's going to be funny."

It doesn't matter whether it's slapstick or sophisticated comedy, the premise must be established and the option to go either way set. "Take Billy Wilder and 'Some Like It Hot.' He sets up two guys in women's clothing, and gives them a perfectly good and valid reason for it. At this point, he can go either way—he can do it as a straight drama, or he can let out all the stops as a comedy. It's a helluva picture."

It's this necessity for establishing a premise, says Arnaz, that decided him and Lucille Ball to go to an hour. In the half-hour form, it was too difficult to establish the premise — there wasn't enough time. Procedure was to set up Lucy's "block-comedy routine," her one big piece of business per show. "Sometimes we were lucky and we could set it up in just a few minutes. More often, we couldn't, and we had a so-so premise and the routine didn't come off as it should have."

In an hour, of course, there's plenty of time to set such a premise. In Arnaz's eyes, it must be based on one of the same passions or drives that motivate drama, and in the hour there's sufficient time to develop it properly.

As to the other hour shows, the straight dramatic "Desilu Westinghouse Playhouse," Arnaz believes that a trend toward more adult themes, with greater impact, is developing. He points to the same trend, to a far greater degree, in films—"Anatomy of a Murder" and "Room at the Top." Naturally, he says, you can't do a "Room at the Top" on television, but at a far lower level, the adult theme and approach is becoming far more acceptable to agencies and sponsors.

He points to the show in which he's currently starring for the "Playhouse," "So Tender, So Profane," in which Barbara Luna is cast as his kid sister, a prostitute returning home, as an example. But he stands by his refusal to "insult or offend" the livingroom audience for the sake of a controversial subject, pointing out that adult themes can be handled inoffensively. "It's much harder to do," he states. "It's pretty easy to kick someone in the groin, but it takes a lot more care to indicate someone's been kicked in the groin without showing it."

Talking about kicking, Arnaz takes a beating from Pedro Armendariz in one of the scenes, and the realistic staging last week proved a source of ironic delight to some of the old hands—the picture of the guy who owns the studio taking a beating on one of the stages.

Arnaz shrugs it off, but likes to hark back to 1940, when he arrived from New York to work for RKO under a year's pact, from which he was incidentally dropped after doing three pictures. He drove into Hollywood after buying a car in Detroit, and asked directions to the studio. Swinging down Gower, he saw an impressive archway, drove in and asked for the casting office. The man at the gate wryly informed him he was "a little early," that he had driven into the cemetery, Hollywood Memorial Park.

After straightening himself out, he drove on to RKO. Accompanying him in the convertible was his valet, in uniform, no less, so that when he told the guard he was "Mr. Arnaz from New York" he was waved right in and parked on the lot. The next day, after his name was on the roster, he tried the same bit but the guard was onto him. He was told—not very politely—to park where all the other actors park. Today, incidentally, that guard is now captain of the Desilu police, but he allows Arnaz in.

As regards operation of the studio, Arnaz states that from studio operations alone, Desilu is operating in the black. "Not much, but we're covering the overhead and making a little besides." He points out that the recent financial report does not include too much in the way of profits from Desilu-owned programs, in that the profits derive from summer repeats for which payment had not yet been made during the period covered by the report. Consequently, some of the profit in the report stemmed from operations alone, even though the studio is presently far from operating at capacity.

BRITAIN ALLOCATES TIME FOR POLITICOS

London, July 21.

The three principal parties are to get nine tv Party Political Broadcasts between them in the current year (July 1-June 30, 1960) and eight airings on radio. Schedule was drawn up by BBC and the Independent Television Authority following consultation with the Government and the Opposition.

Both Conservative and Labor speakers get four tv hearings, two lasting 25 minutes and two 15 minutes, with the Liberals getting one 15-minute showing. All the television broadcasts are being transmitted simultaneously on BBC-TV and the commercial network. Normal duration of the sound airings will be 15 minutes, with the Conservatives getting a total four, Labor three and Liberal one. BBC, which alone will handle the sound talks, will also pass them to BBC-TV for sound-only repeats.

ABC-TV Ups Barnathan

In a reshuffle of the station relations and research areas, Julius Barnathan, v.p. and director of research for ABC-TV, was promoted to the newly-created post of v.p. for affiliated stations.

Reporting to Barnathan in his new position will be the station relations department, station clearance and research. Barnathan's appointment was followed by the promotion of Frederick Pierce, manager of audience measurements, to manager of research for the web.

Alfred R. Beckman will continue as v.p. in charge of station relations, and Donald S. Shaw Jr., will continue as director of tv station clearance. Both will report to Barnathan.

Herb Swope Stuck With ½-Hr. '5 Fingers' Pilot —And It's a Pleasure

Hollywood, July 21.

What does a producer do with a successful half-hour pilot of a series which has been subsequently purchased as a 60-minute show?

This was the problem facing 20th-Fox Television exec producer Herb Swope Jr. on his "Five Fingers" series, which went into full production yesterday (Mon.) at the Westwood lot. Swope had made the pilot as a half-hour. NBC bought the series as an hour show. Swope had a half-hour of excellent film on his hands.

Swope decided to commission Dick Berg, who had written the pilot, to expand the script to an hour with a minimum of retakes on the existing footage. Berg turned the trick, even writing in a guestar role in which Eva Gabor was subsequently cast, opposite permanent stars David Hedison and Luciana Paluzzi.

From completion of the expanded pilot, Swope swings into regular hour production, and has lined up an impressive roster of writers, some making their plunge into telepix after live tv and screenwriting careers. List includes Jerry Devine (who packaged "This Is Your FBI" and "Mr. District Attorney" in radio), screenwriter Harry Brown, Leslie Stevens, Merle Miller, David Karp, Michael Dyne, Sumner Locke Elliott and William Templeton.

On the directorial side, Swope has inked to multpile commitments Robert Stevens, Allan Reisner, Lamont Johnson, Montgomery Pittman, Andrew McCullough and Jack Smight.

Clients Like ABC's 'True Minute Buys'

ABC-TV is making a lot of advertisers and agencies happy with the fractional availabilities ("true minute buys") on the fall lineup of hour shows.

Clients with lesser budgets, or seasonal products, and divisions of large companies that heretofore haven't had the money for network are finding the hours with six participations a handy vehicle.

New buys include Elgin watch into "Sugarfoot," "Adventures in Paradise" and "Bronco"; Seven Up into "Alaskans"; and Lewis-Howe (Tums) alternate thirds of "The Untouchables."

The pre-Christmas drive will see Van Heusen shirts on "Bourbon Street Beat" and Mattell toys on "Cheyenne." Same time, Manhattan shirts is taking a slice of CBS-TV's hour entry, "Lineup."

Other company names not so familiar to network that will be in on the hours include Corning Glass, "Cheyenne," "Lineup," "Sugarfoot" and "Bronco"; National Carbon, "Cheyenne"; Libby, Owens, Ford (last year on NBC with college football), "Bourbon Street Beat"; Glidden, "Sugarfoot" and "Bronco."

As one ad man commented "ABC must have a jigsaw computer to figure out the sales."

TV—Too Perfect for Comfort

Boston, July 21.

A new telescopic lens used by WHDH-TV on baseball games between the Red Sox and the Yankees turned out to be so good that Ford C. Frick, baseball commissioner, asked the station to discontinue it to avert possibility of signal stealing by opposing teams.

The Spacemaster lens, only one in Hub, was used during the week end games of 11-12. WHDH-TV fed the Sunday (12) game to NBC for net presentation, and NBC, following the Frick beef, said it would not use the lens in its telecasts.

WHDH-TV nabbed an avalanche of mail lauding the new tv technique of closeups, and William B. McGrath, veep and managing director, said "we will cooperate with Tom Yawkey, owner of the Red Sox, Joe Cronin, president of the American League, and the Red Sox management to give the fans the best possible coverage with no damage to the game.

"Our engineers made the pickup that fed NBC the game. We tried a new combination of lenses from center field that provided unusual closeups and we decided to use it. We used it judiciously. We used it for a play and then switched to something else with a continued coverage. Curt Gowdy commented on the tremendous effectiveness of it, as did Mel Allen working the game for NBC."

Tom Gallery, director of sports, NBC, said Comm. Frick suggested the possibility of a club putting a tv receiver in a dugout and thus getting a line on what pitches would be thrown. "I do not believe that would happen," he was quoted as saying, "but to avoid any difficulty, NBC agreed to discontinue use of the camera."

VARIETY - ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top ten network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top ten syndicated shows in the same particular market. This week ten different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top ten shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting, competitive programming in the particular slot, etc., is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 150 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top ten network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U. S.

tor and several other crackerjack writers and directors. "If we discover two or three new writers and directors, all this will not have been in vain," Aurthur said. "If we can come up with a couple of new Bob Mulligans and John Frankenheimers, we'll feel like crowing."

He also plans button-holing Paddy Chayefsky for a script. "I'll try to get him in a moment when he's insecure," Aurthur cracked.

The Sabbath night drama list also will contain an Aurthur script tagged "Memphis By Morning" originally commissioned for the Kaiser Hour. "Memphis By Morning" is about a liberal Northerner who while driving through the South accidently kills a Negro woman. Sidney Poitier has been asked to play the lead, that of the dead woman's husband. All of the play's action takes place in one night.

It is Aurthur's belief that there is a far healthier climate today on the video channels and more of a stiffer backbone display on the part of broadcasters. He contends that until recently "a point of view" on video was indeed a rarity and that people were getting damnedly bored, but fortunately "tv is no longer the narcotic it once was." He thinks one of the turning points came when Edward R. Murrow launched his attack on the late Senator Joseph McCarthy. A number of talk shows also contributed to freedom of speech and subject matter, according to Aurthur, and he listed among them David Susskind's "Open End" and the Mike Wallace interview shows. "These talk shows are reality shows—and that's good for tv," he said.

For a period tv became a character study of non-characters, Aurthur said. He explained that the Westerns and the Private Eyes were not characters because there was never anything substantial underneath them. He was confident that tv, however, would become the medium of the future and that the writer of today should be able to write for the theatre, films and tv.

"The tv form is unique," he said, "and if the writer has something to say he damn well better learn to write for tv. The 'Sunday Showcase' will not be a return to the Philco days. The limited, imitated drama of the old days is gone and in this series we will try to do drama with theatricality, with 'size,' in other words. And we'll give our writers plenty of freedom of expression but with one exception—we won't get into any religious controversy. We'll do anything and everything that the late Robert Sherwood was promised when he agreed to write for NBC. We'll have, as I said before, 'a point of view' but we won't appear with editorial copy merely for the sake of creating controversy."

Aurthur said that Levy also had in mind the production of a drama depicting a onetime powerful senatorial figure in Washington who ultimately winds up an ignoble drunken figure.

He said his principal function on "Sunday Showcase" would be to make things as easy as possible for the Franklin Schaeffers and the Robert Saudeks who'll produce the dramas. "I'll give them the best of NBC's facilities. Our object is to fill the channel with adult, provocative drama."

Aurthur thought his new job at NBC wouldn't prevent him from writing at the same time. "What it means," he said, "is that I won't be sitting around in saloons so much."

RCA's '3C's' & Tint TV

W. Clipp and other broadcasting executives' opinions "that a $200 color tv set would sell like hot cakes," Burns is not in agreement that the key factor to color television's boom in 1959, or whenever, lies in the price factor.

He points to the fact that only 20% of automobile sales are those of the "stripped down" category; the other 80% always sell the many extras. He points to the upped income spiral as creating greater latitude in the "discretionary income" purchasing power, i.e. more available family money, over and above the basic necessities. Thus, he foresees that the price is still not the prime deterrent.

Fact is, however, that not enough people have been exposed to color tv; nor do they realize the plus values and that color-tuning is as easy as the now familiar black-and-white; what's more, the remote-control colorset-tuning permits the viewer to back away from the set and gauge the proper tints with ease and facility.

On the economic front, harking back to the figures published in VARIETY early this year, black-and-white sales have leveled-off to 600,000 sets, at factory cost, indicating anew that the industry's next big hypo must come from that extra set. In this case it must be the "Cadillac" or de luxe model (meaning color), as against the former trend for the portables and the auxiliary sets for the children or in the maid's room.

A merchandising offensive in the San Francisco and Bay area this fall will have top Hollywood stars participating. The acknowledgement by any number of independent affiliates that color beefs up lookership is another plus. From Detroit the automotive industries have cued their agencies in favor of color. Admiral thus far is the only independent set manufacturer to join the RCA color parade with a line of tint sets. The other two networks—CBS sporadically and ABC none—only will incline to color, apparently, under sponsorial influence because the trade still regards color as "RCA's and NBC's baby."

NBC, of course, is stepping-up its programming. Burns wants even the cartoons for the kids projected in color, and when some of the old film features are in tint he wants as much customer saturation and color awareness as possible.

Soviet Marathon Viewing

The American Exhibition opens in Moscow on July 24 and Burns will be in the Russian capital from July 23-29. The RCA-NBC crew will project color programming in marathon fashion, a la last year's Brussels Exposition, and a series of monitors will permit viewing by the Russians and others visiting the Yank exhibits. Burns goes to Rome, Berlin and Paris on his three-week business swing, flying both ways.

The current boom in all electronic stocks is probably born of the broadening of the base on the industrial side. Burns points up the difference between the rapid calculations required by the military as against the rapid access to calculations required by big business.

The segue from the computers designed for Army, Navy and Air Force usages to the evolution of the RCA 501 which is primed for lowest cost utilization by big business has opened wide horizons for electronics. This is especially true as today's statistics now indicate that the white-collar worker has passed in numbers the blue-collar worker.

This massive paperwork, by white-collar workers, cries for the need of rapid calculation electronic machines. When communications, computations and controls are tied into one machine its utilization is limitless. For example, almost all state highways (with the exception of New York) have a network of electronic communications between stations (toll gates, etc.), serviced by RCA. Ditto gaslines. Ditto N. Y. Life, Corning Glass, Atlantic Electric Co., Connecticut General Life, Travelers Life, N. Y. Telephone, Niagara Mohawk Power & Light, Alleghany Ludlum, department stores and other insurance companies.

This fall an RCA 501 will do the overflow work in the Goodbody & Co. brokerage, and the entire work in the E. F. Hutton brokerage. The input and output can be coded easily so that secrecy is preserved, the same as with the Army, Navy and Air Force commitments. This is where the difference lies between the rapid calculations for the military versus the rapid access to statistics for big business. Anything and everything where one can predict where the variables will be can be controlled electronically, says Burns, in spelling out the ever-broadening base of electronics' function. "It is already revolutionizing business so far as the white-collar worker is concerned."

This electronic data processing includes the Radio Corp. of America itself as a customer. Prime pursuit is to be able to produce this information at the lowest cost per transaction, be it a stock broker's bill to his customer, an insurance premium, a department store, electronic utility, phone or kindred statements.

Burns also accents the future of tape. RCA is going into tape-recording manufacturing. "Tape is the memory course of music, and tape is the paper of the future," he opines.

When Is a Special?

Westinghouse Desilu musical specials, three U.S. Steel specials, and 10 "General Electric Theatre" specials.

Industry, outside NBC and CBS, that is, views the list of specials as somewhat inflated. There is some doubt that both webs are playing it totally straight when they list programs—however special the material—that have fairly orderly time schedules. For instance, NBC lists the "Sunday Showcase" dramas as specials, yet they're on every week; ditto the Ford series; and CBS lists the Thursday "Revlons" and "Playhouse 90" as specials even though there is a consistent pattern in their makeup.

Station Buys

its distribution of its pre-'48 library to tv stations. It acquired and holds a 25% interest in KTTV, Los Angeles, indie. It also held a 25% stock interest in KMSP, before that station was sold to NTA. Now that stock interest no longer is held by Metro with 20th's 100% buyout of the station.

The KTVT, Salt Lake City deal, marks the second station unloaded by Time Inc. Previously the Henry R. Luce publishing interests had sold its V in Albuquerque.

President of the Salt Lake station is G. Bennett Larson, who has held a 20% ownership stake in the operation. Whether Larson will continue to helm the station for SG isn't known.

KMSP was acquired by NTA about 18 months ago, the new management putting the operation of the indie in the black. Sale price adds up to a healthy profit for NTA.

Sale by no means will trim NTA's sales on station buys, for aside from its WNTA-TV in the Newark-N.Y. market, and the parent National Theatres' ownership of its Kansas City station, NTA has eyes on Los Angeles and Dallas, among other potential tv station buys.

Since National Theatres, NTA's parent, is the theatre offshoot of 20th-Fox, there's some speculation as to the financial arrangement. 20th-Fox has just unloaded some 118 still-new-to-tv pre-'48 features to NTA, worth several million dollars. (Understood dickers have already been incepted with CBS for a sale of these features for upwards of $5,000,000 for the o&o stations.)

Sale of KTVT and KMSP are subject to FCC approval.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

Professional looksee at the thorny aspects of freedom of communications forms the basis of "Freedom of Speech by Radio and Television" ($4.50) by Elmer E. Smead, prof of government, Dartmouth College, published by Public Affairs Press.

Book also has a brief, sharp intro by Morris L. Ernst, who concludes his remarks with the question: "Should the licensees and the networks rightfully have the power to determine our mores on the French revolutionary thesis—'we follow the mob because we lead it'?"

Smead probes the problems of offensive content, lotteries, giveaways, defamation, commercial-sustaining balance and the vast reservoir of news handling on the airlanes. He also examines the question of governmental regulation vs. self regulation and closes with a reportage on the politics of regulation. Book is a sober, straightforward history of the manifold problems regarding regulation of programs and in typical academic fashion is heavily backed up with references. Closing pages of "Politics, Profits and Electronics" contain a particularly good wrapup of past contemporary questions confronting the beleagured FCC and broadcasting execs. Here the author discusses such harassing, perplexing questions as zoning of commissioners, standard band, power, clear channels, FM, tv's place in the spectrum and video in color.

"Freedom of Speech by Radio and Television" is the result of Prof. Smead's 10-year study of the industry. Rans.

All the broadcast stations in Greater Philadelphia last week got behind the launching of a year-long drive to "sell Philadelphia to Philadelphians." Beginning this week, each of the town's 11 radio stations began airing 10-second, 20-second and one-minute spot blurbs pushing the thought that "Philadelphia is a wonderful place to live, work and do business."

Campaign's objective, according to the Chamber of Commerce of GP, is to inspire natives to promote the hometown, which, evidently, means promote it across the country. On the broadcast committee are execs from WRCV-plus-tv, WFIL-and-tv, WCAU-and-tv, WDAS, WJMJ, WFLN, WHAT, WIBG, WIP, WPEN and WTEL.

Radio & Television Executive Society has blueprinted the start of the 1959-'60 time buying & selling seminar luncheons for Nov. 10. Group plans a full series of 16 weekly sessions under the control of Grey Advertising's R. David Kimble.

RTES has lined up the Hotel Lexington as the site for the luncheons for the second year. Seminars will be entering their sixth season.

Radio Press International pulled a switch last weekend when it offered its subscribers to "Radio Press Conference" a group of Washington politicos quizzing a capital newsman, instead of the other way around.

Table turning saw Oregon Senator Richard Neuberger, Michigan Representative Clare Hoffman and Philippine Ambassador to the U.S. Carlos Romulo throwing questions at columnist Drew Pearson, George Hamilton Combs, RPI chieftain, was moderator.

Pearson contended that the press wasn't as vigilant as it could be in uncovering corruption in government and that there was too much reliance on news furnished by the big press associations.

National Assn. of Educational Broadcasters has received a grant of $42.738 from the W. K. Kellogg Foundation for the 1959-60 semester, the amount representing first payment of a three-year donation by the foundation which ultimately will total $106,338.

NAEB had set up its national headquarters, permanent staff and educational radio network from a Kellogg grant in 1951. Present grant will be used to carry on NAEB's regular services, to pay a fulltime editor for its various publications and to facilitate seminars each year for advanced training of people in the educational broadcasting field.

It remained for the broadcast industry to provide the celebrity fare at Chicago's International Trade Fair, the gueststars serving as lure to the Star and Communications booth of Chicago Unlimited, trade organization whose purpose is to promote the Windy City talent pool and broadcast services. Booth was manned by Les Lear, promoter and once producer of two bygone network shows, "Welcome Travelers" and "Walt Disney Presents."

When the expo wound up last Saturday (18), over 100 local personalities had checked in, in addition to such national traffic stoppers as Hans Conried, John Carradine, Forrest Tucker, Joan Weldon, Ted Lewis, Fran Allison and Don McNeill. Numerous local radio shows originated from the booth. At Fair's conclusion, CU prexy Henry Ushijima observed, "We've done more during the past two weeks at the fair to foster interest in Chicago than we have in all the previous seven years of the organization's existence."

ITALY'S HOTTEST TV SHOW ENDING RUN

Rome, July 21.

"Lascia o Raddoppia" (Double or Nothing), probably the most popular and influential show in Italian television's young history, winds up this week with its 187th stanza. Based on the Yank "$64,000 Question," it saw the light of day in Milan on Nov. 26, 1955. Since then, only one regular show was cancelled (Christmas Eve, 1955), and 389 contestants have been questioned by U.S.-trained emcee Mike Bongiorno.

"L. o. R." in this period gave out some $830,000 in gold coins (no money allowed) and motor cars (consolation prizes). It's felt here that quizzer resulted in more set sales in this country than any other single RAI-TV presentation.

It also profoundly modified the entertainment pattern of the Italian. Originating on Saturday night at nine, it immediately resulted in empty pic houses throughout the country, and after protests from harried exhibs was shifted to Wednesday night, then to Thursday night, which then in turn became dead b.o. nights at the cinemas. For a long while, until its recent lessened popularity, "Lascia o Raddoppia" was also shown to moviegoers in between screenings of the current attraction at many Italian theatres.

CALVERT MAKES GIN HISTORY- NEW CALVERT GIN IS 100% DRY!

But No Gin Can Be Dryer!

CALVERT GIN LOW IN PRICE

$1.69 Less Than Comparable Imported Gins

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Calvert London Dry Gin sells at a surprisingly low price—far below the price levels of imported gins. These gins, up to now, have generally set the standard for dryness. However, since Calvert Gin has reached absolute 100% dryness, this feeling has changed.

Calvert's low retail price is in accordance with a company decision to depend upon volume, rather than high markup, for a reasonable profit picture.

PLEASURE PACKAGE! Blue, silver and white dominate the new, crisply attractive Calvert Gin bottle. These colors were chosen to represent the dry, crisp taste of the gin itself, and to convey the feeling of refreshing coldness in summer drinks made with Calvert London Dry Gin.

DRYSDALE SERVES DRY MARTINIS. The man who symbolizes Calvert London Dry Gin, Sir Gibson Drysdale, serves a round of drinks made with his favorite gin.

Fresh Lime Peel Is "Secret" Ingredient In Calvert Gin

One reason for crisp, dry taste

Rushed to Distillery

When the limes are unloaded from the steamships, they are rushed to the Calvert Distillery. Here, they are kept under rigidly controlled temperature and humidity conditions to safeguard their freshness.

When the time comes for the lime peels to be added to a new "run" of Calvert Gin, skilled girls carefully peel the limes by hand. The skins then are added to the other Calvert "botanicals" while they are still fresh and moist.

All "Botanicals" Imported

In addition to fresh lime peel, other herbs, seeds and roots are imported for use in making Calvert Gin.

Some of these which lend their flavor or aroma to Calvert are juniper berries from the Italian Tyrol, cassia bark from Indochina, coriander seed from the Rhine Valley.

Quality Assured

To assure uniform botanical flavors, Calvert often buys a huge supply at a time, frequently a whole crop. The botanicals are shipped as quickly as possible to the distillery, where they are stored in air-conditioned rooms, under carefully controlled temperature and humidity.

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Millions of Americans will soon see a little Englishman, dressed in full desert kit, leaping across their newspaper pages. He will appear in every newspaper advertisement for Calvert London Dry Gin, and in all Calvert point-of-sale material.

SIR GIBSON DRYSDALE, Calvert Gin trademark, jumps for joy over 100% dryness.

Exclusive Dry Zone Process Removes All Traces of "Sweetness" and of "Perfume"

Calvert Gin Refined 7 Separate Times To Reach Absolute Dryness

RELAY, MD.—The maximum in gin dryness has been reached here by Calvert Distillers, it was revealed today. It was explained that no method previously known would produce a gin dry enough to be given the designation, "100% dry."

"We had to invent our own way to make gin," Fred Klayer, Calvert's Master Distiller, said. "It's called 'Dry Zone Distillation.' It makes a gin with the dryest, crispest taste in the world."

A New High in Dryness

"We distill Calvert London Dry Gin in a new way we developed," Mr. Klayer went on. "In fact, our gin is refined no fewer than 7 separate times. That's why it reaches a new high in dryness. There just isn't any way you can introduce short cuts if you want to reach absolute 100% dryness."

Calvert starts with basic spirits, as other makers do. These spirits are made entirely from selected grains. During every one of the seven refining steps, the sweet "head" flavors rise to the top of the distillation columns and are discarded. At the same time, heavy, perfume-y "tails" sink to the bottom and are thrown out.

Expensive Process

"This is a very costly process, of course," Mr. Klayer said, "but unless you get rid of every trace of these undesirable 'heads' and 'tails,' you wind up with a martini that tastes as if you have used too much vermouth. You won't ever say that about a martini made with Calvert Gin."

Calvert Flavor Recipe

When the spirits have been refined, they are ready to be married to the imported "botanicals" that make up the exclusive Calvert Gin flavor recipe. This is done over very low heat, in order to keep the delicate flavors intact.

Filtered 12 Times

After the botanicals and the spirits have been perfectly married, the gin is ready for filtering. A total of twelve filters are used to safeguard the crystal clearness of Calvert Gin—never any less. After filtering, the gin is sent to the bottling line and labeled "Calvert London Dry Gin."

Drama—'Season of Crisis'

phemism only because NBC doesn't want to go on record as placing live programming above film programming, since the latter is NBC's "bread and butter" just as it is at CBS and ABC.

Speaking of ABC, the modus operandi of that network poses one of the most serious problems NBC faces in regard to promulgating live drama. ABC, which has had its own problems achieving equality with its rivals, has finally done so, in the eyes of the industry, by exercising a strong diet of Hollywood film staples. The action-adventure route has done well for ABC, making it harder and harder for anybody to compete with experimental program forms. Incidentally, it's ironical but true that live drama, tv's original staple, is now considered an experimental form.

Advertisers are riding harder all the time in the direction of filmed action stanzas, making it all the more difficult at the moment for a reverse-trend like live drama.

But in favor of continuance of dramatics is a novel thought borne out of the CBS-ABC-NBC dogfight for tv audience: All the webs are now about at the point, in nighttime programming, where they're fairly well cutting up the Nielsens evenly. As a consequence, one school of thought holds to the theory that NBC, in doing more live dramatics despite the monetary risk, may be benefitting itself by maintainig a "distinct image." There is an almost intangible value placed by the tv trade on network prestige.

It appears to be a case for "Sunday Showcase" and the diminished (23 programs), "Playhouse 90" wherein one or the other has to be a real smash next season—against rough, rough odds—before live drama gets what some people feel are its justly favorable deserts on video.

NC&K this year may not be able to take on the campaign because of new (Hertz) and expected biz. "It's a tough assignment," says agency prez Norman B. Norman.

The agencies that last week made presentations will now follow up with written outlines and strategies to the national committee, and it's anybody's guess which will corner the biz. Kastor, Hilton etc. would seem to stand high, what with exec veep Lloyd G. Whitebrook a veteran Demo campaigner. He was active with the account when it was handled by the Joseph Katz agency in Washington in '52 and has been highly involved in state and local Democratic campaigns during the last eight years handled by Kastor.

Doyle, Dane, Bernbach is top drawer creatively and would undoubtedly run a campaign full of surprises, but may not be hefty enough in the all-important tv arena. The same applies in measure to Geyer etc., Doner & Peck and Al Paul Lefton. Fletcher Richards, Calkins & Holden recently broadened its tv activity with mergers that have brought packaged goods accounts into the shop.

Demo billing in the '52 campaign was close to $2,000,000 and climbed to $2,200,000 in '56. Spending next year will depend on the success of fund raising efforts.

It's possible, said an NBC exec, that if "Omnibus" is delivered with built-in sponsors it could be shown 5:30 to 6:30 p.m. through a shift of the 6 p.m. "Meet the Press" to a new time period. But it was indicated that "Omnibus" will not show up on the schedule if sponsors are lacking.

Page One field day with them. A lot of the people get exasperated at what the networks do. But there's no denying that a big chunk of the 100,000,000 viewers get a bigger bang over what the networks provide in programming.

Give the networks their lumps, which they deserve. But they also deserve their due. They've done a lot for the viewer. They got television started in the first place—just a decade ago. They took the risks, the chances—$100,000,000 of cold cash chances that they poured into tv to prime the pumps before getting any profits back. The Johnny-come-latelies who want in now—want in by the crowbar of abolishing option time—were watching on the sidelines while the networks did their expensive work.

If Washington takes away option time, it can ask itself whatever happened to "Playhouse 90" to the Chet Huntley in-depth probings; to the ambitious and out-of-pocket news and public affairs projects, to the political conventions and the World Series.

The answer will be—they went thataway—riding into the great beyond on option time.

U.S. Info Agency 'Goes Tape,' Sets Program Entries

Washington, July 21.

A "new look" is in store for the United States Information Agency's tv service, Romney Wheeler, director of the video end of governmental agency, revealed this week. He said contracts had been placed for equipment that will produce video shows on tape in the basement quarters of the Health, Education and Welfare Building here.

Wheeler indicated that construction would begin shortly on two studios which would house two tv cameras and an Ampex videotape recorder as well as other basic material. The recorder will be equipped with a device to allow recording on any one of four international standards. Cameras and film-chain will be modified to permit operation either on conventional American standards or on European, British or French standards, Wheeler said.

Target date of Sept. 15 is set for preliminary tests and it is expected that the studios will be functioning on all four standards by Dec. 1. USIA's videotape facilities will be of particular interest to overseas outlets equipped with Ampex or RCA recorders.

However, the "live" programs produced here, Wheeler indicated, would be available also for use elsewhere by dubbing from videotape to conventional 16m kines. New studios also will be used for filming interviews, etc., on standard 16m film.

Meanwhile, USIA is engaged in developing a program for teaching English by tv. A 13-week series of 65 programs is contemplated. Also on the planning board is a series of experimental programs with correspondents of overseas tv networks or stations based in Washington or who may visit the capital at regular intervals. It is USIA's intention to make it possible for a correspondent to tape-record a special tv report from here combining "live" commentary on-camera with special film reports from the U.S. With jet transportation available, a show made here on a Monday afternoon could be telecast anywhere in Europe on Tuesday evening; or a tv program prepared on Friday could be seen on a Tokyo station on the following Monday, Wheeler said.

USIA reps overseas soon will get a batch of programs dealing with "The Challenge of Space." Also upcoming is a major series on "The Geography of Jazz." USIA also comtemplates a cooperative deal with National Educational TV-Radio Center for six half-hour programs on "The Big Count" dealing with 1960 census.

Wheeler this week announced that Peter Barker was the new tv field officer for Europe and the Near East, filling a spot vacated by Ted Arthur, who had become pubaffairs office for Haiti; Donald W. Duke had returned from Germany to take up duties as chief of production for USIA-TV, succeeding Daniel Lawler, who steps up into the role of special assistant to the director of tv for policy and programming. Giles O'Connor has switched from the Washngton production staff to special events production in the Gotham office.

Clete Roberts Junketing

also scripted by Stevens (he's completed two scripts for the show) will roll under Dunne.

Meanwhile, by virtue of two deals under which NBC and CBS hold options on "Whodunit" and "The New Frontier" for the January sales season, 20th Television is going ahead with script buying on each show. Network in each instance will pay for the scripts. CBS deal calls for financing of two hour films and 11 more scripts on "New Frontier," while NBC, in taking the January option on "Whodunit," paid out enough option money to handle purchase by Dunne of eight more scripts for the series. Pilots on both have been completed.

Still a third series, with pilot finished, is "Helimarines," and sales reaction has been such that producer Swope has ordered three more half-hour scripts on the show for protection in case of a last-minute sale or a late fall replacement deal.

Guild in this area doesn't object to term pact options, since they are consecutive; it feels there is a complete lack of control on series options. SAG won't reveal the proposals it had in mind to cure the alleged abuses, since these will constitute its collective bargaining proposals, but it does feel that contractual controls over length of option and exclusivity clauses must be written into the next tv pact.

tunately, Powell's pact with CBS allows him to sell it to another sponsor or agency if CBS can't clear the time, and prospects of an NBC deal is near.

Both shows, of course, started in mid-season. Powell doesn't want any part of this any more. With a fall start, if a show clicks, there's no time problem—the network keeps it on and helps it to build. But in mid-season even before the show has a chance to prove itself, the networks are masterminding their fall schedule without a serious thought to the replacement shows.

The Squaw Valley Committee and its voluntary agency in the matter, J. Walter Thompson are expected to take steps (possibly legal) to force ABC-TV to fulfill the alleged commitment to air the snow sports coverage. If that fails, it is thought that another attempt to set up a pooled show among ABC, CBS and NBC will be made.

Scottish TV To Enrich Kemsley

London, July 21.

Kemsley Newspapers, one of the major British newspaper chains, becomes a partner in Scottish Television Ltd., commercial web for Central Scotland, under the terms of a deal whereby Canadian publisher Roy Thomson takes over control of the Kemsley press empire. The full scheme, now being circularized to Kemsley stockholders, is that the newspaper group should acquire the Ordinary capital of Scottish TV, of which Thomson holds 80%, and that Thomson should then get the Kemsley family's 40% holding in Kemsley Newspapers for $14 per $2.80 stock. The Kemsley family would then make $1,400,000, being $1.40 of this $14 per $2.80 stock, available to meet the cost of a cash offer of $12.60 per $2.80 stock to other holders.

The plan invovles the acquisition by Kemsley Newspapers of the 252,000 non-voting Ordinaries in Scottish TV in exchange for $2,800,000 in cash, $1,400,000 of the existing 3% First Mortgage debenture stock, and $5,600,000 of a new Deferred stock.

Scottish TV made a profit of $3,780,000 last year before tax and depreciation and is expected to hit at least $4,200,000 this year. On this basis, if the Thomson deal is okayed throughout, the total Kemsley earnings in 1960 should come to around $8,400,000 before tax and after providing for the added debenture interest.

WOR in Surprise MBS Allegiance

WOR Radio, N. Y., in a surprise move, has in effect signed a new one-year reaffiliation contract with Mutual.

MBS, now under the presidency of Robert Hurleigh, is in the throes of reorganization under the Bankruptcy Act.

Throwing WOR Radio in the MBS corner under its limited affiliation agreement is understood to be some cash considerations. Web is understood to have scrapped its strict reciprocal deal, under which it swaps five-minute newscasts, one each hour alloted for web selling and the other within the 60-minute period given to the station for local selling.

There was talk that the web would have picked up WINS had WOR dropped out of the lineup. The RKO General Teleradio N. Y. flagship's decision to stay with the web should boost its sagging stature. Current affiliation agreement would have expired Aug. 8.

Under the limited affiliation agreement, WOR promises to pick up 60 five-minute web newscasts weekly, broken down to 25 five-minute newscasts from Monday through Friday and 35 Saturday and Sundays. In addition, station chose to pick up Fulton Lewis Jr., Cedric Foster and the "World Today" web programs. Under its deal, the station will not carry any web commercial religion or any sustaining web shows. Station also has the option to carry any news or special events shows which will bolster its own schedule in this area.

DELBERT MANN'S NOD ON 'SAMMY'

Delbert Mann has been inked by NBC-TV to produce and direct the two-part "What Makes Sammy Run?" for the network in "Sunday Showcase." Deal was made through Robert Alan Aurthur, hired by the network recently to act as executive producer for the house-produced Sunday dramas.

Mann is expected to start working on the "Sammy" shows within the next few weeks. Scripts have already been completed by Budd and Stuart Schulberg.

Meantime, Aurthur, who so far has been working with only a female assistant to coordinate the 17 NBC-made dramas for the 1959-1960 season, has hired away from Talent Associates veteran Alex March. March, who was slated by TA to associate produce most of the Art Carney specials, will instead serve as Aurthur's coordinator. As an added lure, March, who once directed some of the old "Robert Montgomery Presents" dramas on NBC, will direct a couple of the Sunday dramas next season. Which of the dramas he'll direct have not yet been decided.

Max Ehrlich to Brit. For 'No Hiding Place'

London, July 21.

Max Ehrlich, American tv writer, has arrived in Britain to act as script editor for a new Associated-Rediffusion crime series, "No Hiding Place." This will be a weekly, live, 60-minute skein skedded for unfolding on Sept. 16 and subsequent Wednesdays. This is the first time A-R has tackled such an ambitious live series.

Thirteen programs have already been slotted, featuring Raymond Francis as Superintendent Lockhart of Scotland Yard.

WNBK Fetches $225,000

Hartford, July 21.

Daytime radio station WKNB of nearby Britain has been sold to a New Jersey theatre chain owner for $225,000 by the Connecticut Television Inc. Latter recently purchased the AM'er as well as its sister tv station, WNBC, from NBC for about $1,000,000. Both sales are awaiting FCC approval.

Purchaser is the Beacon Broadcasting Co. of Newark, N.J., operator of WICO in Salisbury, Md., a 1000-watt daytime station. Sheldon Smerling, Beacon prexy, also owns a chain of film theatres in New Jersey as well as the Hippodrome in Cleveland.

L.A. Fire Chiefs Using KTLA's Laurel Canyon Footage as a Critique

Hollywood, July 21.

Group of 25 fire chiefs and government officials from Los Angeles, L.A. County and Beverly Hills met last week at KTLA to screen tapes of the station's nearly-six-hour coverage of the big Laurel Canyon fire. Officials will use the screening session as a critique to increase their firefighting efficiency.

Station, using primarily its Telecopter but supplementing this with three ground units, covered the blaze from 4:18 to 10 p.m. on July 10, at a total cost of $15,000. Figure includes commercial revenues preempted and crew and equipment costs. The civic officials will view more than two hours of the tapes.

Sidelight on the KTLA coverage came with a phone call from Alvin Flanagan, general manager of rival KCOP. Flanagan phoned KTLA at the height of the fire to ask the station to fly its Telecopter over his own home to see if it had burned or threatened, since he couldn't get into the area. KTLA obliged, reporting happily that his home had been spared.

Dearborn—Richard "Dick" Buller named director of WKMH, Dearborn-Detroit radio station here. Buller is oldest member of staff in point of service. Previous assignments at station included sports editing, news editing and post of chief announcer.

8 ATLANTA STATIONS GET AM RENEWALS

Washington, July 21.

Federal Communications Commission has renewed licenses of eight Atlanta area radio stations which had been delayed pending review of program formats for deviations from promises in original applications.

Hold up of the renewals was regarded as harbinger of new get-tough policy by FCC regarding program deficiencies, and also shaped as a test case of the Commission's power over programming.

Commissioners Frederick W. Ford and Robert T. Bartley dissented from the renewal action. Their reasoning was not immediately available.

Stations whose licenses were renewed are: WGKA, WERD, WGST, WAKE, WQZI, WOAK, all Atlanta, and WTJH, East Point, and WEAS, Decatur.

Granada TV Network, the commercial tv company serving the North of England, is founding a Research Chair in Communication at the Univ. College of North Staffordshire. Work is skedded to start early next year, with the holder of the Chair undertaking research into fields such as linguistics and information theory for an initial period of seven years.

The network has previously offered other, similar encouragement to the arts and sciences.

Comm. Lee on TV Channel Shortage Solution: 'Too Little, Too Late'

Washington, July 21.

Federal Communications Commission's majority proposal for solving the television channel shortage provides "too little, too late" and is "fraught with uncertainty and delay."

This criticism was levelled by Commissioner Robert E. Lee in a strongly worded, and somewhat belated, dissent to FCC's allocations policy statement to Senate Commerce Committee last April.

Lee advocated a shift to all UHF television, declaring that this band may be the only choice left to FCC for an adequate television system.

Majority of his colleagues favored, as the most desirable course, an all-VHF system, enhanced to an optimum 50 channels by expanding into frequencies now occupied largely by the Government.

"Long in trouble and expense short in its ultimate results," were Lee's words for this plan. Everything hinges, he noted, on how much the military is able and willing to surrender. And Lee was frankly skeptical on this score.

"We are more likely to find ourselves with a 12-channel system or at best a 25-channel system," the Commissioner asserted.

At the same time, Lee saw dire results from FCC's interim plan for providing immediate relief to cities suffering critical tv shortages. Plan, already in implementation, involves dropping in additional VHF assignments even if mileage separation standards have to be winked at.

Lee declared that this means the "utter, complete and immediate end of UHF broadcasting" and would "perpetuate a substandard 12 channel system with perhaps more stations and less coverage."

Lee argued that UHF, through deintermixture, has never been given a fair trial, and criticized the Television Allocations Study Organization (TASO) for its report on the superiority of VHF vis-a-vis UHF. Only reason for this, he said, is that VHF transmission and receiving facilities are more elaborate and efficient, while UHF operators because of their economic positions, employ modest facilities and are plagued with poorly designed receivers.

Lee submitted graphs aimed to show that most of the technical difficulties in UHF can be overcome and that with proper equipment UHF signals can be made equivalent to VHF.

Moreover, an all UHF system would permit "vast flexibility with the distinct possibility of assigning as many as 35 channels to any given city" and allow small communities to have their own stations. Outlining courses whereby all UHF could be achieved, Lee said FCC could simply stop granting new applications for new or increased VHF facilities.

D.C. Reacts to Humphrey Nix

vising Sec. 315. But some result was achieved. Later, Humphrey announced Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson of Texas, another Democratic Presidential possibility, had agreed to speed up Senate consideration of the "equal time" bill which exempts, among other things, panel shows like "Face" and "Meet the Press." The Senate bill, unanimously approved by Senate Commerce Committee as a compromise remedy, removes from Sec. 315 coverage "any newscast, news interview, news documentary, on-the-spot coverage of news events or panel discussions."

Bad Taste in D.C. Mouth

But while the episode may have rushed the Senate timetable on the bill, it didn't leave a universal good taste in the mouth on Capitol Hill. One Senator called it a "cheap publicity stunt" by CBS. Another—Sen. Mike Monroney (D-Okla.)—called it "the nth degree of absurdity." Monroney noted general tv public has no vote on who gets Democratic Presidential nomination. That's done by some 1,500 delegates to the Democratic National Convention, none of whom are yet chosen. General public can't vote for or against any candidate until the two major parties select their nominees at convention.

Cruel theory was also expressed on Capitol Hill that Humphrey had been invited on the show so he could be cancelled. This is known to be entirely false, but it was mentioned. It doesn't help CBS.

Presidential candidates, of course, like as much free tv time and exposure as possible, and the Humphrey incident may delay his personal announcement for the Presidency indefinitely. It may also slow other announcements unless Congress does exempt panel show. The "equal time" bill before the House leaves panel shows under Sec. 315, and the negative backwash of the Humphrey-CBS incident (there are no Presidential candidates in the House to get hurt) may work against any effort to amend the House bill to include panels among the exemption.

There is no question Humphrey was angered at losing the Sunday tv audience, figuring it would have helped his Presidential effort.

What has actually happened in Humphrey's case is that Minnesota's Governor (Orville Freeman) and other U.S. Senator (Eugene McCarthy) announced formation of a Humphrey-for-President Committee. Humphrey subsequently expressed the usual flattered feeling and said he would await results of the committee and "at the appropriate time" make "formal announcement of my candidacy."

Accurately, he has not announced himself to be a candidate.

And, in this status, he believes there is no difference between him being on "Face" than there was in Sen. Stuart Symington (D.-Mo.), another Presidential possibility, being on the same CBS show the Sunday previously. Also, he notes New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, a potential GOP White House candidate, appeared on "Meet the Press" the same day Humphrey was supposed to be on "Face."

"All I want," Humphrey said in a VARIETY interview, "is 'equal time' with my fellow un-announced candidates."

He added that if Rockefeller isn't a candidate for President, "he sure is one for reelection as governor."

Mickelson took the broad view based on the view of CBS lawyers: "This decision (to bump Humphrey) is impelled by the danger that he would be required, if Sen. Humphrey appeared, to devote 'Face the Nation' to insignificant or obscure or now-unknown aspirants for the Democratic Presidential nomination. Such a requirement would destroy 'Face' as an important informational program."

"Meet the Press" producer Lawrence Spivak stayed out of the dispute, but the fact that NBC invited Humphrey on another show, "Today," (where "equal time" would be easier to manage if CBS' position were accurate), indicates the different attitude of the two webs. NBC has always been more relaxed about "equal time."

"Meet the Press," according to Spivak, has invited all major Democratic and Republican Presidential candidates to appear during the pre-National Convention periods of both 1952 and 1956. When any didn't accept, they were asked to designate a spokesman. Spivak said the program has never been bothered by minor candidates asking equivalent time.

"Face" producer Ted Ayers, who has never invited an announced candidate on his show, also remained silent while Humphrey did most of the talking. Ayers problem was finding a late substitute for his Sunday show.

Ayers finally lined up Rep. F. Edward Herbert (D-La.), whose probes of the military have been hot in the news.

all production status. The two programs, which have not been picked yet (though they probably will come from the six being sponsored by Bell & Howell), will be handled by Friendly via the "Small World" production unit.

Friendly's present staff producer contract with CBS is due to run until the fall of 1960, approximately when the first 12 nighttime specials have been completed. But, to take care of the major additional chore of coordinating all 12 shows, Friendly will, according to the web, "receive additional compensation." Details of the contract additions are now being ironed out.

As for the other 10 shows, Friendly is free to borrow from any of CBS' regular special units. Already slated to do at least two of the programs are Les Midgley and Av Weston, a team from CBS special news programming. And it's anticipated Friendly will be borrowing producers from the public affairs division such as Jay Mullen and Steve Fleischmann. The new exec producer has apparently been given freedom to choose nearly anyone he deems appropriate to get the pubaffairs entries off to as good a start as possible.

fashion" and "in all my experience in the industry I had never had anything like it."

When Firestone switched to ABC in 1954, Ryan said, it was done on representation by then prexy Robert Kintner and his successor Oliver Treyz who, he said, felt it was "a fine program with a loyal listening audience and a good investment for Firestone and most attractive to ABC."

Reciting the developments of last spring, Ryan said "he could not understand" ABC preempting "The Voice" period without previously discussing it with Firestone and in light of previous indications of continued web enthusiasm for the program.

Despite the fact that Firestone understood that ABC could preempt the time, Ryan said Treyz had assured him that if this were done, other "suitable" evening time would be made available. He said this wasn't done.

Earlier Howard Barlow, musical director for "The Voice" since 1943, described the objective of the program as "quality music in the best of taste, never vulgar or cheap."

Doerfer at the end did offer hope that FCC would see the way clear to licensing VHF boosters, and said this might be done from within 60 to 90 days after enactment of FCC's proposals to this end. But he insisted he could not commit the Commission on this score.

Earlier, National Assn. of Broadcasters prexy Harold E. Fellows backed proposal to require CATV operators to get permission of stations whose programs they relay.

Sillerman, explaining the vidtape stunt, declared "we used our medium to sell our medium." The 55-minute vidtape was made at NTA's Telestudios in N. Y. Because there wasn't a vidtape recorder available for the client screening in Tulsa, Okla., NTA's Telestudios transferred the vidtape show onto film. Sillerman credited the client's respect for NTA's technical know-how as another factor in clinching the deal. Agency is Potts Woodbury of Kansas City.

Credit for the vidtape approach also goes to Lester Krugman, v.p. in charge of advertising-promotion for NTA; Len Sirowitz, art director; and Ernie Fladell, in charge of copy.

Sillerman was on hand on the screen and in person at the client and agency meets.

its present syndication strip and concentrate its efforts in the 7 to 7:30 slot.

"Love Is the Problem," a Jerry Fairbanks filmed panel show, has been bought for morning stripping beginning the fall.

"Shock Theatre" has been discontinued with the mystery-mellers put in the regular late evening feature slots. "Shock" host John Zacherley will talk to management shortly on a possible new assignment. He's vacationing now.

The morning "Movie" strip at 9 a.m. is being discontinued with anthology reruns put in its place. Station bought up licensing on the old "Schlitz" and "Fireside" episodes. Outlet also is interested in deals on other syndicated properties, both first-run and rerun.

Rating picture also has changed for the station. There was a time —just over a year ago—when the station lagged behind the national Nielsens of the web by 34%. Latest Nielsen has cut that lag to 18%—quite a change for the o&o, reflective of the overall general rise of the station in the market.

tity, quickly agreed to pay $75,000.

At the meeting, the subcommittees formed included one to decide on TIO exact programming, another to pick a director for the org by Sept. 15 and a third to find office space, most probably in N.Y.

Plan was approved to send pledge forms to all tv stations, asking them to join as sponsors. Annual contributions will amount to four times a station's highest quarter-hour rate.

National Assn. of Broadcasters contributed $75,000 of its own toward the initial amount raised.

On the committee to find a director are: Clair McCollough of the Steinman Stations; Mike Foster, ABC-TV; Charles Steinberg, CBS-TV; Kenneth Bilby, NBC-TV; Willard Walbridge of KTRK-TV, Houston; Lawrence (Bud) Rodgers of WSAZ-TV, Huntington, and Wrede Petersmeyer of Corinthian Broadcasting.

dren tend to control sets during the summertime when school is out, and, in support of this theory, web claims that a goodly part of the audience quotient for ABC-TV's "Gale Storm Show," (which has been coming along faster by far than most of the other ABC daytimers) is loaded with kids in the 6 to 11 age bracket. Countering this NBC contention on the other hand, is the fact that most of the NBC audience is not going to ABC but to CBS, which, like NBC, primarily has an "adult" daytime program lineup.

"Queen For a Day," incidentally, is the show in which NBC has a quarter hour exceeding 30% audience share.

Culligan's Next: 'Image America'

With "Image Minorities" safely tucked away after a 20-hour, four-week run on NBC Radio, Matthew J. Culligan, exec veep in charge of the web, said he was planning to launch another "Image" series, this one dealing with "Image America" in collaboration with one of the major foundations in the country.

"Image America" will attempt to answer such questions as has this country lived up to the Bill of Rights, the Declaration of Independence and other democratic ideals. Unlike the previous "Image" programs (first one dealt with Russia) this one will get wide secondary distribution via booklets and brochures to be issued by the foundation.

As with previous "Image" programs, Bob Considine will be the narrator. Culligan expected to get the series started in October and estimates it will take some 60 hours to relate the full story.

On the planning board, after "Image America," is "Image Responsibility" based on a concept of Culligan's dealing with what the web exec describes as "RQ," namely responsibility quotient, a theme he expounded recently at the U. of Tampa where he had received an honorary degree.

Culligan noted that he recently-completed "Image Minorities" had received more newspaper space across the country than the previous programs on Russia. "Image Russia," however, was sufficiently important, he said, to merit the attention of American book publishers and would ultimately appear under the imprint of a leading book publisher.

REV UP A '33' COL DISK WAR

Columbia Pitching 'Profit Pack' Angle As Fall Merchandising Peg

Columbia Records unveiled its fall program at its annual sales meet (16-20) held at Miami Beach's Americana Hotel. Attending were more than 325 members of Col's sales org as well as international representatives.

The sales program will center around a "Profit Pack" embodying fully integrated fall product presentation. The "Profit Pack" offers not only current product but suggested bestselling inventory for each catalog category — Masterworks, pop, Adventures in Sound, and the low-price Harmony line.

Columbia's restocking plan offers new August and September releases as well as the complete active catalog (except for Harmony and single disks) at normal suggested dealer cost, less 10%, during billing months of August and September. Distributors and branches will be offered extended dating terms (October, November, December) on purchases of all eligible catalog and new releases through August and September. Distribs and branches will pass along these credit deals to their dealers based on their local policies and credit terms.

Col also is presenting a completely reorganized accessories program. A hefty consumer ad program has been blueprinted for the fall program push.

Col Records Trots Out Big Roster of Talent At Miami Beach Parley

Miami Beach, July 21.

Columbia Records annual conclave for its distribs and dealers, returned to Miami Beach after a one year hiatus with Americana Hotel again the setting for the three-day meet, wound with a dinner show Saturday (18) in the inn's Bal Masque Room that paraded a goodly representation of the company's talent roster.

With prexy Goddard Lieberson again displaying his flair for highly literate wit and emceeing, the reception of the talent parade got from the big gathering augured a solid sales-push return for their product by the distributors; show had the Columbia regulars and new pactees. Standouts of the evening were the Dave Brubeck Quartet, whose intro of a new arrangement following two of his standards might well indicate a different approach to his upcoming releases. The arrangements bore the exciting touch of a building series of progressive bars in the modern French (Milhaud) composers' genre. The mitting came continuously through its solo and group progressions.

Cliff Arquette broke them up with excerpts from his "Letters From Mom" newie for Columbia; Lola Albright left "Peter Gunn" to trip in from the Coast for a pretty speech, but didn't warble; still, the eye appeal and charm won the dealers. The Hi-Lo's—with two new replacements—had them pounding for more, as did Sylvia Syms in some solid blues chirping.

Of the younger artists, 16-year-old Leslie Uggams earned several callbacks via her two basics, "I Believe" and "Got The Whole World In His Hands." She encored with a cannily arranged and artfully shaded blues cleffing. The attractive youngster, a smooth in-person performer, is a bet for cafes, as

WALL OF FAME

British Ballroom Sets Up Foot-Prints A La Grauman's

Manchester, Eng., July 21.

The new $750,000 Belle Vue ballrooms here are doing a Grauman's.

Celebrities are being invited to plant their footprints in a wall of fame.

Gracie Fields, vet English vaude and concert warbler, left her mark here as one of the first. Before prints were made of her bare feet, they were rubbed in olive oil to prevent cement sticking to them.

As a Belle Vue girl employee washed Miss Fields' feet afterwards, the performer went coy with photographers. "No," she said, firmly, "you're not going to watch me putting my stockings on."

Miss Fields is 61.

Gabriel Soria May Buy Out RCA's Interest in Spain, Operate on License Deal

Madrid, July 21.

Understood RCA Victor will get out of its remote-control operation of RCA Espagnol in this country and operate with Gabriel Soria solely on a licensing arrangement. Soria would become 100% owner of the local company, buying tapes and equipment from the American electronic outfit. Heretofore it was a 50-50 partnership.

The Spanish subsidiary was set up about the same time as RCA Italiana, in Rome, but the latter operation is being continued under direct control of RCA International, from New York.

AIR FORCE BANDS FOR N. M. STATE FAIR

Albuquerque, N. M., July 21.

Three top military bands, including the U. S. Air Force band of Washington, D. C., have been lined up for the nine days of the New Mexico State Fair.

The Randolph (Tex.) AFB band is skedded to appear Sept. 26-29, the first four days of the annual show, and this is to be followed by the Corpus Christie, Tex., Naval band on the next four days (Sept. 30, Oct. 1-3). The USAF Band has been booked for the final day of the fair, Oct. 4.

Both the Randolph AFB Band and the Corpus Christi band will perform on the grounds as well as in the Coliseum regular shows. The USAF Band is skedded to give one performance, at the afternoon Coliseum show.

Only expenses involved are travel and food allowances.

Recording Studio For Chi's Int'l Music Fair

Chicago, July 21.

A recording studio in actual operation will be a feature of the International Music Fair slated for Navy Pier here Nov. 13-22. Exhibits are planned from major record firms, hi-fidelity and musical instrument makers. Top disk artists are being lined up for performances.

Besides the operating recording studio, public will also be able to see the pressing, processing and packaging of platters.

Promoters of the expo say they plan similar shows for Detroit, Cleveland, New York, Los Angeles and other key cities.

LABEL'S 7-INCH STEREO SINGLE

By HERM SCHOENFELD

After a 10-year truce, the war between the 33 rpm and 45 rpm again broke out this week with Columbia Records' introduction of a seven-inch 33 rpm stereo disk aimed at the single market. Since 1949 when the original fight was settled, or rather suspended, the disk industry has settled down to a double speed setup in which 33 rpm has become standard for LPs and 45 rpm for the singles.

Columbia, which pioneered the LP disk and attempted from the outset to get the 33 rpm speed established as the universal industry standard, now believes that the advent of stereo has made the time ripe for another try at 33 rpm singles. The monaural 33 rpm singles of 10 years ago were ultimately swept from the field by the huge promotion for the 45 rpm singles engineered by RCA Victor.

Goddard Lieberson, Columbia's prexy, stated that the new stereo 33 rpm singles, dubbed "Stereo Seven," were designed "to reach a new and broader audience for single records, the mature audience which has largely abandoned single-disk collecting in recent years." Lieberson said: "These mature listeners have become such enthusiastic and consistent 33 rpm buyers that this speed now represents 80% of the total record market dollar volume."

Pegged at 98c

He pointed out that the steadily growing number of stereo buyers is drawn from the LP audience. "We believe," he said, "these mature listeners will be attracted to a 33 rpm stereo single disk as a logical development in their record purchasing. Stereo Seven, with its exciting potentialities for new effects and special material, will bring a new era in sound to single records and will thus revitalize that market." Col's stereo 33 rpm singles are being priced at 98c, competitive with the monophonic 45 rpm singles.

Reaction to Col's move by the other majors was generally cool. One competitive label stated that

Tap Krefetz As UAR Sales Head

Lou Krefetz has been named national sales manager for United Artists Records, filling the vacancy caused by the recent death of Lester Lees. An industry veteran, Krefetz pinchhit for Lees shortly before the latter died and then was asked by UA Records' exec v.p. David W. Picker to take over the slot permanently.

Krefetz operated his own label, ARA Records, several years ago and then spent several years in distribution with Oriole Distributors in Baltimore. In 1951, he discovered the Clovers, a vocal combo which made several hits, and then moved to Atlantic Records as sales chief.

Arthur Murray Studio In St. Paul Gets Probed

St. Paul, July 21.

The city council has launched an investigation of the Arthur Murray dance studio and to determine if such businesses should be licensed and regulated. Action was taken after Commissioner Milton Rosen reported the receipt of numerous complaints about the studio, including reports of sales of expensive memberships.

The council directed the city and county attorneys and the licensing inspector to look into the studio's operation.

Songo for Ingo

Chicago, July 21.

Already celebrated in song in his native Sweden, Ingemar Johannson, the heavyweight sleeper with the sledgehammer right, has become an American folk hero, too.

A pair of WBBM staffers—Josh Brady, who hosts a daily radio show, and Paul Severson, trombonist in the station's orch —collaborated on a folk-type tune honoring the European prize fighter who's now heavyweight champ. Brady's lyric, to be sung in a Swedish accent, goes like this:

Ingemar, Ingemar, the walloping Swede
We thought he had nothing but a left hand lead;
But we changed our mind when the champ was floored
With a fist like a ham from a smorgasbord.

Monterey Jazz Fete Lines Up Big Roster For Oct. 2-4 Blowout

Monterey, Cal., July 21.

Count Basie's Band, Woody Herman's Band and the Modern Jazz Quartet are among the groups signed to appear at the five-concert Monterey Jazz Festival Oct. 2-3-4.

General Manager Jimmy Lyons said a specially organized all-star band, picked by Herman and the festival's music consultant, John Lewis, will present new pieces by Lewis, Billy Strayhorn, Gunther Schuller, J. J. Johnson, Benny Golson, Andre Hodeir, Jimmy Guiffre and Quincy Jones at the festival's two afternoon gigs. Herman and Schuller will take turns leading the orch.

Others signed for this second annual festival include: Sarah Vaughan, the Lambert-Hendricks-Ross Trio, Jimmy Rushing, Coleman Hawkins, Ben Webster, Sonny Rollins, Lizzie Miles, the George Lewis New Orleans Band, the Chris Barber Traditional Band from England, Oscar Peterson Trio, Cal Tjader Quintet, Earl (Fatha) Hines, Tito Puente and J. J. Johnson.

LOCAL 802 P.A. SEES ORIENT FLOODING U.S.

Tokyo, July 14.

Vacationing Abe Savage, press-agent for New York Local 802 of the AFM, declared, "In five years, certainly 10, the Orient will rival Europe in supplying entertainers (including musicians) to the U.S."

Asked about union barriers, Savage added, "I would imagine that something could be worked out. Right now what the American Federation of Musicians resents bitterly are all the tapes recorded overseas for movie backgrounds—not so much in Japan, but mainly in London. But there is no objection to an interchange of talent. I'm sure there will be a relaxation of the barriers."

Right now, Savage said, visiting musicians don't have to belong to the union if they come only for a limited stay or a single tour. "The AFM sanctions foreign stuff all the time," he stated.

Writes His Own Ticket

Dallas, July 21.

Not since Phil Regan has show biz had a real singing policeman. But Dallas has one in the person of George Kent, a dispatcher with the Dallas Police Dept., who not only sings, but writes songs and accompanies himself on the guitar.

He is slated to appear on WSM, Nashville, on "Friday Night Frolics," and "Grand Ole Opry" to sing a couple of his own songs on each show.

RCA Victor's Anti-Static Disk Hailed as Technical Milestone

An important new technical advance in the recording art has been made by RCA Victor which has come up with a new anti-static ingredient in the manufacturing compound. The new substance, tagged 317X, removes the dust-attracting property of the vinylite LPs and also eliminates the snap, pop, and crackle, so vital to breakfast cereals, that frequently plague LPs. RCA Victor v.p. and general manager George R. Marek, hailing the new ingredient as "one of the great technical advances in recording of the decade, said that all RCA Victor stereo LPs in the future will be "miracle surface" records.

Victor is kicking off the new processing development with a heavy advertising campaign in conjunction with its August release schedule. All Victor stereo packages will carry a special "miracle surface" sticker on their front covers.

Although not planned immediately, the new ingredient is due to change current packaging techniques. The inner LP sleeve, intended as a dust jacket, may disappear eventually since its protective function will no longer be necessary.

The new playing surface will also be a factor in maintaining the lead which disks currently have over tapes. One of the major advantages of tape has been its comparatively low music-to-noise ratio. Any marked improvement in the quality of disks now makes a mass switchover to tapes even more unlikely.

W. German Radio Cancels Lyttleton in Answer To Brit. Union's Koller Ban

Berlin, July 14.

The recent banning of German tenor saxophonist, Hans Koller, by the British Musicians Union has led to immediate counteractions in Germany. The W-German radio station, Suedwestfunk (SWF), which had hired the British Humphrey Lyttleton orch for its jazz session in July, cancelled this commitment immediately. Furthermore, SWF informed the German press that it will not hire any British musicians for its jazz broadcasts as long as the British Musicians Union is not willing to let an equal number of German musicians play in England. SWF says it has been hiring 60 to 70 British musicians within the past few years and calls the British banning of Koller a scandal.

Koller, one of the most prominent German jazz soloists, had played at the English Bath Festival with such success that the English bandleader Johnny Dankworth invited him to perform in his BBC show a few days later. Shortly before this show, the union informed Dankworth that Koller's participation in this show would not be permitted.

SWF will apply to the German Jazz Federation to take similar measures. It calls the banning "unfair" and "deplorable" in view of the fact that it has so often been emphasized that music is international and contributes to better relations between nations.

MGM's Nassau Powwow

MGM Records will hold its annual distributor convention July 30-31 at the British Colonial Hotel, Nassau. This marks the first time that the diskery has gone outside the U.S. for a meet.

Arnold Maxin, MGM prexy, will head the conclave at which diskery's fall and winter program will be unveiled. Eddie Heller, diskery a&r staffer, Sol Handwerger, publicity chief, and engineer Ed Budzinski will head an advance party to Nassau to make preparations for the distribs who'll begin pouring in on Wednesday (29).

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By MIKE GROSS

Felicia Sanders (Decca): "IN OTHER WORDS" (Almanac*) is a pretty ballad with a meaningful delivery that should mean something to jocks who go for tasty programming material. "SUMMER LOVE" (Victor Young Publications*) is an attractive ballad and another good deejay bet for programming to adult tastes.

Jaye P. Morgan (MGM): "SOMEBODY ELSE IS TAKING MY PLACE" (Shapiro-Bernstein*) is in good hands this time out and rates a strong crack at the deejay tables. "SOMEBODY LOSES, SOMEBODY WINS" (Hecht, Lancaster & Buzzell*), is an above-average ballad that gets a pullout chance because of thrush's solid styling.

Jacques Arle (ABC-Paramount): "TANGO MILITAIRE" (Shapiro-Bernstein*) blends a martial beat with a tango flavor for good instrumental results. "POSTILLON D'AMOUR" (Symphony House*) has a brisk instrumental flavor that some jocks may go for.

Dolph Prince (Strand): "NOBODY UNDERSTANDS ME" (Raleigh†) has a good swinging ballad beat that gives this newcomer a fancy start. "MY OWN TRUE LOVE" (Remick*) is a neatly concocted ballad that the crooner whips out for overall good results.

Braga Sisters (Felsted): "THIRTY YARDS OF PETTICOAT" (Le-Bill†) stretches the juve angle with an average beat and story to match. "LITTLE GIRL BLUE" (Le Bill†) is a teen-tagged tune without any merits. It's no relation to the Rodgers & Hart standard of the same name.

Bruce & Jerry (Arwin): "I SAW HER FIRST" (Daywin†) has an interesting duet approach with enough of a rocking lilt to get the message across. "TAKE THIS PEARL" (Daywin†) is a routine attempt at the rocking mood.

Carole Bennett (Shad): "OUR KIND OF LOVE" (Admont*) gets by because of the way thrush moves in on a ballad mood. "TO EACH HIS OWN" (Paramount*) could pick up new plays in this effective rendition.

Jess Duboy (Colonial): "PUPPY LOVE" (Bentley†) barks up the same old teenage tree in lyric idea and beat. "ECHOS" (Brewer*) is an average ballad that won't be heard too often.

The Plaids (Era): "AROUND THE CORNER" (Pattern*) is a noisemaking rocker that the juke set could go for. "HE STOLE FLO" (Pattern*) won't steal any play although it's in the familiar raucous groove.

Jimmy Harrison (Atco): "HICCUPS" (Dara-Progressive†) grinds out a solid teen beat that's good for some juke action. "GEOMETRY OF LOVE" (Progressive†) is a square rocking ballad that fails the course.

Astor Piazolo (Tico): "LA COQUETTE" (B. F. Wood*) is a lighthearted Latino piece with a winning instrumental approach. "LULLABY OF BIRDLAND" (Patricia†) spells out the jazz classic in neat chile terms.

The Upbeats (Joy): "TO ME YOU'RE A SONG" (Joy*) is a workable ballad that the group develops into an attractive slice. "UNBELIEVABLE LOVE" (Joy*) puts together some nice harmony techniques on a lilting ballad effort.

Edison Youngblood (Hanover): "TENNIS SHOES" (Figure†) follows the teenage garb fad with a beat and a lyric that will mean something to the kids. "MAYBE NOW" (Vision†) is just a fair ballad with a rocking touch.

Tommy Williams (Vica): "MY DREAM AND MY PRAYER" (Virgo†) takes a couple of ballad basics and works them into a dramatic side with a spinning potential. "LATE LATE LAST NIGHT" (Virgo†) swings according to the rocking rote with no new twists.

Jerry Fuller (Challenge): "BETTY MY ANGEL" (Horn-Jat†) follows the romantic teenage approach in melody and lyric thought but lacks a takeoff punch. "MEMORIES OF YOU" (Horn-Jat†) is a routine rocking ballad but Jerry Fuller gives it some spinning importance.

Tony Toran Orch (Counterpoint) "LIMELIGHT CHA CHA" (Bourne*) gives Charlie Chaplin's clicko theme of a few years ago another spinning chance with this Latino tempo. "DARK SHADOWS" (Cascade†) is peppered with a chile beat that the gringos can take.

Tony Lee (King): "SOMEONE TO LOVE ME" (Jay & Cee†) has a catching rocking sway for okay spinning chances. "I DON'T CARE WHAT YOU DO" (Jay & Cee†) doesn't do much for the rocking ballad field.

Best Bets

TOMMY EDWARDS .... I'VE BEEN THERE
(MGM) .... I Looked At Heaven

Tommy Edwards' "I've Been There" (Korwin) is a standout ballad that will roll to the top even in this rocking era. "I've Looked At Heaven" (Yukon*) is a pleasing ballad with a happy lilt that Tommy Edwards knows how to handle so well.*

* * *

EDD BYRNES .... LIKE I LOVE YOU
(Warner Bros.) .... Kookie's Mad Pad

Edd Byrnes' "Like I Love You" (Witmark) will hit the payoff columns on the basis of his popularity and the hip-talking teen approach. "Kookie's Mad Pad" (Witmark*) puts "Kookie" in a jazz setting and more hip talk that the kids dig.*

AMES BROS. .... NOW HEAR THIS
(RCA Victor) .... Now It's Me

Ames Bros.' "Now Hear This" (George Paxton) is a vigorous item about a sailor's love that the boys march right into the big spinning circles. "Now It's Me" (Winneton†) has a pretty ballad lilt and should do well on the spinning circuit, too.*

NAT KING COLE .... SWEET BIRD OF YOUTH
(Capitol) .... Midnight Flyer

Nat King Cole's "Sweet Bird of Youth" (Comet) will fly to the top of the spinning heap because of the way he handles the tender ballad sentiments. Tune, incidentally, has nothing to do with Tennessee Williams' click drama of the same name. "Midnight Flyer (Winneton†) breezes along with an infectious boogie beat that will give its ballad mate a run for the money.*

* * *

DELLA SISTERS .... TEACH HIM TO LOVE ME
(Urania) .... The Last Bell

Della Sisters' "Teach Him To Love Me" (Reis†) works up a neat harmony attack that's surefire for current tastes in the ballad field and should come out of left field for a big score. "The Last Bell" (Bell†) may ring the right note for some swinging teeners.

BOBBY RAY .... LITTLE GIRL LOST
(JDS) .... Girls Were Made For Boys

Bobby Ray's "Little Girl Lost" (Joel-Peer†) is tailormade for the teen market in vocal approach and lyric angle, a blending that pays off. "Girls Were Made For Boys" (Joel†) has an okay swinging beat and the adolescent singing style could win the young femmes.

Album Reviews

Mitch Miller: "Party Sing Along With Mitch" (Columbia). Mitch Miller latched on to a strong selling idea with his "Sing Along" series and he's pouring 'em out for top commercial results. Latest follows the pattern of singable, hummable songs delivered with typical Miller orch and chorus zest. The accompanying lyric aides make it all easy to follow.

Chet Atkins: "Hummm and Strum Along" (RCA Victor). This follows the "sing along" formula with a peg for those who lean toward the alfalfa beat. Chet Atkins is a solid exponent of the hillbilly style and the package looks like a natural for big sales. As an extra added attraction the set features a songbook with ukulele and guitar chords info.

Ruth Welcome: "At A Sidewalk Cafe" (Capitol). Continental tunes are excellently suited to delivery by a zither and when the instrument is handled by Ruth Welcome it emerges as an expert blending. Miss Welcome's zither is accomped by the Milt Shaw Trio (violin, bass, accordion) to help round out a strong sound on such as "J'attenderai," "Domino" and "Under Paris Skies."

Tommy Dorsey Orch Starring Warren Covington: "Dance and Romance" (Decca). Here's a neatly fashioned disk that makes dancing easy and appealing. With Warren Covington giving the downbeat to the Tommy Dorsey crew, the tunes are delivered with an agreeable lilt. "You Go To My Head," "Night and Day," "I Married An Angel" and "Why Do I Love You" are some of the standards that make up the package.

"Modern Times" (United Artists). Success of the reissue of Charlie Chaplin's 1936 film, "Modern Times," has sparked the release of this soundtrack item. It's a strong entry for collectors and pic's big b.o. should rub off with good disk sales. The score, with some intriguing themes composed by Chaplin, is expertly conducted by Alfred Newman and the sound is top-grade.

Ruth Brown: "Late Date With Ruth Brown" (Atlantic). "Late Date" opens up new vistas for Ruth Brown. Heretofore relegated to the blues or rhythm & blues beat, Miss Brown shows here that she's an admirable purveyor of the pop standard. She delivers with a vocal punch that gives the oldies a fresh and penetrating meaning. In her repertoire are such as "Let's Face The Music and Dance," "I Love You, Porgy," "You and the Night and the Music," "Bewitched" and "It Could Happen To You." Richard Wess rates a bow as aranger-conductor.

David Terry Orch: "Stereo Goes Waltzing" (Warner Bros.). This set has the basic ingredients for good sales among waltz fans. A big sound enhanced by a load of strings and woodwinds on a repertoire that captures and sticks to the waltz mood. It's all unpretentious and melodically attractive.

Stanley-Johnson Orch: "Have Harp Can't Travel" (Liberty). The harp takes the spotlight in this orch set and it comes off winningly. Ray Stanley and Hal Johnson have placed Dorothy Remsen and Catherine Johnk in the harp chairs and they make their instruments sing. "I Got Rhythm," "Me and My Shadow," "Holiday For Strings" and "Dancing On The Ceiling" are among the choice items in the repertoire.

Ed Begley: "Walt Whitman's Leaves of Grass" (Caedmon). Stage and screen thesp Ed Begley comes across as expert reader of Walt Whitman's verse. From the opening "I Hear America Singing" through pieces from "Faces," "The Sleepers" and "Song Of Myself," Begley takes hold with dramatic impact.

Hillel & Aviva: "A Concert With Hillel & Aviva" (Elektra). The songs of Israel get a dynamic treatment in the hands of Hillel & Aviva. They've got plenty of knowhow and song-selling savvy and they give their native repertoire an authentic and exciting approach. Set was recorded at N.Y. Town Hall concert last March.

Robin Roberts: "Fair and Tender Ladies" (Tradition). Robin Roberts makes a pleasant contribution to the folk shelf with this roundup of tunes concerned with rejected love and its affect on "fair and tender ladies." She's got an attractive way with a folk lilt and helps it along by self-accomping on guitar. Eric Darling comes in nicely with a banjo assist.

Erie County's $180,000 Subsidy for Buff Symph Comes Under Legal Fire

Buffalo, July 21.

Alleging that the County of Erie had paid "illegally" nearly $180,000 for the support of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra, James C. Heaney, a local lawyer, has brought suit against the county requesting that further payments should be discontinued and immediate action taken to collect the funds which have already been paid.

Heaney, complaining as a private citizen, alleges that the money paid to the Philharmonic was a "gift of public funds to a private organization contrary to law." He stated that he was being required to pay taxes to the County for the support and maintenance of a private organization and thereby has "suffered irreparable harm along with other taxpayers of the community."

He pointed out that the County had paid the Philharmonic $42,000 in 1956, $50,000 in 1957, $50,000 in 1958 and $37,500 so far this year. In addition to the funds contributed by the County, the Philharmonic also has been receiving approximately $30,000 a year from the City.

Maiden Year's Progress Cited by Pennsy Dealers

Philadelphia, July 21.

Significant progress marked the first organizational year of the Pennsylvania Assn. of Retail Record Dealers, according to Jack Jolley, retiring president.

In addition to joining the fight for passage of the proposed Federal Fair Trade Act, the org was instrumental in forcing the record manufacturers to discontinue a coupon deal, which would have benefited only the larger discount houses.

Sidney Myers has been named prez for the 1959-60 terms. Other elected officers include Mark Rubinstein, v.p.; Walter H. Keller, secretary, and William Barwis, treasurer.

Rank Records of America has taken over the distribution rights to Venus Records' coupling of "Ma, She's Making Eyes At Me" and "Yes, We Have No Bananas" by the Bentley Bros.

Boy With Build In RCA Buildup; Taylor To Riverside; Other Pacts

RCA Victor: Johnny Restivo

A new 15-year-old singer, Johnny Restivo, will be in the spotlight of RCA Victor's biggest artist promotion this year in behalf of his first release, "The Shape I'm In" and "Ya Ya." "The Shape I'm In" tune is a reference to the fact that Restivo was recently named "The Most Perfectly Proportioned Teenager in America in 1958" by a national health magazine.

Ben Rosner, RCA manager of radio and tv relations, called a meeting of his national staff last week to get the promotion underway. In the next four weeks, Restivo will launch a national disk jockey tour. Restivo was inked by RCA pop artists & repertoire chief Steve Sholes, who was responsible for getting Elvis Presley to the label. He's hoping lightning strikes again.

Riverside: Billy Taylor

Billy Tylor, jazz pianist, has been inked to an exclusive deal by Riverside Records. Currently appearing at the Hickory House, N.Y., Taylor will be backed on his first set for Riverside by a combo containing four flutes.

Epic: Shelton, Bledsoe

Orchestras Inc. has set record pacts with Epic for Gary Shelton and Steve Bledsoe & Blue Jays. Shelton (ex-Mercury and Mark labels) will front a rock 'n' roll group for his Epic etchings.

Elektra: Anita Ellis

Anita Ellis has joined the indie Elektra label. Thrush, who's featured in the Broadway legituner, "Flower Drum Song," will cut her first LP in September.

Mex Govt. to Ask U.S. To End Cleffer Bite

Mexico City, July 14.

The Mexican Government will step in to negotiate for elimination of a U.S. tax damaging to the interests of Mexican composers, according to Luiz Martinez Serrano, head of the Pham music firm.

Serrano has been waging a one-man campaign to achieve abolition of the 30% levy on royalties accrued to Mexican tunesmiths. While his work was fruitless in past few years, in his last visit to the U.S. he obtained copies of agreements made between the U.S. government and other Latin American nations in which tax payments have been cancelled.

The Departments of Education and Foreign Relations will now work towards obtaining "tax relief" for Mexico's ill-paid fashioners of words and music.

Strand's Singles

Strand Records, diskery newly launched by Marv Holtzman, is putting the stress on single releases until mid-August when it has scheduled its first LP. Its first three singles have hit the market.

Meantime, Holtzman has been bolstering his roster with the signing of Don Cherry and the Miller Bros. Cherry previously recorded for Columbia while the Miller Bros. a young vocal group, appeared with Duke Ellington's "Jump For Joy" in Florida.

The Strand label will be distributed through Decca Distributing Corp. and Coral Record branches.

Disk Sales In Britain Still Down But Decline Narrows After 1st Qtr.

London, July 14.

Though disk sales are still a matter for gloomy comment here, there's room for a faint smile in that the graph is showing a rise from the levels of the year's first quarter.

Whereas, in March, manufacturers' sales were 26% down on March, 1958, the April figures as published by the Board of Trade show only a 6% decline on last year's corresponding month. And whereas a first-quarter comparison reveals a 21% drop, a first-four-months ditto offers the comparatively cheerful figure of 18%.

Monetary value of April sales was $2,721,600, bringing the total for the first four months of the year to $11,026,400. In those four months 78 rpm disks sold amounted to 4,099,000 as against 13,897,000 in the corresponding 1958 period. This crop was eased by a rise in the production of 45 rpm platters—12,319,000 as compared with 7,195,000. At 4,555,000, the production of 33⅓ disks was 18% lower than the 5,555,000 of the 1958 period.

Ken Nordine to Emcee French Lick Jazz Fete

Chicago, July 21.

Ken Nordine, Chi's freelance announcer and Dot disk personality, has been tapped for emcee chores at the French Lick-Sheraton Jazz Fest July 30 for four days.

Label is releasing his new album "Next," a sequel to his earlier "Word Jazz" platter.

Reopen Phoenix Riverside; Name Orchs' 1-Nighters

Phoenix, July 21.

The Riverside Ballroom, long popular South Phoenix spot, has been reopened by the Riverside Amusement Co. headed by Robert MacFarlan. With an original investment of $300,000, MacFarlan plans an ambitious expansion program that includes a 40-lane bowling alley, 7,000-seat sports arena and restaurant with cocktail lounge.

At present, policy is nightly dancing to Chen Dondi's band, to be augmented by strong one-nighters. Confirmed bookings to date include Orrin Tucker, Guy Lombardo, Les Elgart, Count Basie and Glenn Miller's orch with Ray McKinley conducting.

The Paradox Of Billie Holiday

Billie Holiday, noted blues singer who died in Metropolitan Hospital, N.Y., July 17, was a music business paradox. Unanimously recognized by critics as the greatest jazz singer since Bessie Smith and a major influence on scores of other singers, Miss Holiday never attained wide public recognition.

Although she had several big disks to her credit, notably "Strange Fruit," "Fine and Mellow" and "Travelin' Light," Miss Holiday never had a 1,000,000-record seller in her long diskography. She was until the very end the idol of a relatively narrow jazz circle, unknown to the millions of kids who buy records made by singers who basically owe their phrasing and projection techniques to Miss Holiday.

Miss Holiday, who was brought to the hospital almost two months ago suffering from liver and heart troubles, was under arrest during her last few weeks. She was charged with illegal possession of narcotics, a rap which she experienced a couple of times before. For the past 20 years, she had been plagued with drug addiction despite arrests, imprisonments and voluntary efforts to kick the habit.

Up From Eleanora Fagan

Born Eleanora Fagan in Baltimore, Miss Holiday summed up her family life in her autobiography, "Lady Sings The Blues," written in collaboration with Bill Dufty. She said: "Mom and Pop were just a couple of kids when they got married. He was 18, she was 16 and I was three."

When she was 13, she worked in a Harlem restaurant operated by her mother and sang for tips. Already at that time, she was listening closely to records by Bessie Smith and Louis Armstrong, the two most important influences on her style.

At 14, she applied for a dancing job at a Harlem night club, Pod's & Jerry's. She failed the hoofing audition but was taken on as a singer. It was while working for $2 a night in a Harlem club that jazz critic John Hammond discovered her. He recommended her to Benny Goodman, then a rising young swing clarinetist who hired her for her first recording

VARIETY DISK JOCKEY POLL

This compilation is designed to indicate those records rising in popularity as well as those on top. Ratings are computed on the basis of ten points for a No. 1 mention, nine for a No. 2, and so on down to one point. Wherever possible, only records with two or more mentions are listed, even though their total points are less in some cases than those which receive only one mention. Cities and jockeys will vary from week to week to present a comprehensive picture of all sectors of the country regionally.

Inside Stuff—Music

Ira Gershwin's first book, to be published by Knopf on Oct. 19, titled "Lyrics on Several Occasions," will contain not only the words to 104 (out of almost 800) of the songs he wrote with his brother George, Jerome Kern, Kurt Weill, Harold Arlen, et al, but also inside on how they were written and the idiosyncrasies of producers, collaborators and stars involved. The memoir, running to over 50,000 words, is said to provide a highly personal and informal history of Broadway music-show biz of the last 35 years. It's studded with anecdotes about the Adele Astaires, Gertrude Lawrence, Danny Kaye, Judy Garland, Ethel Merman, Fanny Brice, Bing Crosby, Nora Bayes, Gene Kelly, Bobby Clark.

Irving Fields, currently appearing with his trio at Wentworth Hall in Jackson, N.H., played the same spot some 16 years ago and was inspired by the scenic background then to write a symphonic work, "An American Forest." Coincidentally with Fields' return date to the N.H. hotel this year is the fact that Fields has been set to perform his symphony at Carnegie Hall, N.Y., Oct. 18.

Songsmith Al Stillman sums up the "evolution" of latterday pop music as follows: from rockabilly to rock 'n' roll; r'n'r to rack-and-ruin; and rack-and-ruin to no rack and complete ruin. (The "no rack" refers, of course, to the Music Dealers' Service having eliminated its music racks.)

Vet British songsmith and ex-music publisher Jimmy Campbell (Connelly & Co.) had to have his left eye removed as result of an auto accident in Tangier, Morocco, which has him bedded at the Middlesex Hospital, London. His leg is okay, however, and he is now able to walk around on crutches, but the specialist thought the eye removal advisable. Campbell cracks, "Maybe you see a better class of a&r men with one eye!"

In its bid to get a larger slice of the pop singles market, Urania Records is taking the "master buying" route. Bill Nielsen, general manager and director of sales, is out to buy masters of all types of pop material. Label currently is running with its latest purchase, a coupling of "The Last Bell" and "Teach Him To Love Me" by the Della Sisters. Platter was kicked off in the New England area.

International Recording Contest, strictly for amateurs, is to be held in London for the first time this year, Oct. 29-Nov. 3. Entries will be on tape. BBC is showing a benevolent interest in the proceedings, having promised to try to make available a studio for the judging panel, on which one of its producers, Douglas Cleverdon, will sit. Corporation also plans to air some of the top tapes in its Network Three program for radio and recording addicts, "Sound."

Muzak Luring Lotsa Sales as Opening In Greater London Nears

London, July 21.

Aug. 1 is D-Day for launching Muzak to a bevy of subscribers in the Greater London area. Though the terms of the franchise don't permit names of outfits taking the service to be made public till that date, it's learned that inquiries have been rolling in from offices, factories, department stores and such at an estimated 50 a week.

Two subsidiary companies to operate Muzak and associated products have been set up by Associated TeleVision Ltd. which is the U.K. franchise owner. They're Planned Music Ltd. and Planned Communications Ltd., headquartered in Regent St. where a central transmission centre is being built. Directors of the two setups are Sir Robert Renwick, chairman, Val Parnell, Lew Grade, J. A. L. Drummond, the Earl of Bessborough, Anthony Gishford, Sir Ben Barnett and the general manager, Neil D. Margerison. Planned Music Ltd. puts out the actual Muzak service while the other firm is more concerned with the development of allied projects such as intercommunications, timing systems and fire alarm services.

Muzak is already installed at the new hq of ATV near Marble Arch, ATV House, while pilot schemes are in operation in Shell Petroleum and Rank Organization buildings. After tackling the Greater London area, Planned Music Ltd. aims to develop on a national basis.

Victor's 'Music-In-the-Hair' Drive For Fall LPs in Deal With Breck

In another cooperative tieup deal, RCA Victor is launching its 1959 "best buy" program with one of the most extensive advertising and promotion drives in alliance with John H. Breck Inc., hair lotion manufacturers. It's figured that over $500,000 will be spent in the promotion.

As its part in the campaign, Breck is offering an RCA Victor LP sampler containing 12 longhair and pop selections from the 24 releases which Victor is issuing under the "New Golden Age of Sound" banner. Breck is offering the sampler at $1.25 for the stereo LP and $1 for the monaural plus a Breck boxtop. The offer will run from Sept. 1 to the end of the year.

Breck will spotlight the Victor sampler in a heavy advertising spread in a large roster of top consumer mags. In addition, Breck is scheduling plugs for the sampler offer on the September and October "Shirley Temple Storybook" shows which it is bankrolling. Some 15,000 beauty shops, moreover, will get point-of-sale display material for the disk premium offer.

On its own, Victor is giving a heavy ad accent to its "best buy" LPs, which are being sold with the new "miracle surface" angle (see separate story). The Victor packages are also getting heavy tv exposure via the NBC-TV "Bonanza" show plus a flock of network plugs on other tv and radio shows. Gold foil, in line with the "Golden Age of Sound" slogan, is being used liberally by Victor in its dealer window displays and LP wrappers.

Victor introduced its new line at a series of regional distrib meetings held throughout the country last week. Following the regional confabs, individual distribs held their own conferences to introduce the line to local dealers.

UA IN BIG PUSH FOR 'PORGY & BESS' JAZZ LP

United Artists Records is coming up with its biggest promotion to date for a non-soundtrack set in behalf of its new "Jazz Soul of 'Porgy and Bess'" package. The label is planning a heavy ad campaign for the set in addition to mailing pieces and special displays plus maximum coverage of disk jockeys. As a new wrinkle, UA is selling the chain of FM "good music" stations on programming the LP in full.

Set, which was arranged and conducted by Bill Potts, features an all-star lineup of jazz performers in big band versions of the Gershwin tunes.

Stereo Singles

the 33 rpm single would add to the difficulties of the dealer who already has enough inventory problems with the current two-speed, monaural-stereo releases. This label's spokesmen said that stereo singles have already come out on the 45 rpm speed, hence Col's move is only a technical matter representing no fundamental advance in the recording art.

Another disk exec pointed out that whatever market existed for the stereo single was now based on the 45 rpm speed. The juke operators, for instance, are using 45 rpm singles in the stereo boxes and could not be expected to go for the 33 rpm speed after investing in 45 rpm machines. Doubting that any significant section of the adult audience would be converted back to the single market because of a matter of speeds, this exec asserted that, in any case, the great bulk of phonograph machines now in homes were equipped to play both 45 or 33 rpm disks and hence disk buyers have no special loyalty to either speed.

Could Cue 1-Speed

In favor of Columbia's 33 rpm single is the argument that it represents a step in the direction of a one-speed standard in the disk industry. There is no dispute that if one speed had to be adopted, 33 rpm would be it since it can do anything that the 45 rpm speed can do, while the same cannot be said for the 45 rpm speed.

Col's initial release of the Stereo Seven singles is made up of recent and new releases by its top artists, including Johnny Mathis, Duke Ellington, Johnny Horton, Mitch Miller, Johnny Cash, Tony Bennett, the Four Lads, Percy Faith, the Kirby Stone Four, Frankie Laine and Ray Conniff. The disks will have a new multi-colored label and will be encased in special black-and-white envelopes.

Billie Holiday

date, singing "Your Mother's Son-In-Law."

A couple of years later, she established her reputation as a jazz stylist with a series of Columbia recordings made with a group headed by pianist Teddy Wilson. In this combo was the late Lester Young, Count Basie's tenor saxist, who nicknamed Miss Holiday "Lady Day." She, in turn, dubbed him "Pres" and both monickers stuck throughout their subsequent careers. Young died only a couple of months before Miss Holiday.

In 1938, Miss Holiday joined the Artie Shaw band as vocalist. She worked for Shaw for several months and then moved into Cafe Society, then a major N.Y. talent showcase, for a long run. Her reputation as a jazz singer had by that time been solidly established.

In 1947, Miss Holiday was arrested on a narcotics violation for the first time. She was committed to a Federal rehabilitation centre for a year in an attempt to break the habit. When she was released, she starred in a Carnegie Hall, N.Y., concert and subsequently gave numerous performances at both Carnegie and Town Halls, but was not permitted to work in any N.Y. night club since the police refused to grant her a work card.

'New Orleans' Film

Miss Holiday appeared in a 1946 film, "New Orleans," and was featured on a 1958 tv show, "The Sound of Jazz." She was also the lyricist of several songs, including "Fine and Mellow," "God Bless The Child" and "Don't Explain."

In recent years, Miss Holiday made numerous albums for various labels. Norman Granz's Verve Records has been issuing them regularly, the latest being "Stay With Me." MGM Records had a two-album deal with her and was able to complete one of the packages before her death. It's expected that now there will be a stream of postmortem disk releases and memorial albums. Her longtime manager Joe Glaser handled her various deals.

She is survived by her third husband, Louis McKay, from whom she was separated for the past 18 months.

Ditto Billy Storm—detailed under New Acts on basis of his current date in the Bal Masque.

Johnnie Ray was the vet topper who finaled the affair, with warm kudos for Lieberson following his hot turn. Spoofing followed the work of Jimmy Dean, Johnny Cash, Johnny Horton (who also led a country & western shindig Thursday), with Lieberson playing a straightfaced "singing" participant. Mitch Miller was also subject for heckling.

Others on the lengthy roster included Ronnie Chapman, the Coronados (who went big), Percy Faith (in for a bow), Richard Maltby (in a funny spoof on stereo recording), Bernie Richards (well received), Ernie Sheldon, Ray Conniff and Frank DeVol. Local ace batoneer Dave Tyler and Miami AFM band turned in a masterful job at backing the proceedings. Lary.

Urania's Avon Label

Urania Records is launching a new label, Avon Records, for the production of low-price stereo and monophonic albums and singles. First LP to be issued on Avon is "My Fair Lady," featuring an all-British cast accompanied by the Knightsbridge Theatre Chorus & Orchestra. Wildwood Looks for Wham Season After Hot '4th'; Nitery Matinees Big

Wildwood, N. J., July 21.

This hectic, happy resort by the sea is roaring along to what may be a banner summer.

Business got off to an unusual booming start in late June with a great July 4 adding to the cash register symphony. Business ebbed ever so slightly after that and then started mounting again during the past week as heavy record week-long rains forced motel and room-confined vacationists into theatre and night club diversion. After eight days, the rains subsided.

Wildwood niteries make up one of the better night club resorts still existing in the country. Local clubs have made a success of three unusual features.

(1) Wildwood night clubs successfully charge an admission on weekends, holidays and other busy times. Untaxed by Uncle Sam, as in the case of the cabaret tax, this charge is usually all gravy and is requested and easily obtained by clubs with both name and run-of-the-mill rock 'n' roll attractions.

(2) Wildwood clubs achieve an almost around the clock operation with matinee entertainment or jam sessions usually playing to capacity or near-capacity crowds. A number of clubs such as the Hurricane and Rainbow hire talent specifically for afternoon appearances. In many cases, the mid-day musicians never set foot onstage at night here. This feature is most unusual in the U. S. where few places have ever convinced patrons that they should attend night clubs in the afternoon.

(3) Wildwood bonifaces make hay with the musical bar. This is the feature where the talent performs on a stage inside the main bar. The vast majority of clubs here have a stage within the confines of rather massive bars.

Top business is being racked up by Ben Martin's poshy, all-new Club Bolero. Powerhouse names promise to give Martin his best season. So far, Jimmie Rodgers and Connie Francis have been his blockbusters with Tommy Sands opening to heavy reservations Monday (20).

Rock 'n' roll attractions are

ROY ROGERS HOT 77G IN 10 AT ORE. EXPO

Portland, Ore., July 21.

The Roy Rogers Show grabbed a sizzling $77,000 in seven evening performances and three matinees at the Oregon Centennial Exposition Arena ending Thursday (16). The bill included Dale Evans, Rogers' Famly (5), Trigger & Jr., Sons of the Pionners (5), Homer Garret & His Hollywood Square Dancers (8), Pat Brady, Rafael Mendez & Mendez Twins, the Rudells (2), Les Marthys (2), Liberty Horses (8), and Rafael Mendez Orch 15). The 5,700-seater was scaled to $2.50.

Layout played behind the main gate with an additional $1 tab. Show set a new attendance record and only fell $5,000 short of the "Ice Capades" gross. Icer had a $3.50 top. Three matinees were SRO despite the 93-degree heat. Arena producer Wayne Dailard got the Exposition out of a two-week downbeat with this show. Lawrence Welk follows.

Multilingual Doris Day

Hollywood, July 21.

Doris Day will warble in five different tongues for an upcoming Columbia Records album, first time chirp has ever cut an LP in that many languages. She'll sing 12 numbers in German, Spanish, French, Italian and Japanese.

Label hit on idea for multi-tongued waxing after Nat Shapiro, international repertoire director, found singer's disks are big sellers abroad, during a recent 20-nation tour of South America and Europe.

Piaf to Play L'Etoile If Jo Gets Olympia H.O.

Paris, July 21.

According to trade sources here, a handshake agreement has been made by Edith Piaf and Josephine Baker that if the latter's show, "Paris Mes Amours," is still doing boff biz—as it is now—at the Olympia Music Hall next October, Miss Piaf will not press for her contractual stint there but do her stint at the Theatre De L'Etoile instead.

Olympia prexy Bruno Coquatrix signed Miss Piaf to headline a vaude show in October. The present Baker show was primarily a summer entry but sock response may have it run well into next season. Miss Piaf would head a vaude bill if she does her show at the Etoile.

Miss Piaf's last appearance at the Olympia in '57 stretched from one month to four due to SRO biz. She stopped only because of health reasons.

Names Lacking, Chi Paree Takes 4-Week Hiatus

Chicago, July 21.

Its quest for strong headliners to no avail, the Chez Paree will shut down as of Sunday (26) with reopening slated for Aug. 21. Big cafe figures it'll be cheaper than trying to keep the doors open with second-line acts.

Just who'll relight the club isn't certain yet. Firmed dates don't start till Jimmy Durante comes in Sept. 7. Also booked for the fall are Nat King Cole, Joe E. Lewis, and the McGuire Sisters. Current bill, in only for six days, consists of comic Billy Falbo and Jean Shannon & Brooks Bros.

Bright side to the impending hiatus is the fact it'll expedite some remodelling that started this week, most of it backstage.

DANNY KAYE $260,000 IN MONTH AT SYDNEY

Sydney, July 21.

Danny Kaye racked up a record $260,000 or better for his four-and-one-half week engagement at the Empire Theatre here ending Saturday (18).

Star and his troupe, including ventro Senor Wences, the Dancing Dunhills and juggler Francis Brunn, opened four-week stand last night (Mon.) at the Princess Theatre, Melbourne.

Royal Scots to Toot & Hoot-Mon in Glasgow

Glasgow, July 21.

Vaude is on a hoot-man music kick now!

The Band of the Royal Scots Greys, famed Auld Lang Syne regiment, will headline on the vaude stage at the Empire Theatre here Monday (27). Spectacular movements are promised, together with the regimental bagpipes and Highland dancers. Program will range in music from the traditionally martial to modern beat.

Band is being presented for the first time on any stage.

The Andrew Macpherson Singers will provide vocal backing in layout, being staged twice nightly.

Tartan-tailored bands are regularly seen in open-air spectacle, and turn out for the annual Edinburgh Festival Tattoo on esplanade of Edinburgh Castle.

'ARMY GAME' PLUS VAUDE AS LURES

By GORDON IRVING

Blackpool, Eng., July 21.

Link up strong vaude acts with a crowd-pulling tv show, preferably one from the Top 10 in ratings, and you have the probable answer and solution to the declining theatre boxoffice in the U.K.

That's one lesson deriving from the stage version of "The Army Game," presented in the ABC Hippodrome here by Bernard Delfont, London producer, by arrangement with Granada TV.

Vaude interest here is an encouraging feature in the British light entertainment field as audiences all over England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales gradually decline in favor of fireside tv customers. Once again Blackpool, often described as the "Las Vegas-cum-Coney Island" of northwest England, houses over a dozen ambitious stageshows, all drawing big holiday audiences at the height of the vacation season. Teeming millions spill over into this show biz playground from the industrial north and midlands of England.

The tv show "The Army Game," now translated into a simple stage episode of three scenes, is a weekly item of comedy centered round the adventures of a group of Service recruits, talking back and occasionally wilting under the blistering tongue of an irate sergeant-major. Thanks to the power of tv, the various types (Corporal Springer, Private Bisley, Private Cook and Pri-

JERRY LEWIS $46,000 NORTHWEST; PORT. 11G

Portland, Ore., July 21.

The Jerry Lewis Show racked up a near capacity $11,000 in one night performance at the Paramount Theatre last Tuesday (14). The 3,400-seater was scaled to $4.50.

Lewis was originally set for two nights but had to cancel the July 15 date because of a film commitment. Bill included The King's IV, DeCastro Sisters, Half Bros., Amazing Mr. Ballantine, Lew Brown orch (24).

This was first trip into the northwest by the comic. He played Spokane July 9 ($7,000), Seattle July 10-11 ($20,000), and Vancouver BC July 13 ($8,000). Only Vancouver and Spokane were disappointing. Total for the five performances was $46,000. Northwest Releasing handled the entire tour.

'Zorro,' Ballet Espanol, Shriner, Woody at ESE

Springfield, Mass., July 21.

"Zorro" has been signed by Eastern States Exposition general manager Jack Reynolds to feature the Championship Rodeo nightly show in the Coliseum for the Sept. 20-26 fair. The two-hour show will be comboed with Royal Canadian Air Force Band (60) and exhibition ride by Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Fair dates are Sept. 19-27.

As a new feature of the fair, the new Musical Tent theatre will be taken over by the exposition with three shows. Booked are Ballet Espanol for three days, Sept. 19-21; Herb Shriner in "An Evening of American Humor and Music," assisted by George Alexander, Sept. 22-24; Chris Barber and Woody Herman in a jazz festival, three days, Sept. 25-27.

Smiley Burnette for K.C.

Kansas City, July 21.

Smiley Burnette is to be here for appearances in connection with the Kansas City (Kan.) Centennial program July 31-Aug. 7. He's in for personals at the opening bill and each night of the seven shows at Wyandotte Highschool Stadium.

Kansas portion of the metropolitan area has been girding with beards and bonnets for this show for several weeks.

Rainfall Slugging Outdoor Spots In Mass.; Losses Put in Millions

Boston, July 21.

Generally improved weather in New England over the weekend, first hot one without rain in some time, bolstered hopes of operators. Despite the unusually wet weather and the fact that tourist trade is estimated as off $500,000 a day in the Cape Cod area alone, there are now growing evidences of optimism.

Outdoor show biz in this state has been hit with millions in losses because of the rains. About 14 inches of abnormal rainfall on Massachusetts' coast since the start of June has cost fun spots $1,000,000 in revenues a day since the start of the vacation season in mid-June.

Beaches, parks, pools, tent theatres, roadside niteries, and amusement biz from Old Orchard Beach, Me., to the tip of Cape Cod, look to have trouble making the nut this season, according to reports from ops. Cape Cod, where hotels, motels and tourist traps are operating at 75% of capacity, is losing about $500,000 a day, according to Norman Cook, exec director of the Cape Cod Chamber of Commerce.

Beaches around the Hub area, Nantasket, Revere, Salisbury, have had their spending crowds cut by 50% this season because of the weather. Concessionaires at the beach spots are losing their shirts.

The rain, 4.39 inches so far in July (to the 17th), added to 8.63 inches at Boston for the month of June, has hit the Cape spots hard. Nantucket Island, celebrating its tercentenary, was described as "hard hit," business off by 25%, according to John Golden, director Chamber of Commerce and member of the Tercentenary Committee.

The North Shore, Gloucester-Rockport area, reported biz off as much as 60%. At Nantucket, the Chamber of Commerce is prepping a report on the washed-out vacash situation. Tourers are cutting their time short, and some are leaving after spending only a few days, the Chamber said, and daily boat traffic from the mainland is off 50%.

Incessant rain has washed away the profits of the fun spots and the situation is now reported so bad that only fair, hot weather can save many of them from going under.

A. C. Also 'All Wet'

Atlantic City, July 21.

Only the 18,000 here attending the 31st National Housewares Exhibit in Convention Hall the past week saved all resort business from a disastrous week stemming from rains which started on Sunday (12) and continued with little letup until Friday (17).

While the rains—and some 15 inches was dumped for a new record—chased most of the early July vacationists out of town and stopped most of the others from coming in, the Housewares group had to stay. They took in the exhibits during the day, but when they closed late in the afternoon the 14,000 turned on the town.

The result was a week of good business during the rain. Without them the resort would have been dead. Night clubs, 500 and Club Harlem especially, did well, former playing Sammy Davis Jr., and latter Larry Steele "Affairs." Business at the boardwalk Warren where Martha Raye was playing in "Bells Are Ringing" perked up after a slow start.

Casino Paris to Bow New $275,000 Show in Nov.

Paris, July 21.

The Casino De Paris, the big revue house second to the Folies Bergere, will finally do an all-new show Nov. 15 after running its last entry, "Sensations," for six years. Henri Varna, Casino owner, has decided to go back to the format of backing a singing star with a revue after the boff success of Josephine Baker in this format at the Olympia Music Hall.

Varna has hired Line Renaud, a top disk and in-person singer, to star. Show will be called "Extase" and the house will be refurbished for the occasion. Theme is Paris and its different sections and will cost $275,000 with 70 sets, 1,500 costumes and 1,500 props. Miss Renaud will sing 12 songs in the revue. Casino seats 1,500.

Jack Teagarden's New Song: Repeal 20% Nitery Bite

Jack Teagarden, better known for his trombone arias than for his vocals, is still a guy who apparently likes to sing. He resents being forced not to give vent to his vocal feelings when the mood, occasion and arrangements call for it, and he is asking the public to do something about it.

In his engagement at the Roundtable, N. Y., which ended last week, Teagarden at his own expense had printed up a number of table cards with petition to Congressman attached for repeal of the 20% cabaret tax. Under terms of cabaret definitions, the 20% tax is applicable in spots where there is singing, dancing or any kind of exhibition present, other than music.

In his appeal, Teagarden states, "I do have a right to sing the blues, but the 20% cabaret tax makes it impossible for me to do

AGVA INITIATION FEE RISING TO $150 AUG. 1

The American Guild of Variety Artists is slated to raise its initiation fee from $100 to $150 starting Aug. 1. Move was okayed at the national board meeting held last month in Washington.

It's the second time in recent years that initiation coin has been hiked. For many years the entry fee was $50.

Scandinavian Dates For Owen McGiveney Jr.

Glasgow, July 14.

Owen McGiveney Jr., 19-year-old U. S. performer following in his father's footsteps as a quick-change dramatic actor, is pacted for dates in Scandinavia following his vaude week at the Empire Theatre here.

He is skedded to open Thursday (16) at the Casino, Oslo, Norway, for a 16-day stint, following this with four weeks at the China Theatre, Stockholm. A two-week engagement in Copenhagen, Denmark, may follow.

On his present trip he has played five vaude weeks in the U.K., plus a Sunday night peak-hour slotting on the Prince of Wales, London, tv show.

The McGiveneys Sr. are at home in Sherman Oaks, Cal.

Blue Angel Reopening Bill

The Blue Angel, N. Y., currently shuttered to give the staff a vacation, will reopen Aug. 3 with a bill comprising George Matson, Diane Trask, Ronnie Schell and Budd & Travis.

Herbert Jacoby, who operates the spot along with Max Gordon, is currently in Hollywood gandering acts for subsequent bills.

Names Only as Good as Their B.O., So No More Stratospheric Salaries For U.S. Acts on Brit. Moss Empires

London, July 21.

The days of "sky's-the-limit" fees for Yank performers in British vaude are over. As of now they must be prepared to back up their own opinion of their b.o. pull by settling for a percentage deal. This is part of a new, long-term policy to keep provincial vaude theatres out of the red, as laid down by Leslie Macdonnell, co-topper of Moss Empires.

Macdonnell told VARIETY: "As an ex-agent of many years standing I'm up to all the tricks. Certain performers such as Liberace and Connie Francis pull in the customers and they can write their own ticket. Others don't. In future I shall consider every act on its individual merit. Maybe a guarantee. Maybe just a percentage deal."

Macdonnell, who has just completed 26 weeks in the hot seat of British vaude, is by no means anti-American. He's equally forthright about British performers. He said: "There are only a handful such as Harry Secombe, Norman Wisdom, Max Bygraves, Frankie Vaughan and the new boy, Bruce Forsyth, who, on their own, can be relied upon to bring in the customers. So we have got to find new formats because though vaudeville may be dead in Britain, live entertainment is not. It's up to me to find that entertainment and as far as I'm concerned, anything goes. If necessary I'll put on flying fish if the customers want to see flying fish."

Macdonnell's first half-year has seen progress. "The graph was going down. Now it's just taking a slight upward turn. I inherited a challenge for I've not only had to convince the public but also counter pessimism in my own ranks. I've travelled miles around our theatres convincing my managements and the local press and public that we are going to keep live entertainment going. I shall have spent nearly $850,000 in my first year improving the circuits and beating the big drum. But I guarantee I shall show a profit."

Far from closing theatres down Moss Empires' has its eye on expansion. In its 60th year in business, it has just spent $2,200,000 on buying the Palace, Manchester, a city in which it was not represented. "Does that look as if the live theatre in the provinces is dead?" he asked.

How does Macdonnell see the future? In staging shows like Sadler's Wells opera and ballet, D'Oyly Carte, the Festival Ballet. In putting on lavish musicals with big names which will play for two to six weeks' seasons in all Moss Empires' key cities. "One-week shows will soon be out," opined Macdonnell. "I'll scour the world for attractions if necessary. And I won't forget my own doorstep. I'm touring the band of the Royal Scots Greys and backing them with a 100-strong local choir. When they opened at Birmingham a local newspaperman ribbed me. 'Who wants to see a brass band?' he wrote, 'why, people won't even pay to see a brass band in the local park.' At the end of the week in his column he retracted. The spectacle and the boxoffice receipts convinced him."

On Jan. 1 Macdonnell takes over from Val Parnell as boss of

Lake George Spot Bows

Lake George, N.Y., July 21.

Ray Eberle orch and the Morgan Bros. opened the Gaslight Village here last week. It's an elaborate new entertainment development in Lake George Village. Spot, running daily through Labor Day, features nightly dancing to the music of Paul Jarvis High Hats.

SINATRA TO 500 CLUB, A.C.

Atlantic City, July 21.

Frank Sinatra will do a nine-day stint at Paul (Skinny) D'Amato's 500 Club, coming in July 25.

Club will then black out for five days as far as big Vermilion room is concerned to reopen with Milton Berle on Aug. 8.

Afro-Ballet Dancer Thelma Oliver's Sked

Hollywood, July 21.

Thelma Oliver, afro-ballet and rhythm dancer who clicked at the 1959 International Folk Festival in Los Angeles Philharmonic Auditorium and in Jeni Legon's "Caribbean Fiesta" show at the Wilshire-Ebell Theatre, has been signed to join Yma Sumac and her troupe for a South American tour during the summer of 1960, booked by Moises Vivanco and the William Morris Agency. Following dates in Rio de Janeiro, Montevideo and Buenos Aires, the Sumac company will play Moscow, Leningrad, Kiev and elsewhere in Soviet Russia at the invitation of Yuri Fantalov, cultural director of the Bolshoi Theatre.

Miss Oliver is the daughter of the late "Cappy" Oliver, first trumpet player with the Lionel Hampton Orchestra. Haitian folklore officials recently awarded her the Lavinia Williams Scholarship for four weeks research of voodoo ceremonials in Port-au-Prince. While there she will be guest soloist in open-air dance concerts at the Theatre de Verdure.

Alberto Torrientes, Cuban choreographer, will feature her in his new "Tropicana" revue in Havana for the ASTA (American Society of Travel Agents) convention Oct. 17-25.

Teamed with Vera Oliver, her sister, she jets to Europe in November for a stage show tour with Sir Lancelot and his Trinidad Steel Band, under management of Irwin Parnes.

Previn Cancels Cafes

Chicago, July 21.

Picture-scoring commitments for Metro have forced Andre Previn to cancel a couple of midwest engagements next month.

Pianist was slated to play a week at the Brass Rail, Milwaukee, starting Aug. 3, following with four frames at the London House here Aug. 10.

P.A.'s Suing Sammy Jr.

Los Angeles, July 21.

Sammy Davis Jr. was slapped with Superior Court action demanding a total of $9,750 for services assertedly rendered by pair of Chicago publicists, Vincent Tubbs and Louie Robinson.

Complaint charged that entertainer on March 15, 1958, had made an agreement to pay firm $125 weekly to handle his publicity, and such services had been rendered. Plaintiffs asked $8,250 plus $1,500 for expenses.

Dick Seeks Chi's Black Orchid Op

Chicago, July 21.

A "private eye" has been authorized to track down Pat Fontecchio, missing former owner of the defunct Black Orchid. Move, an unusual one, is in connection with bankruptcy action against the darkened nitery.

Attorney Michael Gesas, repping three waiters who petitioned in Federal District Court for a total of $1,847 in back wages, made the request for a detective, explaining that Fontecchio's presence was needed to hasten proceedings because "several prospective buyers have shown an interest in the club."

Uncle Sam padlocked the Orchid July 9, and is owed about $150,000 in back cabaret taxes. Gesas said he believes some $100,000 of the club's funds had been diverted to gambling in Las Vegas.

'Water Follies' 20G, N.H.

Concord, N.H., July 21.

Sam Snyder's "Water Follies," 36-person unit, racked up a smash engagement here for the Chamber of Commerce, which has inked for a date next year. Playing five performances, "Follies" pulled 10,700 paid admissions to gross $20,000.

In at a $2.50 top, the show was rained out one night performance, and played an extra afternoon on Sunday (12), in the 3,000-seat stadium.

"Water Follies" pulled out of Concord for Binghamton, N.Y., where it played for the Rotary Club at the ballpark, 17-19. It has a tour of South Africa booked for the fall with Japan to follow. Preceeding the tours, it will be playing expositions in the midwest and northwest.

Inside Stuff—Vaude

Elitch's in Denver has done it again—this time with a popular local tv personality. So successful was the 68-year-old amusement park's Silver Dollar stunt a few weeks ago in drumming up biz (they made the gate admission the mere showing of a silver dollar) that the popular Denver radio and tv personality, Pete Smythe, has been engaged for a day of personal appearances. The mere mention of his name will pass anyone in free today (Wed.). Smythe "runs" an oldtime country store on KOA-TV and KOA Radio, and five days a week "philosophizes" with his cronies over the cracker barrel or around the pot-bellied stove in "East Tincup, Colorado." Now, for a day, the store and proprietor may be seen in person in the park.

Jimmy Joyce, Boston-based Irish comedian and opera singer, is invading the borscht belt with Irish comedy. It's the first booking of an Irish comic into the Jewish hotels in the Catskills. Joyce, who averages to fill in at Blinstrub's in the Hub a dozen times a season, has gone on for many of the top acts. One of his toughest was the night he went on for Jimmy Durante at Blinstrub's and when the announcement was made "Jimmy———Joyce," a groan came up from the crowd. He went into his Irish story routine of the "Tads," and had them eating out of his hand in five minutes. When Myron Cohen plays the Hub, he calls himself "the Jewish Jimmy Joyce," and Joyce, returning the gag, goes on as "the Hibernian Myron Cohen." Joyce took his Irish stuff to New York's Latin Quarter a few weeks ago.

Bill Hahn, hotel owner of Westbrook, Conn., and a show biz fan from way back, carried on a tradition he started some years ago by birthday-hosting some 450 guests at a dinner-entertainment pitch for Cancer Fund contributions. Amount turned in by Hahn was $40,136. Annual affair is livened by show biz personalities, in this case being topbilled by Betsy Palmer and Kurt Kasznar, who were doing a week of "Once More, With Feeling" at Ivoryton strawhat. To date, Hahn's parties have netted the fund over $140,000.

Barnee Breeskin, former bandleader at the Shoreham, Washington, and now in the public relations field, has done well for himself as far as the Congressional Record is concerned. Sen. James E. Murray of Montana entered Breeskin's suggestion that Alaska be known as "Up Over" as an antithesis of Australia which is Down Under. The Congressional Record devoted two full columns to the senator's treatise on that subject.

Ottawa-Hull nitery area will get a second film name within a short span if Diana Dors is able to make her contracted date for Joe Saxe's Gatineau Club Aug. 20. She's currently doing a picture in Spain whose close is uncertain. Yvonne DeCarlo recently broke in her act at J. P. Maloney's Chaudiere Rose Room there. Gatineau Club has Billy Williams Quartet opening tomorrow (Thurs.); Jack Carter, July 30; Connie Francis, Aug. 13; Carmen McRae and Della Reese in separate weeks later, depending on the Dors date.

TALENT'S SELLER'S MARKET

Not since the heyday of vaudeville has the situation where variety talent is enjoying a seller's market been as apparent as now. It's particularly true of the names.

Jobs are still not overly plentiful for the average turns, but between the competitiveness for headliners in the Nevada-Florida sectors and television spectaculars gobbling up names for next fall's series of "specials," it is a seller's market indeed for the talent.

Even on another level, a spot like Chicago's Chez Paree is taking a sabbatical because of marquee paucity. In New York, the Waldorf-Astoria's Starlight Roof did a foldo on July 1, a first in history, because of inability to spot-book talent that would pull over the summer.

As for the top names, it's a case of pick-and-choose. Price seems to be no object for the right attractions, whether LV or tv.

Grock's Death at 79 Recalls Heyday Of Europe's Great Musical Clowns

By LEONARD TRAUBE

The death of Grock in Imperia, Italy, last week (14) closed out an era in which for 50 years of this century he was on top of the heap among musical clowns and with seemingly nothing in view from any living quarter, anywhere, to challenge his eminence. The obliteration of vaudeville and progressively less opportunity for clowns, at least in the United States, would indicate that Grock, at 79, died with the key.

In the 19th century the big gun among the American harlequins was Dan Rice, who was also a showman and circus owner and the $1,000-a-week blockbuster of his time. Other names, here and abroad, who achieved local or international reputations in varying degrees, included the world renowned Toto; Joey Grimaldi (the word "joey" has long since become a generic term for a clown); Marcelline (the N. Y. Hippodrome's leading merryandrew); Slivers Oakley (the one-man baseball team); George L. Fox of "Humpty Dumpty" pantomime fame; John May, singing clown of the 1860s; John Gossin (creator of many clown tricks still in use today); Sam Long, an acrobatic funster once married to Madame Delphine, a French adventuress with some kinship to Tommy Manville (she had seven other husbands); Tom Hanley, clowning gymnast.

For a generation or more, the foremost traditional clowns in this country have been Felix Adler, Lou Jacobs, Paul Jerome and a couple of others of the Ringling contingent, and among the tramps, Otto Griebling and Emmett Kelly. Away from circus, Grock's global counterparts were Chaplin and the Frenchman Marcel Marceau, the latter, of course, more of a subtle satirist.

Grock was born Adrian Wettach in Geneva, Switzerland, but was considered a Frenchman and embraced by them, due to his long tenure with the Cirque Medrano in Paris, among other spottings on the Continent, including the Scala in Berlin, his first major click.

According to his obituary in the N. Y. Times, "Grock's brand of humor failed only in the United States, where he appeared in 1918. His notices were good but the crowds were small on his tour."

VARIETY caught up with him as a New Act (26 minutes) at the Riverside, N. Y., December, 1919, as part of the bill's Christmas period fare. The reviewer was Jolo (the late Joshua Lowe) who, characteristically, used the opportunity to insert international news values rather than to compose an evaluation of Grock's act. In his review he tipped off why it was so difficult to translate the clown onto paper. Jolo had this to say:

> "Without programming or announcement, Grock, the European musical clown, was projected into the bill at the Riverside Tuesday night, with the signs on the sides of the proscenium merely registering 'Extra.' Just arrived from London and with scarcely time to rid himself of his 'sea legs,' this inimitable artist was given what is probably the severest kind of a test. Had he failed under such adverse conditions it should not have reflected on his ability; but the fact that he registered the biggest kind of a hit thus handicapped, stamps him as one of the world's greatest entertainers.
> "To those in America who may not have heard of Grock, a brief pedigree may not be amiss at this time. He worked for years with the Circus Medrano on the Continent and an entire year in Berlin without any of the booking scouts realizing his possibilities. Always with a 'feeder,' the team was originally Antoinette & Grock, the assistant, as now, being a violinist and straight man. Then he tried it with a dancer, but with indifferent success, and went back to the violinist.
>
> "About half a dozen years ago Clifford C. Fischer booked him for London with Sir Alfred Butt and he has played England practically ever since. Around five years ago William Morris wanted him to come to America for the Harry Lauder

TV Specs Cut Name Rosters For Niteries

The television network hunger for spectaculars topped by the upper echelon of names is likely to affect cafe bookings. With networks and agencies bidding on virtually every headliner to the absolute limit of the budget, it's feared that taxwise it may be unprofitable for the attractions to make more than one or two appearances in cafes, and these would be in Las Vegas or Florida.

Concern for the ability to get a sufficient roster of headliners for niteries is being voiced by several talent agencies. Cafes which would like to draft a prospectus of attractions for the coming season haven't been able to get the real heavy artillery such as Frank Sinatra, Dean Martin, Danny Thomas and others in that category.

Even names that have been around for some time such as Milton Berle, Tony Martin, Peggy Lee and others in that sphere, are being submitted to webs. The networks and ad agencies are considering virtually everything at this point.

The niteries in New York, Chicago and elsewhere would be hit severely should some of those counted upon as regulars fail to make an annual appearance.

Of course, video has provided the major source of competition to cafes for headliners for many years. However, this year, the heavy accent on toppers for the 60 and 90-minute specs will be more than cafes can compete with.

What source will be used to compensate for these names hasn't yet been determined. In Las Vegas, for example, there is frank talk about repeating acts for more than once a year, if the pinch gets acute. The operators realize the native Las Vegans won't like it, but they have no choice. In New York and Chicago, ops may have to rely more on record names, which haven't proved too potent, or they may have to resort to the category of comics that have been around for years.

'No Stooge for Jackie Bright' Avers AGVA Prexy Candidate Joey Adams

Joey Adams says he is nobody's stooge. Nobody can order him around and that goes for Jackie Bright too. (AGVA national administrative secretary). Adams, who is candidate for the presidency of the American Guild of Variety Artists and will run against Penny Singleton in the forthcoming union elections, vehemently declared that if Bright steps out of line, he will see to it that he (Bright) "will get out of the union." If there is anything wrong with the operation of the AGVA Country Club & Recreation Centre, he says, he will see that it's corrected. If it cannot be turned into a home for the AGVA aged and indigent, he will see to it that "it's sold within 24 hours" within his ascendency to the presidency.

Adams, wearing a lapel button the size of a 50c piece, with the legend "Joey Adams for AGVA president" (the photographic likeness is a more youthful Adams), is incensed at the idea of anybody calling him a Bright stooge. He says he is welcoming Bright's support, and admits that many close to Bright have urged him to run, but he's nobody's "man."

Adams gave Miss Singleton, the incumbent AGVA president, credit for being probably the only AGVA prexy who has tried to do a job within the union. However, Bright says that he "can do it better." He lauded Miss Singleton's courage and efforts in the union's behalf, but he says that she cannot do half the things he proposes to do in addition to cleaning out all evil elements in the union.

Adams says that he will try to interest major sponsors in live variety shows. He will talk to New York's Mayor Robert F. Wagner to try to get a variety theatre in the forthcoming Lincoln Centre, N. Y. He will attempt to get various chain stores and manufacturers to sponsor variety shows on tv, and he aims to create "thousands of jobs for actors."

Adams, however, admits that he has never attended a union meeting, and until he was urged to run for president had interested himself very little in union affairs. However, since becoming a candidate, he says he is imbued with the idea of working on behalf of his fellow performers. He pointed out that Pres. Eisenhower had never actively interested himself in politics until he became a presidential candidate.

Adams says he will strive to elevate AGVA to the level of the other affiliates in the Associated Actors & Artistes of America, with which AGVA is affiliated. He deplores AGVA's lack of stature within the 4A's, compared to AFTRA, SAG, Equity, etc. He has a lot of schemes to create employment. He says he knows the people who can help bring it about and he will become a dedicated man once he is elected to office.

'5-Past-8' for Glasgow

Glasgow, July 21.

Stewart Cruikshank, London impresario, will bring his two "Five-Past Eight" revues into this city next month, resulting in a switch of title for the incoming Edinburgh production, currently at Lyceum Theatre in that city.

The major and more lavish production of "Five-Past Eight" will retain its tenancy and title at the Alhambra Theatre, with Jimmy Logan, Jack Radcliffe and Eve Boswell as its principals. The more intimate "Five-Past Eight" will open August 24 at the King's Theatre here, moving in from Edinburgh when the International Festival starts in the Scot capital. Title will be changed to "The Other Show," and starting time will move forward from 8:05 to 7:30 p.m. Principals in "The Other Show" will be, as at present, Rikki Fulton, Digby Wolfe, Peter Butterworth, Janet Brown and Jean Bayless.

Dick Hurran helms both revues.

vate Bone, plus Sergeant-Major Snudge) have become household names in most parts of the U.K. to which commercial tv permeates.

Stout Advance

Army comedy is no novelty in any form of show biz (stage, films or tv), but it seldom misfires when effectively devised. The strong family following of the British tv series (currently "rested" from the video web for the summer) is shown by hefty b.o. advance, plus coach party traffic from such distant parts of the British Isles as Folkestone in extreme south of England.

In addition, the five performers concerned are being mobbed nightly at the stage door, and have obviously strong family and moppet appeal.

Wisely, Delfont has backed it up with several solid vaude acts. These include the Fredianis (acrobatic quartet), Albert & Les Ward (comedy musical twosome), Saveen (ventriloquist), chirper Rosemary Squires and juggler Ugo Frediani.

Also, Ted Lune, tall gangling member of the "Army Game" squad, meets north-of-England vaude appetite with his own comedy act. Lune, an exceptionally thin and wiry type, is a natural yock-raiser merely to look at. Although featured in a Frankie Vaughan show at Blackpool's North Pier Pavilion three years ago, he was completely unknown nationally until he replaced Bernard Bresslaw in "The Army Game" tv series.

Other members of the tv thesping team taking part in the stageshow are Michael Medwin (who plays Corporal Springer), diminutive Alfie Bass (cast as Private "Excused Boots" Bisley), Norman Rossington (as Private "Cupcake" Cook), and Bill Fraser (as the irascible Company Sergeant-Major Snudge, nicknamed ("Beady Eyes"). "The Army Game" show is staged by Albert J. Knight, with dances by Marie de Vere.

'Look,' 'Jubilee' TVers

Another television angle here is the combination of two national tv shows, "New Look" and "The Jubilee Show," at the Tower Company's 2,000-seat Palace Theatre. It's presented by George & Alfred Black, English impresarios.

Show makes the prime error of attempting to cater to two different species of customer—the younger crop who prefer their fodder fast and modern, and the middle-aged and mature who are believed, sometimes wrongly, to go for oldtime tunes, nostalgia and earthy comedy.

Major show of the 1959 vacation season here is, as per usual, the George & Alfred Black presentation of "The Big Show of 1959."

The Black brothers, with four shows running simultaneously, have reportedly invested $750,000 in production costs and salaries. Their current Opera House operation is their 12th successive summer stint here. According to producers, this year's cost of layout in the 3,000-seater is in region of $75,000.

Empress Buildings

Most of the main buildings in town centre are linked with show biz. F'rinstance, the Empress Bldgs. section of the Blackpool Tower Co.'s "entertainment empire" houses two-and-a-half acres. This embraces the 3,000-seat Opera House, the 2,000-seat Winter Gardens Pavilion, and a ballroom with capacity for over 2,000 dancers.

At peak of holiday time, 18,000 customers pay admissions nightly to enter the Empress Bldgs., which also contain an entire suite of restaurants and 11 bars (saloons).

Much family patronage is attracted to the annual Blackpool Tower Circus, billed as "the world's greatest one-ring circus." Staged twice (and sometimes thrice) daily, it is directed by Kathleen Williams, booking head of the Blackpool Tower Co., and features such acts as Charlie Cairoli (longtime chief clown at this operation), Trio Morlidor, Pusztai Troupe, the Dubowys, and Four Palacios, Mexican trapezists.

Local Fodder

Other shows on offer for the millions of vacationers descending on the holiday town for the next three months include a local-flavored comedy "Happy Days," by Walter Greenwood; presented by the Black firm at the Grand Theatre, main legit house. It is a homely trifle with little to commend it apart from Thora Hird's thesping and its local flavoring, being largely set in a Blackpool boarding house.

Dickie Henderson, tv and vaude comedian, stars in James Brennan's show at the Queen's Theatre. Charlie Drake is the comedian in Bernard Delfont's "Showtime" at the North Pier Pavilion, where singer Edmund Hockridge registers strongly, and Dave Morris, local Lancashire (northwest England) comedian, is featured at the South Pier Pavilion. More local comedy from Morecambe & Wise and Jimmy James at the Central Pier. Charlie Chester, London comic, stars in the Black brothers' layout at the Winter Gardens Pavilion, where costly prizes are given away in competitions to outfronters each night.

Geographical footnote: Blackpool, breezy seaside resort in northwest England, is adjacent to the populous mill-and-factory country of industrial Lancashire, whose teeming millions throng in from May to October for diversion and entertainment. While the caviar set may give majority of shows the cold shoulder, the average working-class, middle-class and sprinkling of upper-middle-class types flock to this show biz mecca in steady numbers. Town's live shows provide solid work for nearly 3,000 members of the entertainment industry, and that figure doesn't include numerous sideshows and fairground offerings on constant tap.

Circus Review

Circus Franz Althoff

Vienna, July 7.

Franz Althoff production with Eugen Poludniak, Mister Charles, Theo Lingen, 2 Du Carrois, Miss Jeanette, 2 Fraentis, Carly Bremer, Ernst Ross, Harry Althoff, Jeanette Bremer, Carly Bremer, Carly Cossy & Partners, 3 Rogges, Antar Wazzan Group, Los Prietos, Karl Kassmayer, Bubi Froechte, Klein Juergen, 3 Henry's The Bent Nielsens, Jolly Bronley's Flying Constellation; Filax; Little Ferry, Gin, Koan, Horst (clowns); Ernst Riediger Orch. At Prater, Vienna; $1.80 top.

For the first time a three-ring circus guested in this once extremely show-minded capital. Excellent b.o., but this system of three different acts at the same time in the oblong arena (placarded as a la Americaine) did not meet with approval. General comment: One act in an arena is enough for the eyes.

It is a fast-paced, three-hour program with animal display and variety show entertainment evenly balanced. There are no lagging spots.

U.S. contribution is the Flying Constellation (Bronley). This aerial act, as well as all others, are executed without a net, thus missing out on the climactic jump traditional with flying turns.

Show starts with lions, polar bears and tigers, followed by elephants and at times 48 horses. Same objection as before—too much for the eye. Nevertheless, Althoff's horseshow is unique in Europe.

Among best numbers are Carly Cossy, globe-walking girls (Rogges), one-finger handstander Jolly. Good also are Los Prietos cowboys and girls. Bubi Froechte, rope walker Klein Juergen and jugglers Three Henrys rate mention for excellent routines. There's something new in sea lions (Mr. and Mrs. Bent Nielsen). One of the animals finds a way to place the ball on his nosetip by first pushing it all along the arena. Orchestra directed by Ernst Riediger is good, as are all technical details. Maas.

Grock's Passing Recalls

show, but they couldn't agree on price. When Charles Dillingham began casting his show for the current season's entertainment at the Hippodrome he negotiated with Grock on the basis of $500 a week, but the deal fell through. Just before 'Happy Days' opened at the Hipp, Mr. Dillingham raised his offer to $600, but without avail.

"About this time Eddie Darling was in London and booked Grock for $1,000 for a week (salary for remaining time to be agreed on after opening) and he was scheduled to open Monday at the Riverside, but failed to arrive in time.

"By this time you may be chafing a bit and asking, 'Well, what does he do?' He does acrobatics, plays the piano, concertina, talks, sings, dances and—oh, it's no use trying to describe him. The dramatic editor of the London Times recently wrote a very learned article on clowns and devoted a good deal of its space to Grock. He confessed himself unable to describe this individual and wound up by declaring that probably Grock pleases because he is Grock."

Thirteen years later, Grock got himself another New Act, this time at his home base in Paris. He was covered by VARIETY's Maxi (Maxime de Beix) at the Cirque Medrano, seat of the clown's fame, in a turn that lasted "50 minutes in the ring." Under a March 30 Paris dateline, issue of April 13, 1932, Maxi noted:

> "Packing Medrano, mob is coming to see his 'new' number, though Grock's personality is the whole thing and change of partners and adding an accordion doesn't effect much change. Act opens with Fiers, accordionist, appearing first, immediately followed by entrance of Grock and his new partner, George Lole. Accordionist is good enough to be worth staging an act by himself, but his solos are entirely subsidiary in the act to Grock's tricks, mannerisms, and patter, which he carries on with his new partner as he used to do with the old one. A noticeable change is that Grock has suppressed his miniature violin."

Sidelights on Grock

Rome, July 21.

Death came to Grock the Clown last week (14) in his palatial villa at Imperia, on the Italian Riviera.

The man who was to become one of the most celebrated clowns in the world began his artistic career—after having tried his hand at numerous other activities—by running off with a troupe of gypsy musicians. Slowly, he worked his way up the circus hierarchy, until a meeting in 1906 with Antonet, the famed "white clown," decided his career. The team became known the world over.

Grock became the toast of the nobility, played to kings and queens, was idolized by show business figures. The story goes that the Queen of Spain once had to leave her loge in a hurry when seized by a non-stop laughing spell induced by Grock's antics.

In 1919, he married an Italian girl, Ines Ospiri, and built his "Villa Bianca" on the Italian Riviera for her. After W.W. II, Grock also headed a circus which bore his name until his retirement in 1955. Thereafter, in his vast home, he enjoyed his favorite hobby, mechanics, practiced the many musical instruments he was able to play, and occasionally made guest appearances on television.

Teagarden

during World War I, reapplied during World War II, and means either the management must pay one-fifth of the gross receipts or add an additional 20% to your bill. The application of this tax is keeping thousands of musicians and entertainers out of work all over America. Large sums of hard-earned money provided by the entertainers and musicians for legal representation have produced no conclusive results.

"Will you the public help us to encourage the repeal of this unjust and discriminatory tax? Please write your protest against the cabaret tax on the detachable addressed card—give it to me and we musicians will mail it for you."

Room in which Teagarden is playing is exempt from the cabaret tax just as long as there is no singing and dancing. However, a neighboring room, the Embers, has a continual problem when performers as Dorothy Donegan are working. Miss Donegan was cancelled at one time because her mutterings and writhings could be construed as singing and dancing and thus the patrons would be faced with the bite. A compromise was made. She is not to leave the piano and she is to do her best to refrain from muttering audible words.

New Acts

NINA SIMONE

Songs
30 Mins.
Village Vanguard, N.Y.

Nina Simone avoids the cliches. She's a song stylist with something to say and she says it differently and interestingly. Although there are plenty of wrinkles in her 30-minute turn, the Negro thrush shows up as a standout bet for the intime cafes and one who's worth watching as a disk potential. She's currently being primed for a hefty push by Colpix Records, disk subsid of Columbia Pictures.

Major drawback in her song-selling effort, but one that's easily remedied, is the slow, drawn-out pace which she's scheduled for herself. Elimination of a couple of those folk ballads and the insertion of more like her zingy "Fine and Dandy" would help her cause plenty.

She's a casual worker with a style peg that's completely winning. Her phrasing gets the most out of the lyric values and even though she streaches the songs to their limits, she manages to hold audience interest. In her repertoire are such other items as "Black Is the Color of My True Love's Hair," "That's Him Over There," "Children Go Where I Sing You," "I Wonder I Never Got Married," "Tomorrow" and "I Loves You, Porgy." At the Vanguard showcasing, Miss Simone is ably assisted by the Kenny Burrell Trio. Gros.

LINDA LAWSON

Songs
20 Minutes
Ye Little Club, Beverly Hills

Marshall Edson's Ye Little Club certainly should be renamed to "A launching pad for girl singers" because, more often than not, the newcomer either moves on to a higher plateau from here or stays grounded.

This time around, Edson has tapped brunet songstress Linda Lawson as his latest find headed for stardom—and he could be right. She has looks that resemble Gene Tierney and a sexy, whimsical manner of projecting her vocal chords. Both are necessary ingredients for the bigtime.

A good word-of-mouth from the sparse crowd that was on hand to greet Miss Lawson at Tuesday's (14) opener should be the needed tonic to boost business. Her interpretations of "Trolley Song," "Ain't Necessarily So," "Hi Lili Hi Lo" and "Let's Face the Music" are sold with the proper feeling and obtain the right reaction from patrons. Singer, who is also slated to cut an album for Chancellor Records next month, is worth a listen at least once.

Joe Felix on piano, and Red Nichols, bass, continue aging here in their usual good musical fashion. Kafa.

RON & NAMA

Israeli Folksingers
40 Mins.
Village Gate, N.Y.

This youthful pair of Israeli folksingers now have a nice act whipped together. It is a turn which should win plenty of future bookings because the boy-girl combo (they fought in the Israeli army) have the voices and variety of material to please many types of audiences. Both are excellent vocalists and do well together, the lad, Ron, strumming a mean guitar.

Their choice of numbers for the most part is superb. Effecting colorful garb, they intro with several typically Israeli songs. Then they swing into "Knights of the Round Table," a French selection in which they sing not only in French but English and Hebrew. Pair introduce "Desert" as typical of Israel.

"Graveyards of Old Engines" provides them with a chance to use various sounds and whistles to typify the subject matter. For a change of pace, they do "I Wish I Was." Then comes the real rouser, "MacMurray," which they put across with aplomb. Team should have been stopped with this. Instead, they brought on one of those audience participation numbers which went big here but is doubtful material for many spots.

They follow it with a Latin-American tune, which was not too clear and lacked impact. Number is a poor choice. Combo still uses its very clever sign-off, "Roll Over."

Ron & Nama have too much ability to lapse into the common failing of staying on too long. Twenty-five to 30 minutes is plenty for any song team. Wear.

BILLY STORM

Songs
25 Mins.
Americana, Miami Beach

Billy Storm is Columbia Records—and Mitch Miller's—newest intro to the singing-upcomers ranks and, unlike too many recording finds, he seems to have the equipment that can be built into the zoom-up clicks a la that company's Johnny Mathis.

Young, handsome Negro songster will cause talk, even if only on basis of a tricky set of vocalistic approaches. It is in this phase of his budding start that he'll have to settle on a surer course. As of now, his startling range, running from deep baritone to high falsetto—reached without any forcing—is applied to majority of the tunes in his book. While it creates audience buzz-buzz it tends to wear in the novelty sense. When he essays a straight, driving beat, such as in a wham arrangement of "Ol' Man River," he shows the soundness of his considerable potential for cafes and vaudeo circuits.

The firstnighters in the posh Bal Masque stamped him a solid click after absorbing the odd approach in initial numbers designed to display the pipes-range. Adding to impact is a smooth, flowing delivery worked out with hand-mike, that belies his inexperience in the medium. First nervous hesitancy disappear with second offering and he sails from then on into a palming payoff climaxed by a bi-voiced version of "Summertime" that is inventively staged. Shadow and spot plays heighten the impact of the switches from male to femme falsetto toppers that add dueting shadings the arrangement calls for. His manner is on the intense side, with a continuing inner drive always apparent, whether on a ballad or an upbeat tempo.

Storm needs only several tunes tailored to his odd range to round out his act. He also needs a broadening of the book and a definite approach in terms of utilizing warm, youthful appeal and a settling on a range-course to balance off the bi-vocaled "Summertime" and other arrangements that tend to become too much of a novel style, where that natural gimmick could be used for) the climaxers. As is, he's a far cut above most of the new crop and, with proper handling, due for the better songsters rank. Lary.

DARLA DARET & THE DOWNBEATS (5)

Songs
40 Mins.
Showboat, Las Vegas

Darla Daret, who used to chirp with Bob Wills and his Texas Playboys, has deserted the western songs and formed her own group. Darla Daret and The Downbeats (5) is lively and should do well in any showroom.

The 22-year-old looker is an interesting, offbeat looker who is a personable song-seller. She's impressive with all numbers, which on opening night included "Goody, Goody," "Birth of Blues," "Slow Motion" (her new recording on Swan label), "Fever," "Kansas City" and "Lonesomest Gal In Town."

The male Downbeat quintet is a solid and versatile group, with various members doubling on vocals. Instruments include sax, bass, guitar, xylophone, piano, trombone and drums. Duke.

JEANNIE THOMAS

Songs
25 Mins.
Le Cabaret, Toronto

Jeannie Thomas is a 5'6" well-mannered brunet who, prior to winning the "Miss Virginia" title in '57, had previously sung the classics and played the piano. Since that time, including three years at Teachers College, Harrisburg, Va., she has belted out pops for army installations seating up to 5,000 and is now breaking in a series of gentle mood pieces at the intimate and swank Le Cabaret in Toronto.

For an intimate supper club where she is doing a twice-a-night as the single performer, Miss Thomas wisely keeps the range low but occasionally unleashes that power that fits her for bigger rooms. Now currently confining herself to these mood songs as an opener, the brown-eyed brunet in a salmon-pink evening gown when caught—and having all the physical attributes of a "Miss Virginia"—starts out with "Gypsy In Me" and segues into a low style of "Just In Time," "Hands Across The Table" and a slow tempo of "Whole World In His Hands."

Her second set consists of bouncier pops, including such oldies as "Honey," "Gimme A Little Kiss," "Me And My Gal" and "Harvest Moon." Here she lets go in contrast to her former style and exhibits a more vivacious personality. Her arrangements are by (Miss) Frankie Park who also doubles as Jeannie Thomas' accompanist.

With a trained voice, plus range and looks, Miss Thomas is a class act who is feeling her way at Le Cabaret's refined and confined room; but she knows how to sell a song in her distinctive styling. McStay.

LORNE LESLEY

Songs
10 Mins.
Empire, Glasgow

Lorne Lesley, extra-tall (5-10) colored warbler, impresses as a strong potential in vaude, tv and niteries. Miss Lesley, with a happy well-poised style, has a voice and a manner for cafe work, although as of now she requires a sharper and better-shaped act.

Chantoosey works in a fishtail dress, oozes the requisite quota of s.a., and attacks her numbers vigorously. She puts across a tune with solid impact, scoring visually and audibly, and ranges in repertoire from "As I Love You" to "Some of These Days" and "Birth of the Blues."

Distaffer has lots to offer and looms as a refreshing new face, with a cheerful mien that's welcome from a sepian-hued chirper hereabouts. Has lotsa possibilities once a more subtle and better-shaped act can be formulated. Gord.

my usual vocals. Isn't that ridiculous?

"The cabaret tax was started picking up their most attractive salaries in the country locally where they are still potent at the boxoffice. Georgie Young & His Rockin'-Bocs, a five-man combo, top the bill at Harry Levy's Rainbow. Jerry Lee Lewis is expected to build good grosses at Ben & Joe Martin's Club Mardi Gras.

The Manor Hotel Supper Club is offering three shows nightly bowing with a supper show at 8. On a more modest semi-name budget this summer, returns are also more modest than when Kathryn Grayson, Liberace etc., occupied the Manor stage. Betty Madigan and Frank Verna just closed and Kathy Linden and Mickey Shaughnessy are in for the next frame. Shaughnessy in the moderate price class while the Manor singers are all in the $1.000 or under grouping. The talent budget is perhaps one-tenth of the Manor's palmier seasons.

Fred Gleim Jr., new owner of Diamond Beach, contributed the area's major disappointment when he failed to open the 3.100-seater after signing the Ray Eberle band for the season. Oddly enough, locals figure this would have been a top season for the growing fame of this spot. Gleim, who formerly managed the Philadelphia Country Club and the Homestead in Hot Springs, apparently plans to concentrate on a luxury motel operation.

The often overlooked power of names to fill rooms or motels where occupancy levels of the 100-plus motel units are nowhere near the peaks achieved by George James when he owned the spot. In addition to celebrities appearing there, James enlisted the aid of agents in persuading other stars appearing in the area to stay at Diamond Beach. And even those stars staying elsewhere were invited to use the club's vast private ocean beach. In other seasons, Diamond Beach was truly the mecca for notables and notable-seekers.

Bresslaw's Panto in Eng.

Glasgow, July 14.

Bernard Bresslaw, topping in vaude at the Empire Theatre, is set to play pantomime again in England in December. He made his panto bow last winter at the London Palladium.

Comedian appears in his own show in the U. K. commercial tv web's "Saturday Spectacular" slotting July 18, following with a week's vaude at the Empire, Leeds.

Later this year Bresslaw will wed Liz Wright, a chorine, who was with him in pantomime at the London Palladium.

Unit Reviews

Jerry Lewis Show

(Paramount, Portland)

Portland, Ore., July 15.

The Jerry Lewis Show with King's IV, DeCastro Sisters (3) with Morrie Dale & Francisco Gonzales, Half Bros. (2), Amazing Mr. Ballantine, Lew Brown Orch (24); presented by Northwest Releasing Corp. at Paramount Theatre, July 14, '59; $4.50 top.

Jerry Lewis invaded this town with the force of an H-bomb and his show was a blockbuster. Layout was in two parts with Lewis taking over the post-intermission spot for 75 minutes. He had the customers off their mitts from the time he entered until his begoff. He clowned, gagged, sang, played the trumpet, danced, conducted, told stories, and had a good time in general.

Lewis could do no wrong despite the fact that some of his material was corny and dated. His change of pace, his delivery, and his talent overshadowed any shortcomings. The guy also proved his ability to ad lib and take advantage of audience interruptions. It marked the first time he ever worked this part of the country.

First half of the show had the King's IV in the closing spot. The quartet played every instrument in a band and kept the hall jumping with their comedy antics, music, and singing. Their slow-motion bit of "Stagger Lee" stopped the show.

The Half Bros. (2) got the show off the ground with some lightning juggling. Mr. Ballantine in the deuce spot pleased with his steady chatter and his ambition to be a magician. The DeCastro Sisters (3) slammed out some of their platter stuff with assist from Morrie Dale on the 88 and Francisco Gonzales on the bongos.

First half ran 60 minutes. Lighting and staging were top-drawer. Sound system acted up during the first half but settled down. Lew Brown handled the baton chores with an orch of 24 that played a fine background for all the acts. Fere.

Aqua Follies of 1959

(Wirth Pool, Mpls.)

Minneapolis, July 16.

Lynn Pawson, Hobie Billingsley, Orwin Harvey, Joaquin Capilla, Charlie Diehl, Tony Turner, Ed. Cole, Don Wright, Charles Bates, Howard Hardin, Bob Hammond's Performing Cockatoos, Aqua Dears Water Ballet (22), Aqua Darlings Stage Ballet (22), Grace Olsen, Burt Hanson, Burke Fry & Bert Vallencourt, Verne Rooney Orch (15); staged by Al Sheehan; swimming and water ballet director, Helen Starr: stage production director and choreographer, Marie Kuhlman; assistant choreographer, Betty Gour; music director and arrangements, James McLeod; stage and water property designs, Fred Smith; lighting effects, Jack Higgins; head wardrobe mistress, Marie Gauthier; fireworks, Thearle-Duffield; flowers, Bachman at Wirth Pool, Mpls., July 15-26, '59; $3.50 top.

Especially because of its superior swimming and diving talent, but also because of its skillful Al Sheehan staging, lavishness and the generous amount of high-grade entertainment which it provides, Sheehan's "Aqua Follies of 1959," like its 19 predecessors, undoubtedly deserves to be rated one of the best shows of its kind anywhere.

Of course, it doesn't have much competition in its particular line, there being so few water-stage shows of this kind. But under any circumstances this offering, a top attraction, would merit a high rating as solid, bang-up entertainment in a beautiful al fresco setting.

In quantity and quality it's a good amusement buy at its moderate $3.50 top, with many patrons probably finding the straight and zany comedy high diving, the show's best features by far, alone well worth the admission price.

The 20th annual edition maintains established high standards in all respects. The divers, the show's top luminaries, who return annually because they're among the best in the business, comprise Orwin Harvey, Hobie Billingsley, Joaquin Capilla and Charlie Diehl, plus a pair of newcomers, Tony Turner and Eddie Cole, a British and a trampoline champion, respectively. They perform sensationally in all diving phases. Missing and missed is Bruce Harlan who was to have been back, of course, but who recently was killed in an accident.

Newcomer Lynn Pawson, the show's feminine star, holder of 14 national championships in synchronized swimming and the Pan American Games title, contributes some unusual strokes beautifully executed. The 20 water ballet girls are seen to good advantage in expertly synchronized and precision water production numbers.

On the stage one of the two acts is local favorite Johnnie O'Brien, who has appeared in several previous editions and who lands belly laughs and yocks with his delivery of fun-loaded patter, some of it new and unfamiliar. He also comes through with exceptional harmonicalities, being an instrumentalist as well as comedian. The other act, Bob Harmon's trained cockatoos, excites mirth, too, along with wonderment.

Grace Olsen, Bert Hanson, Burke Fry and Bert Vallencourt, the singers, are kept busy throughout the performance and they're top-drawer. Howard Hardin is back as emcee and proves adept at his task. The stage ballet of 22 dancers and showgirls impresses as one of the "Follies" best lines. They're good to look at and they execute their tasks well.

Stunning, bizarre and colorful costumes and props give the fireworks finale its usual flash. The meritorious musical background for the proceedings reflects credit on arranger James McLeod. In all, there are four elaborate production numbers for both ballets, including a salute to our new states.

After 12 performances here and two weeks as a Seattle festival attraction, the show disbands. Again it seems a pity it cannot tour other cities. Rees.

Cowal Carnival

(QUEEN'S HALL, DUNOON)

Dunoon, Scotland, July 14.

Chalmer Wood presentation of "Cowal Carnival," starring Aly Wilson, with Tudor Evans, Nicky Cameron, Gladys Lewis, Harry Kidd, Jimmy Neil, Campbell & Bence Trio (with Elizabeth Batey), Horace Mashford, Eight Carnivalettes, Arthur Roynon Orch.

Vacationers at this Clyde resort, fave centre of both Scot and English tourists, have a disappointing lineup in this so-so layout. It follows rutted pattern of years past, attempts little that is new, and is weak in comedy fodder.

Aly Wilson, principal comedian, works hard in sketches but is bogged down by weak material. Sketches lead up to big letdown in tags. Wilson has benefit of a strong and lively foil in Horace Mashford who serves him ably but cannot save the comedy.

Tudor Evans, English singer, brings established reputation to vocal slotting, but looks uncomfortable on vaude stage in formal evening dress. He isn't at home, either, in Scot tunes.

More vocalizing by Nicky Kidd in pop tunes and oldies at the piano. Gladys Lewis, Australian chirper, fills the femme solo vocal berth satisfyingly. Instrumentalism is by saxophonist Harry Bence and trio, with Elizabeth Batey as chirper.

Jimmy Neil, kilted singer-comedian, patters in homely vein, but has yet to find a proper format for his talent potential. Dance act of Billy Cameron & Irene Campbell is stylish and about the best thing in show. Eight Carnivalettes, from the Moxon stable of chorines, are the adequate line, and Arthur Roynon batons resident orch.

Show caught (first edition) is not one guaranteed to set any summer heather afire. Gord.

Names in Britain

the London Palladium. "It'll be a problem following such a showman," he admitted, "but the time will come when Palladium shows will be able to be transferred lock, stock and barrel for seasons in the provinces." And Macdonnell added one significant remark, "The provinces will not be starved of top American favorites. Already the Deep River Boys and Billy Eckstine have fallen in with the percentage deal and the Platters are considering it. Make no mistake, the U.S. performers who can sell tickets for Moss Empires will still be able to make top money."

New Frontier, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, July 16.

"Holiday In Japan," James Shigeta, Nagata Kings (4), Haru Tominaga, Nakano Bros. (2), Rie Taniuchi, String Bros. (2), Nat Brandwynne Orch (13); presented by Bill Miller; produced by Steve Parker; directed and choreographed by Paul Godkin; settings and costumes by Hachiro Nakajima; music arrangements by Hiroshi Watanabe; production under supervision of Michio Ito; $3 minimum.

"Holiday In Japan" is the biggest, most colorful and most exciting show to hit Vegas since the Lido de Paris revue preemed at the Stardust here a year ago. The Lido show which has been the unchallenged No 1 ticket locally for over 12 months, probably will have strong competition in Bill Miller's import from Tokyo.

First-nighters rewarded the cast with a standing ovation at the final curtain, which resulted in the company taking nine curtain calls. With spectacular pageantry rich in the Oriental tradition, "Holiday" gradually gains momentum and bows off at a peak that is overwhelming. The 70-minute splash is complete with bits of mystic symbolism; it is well staged and well paced; it registers high in the singing, dancing and comedy departments; the sets, costumes, music and lighting are just right; the score is most capably woven into the festivities by maestro Nat Brandwynne and his orch (13); the overall production has strong entertainment value which isn't too theatrical—in fact, it has simplicity which is delightfully disarming. Producer Steve Parker has tossed in a generous hunk of sex—a commodity which is helping fill the Stardust and Dunes showrooms here nightly. Seven shapely lookers bounce around in a nude terp number which is quite provocative, yet done in good taste.

Emcee for show is handsome young James Shigeta, who speaks perfect English. He has an engaging personality and a good singing voice. The Nagata Kings (4) do a very funny baseball routine, and the Nakano Bros. (2) are excellent with their taps and other terping. Rie Taniuchi is a looker who gets brisk mitt action from the audience for her stimulating body shaking and hip tossing. Haru Tominaga, the String Bros. (2), Shizuko Yagi, Chushiro Sato, Keiko Chiaki, and Diana Nakamori all contribute specialties which are warmly received. The blend of Eastern and Western culture is handled in an amusing manner which is sure to win new friends for the Japanese people and their customs.

Paul Godkin directed and choreographed; settings and costumes are by Hachiro Nakajima; music arrangements are by Hiroshi Watanabe; and the entire production with 60 in the company is under the supervision of Michio Ito. Producer Parker's wife, Shirley MacLaine, made an appearance at each of the three shows opening night, and told of the difficulties in getting the show together. Package is in for 12 weeks with options, but impresario Miller undoubtedly will will give it an extended run. "Holiday" will play a three-shows-a-night policy. Duke.

Beverly Hills, Cincy

Cincinnati, July 17.

The Vagabonds (4) with Babe Pier, Bob De Voye Trio, Moro-Landis Dancers (8), Bob Le Clair, Gardner Benedict Orch (10), Jimmy Wilber Trio, Larry Vincent; $3 minimum weeknights, $4 Sat. and holiday eves plus $1.50 cover.

In their first showcasing before Greater Cincy cafe society the zany Vagabonds take over Beverly's plush Trianon Room after doing everything but shattering it and the customers. Supporting them in a gilt-edge 70-minute floorshow are the superb Bob De Voye dance trio, the line of Moro-Landis versatile dollies and the backdrop music of Gardner Benedict's reliable combo.

Advance buildup of the Vagabonds via tv reflected a full house for the first night's opening session and heavy reservations through the two-week engagement. Before uncorking rollicking high jinks, the lads warm up with semi-serious treatment of singing and instrumentalism. (Dominic Germano and Al Torre on guitars, Atillio Risso, accordion, and Eddie Peddie, bass fiddle). Getting into yockbusting trim, they clown with trumpets and trombone, rattling off versions of "McNamara's Band," "Witch Doctor" and "Darktown Strutters Ball." Tomfoolery is enriched by deadpanning of Risso as foil for clowning of his partners. Middle portion of their sizzling 42-minute vehicle has Babe Pier, excellent comedy impressionist, in for mimes of screen and tv greats. Lennie LaVette, music director, fills in at drums with the location band in great style.

A fave here, the De Voye trio has Viola Crucil as the new femme member this visit. Fred Favorite is the other member. They build up appreciation on waltz, jazz and adagio numbers over a 13-minute route. Show opening July 31 will be headlined by the Mills Bros. Koll.

Fountainhead, New Hope

New Hope, Pa., July 17.

Phil Foster, Dick Roman, Sandy Walsh, Johnny Crawford, Mickey Rodgers Combo (5); $3.50-$5 minimum.

Phil Foster, a human comic, is bringing the streets of his beloved Brooklyn to the rolling hills of Bucks County in his date at the Fountainhead.

Foster would be the last to admit it, but there's real pathos in his tales of Flatbush and the characters who inhabit its street corners. His pathos isn't of the Chaplinesque variety. His is born out of the sad and lonely existence of misfits trapped in the huge but empty metropolis. Basically he's is a storyteller, a slow-talking, relaxed comic who rarely resorts to the one liners. His tale of "Beansie," a pathetic refugee from a Brooklyn corner, is a real classic. Foster's approach to the elements of life in the borough is almost documentary. His bridal shower routine is true-to-life and drew heavy laughs. Best of a group of impreshes is of a traffic cop who hates directing traffic.

Annoyed by a ringside heckler, Foster shut him up with a series of well-placed barbs which struck home.

Dick Roman, a pink-cheeked, blond youngster with a hip style, a rock 'n' roller haircut, and a big voice, gets heavy mitting with a clever and well-balanced songalog.

Strictly out of the Sinatra mold on uptempo versions of "Lulu's Back in Town" and "Easy to Love," Roman becomes a sincere balladeer on "Gigi" and "All by Myself" (accompanied only by string bass) and a belter on "Love Is A Many Splendored Thing."

This young fellow has a good voice and a distinctive style. He could do with a little more humility in front of the mike. The show of confidence is effective for one of his tender years but he should get just a little closer to his audience.

Roman could easily become one of the big singing stars. He has the talent and he knows how to present it. Now he needs a hit record so that the voice can be heard.

Sandy Walsh, a shapely brunet garbed in black, does several dances, Johnny Crawford is emcee and Mickey Rodgers provides able backing with his combo. Bitt.

365 Club, San Francisco

San Francisco, July 17.

Giselle & Francois Szony, The Lavernes (4), Oscar Cartier, Larry Grayson, Moro-Landis Dancers (12), Bill Clifford Orch (9); $1-$1.50 cover.

The Szonys are a dance team who can lift any night club show out of the ordinary, and they do precisely that for this colorful but otherwise unremarkable hour.

Szonys come on with a sort of a foxtrot number, go into a terrific, modified tango and wind up with a bit from Tchaikovsky's "Sleeping Beauty." Their 15-minute act first quiets the noisy audience and then elicits cheers and prolonged applause as the male and female dancers go through series of delicate lifts and complicated twists and turns. This is a sock quarter-hour, with the dancers never making a misstep (you can't hear them move around the floor, in fact). Miss Szony is stunningly clad in shades of pink, while her brother sticks to somber black. Only possible carping is that Bill Clifford's orch should play numbers at quicker tempo, a sentiment Francois Szony evidently shares from his arm motions while performing.

Four Lavernes are a humorous (slightly sick humor, perhaps) Apache team who go through their chores competently and get a nice hand. Oscar Cartier's standup comic routine remains unchanged from his previous Frisco appearances.

Moro-Landis line dances through a number of quasi-French routines adequately, though costuming in last number leaves something to be desired. Larry Grayson is a pleasant, if undistinguished, singing emcee. Show runs through Aug. 5. Stef.

Ambassador Hotel, L. A.

Los Angeles, July 17.

Pearl Bailey, Bill Bailey, Coles & Atkins, Moana Gleason, Mr. Wynn, The Ambassadors, The Pearlettes, Louis Bellson Orch (20); $2 cover. $2-$2.50 minimum.

Pearl Bailey opened against herself here last Wednesday (15) when she and her troupe bowed at the Cocoanut Grove. It was the same night as the local preem of "Porgy and Bess," in which Miss Bailey's featured. For that reason there were few Hollywoodites in her Grove audience. Nevertheless, Miss Bailey showed her strong pull but making it an SRO evening at the Grove, packing the place with just plain, non-celebrity spenders.

Whether such a big show—the largest ever put into the Grove—can be a great financial success is an interesting point, but entertainment director Gus Lampe believes it can and on the basis of the business drawn thus far (and advance reservations), he seems to have a healthy winner.

Miss Bailey's production is the same as she recently had at the Flamingo in Las Vegas. It used to be that the Grove was considered a different type of operation than the less inhibited Vegas spots. Miss Bailey's material is, in spots, broader than the Grove ordinarily hears. But her handling is so lighthearted. It plays without offense even to the family parties which make up an important part of the Grove clientele.

The whole presentation adds up to a company of about 50, including Louis Bellson's orch. In addition to the star, there's the spectacular young dancer, Mr. Wynn; the mixture of comedy and tricky choreography of the dance team of Coles & Atkins; and the sinuous, sensuous rhythms of Moana Gleason. Bellson does a wild solo on the drums in which he seems to have more hands than an Indian goddess and winds up sounding like two African villages communicating.

It's Miss Bailey, of course, who sparks the show and gives it drive. Whether she's doing "My Man's Gone Now," in simple seriousness, or "She Lost It at the Astor" with off-hand abandon, she clicks with the audience all the way.

Costumes are smart and fresh, and the show moves along with casual but unflagging pace. The revue is in for four weeks, playing one show a night weekdays and two shows Friday and Saturday. Each presentation runs 75-90 minutes. Tommy Sands bows at the Grove Aug. 12. Powe.

Barclay Hotel, Toronto

Toronto, July 14.

Larry K. Nixon, Sue Evans, Max & Cherie, Kim Irwin, Craig Daye Dancers (7), Jimmy Amaro Orch (8); $1.50 cover.

Boniface Al Siegel, new owner-operator of the Club Oasis supper spot, is putting on two floor shows nightly. Although it's a far cry from his three-night turnaway engagement of Sammy Davis Jr. last week, Siegel has whipped together a diversified show that is attracting customers.

Headlining is Larry K. ("Direct from the Airport") Nixon, a fast-talking comic who is paying his first visit to Toronto. Goodlooking funster is of the rapid-fire monologist school and he tells tales that are swift on delivery and also blends his act with a nice baritone singing voice that scores.

Sue Evans, a redhead in white evening gown, is also over in her novelty act of swinging a harp in ragtime and she can belt over a song. She is a well-stacked performer and splendid warbler in her opening "Then I'll Be Happy" and is particularly effective, to her own accompaniment at the golden harp, of "Don't Take Your Love From Me" in ballad style. She then goes into fast playing of "I Got Rhythm," plus a switch in tempo to sexy baby talk and tablehopping with mike. Miss Evans has no difficulty in getting over.

Rounding out is Max & Cherie, a British knockabout dance team, complete with mutual face-slapping and plenty of lifts climaxed by floor spinnings and plenty of acrobatics ending in contrived confusion. Pair in swift throwarounds also click with the customers.

The Craig Daye Dancers, all shapely youngsters, interpolate the bill with three production numbers, a jungle fantasy with a strob finish, a vivacious "Les Girls" routine in pink briefies and straight finale in a waltz tempo in variegated evening gowns with tiaras and elbow-length gloves.

As robust baritone in charge of the emcee chores and the production numbers is Kim Irwin with "Just Say I Love Her," a lullaby switch to "Hush-a-Bye" which had the customers hushed, and free-stepping "Are the Stars Out Tonight?" Backing all acts commendably, plus the dancing sessions, is Jimmy Amaro's orch. McStay.

Thunderbird, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, July 14.

Dorothy Collins, Wes Harrison, Tony Monaco, The Linds, Thunderettes (10), Boy Dancers (4), Al Jahns Orch (12); produced by Marty Hicks; Miss Collins' act staged by Bob Herget; choreography by Jack Bunch; $3 minimum.

After several seasons away from the Strip, Dorothy Collins returns with a highly attractive and listenable act which should do brisk biz for the room. Miss Collins never looked prettier or sounded better as she sings "Any Place I Hang My Hat Is Home," "When I Fall In Love," "Blame It On My Youth," "You Gotta See Mama Every Night," "Accentuate the Positive," "There'll Never Be Another You," and a medley of her fave "Hit Parade" hits. With Bob Herget, who staged the smooth-running turn, she does a production bit which gives her a chance to do some effective fashion modeling.

Wes Harrison clicks big with a novel presentation. His gimmick is sound effects, which he does with his mouth close to a microphone—storms, trains and traffic noises are some of the things he imitates with surprising accuracy, and he punctuates the sound with some very funny dialog.

Tony Monaco and the Linds are featured in two sharply imaginative and offbeat production numbers concocted by Jack Bunch. Then girl dancers and four boys capably interpret the musical sketches, which are expertly backed by the Al Jahns orch. Marty Hicks produced the package, in for four weeks. Duke.

Harrah's, Lake Tahoe

Lake Tahoe, Nev., July 16.

Dennis Day, Lancers (4), Bobby Winters, Lois Ray, Leighton Noble Orch (10), $2 minimum.

Entertainment director Candy Hall had no problems in finding a headliner-calibre act to fill the Dennis Day shoes when Day fell victim to chord troubles (the mile-high altitude) at show caught: he simply pulled the Lancers off the "late show"—it runs 'til 7 a.m. with two groups alternating—and dropped the foursome into the vacancy.

Day vocalled through the dinner show on the third night of his engagement, but was unable to come on for the midnight show. Fans were assured, however, the problem was a temporary thing, and one that gets to most singers (both sexes) playing in the rarefied Tahoe atmosphere. As per usual, Day wins the top plaudits with his keen humor, his perfected impreshes, and his distinctive stylizing.

The Lancers offer a melange that makes it easy to understand their status as faves in the Reno-Tahoe area. The four—Dick Burr, Jerry Meacham, Bob Porter, Carlton "Corky" Lindgren — include pop stuff, barbershop, novelty, and spirituals in the 40-minute turn.

Titles include such as "Straight Ahead," "Rock Island Line," "The Golden Years" (which they authored) and "Mr. Sandman." Repertoire is designed to give each a solo turn—and to give Burr a chance for effective comedy routines. The boys also reap heavy mitts for a Dixie offering and a laugh-provoking version of "Tom Dooley." They exit to "Bye, Bye Blues." Lancers are backed by their own instrumentalists with Andy Thomas conducting from the 88.

Lois Ray, dark-haired and shapely, onstages in brief costuming that allows auditors unrestricted vision of a set of limbs that carries her through a fast terping routine. Miss Ray displays much talent on modern choreog tapping before finaling with a puppet routine—doing it tandem with a mannequin that's a carbon of herself, and with Miss Ray controlling the manipulations.

Bobby Winters, billed in the second slot, proves ability with fast eye and hand in a varied juggling offering. He's also perfect with bouncing balls.

Backing the full bill is Leighton Noble orch, playing the first time for a Harrah's show, Noble fills the spot vacated by Will Osborne, and the Noblemen do it capably. Current show runs through July 26. Long.

Casino Royal, D. C.

Washington, July 14.

Crosby Bros., Jay Lawrence, The Lorraines, Jack French Orch (8); $1 cover, $4 minimum.

Bing's boys, Gary, Dennis, Phillip and Lindsay Crosby, are a talented foursome in their own right, with potent b.o. pull in the early days of their nitery venture (the act tuned up three days in Tucson, played Chicago's Chez Paree and then came here). Lee Zeiger's huge downtown showplace was jammed opening night, with more than 100 waiting to get in after the first show. The week could break the club's record.

It goes without saying that the brothers, more mature than might be generally imagined, have a big curiosity value. This, because of their extensive publicity and also because of the hordes of longtime fans of their father's who, by instinct, are rooting for the youths to click. Crowd was a mixture of young and old, showing wide range of appeal.

Forty-minute act is well written and staged, with brotherly all-American boy horseplay and gags, songs and a softshoe routine. While Gary looks and sometimes sounds a little like his parent, none of the four has a really standout voice, although each is satisfactorily pleasing. This raises the question of the show biz future of the four when the newness wears away or they get into an act not so expertly packaged to display them at their best. For the time, there's no question that they registered big with the audience.

Nick Castle put it together, with Dick Stabile, who waves the baton for them, handling the music. Special vocal arrangements are by Bill Thompson, and writers Jack Brooks and Harry Crane were used.

They're better singers in quartet and stay that way most of the time, with Gary, the eldest and most experienced, handling the major share of solo breaks.

Each has one solo: Lindsay, "In a Little Spanish Town"; Phillip, "You Are Too Beautiful"; Dennis, fast version of "Old Man River"; and Gary, "Baltimore Oriole." Comparatively, Phillip was in best voice next to Gary.

New words to a show-stopper from "Damn Yankees" have the brothers relinquishing (lyrically) intimate situations with dames because "We Gotta Think About the Act." A great musical arrangement of several folk and spiritual numbers has Gary belting out fast lyrics with his brothers in trio. They start with a "Hello" special arrangement where they wander among tables shaking hands, and they conclude with an audience salute, "This Was a Lovely Way to Spend an Evening."

Overall, the brothers register socko in showmanship with their material.

Jay Lawrence is at a disadvantage in second billing with the Crosbys because he is a comedian of enough ability to headline. He's young, but one of the best yock-provokers seen around here in some time. His routines on an English channel swimmer and a middleweight championship fight go over great. The Lorraines are young dancers who get the show off to a nice start. The Jack French orch does its usual good job. Carp.

Tidelands, Houston

Houston, July 14.

Jaye Bros., Don Cannon Orch (6); no cover or minimum.

Phil & Jerry Jaye open their act with a comic argument over opera and swing, with liberal samples of each, and that's how the act goes for the 40 minutes.

This show has variety, with song, impressions, a little dancing, and comedy that runs from good to excellent. Boys do first-class impressions of Dean Martin, Arthur Godfrey, Frankie Laine, Liberace and Louis Armstrong doing rock 'n' roll vocals. Then comes a vaudeville bit with the inevitable straw-hat and canes. With props, brothers sing and dance "The Old Two Beat," then charge into an Italian version of "Rag Mop."

In what the Jayes call a tribute—not an impression—to Jimmy Durante, they do some schnozzo'a classics to full approval of auditors. There are a few moments of cowboy impressions, then back to a begoff "Goodnight" in Durante style.

Nothing can be added to what has been said before about Don Cannon's swingin' band. The Jayes, who set a fast pace with their arrangements, are enchanted with the backing. After two weeks, Earl Grant & Trio move in for a pair July 27. Skip.

500 Club, A. C.

Atlantic City, July 18.

Joe E. Lewis (with Austin Mack), Cathy Carr, Lindsay Sapphire Dancers (7), Jack Curtiss, Pete Miller Orch (8) with Joe Frasetto; $2 admission, $5 minimum Sat nights.

Although Joe E. Lewis is a stranger to these parts (he hasn't played a date in Atlantic City for years), it didn't take him long to get acquainted as he opened for a week in Paul (Skinny) D'Amato's smart Vermilion room supper club, playing to a near capacity opening Saturday night audience who took to him as a duck to water.

Lewis offers more shady material than most comics who grace the supper club stage here, but none of it is offensive and most of it draws good mittings. Drink in hand—a front table party kept him in constant supply—he scores with such as "Do They Have Racetracks on the Moon," "In the House of Suzie Wong," "76 Hormones."

Sophie Tucker, Frank Sinatra, Christine Jorgensen and Prince Rainier come in for barbs as do current tv shows and his pianist Austin Mack. Begs off after more than an hour but comes back to have that glass replenished to be carried behind the curtains.

Cathy Carr shows she knows her way about a bistro stage as she offers, to good response, oldies and others, including a spiritual. Beautifully gowned in shell pink figure molding sheath with sequins and halter neck, its petal bottom a circular flounce of net, she scores with her opener "That's Why I Know," "Nobody Knows You When You're Down and Out," a novelty number, registers solidly. She dons high silk hat and swings a cane to carbon Eddie Jackson with "Won't You Come Home, Bill Bailey," and then goes into "St. Louis Blues." "Up Above My Head," a spiritual, is effectively sung and then she offers a real oldie, one seldom heard these days, "I Wish I Could Shimmy Like My Sister Kate." Begs off with specialty bit, "I Thank You."

Lindsay Sapphire Dancers (7) with Jack Curtiss offering the vocals do two repeat numbers while show is backed by Pete Miller orch with Joe Frasetto. Walk.

Dino's, Los Angeles

Los Angeles, July 16.

Ruth Gillis, Jack Elton, Steve La Fever; no cover or minimum.

Those who want to see songstress Ruth Gillis making her Coast debut, at Dino's Lodge (right next door to "77 Sunset Shrip"), are advised to show up for the late show, after the tourists' beddie-bye time. The din at Dino's subsides somewhat at the later hour, but the diners are still trying to make themselves heard over the entertainer.

Miss Gillis, a real pro, with only a piano and a bass as musical and moral support, stuck out her pretty chin and belted out Gershwin's "Clap Yo' Hands," startling a circle immediately around her into attention. So long as she belted, she held the audience. But when she showed her versatility by eliding off into subtler stuff—torch songs, Latin numbers, tunes with catchy rhythms—she lost them. It was actually their loss because, without being distinguished as yet, she is quite good.

The tall, pretty brunet, whose stage presence conveys sweet good humor, whose style is pleasantly varied and whose musicianship is firm and correct, couldn't have chosen a worse situation for her Coast debut. The lodge might very well consider piping in canned band music since the room is not physically suited to showcasing a performer and since the current clientele appears to be less interested in music than in looking for "Kookie" in the parking lot. Miss Gillis is booked for two weeks. Glen.

Riverside, Reno

Reno, July 17.

Rowan & Martin, Johnny Puleo & Harmonica Gang (6), Starlets (8), Eddie Fitzpatrick Orch (10); $2 minimum.

In this reprise at the Olympic Room, Rowan & Martin bring in some all-new comedic routines—but, wisely, offer some of the routines they're perfected and ones that auditors come to hear. Their presentation for 35 minutes is pure entertainment, and the duo offers a variety of fun lines that hit hard in the yock department.

Dan Rowan & Dick Martin, faves in the Reno-Tahoe area, command attention with no use of props, etc., but depend only on material that fits to any given audience, and with a minimum of off-color lines. Turn includes a spoof of the "sicknik" comics, a hilarious game of charades, and the Rowan-Martin classic interpretation of a Shakespearean actor heckled by a stageside drunk. And a new routine with Rowan giving Martin lessons in how to pick up a femme on the street. The two show a near-faultless sense of timing, and the routines appeal to both sexes and any age.

Co-billed with the comedy team is the Johnny Puleo Harmonica Gang, absent from the local scene for several years. The sextet, all artists on a varied assortment of harmonicas, mix musical talent with comedy that's mostly slapstick and visual. Little Puleo gets the you're-not-wanted treatment from the rest of the gang, but keeps attention with his mastery of facial expressions. And, when the gang plays it straight, it's highly listenable. Titles include standards such as "I Get Ideas" and "Peg O' My Heart."

Backing show is Eddie Fitzpatrick orch. The Starlets, in a George Moro production, take the opening and closing spots. Show runs through July 29. Long.

Dunes, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, July 14.

Frankie Laine in Harold Minsky's "Arabian Nights," Ben Beri, Rowena Rollins, Victor Julian & Dogs, Gillian Grey, Bob Vegas, Allen Conroy, Marya Linero, Girl Dancers (12), Boy Dancers (6), Showgirls (10), Models (10), Cee Davidson Orch (24); produced by Harold Minsky; choreography by Madame Komarova; $3 minimum.

Frankie Laine toplines Harold Minsky's "Arabian Nights," which balances off into a lavish omnibus—it's a package that's sure to keep the room packed for its skedded five-week run. Last year Laine appeared with the bra-less brigade, but the girls are very much in evidence this time—all 10 of them—and they of course parade in a separate portion of the show.

Laine's distinctive vocalizing is powerfully effective as he offers "So This Is The Dunes," "Rock of Gibraltar," 'Carless Love," "The Kid's Last Fight," "Swamp Girl," "Shine," "Wild Goose," "That's My Desire," "Mule Train," "Because," "Rocks and Gravel," "I Believe," and "Jezebel." The Tommy Roberts-Evelyn Freeman vocal group (10) backs Laine, providing a fine blending sound. Fred Katz is on piano; Stanley Kaye, drums; Joe Sincora, guitar.

Ben Beri, comedy juggler, pulls heavy yocks, and comedienne Rowena Rollins is outstanding in a very funny bit of clowning. Miss Rollins has an ideal face for her antics, and first-nighters gave maximum laughs to her entire routine, which includes an impresh of Eleanor Roosevelt and a tipsy tv cook. She's one of the few femme clowns, and qualifies as a major leaguer.

Victor Julian and his canines are held over from the previous show, as are production singers Gillian Grey and Bob Vegas, and production specialty dancers Allen Conroy and Marya Linero. All are strong assists to an overall good show, which contains 12 girl dancers, six boy dancers, and 10 showgirls in addition to the 10 nudes. Cee Davidson's orch (24) capably weaves the notes. Duke.

King's Club, Dallas

Dallas, July 18.

Dick Curtis, Raul Arrambide, Internationals (3); no cover or minimum.

It's old home week for comedian Dick Curtis; he's back for his third fortnight in two years at the King's Club, plush privatery in the Adolphus Hotel. Between dates, he's headlined in the hostel's swank Century Room (Nov., 1957) to good results.

In this intimery he can do no wrong. At opening (17) to a full room Curtis again offered new material for neat returns, but the "musts" come out with his travesty of an exotic dancer and his reprise of a bragging Texan in Italy. He's waxed the latter bit, "I Don't Want to Brang You Down," on the DC Label. Fresh this time are his clever song parody of "Just One of Those Things," his hilarious "quit drinking" sketch, a neat segment anent leprechauns, and the flexible comic begs off after a 50-minute stand.

Per usual, singing guitarist Raul Arrambide pacifies the patrons between shows for steady ear-bending. The Internationals provide top showbacking and pull the leather pushers. Act runs through Aug. 2, with the Del Rubio Triplets due Aug. 3 for two frames. Bark.

Polynesian Village Setup Returns Chi's Edgewater To Floorshows; Big B.O.

By JACK PITMAN

Chicago, July 21.

Edgewater Beach Hotel's first floor show in over four years, a Merriel Abbott package saluting Hawaii and marking the U.S. debut of the Arthur Lyman exotic jazz quartet, is a first rate presentation of its kind. It's also minting money for a room—the Polynesian Village—that's been limping since it preemed in 1955.

Before that it was the Marine Dining Room, in its heyday one of the town's top showcases, whose headliners over the years included Ted Lewis, Yma Sumac, Hildegarde and Liberace. Its orch leaders have included Wayne King, Paul Whiteman, Freddie Martin, Horace Heidt, Bernie Cummins, Xavier Cugat and Lawrence Welk.

Setting in the old days was idyllic—a Florida resort style hospice literally steps from Lake Michigan. Dancing under stars was cheap and flavorsome on the famed Beachwalk now (extinct) that nudged up to the shoreline. For years it was a favorite rendezvous for the Northwestern U. crowd, and servicemen during the war period helped fill the till.

The era ended by economic dictate, and the Marine room gave way in style and policy to the Polynesian Village, offering a native combo for dinner and dance music. Spot never caught on, but now comes Miss Abbott with a layout that really adrenalizes the room, with plans afoot to fashion successor shows along similar lines.

Island revues after a point tend to emulsify in the viewer's mind. The vibrating pelvises and all have been around before, never mind the variations. Miss Abbott, however, has taken obvious pains to make this one (in for eight weeks through Labor Day) as authentic and diverting as possible. In support of the Lyman group are vocalists Kaipuala and Jimmy Kaina, sword and flame dancer Manu, and the Kent Ghirard Dancers (6), who'd been lensed for the "South Pacific" and Cinerama "South Seas Adventure" motion pix. Top talents, combined with Ghirard's staging of the whole, make this a better than average presentation of the idiom, and it's duly received by the squares who come to sample exotica from both floor and plate (cuisine is plentiful, excellent and priced moderately).

Supporting company sets up a fine mood for Lyman's Island-style jazz. Manu's fire dance is a gasper for the femmes who fear he'll incinerate himself. The singers exhibit pleasant pipery, dueting "Hawaiian Wedding Song" and Miss Kaipuala in a couple of solos. The Ghirard terpers click singly and collectively, albeit the hand language, etc., must seem old hat to many. Able backing for the islanders is by Carl Sand's orch (a five-piecer also on hand for pre-show dinner and dance melodies).

When the show switches to Lyman, he's found in an alcove setting at the opposite side of the room. For about 30 minutes the foursome holds the crowd with exotic sounds reminiscent of the Martin Denny group which preceded them to America. Avoiding intrinsic comparisons, Lyman furnishes fewer birdcalls and tries to get over some digestible jazz within, of course, the exotic framework.

Keyboard, vibes, bass and percussion backbone the outfit, with bongos, congos, gourds, seashells, etc., spicing, and making turn an engrossing one in sight and sound all the way. But especially with "Bridge on River Kwai March," which intensifies en route a la Ravel's Bolero. There's a nifty novelty called "Japanese Drinking Song" that scores with tabler mitt participation, and unit winds with a tasteful "Slaughter on 10th Avenue" to a solid hand.

All this said, it only remains to be noted that the room's tropical decor is depressingly spurious and sterile—not at all like Trader Vic surveys the flavor.

Village Gate, N. Y.

Brock Peters, Bill Harris, Ron & Nama; no minimum.

Art D'Lugoff, who operates this vast Village cellar spot, has plenty of entertainment wrapped up in this summer layout. Bill sets a high for warm season so far here, being headed by Brock Peters, the film menace (Crown) in "Porgy and Bess," now at N.Y. Warner Theatre. It's his night club debut.

Youthful Israeli folksingers, Ron & Nama (New Acts), here before, are as popular as ever. Audience was unhappy when they signed off after nearly 40 minutes. While this pair has appeared on television and have been around since arriving in the U.S., names do not appear in VARIETY files.

Husky, young Peters, who looks like he had played tackle in his school days, is a Negro bass-baritone with immense potentialities. He admitted suffering from a slight case of laryngitis on the night caught. But his current act suffers mostly from haphazard routining. There is too much stress on the same type of song. But all this can be straightened out since he has the pipes and backing from the talented Bill Harris on the guitar.

His opening number, "Shackles Off My Legs," seems a bit heavy. But he follows it up with a softer, slower tune, "Lucky Love." Then there is a fine arrangement of "St. James Infirmary" for excellent returns. "I'm going Home, Boy" is a commendable choice, but standout is the medley of numbers from "Porgy and Bess," which he whams over.

Peters not only lauds his accompanist Harris but lets him on for a solo stint with his guitar. Harris wows the patrons with his gymnastics on the strings, often jazzing the classics with effortless skill. Wear.

Flamingo, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, July 16.

Jan Murray, Gloria DeHaven, Leigh Ann Austin, Don Kirk, Marlene Miller, Flamingoettes (9), Jack Cathcart Orch (13); produced by Barry Ashton; $3 minimum.

Jan Murray, absent from Vegas for several seasons, returns with a fast and funny standup comedy routine that stamps him as one of the top storytellers in the biz. Co-starred on bill is Gloria DeHaven, who's also a welcome returnee after a lengthy stay away from the Strip.

Murray breezes through some one-liners and situation gags about Vegas gambling, tv cowboys, and his teenage son, among other recognizable subjects, and tops the turn with his hilarious version of the song, "Laugh, Clown, Laugh."

Miss DeHaven looks better than ever, and she presents a great combination of poise and animation as she sings "It's Been A Long, Long Time," "Taing A Chance On Love," "Who's Sorry Now?," "Anything Goes," "I Want To Be Happy," "I Want To Be Loved By You," "I'm Just Wild About Harry," "Button Up Your Overcoat," "Little Girl Blue" and "Why Shouldn't I?" Leonard Corris is her arranger-conductor, and lighting for her act is by Hugo Granata.

A dandy new Barry Ashton production number called "Blues Behind the Blinds" is the curtain-raiser, which features showgirl Leigh Ann Austin making an impressive debut as a singer, Don Kirk, Marlene Miller and the Flamingoettes (9). The Jack Cathcart orch (13) smoothly backs the entire show, set for four frames. Duke.

Cork Club, Houston

Houston, July 14.

Johnny Maddox, Mel Arvin Orch (5); no cover or minimum.

Young (32) Johnny Maddox is a throwback to the oldtime ragtime pianists, and while he admittedly plays a commercial ragtime, his work captures the spirit of each tune, popular two or three generations ago. For club audiences who like a beat to their music, and most of the Cork Club patrons indicate they do, Maddox is their boy.

His ensemble features a shirt with red stripes, a vest, and arm bands. Only the derby and a stein of beer on the upright are missings. Ragtime, in Maddox style, gives his fingers such a pounding that he has to apply band aids to the tips before each performance. Then he launches the fastest 30 minutes in the biz.

The Mel Arvin orch does a fine backing job, but in working behind the freewheeling Maddox, about all the band can do is let the rhythm section hang on to his shirttails. His begoff is his big Dot record album, "Crazy Otto Medley."

Maddox, the first Dot recording artist, and who has 13 albums to his credit now, pretty much has this field to himself, although there are signs that ragtime is on the way back, what with the player pianos being dusted off and the popularity of Tiny Little, on the Lawrence Welk tv show. If the response of Cork Club auditors is any indication, ragtime is back. Skip.

Fontainebleau, M. B'ch

Miami Beach, July 18.

Jack Carter, Fernanda Montel, Murray Schlamm, Sacasas Orch; $3.50-$5 minimum.

Jack Carter is pulling the heaviest biz of an in-and-out summer run for the La Ronde, confirming his stature in this area as a solid draw personality for any posh cafe. That the Fontainebleau's Ben Novack has him pacted for several returns through the year is additional recognition of this fact, first established at the Americana last year, which had him in for four dates.

The room's flexibility as regards capacity—cutdown from 850—is being utilized, with the new stage used for orch setting and the old hydraulic oval again raised for shows and dancing. Thus the more intimate setup (485) is a perfect one for a comic. In Carter's case, he gets them howling from opening rundown of topical one-liners, fresh from the headlines and anent summertime in Miami. Per always, his shrewdly balanced act has a singing opener that is composed of such one-liners in lyric form to set the giggles running. His fast and furious approach is now a better-paced affair, the timing sharp. And his lampoonings of a Belafonte, a Jose Greco and Ed Sullivan take on fuller—and funnier—dimensions through intelligent editing since last seen. Toss in his hoofing, the Jolsonesque song delivery and the continued dynamics and it added up to a begoff stint.

Fernanda Montel is an added starter and gets off nicely in the tough opening slot. Handsomely gowned, as always, the blonde, tanned and tall Parisienne reaps warm response to her Gallic accented group of chansons, with a bright topper in her "toast" to the "Roaring '20s." Murray Schlamm makes for a literate emcee, while Sacasas backs the show aptly and keeps the dansapation segs moving with a fine group of arrangements. Johnnie Ray takes over at end of week for his first date in these parts in some time. Lary.

Colony Club, Dallas

Dallas, July 14.

Johnny Bachemin Revue, with Jody Lawrence, Grady Wilson, Bob Sickles, Joe Garcia Quartet; $2 cover.

This midtown cabaret is a second home for talented Johnny Bachemin. He had his first "important" booking here 12 years ago by owner-operator Abe Weinstein and scored easily in a long run. Not forgetting the break, he returns when he has open dates; last time, August, '57, he came back to bring hefty biz in a five-week stand. Currently he's staging his own revue and this marks his 17th date here. Again his reception from local and out-of-town fans augurs a fat b.o., rosy for Weinstein because Bachemin has a slick, neatly paced show that's set for four weeks, at least Bachemin, a tireless worker, has been known as a triple-threat talent.. This time around he's adding bongo and conga drum playing to his singing, dancing and 88ing display. He can do no wrong here, no doubt about it, and he gets stronger in each outing. This time he's headlining his own production, but let's face it—the fabulous guy can satisfy the most discerning nitery fans in a one-man show if he chooses.

Returning to terping, Bachemin does semi-classical bits, reminiscent of Jose Greco in torrid meshing of handclapping and cleating. At intervals he intersperses sudden comic throwaway lines with zany amateur terp steps; switches throw the tablers and Bachemin can't miss. Begs off after three encores, piping "When You're Smiling."

Middle act is "naughty but classy" stripper Jody Lawrence, whose lives up to her billing, also. Lovely blonde, with a pixie face, is adept at astonishing glances and eyebrow lifting, so much so that her facial maneuvers distract tablers from viewing the classy chassis and her arty, sensual dance turn. Production bit includes disrobing casually on a special stage set, donning transparent negligee and reclining, much like Lili St. Cyr's w. k. act.

Singing guitarist Grady Wilson, furnishes capable vocals and fretting as an opener and serves as emcee. Handsome, husky blonde has an odd choice of vocal fare for this intime spot.

Joe Garcia augments his trio to a quartet for this lengthy show, furnishes top showbacking and loads the floor with leather pushers. Bark.

Praise Caesar

Fabian, has been preaching the stock buying gospel.

It's known that many individual wealthier exhibitors have substantial holdings in various film companies, but so far have not been disposed to utilize their ownership status at annual meetings or otherwise. During periods of serious conflicts between theatremen and certain companies, individual exhibitors have stated privately that they would introduce changes at the annual meetings.

But so far the only exhibitor action at annual meetings has been forthright defenses of the management in the face of criticism from dissident stockholders. Harry Brandt, for example, has twice headed stockholder committees to support Loew's when the latter was faced with proxy fights. Emanuel Frisch, an executive of the Randforce circuit, has taken the floor at a Loew's annual meeting to defend the management. RKO Theatres topper Sol Schwartz sang the praises of Spyros Skouras at a 20th-Fox annual meeting. At no time can it be recalled has an exhibitor gotten up at a stockholder meeting to denounce the company for excessive film rentals, for not making more pictures, or for selling its pre-1948 library to tv.

Curiously, it is aforementioned three issues that most concern exhibitors and it's their hope to influence policy on these subjects if and when they can obtain a voice, via stock ownership, in the film companies. In addition, exhibitors aim to halt the efforts of the so-called liquidation-minded Wall Streeters, some of whom are said to see more value in shutting down operations than continuing under present market conditions. The Wall Streeters, too, it's believed are in the forefront of those who want to unload the post-1948 backlog to television for quick financial gains.

TOA, via its chief, George G. Kerasotes, quickly came to the support of MPI this week and urged theatremen to purchase shares in the company.

Hoff-With-the-Boff

MPI, which got off to a slow start, appears to be making substantial progress. J. Robert Hoff, president of the Ballantyne Co. of Omaha, an equipment firm, has taken a six months leave of absence to head up MPI's sales organization. Walter Reade Jr., the new president of MPI, has been extremely active in promulgating the purposes of MPI, as has Howard E. Jameyson, outgoing prexy and new board chairman. Jameyson, of Commonwealth Theatres, is the originator of the MPI plan.

Members of the board of MPI include Robert S. Ballantyne, of the Ballantyne Co.; Jack D. Braunagel, president of Hope Enterprises; W. Hardy Hendron, president of United Film Service; L. J. Kimbriel, manager of Missouri Theatre Supply; Beverly Miller, Miller Enterprises; Richard H. Orear, president of Commonwealth Theatres; Clifford E. Parker, vice president of Alexander Film Co.; Clark S. Rhoden, Rhoden Enterprises; Ben Shlyen, publisher of Boxoffice, and Phillip Smith, president of Midwest Drive-in Theatres.

In addition to Reade and Jameyson, officers include Miller and Ballantyne, veepees; Orear, treasurer, and Byron Spencer, secretary.

House Reviews

Roxy, N. Y.

Robert C. Rothafel presentation with Mata & Hari, Sallie Blair, Will Jordan, Robert Boucher Orch; sets, Bruno Maine; "The Big Circus," reviewed in VARIETY, June 8, '59.

The Roxy's stageshow has lots of adult appeal at a time when the screen has an opus designed to bring in moppets. With clowns and giants and a man on stilts in front of the house appealing to the youngsters, there's a youthful population inside, while exceedingly adult stage fare is on hand. If worked in proper proportions, this could bring in healthy business, but as far as audience appreciation is concerned, the sexy offerings of Sallie Blair, the upper IQ bits of Mata & Hari and the miming of Will Jordan are lost to the youngsters. The fortunate part is that since the elders must accompany the brats, there is still a sizable audience of appreciators in the house, even during the matinee sessions.

A bill like this is hard to routine. Namewise it's a hard choice of whether to close with any one of them. There is room for debate whether the present running order is the best, but it works out fairly well. Mata & Hari are on first, Will Jordan deuces and Miss Blair closes.

Mata & Hari are more suitable for the concert than for the large vauders, but their material constitutes good sight comedy. They pantomime a silent screen bit, a pair of teenagers and their topper is the Carnegie Hall number in which they act out various instruments. It is all clever, sophisticated, and of course, excellently executed. Some of the subtleties are lost here, but in the main they are amply rewarded.

Jordan is a creative mimic. The first to do Ed Sullivan, who has become nearly standard in the impressionists' catalogs, Jordan shows a great deal of originality in virtually every impersonation he doles out. His Sullivan is tops, and he is able to get off unusual personalities such as James Mason and Paul Lucas, and tops off his efforts by showing how various performers walk. It's quite well done.

Miss Blair dispenses a catalog of her hits. Dressed in a beaded sheath, the Negro singer, backed by a bongo, ladles out her own brand of rhythm tune starting with "Witchcraft" and ending with "Black Magic." Her vocal demonstrations with incidental terping of a sort do quite well for her.

Managing director Robert C. Rothafel has provided a colorful stage set executed by Bruno Maine, and Robert Boucher dispenses top musical backing plus the announcements. Jose.

Pavilion, Glasgow

Glasgow, July 21.

"The Lex McLean Show," produced by Billy Dunlop. Stars Lex McLean, with The Hi-Fi's (3), Bentley Sisters (2) & Billy Manton, Tony Vallance & Lillian, Kay Ward, Carr & Vonnie, Melody Makers (4), Cecil Sheridan, Roddy McNeil, Billy Rose Orch.

Lex McLean, drawling Auld Lang Syne comedian with a localized Glasgow flavoring in his humor, tops this spotty layout, scoring in comedy sketches which are corny but yockworthy. Funnyman, careless in his gabbing and adding many topical bits, is best as a convict in a prison-without-bars, and also as a femme assistant in a biscuit-packing factory. He is essentially limited in his comedy appeal, but has lotsa offbeat quality in his gangling gait and tossing of asides. Glen Daly is a vigorous foil, and squeaking-voiced Jimmy Carr, a diminutive type, scores as stooge.

In the musical dept., the Hi-Fi's, two males and a distaffer, offer a well-rehearsed song routine, ranging through pops to rock 'n'roll; this act is only one on bill with wider potential. The Melody Makers are four young kilted performers offering Scot folk tunes on various instruments, but act is rough and requires much sharpening. Tony Vallance & Lillian offer pleasing songalog with some style.

The two Bentley Sisters dance neatly in routines with lively young Billy Manton, and register in a flappers-of-the-'20s item. Roddy McNeil, Scot warbler, is best in "Song o' the Clyde." Kay Ward and Vonnie Carr aid in the sketch dept. Cecil Sheridan is n.s.g. guest comedian from Ireland. Gord.

Apollo, N. Y.

Roy Hamilton's Starlite Revue, starring Roy Hamilton with Charles Aiken's Dansations (8), The Solitaires (4), Mauri Leighton, Pigmeat & Shorty, Mattison Trio; "Chicago Syndicate" (Col.).

Economic pressures, it seems, make it more difficult to present an intergrated show in N. Y. than in traditionally segregated Washington, D. C.

In its D. C. preem, producer Bill Cook's "Roy Hamilton's Starlite Revue" had a chorus line of 10 with two male Negro terpers and four Negro and four white girls, and a mixed band. But the whites in the line wanted more coin to play the Harlem vaudery. Since Cook had contracted a flat price for the line with choreographer Charles Aikens, two Negro chorines from the local scene have replaced the four whites. To hang on to the "integrated" billing, however, Cook has added four white violinists to the Reuben Phillip's house band, and the Mattison Trio is an okay tap group.

The big voice of Epic disker Roy Hamilton, of course, dominates the show. He turns on a devoted audience with a brace of his early disclicks, "Ebb Tide," "Unchained Melody," "You'll Never Walk Alone," and finale's the hour and a half show with a frantic rendition of "Don't Let Go." The latter is a nice change of pace for the ballad man, as is "I Need Your Love So Bad," a rock 'n' roller done with a cha cha beat.

Hamilton's distaff counterpart in the revue, Mauri Leighton, likewise has a voice big enough to fill the Pentagon. She belts three numbers with a genuine show of aud-warming enthusiasm. Her verve, however, doesn't overshadow a subtle air of sophistication. In her sultry encore, "Simi Lo," which is partly talk, Miss Leighton displays a sharp sense of the dramatic.

The Solitaires, an r&r quartet, are singular because of the strong solos of lead singer Milton Love. In this day of the whoop and the wail, his singing is unusually straightforward.

The terping of the dansations and the Mattison Trio is fairly routine, but it gets extra punch from colorful and sexy costuming.

Pigmeat and Shorty, a burleycue comedy team without the blue, could update their material a bit. Their windup number is "If You Can't Be Good, Please Be Careful," dealing with army induction.

Japan's Tactics

which started April 1, 1959, raised the number of import licenses to 140 from a prior 120. These licenses theoretically cover all foreign films, but the major gain should go to the Americans, Takamura said. The Japanese are somewhat torn in their reaction to this increase. As producers, an outfit like Shochiku doesn't like the added competition. But as a distributor and particularly as exhibitors, Shochiku has no complaints whatever.

Takamura said there was a definite effort, at least on the part of Shochiku, to "internationalize" its films. As an example he cited the fact that, while in Berlin, he signed German ski champion Toni Sailor to appear in a Shochiku production.

The Japanese exec had strong words of praise for the project being undertaken by Thomas J. Brandon, who is planning the showing of a series of new Japanese films in New York this fall. "The Japanese industry itself is responsible for the lack of trade in the United States," he said. "We have concentrated entirely too much on the Japanese language theatres. Our weakness is that we have relied on a few Americans to come to Japan and pick out the films which are right for the U. S. market. What we should do is to bring our pictures over here and show them to distributors. I am quite aware that only Americans can finally decide which of our pictures will appeal to other Americans."

'Drunkard' Is Going Off the Sauce After 26-Year Hollywood Binge

Hollywood, July 14.

A theatrical era will end on Oct. 10 when "The Drunkard" and its musical adaptation, "The Wayward Way," close a run of more than 26 years at the Theatre Mart in Hollywood. The fold of the production has been announced by Mrs. Mildred Ilse, founder-producer. She and her husband are leaving the theatrical field to devote time to a family ranch in Texas, travel and part-time residence in Hawaii.

The Theatre Mart production, approaching its 10,000th performance, has played to more than 3,000,000 patrons. "The Drunkard" was originally produced by P. T. Barnum in 1843 at the American Museum in New York. After a year's run, it remained shelved for 90 years until Galt Bell, a Carmel, Calif., actor-producer-director, conceived the idea of reviving it. Ilse, a telephone executive, and his wife backed the revival.

The show was a near-flop in its first eight weeks, then became an overnight hit, with road companies playing the Palace Hotel in San Francisco and the Palmer House in Chicago in 1934 and 1935. Bell sold his interest in the play to Mrs. Ilse in 1946.

In 1953, to mark the 20th year of the run, Mrs. Ilse commissioned a musical version, "The Wayward Way," with music by Lorne Hycke and lyrics by Bill Howe Jr. Dan Eckley staged the tune version. "The Drunkard" opened July 6, 1933, and "The Wayward Way" had its premiere Sept. 3, 1953.

'Annie' a Hit in Denver; Lotsa Cuffo Patronage For Annual Post Show

Denver, July 21.

About 105,000 legitgoers freeloaded on the Denver Post last week. That was the estimated turnout for the seven-performance run of "Annie Get Your Gun," sponsored by the newspaper as its 26th annual cuffo-admission summer opera offering. The musical, with Broadway principals heading a cast of over 100, was presented in Cheesman Park.

Park benches, seating around 7,500, had been set up for the al fresco presentation. Attendance averaged 15,000 each performance, with the more seasoned "patrons" bringing their own folding chairs, camp stools, cushions and blankets. The program for the tuner, which opened July 13 and ran through last Sunday (19), was published in the July 12 edition of the Post.

Rain on two of the seven nights cut the attendance down to a moist 10,000 hardy showgoers, but clear and cool evenings upped the take to an average 15,000 persons. There was no boxoffice, no tickettakers, so "customers" just walked in to the grassy Mall of Cheesman Park, in the heart of the Capitol Hill residential district and staked out their claims.

Early arrivals nabbed the 7,500 seats on park benches which were arranged in auditorium fashion in front of the park's Grecian Pavilion, which was transformed into a working stage, equipped with lighting facilities and for rapid change of scenery.

Leading roles were in the hands of Broadway players imported by the Post for the production, while bit parts, chorus and dancers were local professional and semi-pros. Betty Jane Watson handled the title role with lusty-gusty spirit, sending her songs out on the amplifier, booming to the "squatters" in the last rows, at least two city blocks away. Danny Scholl was Frank Butler, with Betty Garde as Dolly Tate, George Smiley as Buffalo Bill and Zachary Charles as Sitting Bull.

Beverly (Mass.) Tunetent Opens 3-Way Restaurant

Beverly, Mass., July 21.

The North Shore Music Theatre opened its new Theatre Terrace Restaurant last night (Mon.) and threw a post-performance party for the cast of "Wish You Were Here."

The eatery serves dinner, intermission snacks and after show supper.

Equity Donates $2,500 For 'Non-Profit' Stock

The North Jersey Playhouse, Fort Lee, N.J., which was on the verge of collapse as a commercial venture, has switched to non-profit status. In making the move, the operation got a cash gift of $2,500 from Actors Equity, on the stipulation that the playhouse function as a permanent non-profit operation.

"Hole in the Head" opened at the house last night (Tues.) following a two week run of "Rashomon," with Norman Bly in the role originated on Broadway by Rod Steiger.

Guild-ATS 'Hopes' On Mpls. Theatre

Minneapolis, July 21.

The Theatre Guild-American Theatre Society still "hopes" that the local Friends of the Theatre group and other civic leaders will be successful in their quest to find a theatre in which to house its subscription season attractions here. That's the theme of a letter from the Guild-ATS to last season's 4,500 subscribers.

Thus far, here's been no success in efforts to obtain a legit stand other than the State, where the shows played last season. The Minnesota Amusement Co. (United Paramount), which operates the film house, has thus far declined to make available for the subscription season again.

In its letter, the Guild-ATS asks subscribers to "bear with us a little while longer until we are ready to announce a definite course of action which will bring you the high standard in theatre that your enthusiastic support merits." It's understood here that unless localites can come up with a theatre within the next few weeks the ATS-Guild will switch the subscription season to the St. Paul Auditorium, and hope that Minneapolis will cooperate to make the operation a success.

When approached several weeks ago by the Guild and asked for Minneapolis cooperation and support for a St. Paul auditorium subscription season, Lorin Staples Jr., head of the local Friends of the Theatre group, issued a blunt turndown. Because there's no theatre here available now the St. Paul Auditorium gets "My Fair Lady" for a fortnight early next fall.

40 NIGHTS OF BARD AT OREGON FESTIVAL

Ashland, Ore., July 21.

The Oregon Shakespeare Festival here is scheduled to begin a 40-night run July 28 in its entirely new Elizabethan theatre, financed by a successful $275,000 international fund-raising campaign. Productions scheduled are "Twelfth Night," "King John," "Measure for Measure" and "Antony and Cleopatra."

This summer marks the operation's 19th season.

Schedule 'Marriage' For German-Language Dates

Leslie Stevens' "Marriage-Go-Round" is in for a spread of German-language productions. The comedy, recently produced at the Renaissance Theatre, Berlin, is scheduled for presentation in Munich and Vienna next September.

The roles originated by Claudette Colbert and Charles Boyer in the Broadway production, which is currently taking a summer layoff, were played in Berlin by Victor de Kowa and Heli Finkenzeller. Handling the costarring assignment when the play opens at the Theatre in der Josefstadt, Vienna, will be Susi Nicoletti and Erik Frey.

Appearing in the Munich edition at the Kleine Komodie will be Susanne von Almassy and Gustav Frohlich.

Williamstown Grows

Williamstown, Mass., July 21.

The budget for the Williamstown Summer Theatre has doubled since its opening in 1955.

At a meeting of the local Rotary Club, William J. Martin, general manager of the barn, revealed that the nut jumped from $25,000 to $50,000 this season. The number of people involved in the operation, including cast, staff and apprentices has more than doubled since the opening semester.

Plan 'Chatterley' For B'way Legit

Hollywood, July 21.

Jack Linder, who tried out a stage version of "Lady Chatterly's Lover" at the Brighton Theatre, Brooklyn, in 1937, is now planning to present a new dramatization of the D. H. Lawrence novel on Broadway. The vet producer, who claims to have held the stage and screen rights to the work since 1943, has a Los Angeles syndicate of industrialists behind him in the proposed venture.

The L. A. group, headed by Carl Robinson, Taul Watanabe and Bruce Kaji, has offered to put up $250,000 for the Broadway venture. That's virtually double the average capitalization required to produce a regular straight play on Broadway. Linder's renewed interest in a legit presentation of the novel stems from the current controversy over the unexpurgated original work and the French film version, which he figures as b.o. factors.

Linder plans getting a fresh dramatization of the property. The 1937 tryout was adapted by Vincent Marr and the producer's late brother, Mark Linder. One of the syndicate heads, Watanabe, is due to plane into New York tomorrow morning (Wed.) for a four-day stay in connection with the contemplated legit production.

Linder currently has a $350,000 infringement suit against Columbia Pictures and Kingsley Releasing Corp., over their current pic version of the novel pending in Los Angeles Federal Court. The producer's Broadway credits include "Diamond Li'l" and "The Squealer."

SOVIET MUSIC-DANCE GROUP TO PLAY MPLS.

Minneapolis, July 21.

After seeing a Russian "Music and Dance Festival" performance in New York's Madison Square Garden, local impresario Morris Chalfen induced Sol Hurok, who imported the show, to bring it to Minneapolis. That involved cancelling a scheduled Cleveland engagement.

Minneapolis wasn't originally included in the five-city tour scheduled to follow the initial New York appearance. However, with State Dept. consent, the troupe will play the local municipal Auditorium Aug. 13-15, under Chalfen's local sponsorship.

Chalfen's "Holiday on Ice" recently concluded a successful eight-week engagement in Russia. Afterwards Chalfen obtained a contract with the Soviet government permitting him, like Hurok, to promote Russian exchange groups in the U.S. He plans to take more shows to a number of behind-the-Iron Curtain countries.

Chalfen was instrumental in getting the Russian Moiseyev dancers to appear here for a Northwest Variety club heart hospital benefit engagement. The show played to capacity for two nights in the 4,600-seat Northrop Auditorium.

New Outfit Takes Over Charles Theatre, Boston

Boston, July 21.

A new management took over the Boston Summer Playhouse at the 300-seat Charles Theatre last week, following the recent fold of the Stanley Wolf Players. As its first bill, the new group presented "The Moon Is Blue," opening last Thursday (16) for a run.

Lewis Lehman staged, with a cast comprising Fred Morehouse, Myra Mailloux, Frank Langella and Jack Sheridan.

Merrick Is a N.Y. Summer Festival; Shows Defy Traditional B.O. Slump

The traditional summer slump in legit hasn't seriously affected Broadway producer David Merrick. A combined gross of over $1,600,000 has been piled up by shows under his sponsorship since the current season got underway seven weeks ago.

Involved in the hefty take are the Main Stem productions of "Destry Rides Again," at the Imperial; "Gypsy," at the Broadway; "La Plume de Ma Tante," at the Royale, and "World of Suzie Wong," at the Broadhurst, plus the Coast company of "Romanoff and Juliet," which closed July 11. "La Plume," currently in the third week of a layoff, resumes Aug. 3.

When all five shows were running simultaneously, the combined take went as high as $261,306 for the week ending June 20. "Gypsy," with Ethel Merman starred, has been $82,900 most weeks, with the take going as high as $82,992, believed to be a record for a regular-run Broadway show. "Destry," costarring Andy Griffith and Dolores Gray, hit a peak of $68,200 during the seven-week spread. The tuner, however, registered a low for the period last week with a $54,300 gross.

"La Plume," starring Robert Dhery," was taking in a steady $45,100 prior to its layoff. The weekly grosses for "Suzie" since last June 1 have ranged from $18,400 to $32,100. The play is now on twofers. "Romanoff," starring Peter Ustinov," put in five weeks on the Coast with receipts ranging from $28,300 the opening frame to $54,400 the closing stanza.

Besides virtually eliminating the traditional summer slump for the New York theatres operated by the Shuberts, the Merrick splurge has served to establish the Broadway Theatre as a major house, since his and Leland Hayward's production of "Gypsy" has been making a killing at the previously in-and-out house. It's figured that on some weeks the Shubert share of the four-show Broadway gross reached nearly $55,000.

2 Chi Strawhats Book Pat O'Brien for Dates

Chicago, July 21.

Pat O'Brien has been engaged by a pair of silos in this area this season, his first date being at Tenthouse Theatre in Highland Park, beyond the north boundary of town, and his second at Drury Lane in Evergreen Park, at the extreme south side. The two suburbs are about 40 miles apart.

The film star opens Aug. 10 at the Tenthouse in "The Loud Red Patrick," the same show he played at Drury Lane last season. This year he'll do a fortnight in "Father of the Bride" at the latter, opening Sept. 22.

Sale Pending On Alvin Theatre, N.Y.

A deal is reportedly imminent for the sale of the CBS-owned Alvin Theatre, N.Y. It's understood the network is asking $1,500,000 for the house, which can accommodate both musicals and straight plays.

Among those seeking the property are City Investing Corp., which operates several Broadway theatres; Billy Rose, who recently acquired the National Theatre, N.Y.; Lester Osterman, who's taken over the Coronet Theatre, N.Y.; and the Juamcym Corp., which operates the St. James Theatre, N.Y., and several out-of-town theatres.

ARTS FEST IN AUSSIE SET FOR NEXT MARCH

Stratford, Ont., July 21.

Australia plans a 14-day arts festival, to open next March. It's to be modeled on the Shakespeare Festival here. Australian representatives were here recently making notes. The fest will be held in Adelaide, on the Torrens River, and funds are being raised from private citizens. Nearly $100,000 has reportedly been subscribed already.

Sydney and Adelaide symphony orchestras will combine for the opening, with the Melbourne Symphony due later. Ian Hunter, artistic director, had a similar post with the Edinburgh Festival for five years.

Jacqueline Cook Losing The St. Martin's, London

London, July 21.

Jacqueline Cook, lessee of the St. Martin's Theatre for many years, will have to give up her tenancy at the end of the year under a settlement announced in the Chancery Division of the High Court last week. She sought to continue the lease.

As of Jan. 1, the operation of the house will revert to the landlord, Lord Willoughby De Broke, and it will be managed on his behalf by Bertie Meyer. An assurance has been given that existing contracts in respect of the current bill, "The Grass Is Greener," will be honored if the show is still running at the end of the year.

Winters Going Home

Dayton, July 21.

Nitery-television comedian Jonathan Winters will return to his hometown here in a new revue. The show is scheduled for a Sept. 8-13 tryout as the windup entry in Douglas Crawford's stock season at the local Memorial Hall.

Crawford has also cancelled plans to present "On the Town" here July 28-Aug. 2. He produced the musical off-Broadway last season and is contemplating a London production next fall. He's subbing "Oklahoma" for "Town." Crawford has also released Mel Torme from his contract to star in an Aug. 4-9 presentation of "Seven Year Itch." The singer requested the release because of other commitments.

Now Say Keith's, Wash., Wouldn't Book Legiters; Too Few Touring Shows

Washington, July 21.

Keith's Theatre, the 1,850-seat film house that may be turned over to the city of Washington, probably wouldn't be booked for legit tourers or pre-Broadway tryouts. That's the latest development in the proposal to transform the RKO filmery into a municipally-operated stage house.

District of Columbia commissioners, highest local government officials, are now studying details of the offer of Morris Cafritz, wealthy realtor-builder and civic leader, to give the theatre and its eight-story office building to the city. The city (or a citizen's committee) would have to assume and pay off the $1,500,000 mortgage on the property. Cafritz estimates its value, including land, at $4,000,000.

Cafritz originally spoke of Keith's offer as a means of affording Washington "a second legitimate theatre," but thinking has since crystalized on idea of a

Paul Martin Michael, co-producer of last season's revivals of Arthur Laurents' "Time of the Cuckoo" and "Clearing in the Woods" at the Sheridan Square Playhouse, N.Y., is planning an off-Broadway production of "Strangers in the World," a folk musical by Brainard Cheney. Michael appeared in the work when it was preemed in 1952 at the Vanderbilt Univ. Theatre, Nashville, Tenn. He was a student there at the time.

The "Strangers" venture is budgeted at $20,000, representing $11,471 pre-production expenses, $1,306 for bonds, $3,600 advance rental and $3,623 contingency fund. Michael figures weekly operating expenses would be $4,000 in a 299-seat house, with a weekly capacity gross potential of $8.300, and $2,500 in a 199-seater, with a gross potential of $5,000.

The Rope Dancers

London, July 15.

Arts Theatre Club (in association with Live Theatre Ltd.) presentation of three-act (five scenes) drama by Morton Wishengrad. Stars Joan Miller, Hugh Burden, Carol Wolveridge. Staging, Peter Cotes; decor, Neil Hobson. Opened July 14, '59, at Arts Theatre Club, London; $2 top.

Margaret Hyland	Joan Miller
Lizzie Hyland	Carol Wolveridge
Moving Man	Wilfrid Harrison
Mrs. Farrow	Averil Logan
Clementine Farrow	Daphne Foreman
James Hyland	Hugh Burden
Lameshnik	Eric Dodson
Cop	Bruce Boa
Dr. Jacobson	Robert Rietty

There are interesting dramatic features in Morton Wishengrad's "The Rope Dancers," but if fails to hit the theatrical peak for which the author so obviously strives. The presentation at the intimate Arts Theatre Club should hold up for its limited engagement, but is a questionable prospect to transfer for a regular West End run.

As staged by Peter Cotes, "The Rope Dancers" strains for effect, mainly through the taut and unrelieved portrayal by Joan Miller as the mother of the deformed child who had been born with six fingers on one hand and, as a result, had been sheltered from society. Miss Miller (in private life Mrs. Cotes) is thoroughly experienced in playing this type of role and gives it considerable impact.

Most of the sympathy, however, is directed to her husband, warmly played by Hugh Burden, as the literate drunk from whom she has long been separated, but who keeps coming back to see the child he loves. Carol Wolveridge, who came into prominence with her naively sinister interpretation of the child in "The Bad Seed," has another role almost in similar vein. She's more experienced, and it shows up in her performance.

The author smoothly illustrates the complex relationship between the mother, child and father. The development has an Ibsen-like quality to it in construction, but not in the writing. That, indeed, is the prime weakness of the play.

Apart from the three principals, there is a warm performance by Averil Logan as the neighbor on the floor below, another by Daphne Foreman, as her dirty, ill-kempt daughter and a third by Robert Rietty as the Jewish doctor.

One to Another

London, July 16.

J. Baxter Somerville and Donmer Productions presentation of two-part revue, by Robert Benchley, John Cranko, Serge Gainsbourg, Bamber Gascoigne, Patrick Gowers, David Heneker, Joseph Horovitz, Roddy Maude-Roxby, Julian More, John Mortimer, Stanley Myers, David Nobbs, Monty Norman, Dorothy Parker, Harold Pinter, Alistair Sampson, William Sampson, Humphrey Searle, N. F. Simpson, Keith Statham, Brian Tester. Staging, Eleanor Fazan; decor, Disley Jones. Stars Beryl Reid, Patrick Wymark; features Patricia Bredin, Ray Barrett, Sheila Hancock, Barbara Evans, Tony Tanner, Roddy Maude-Roxby, Joe Melia. Opened July 15, '59, at Lyric Opera House, Mammersmith, London; $1.75 top.

It's improbable, however, that "One to Another" will follow the pattern of other revues which have opened at the Lyric, in Hammersmith, and been transferred to the West End for hit runs. It's too spotty, and has a succession of labored, dull sketches.

Out of 26 items in the two-part presentation, just two or three are of London standard. Easily the best is a 10-second sketch in which one character says "Let's join the ladies" and another replies "Let's. Let's join them all together and make one big lady." It has at least the merit of brevity.

In another amusing scene a workman complains to the factory boss about the company's products. A moving and well defined sketch featuring Beryl Reid and Sheila Hancock as old women in an all-night cafe is hardly suitable for revue. And there is a pleasant ditty sung by Joe Melia of a postman who only likes to deliver happy letters.

The credits show list than 20 authors, including Robert Benchley, John Cranko, Harold Pinter, John Mortimer, David Heneker, Stanley Myers an Bamber Gascoigne. There is an off-beat, almost surrealist quality about most of the writing, but too many of the sketches are overlong and miss out as punchy humorous scenes, and others are just dull. The revue is particularly weak on lyrics, and there's not a song in the show which survives the test of memory.

There's some worthwhile talent, but not strong enough to sustain a full production. Miss Reid is amusing, but her sketches are of mixed quality. Patricia Bredin is a competent singer, but has few chances with the material at her disposal. Patrick Wymark, a newcomer to revue, makes a pleasant impact, Sheila Hancock shows considerable versatility, and Joe Melia is a promising new personality.

More resolute direction by Eleanor Fazan could have helped the production, but Disley Jones' designs are simply effective.

Happy Days

Blackpool, Eng., July 7.

George Alfred Black, and Greenlea Productions Ltd., presentation of two-act (seven scenes) comedy by Walter Greenwood. Stars Thora Hird, Peter Sinclair. Staging, Harold Boyes; decor, Michael Weight. At Grand Theatre, Blackpool, July 6, '59; $1.20 top.

Miss Shirley Dale	Jill Thompson
Mrs. Annie Blackburn	Alison Bayley
Miss Ruby Ramwell	Pat Phoenix
Mrs. Maggie McTaggart	Thora Hird
Mr. Harry Blackburn	Bert Brownbill
Mr. Andy McTaggart	Peter Sinclair

Walter Greenwood, English playwright, knows his north-of-England types, with their working-class habits and pleasures, virtues and foibles. He characterizes them again in this vacation-flavored comedy, a so-so effort. Little to commend this script apart from being pleasantly amusing play.

Strongest portrayal is by Thora Hird, English character actress, who has worked in many films. She turns in a sound performance as the husband-badgering Mrs. Maggie McTaggart, keeping a wary eye on her Scotch-born husband (Peter Sinclair) while both are on vacation at Blackpool. Sinclair, a former vaude singer, rolls his r's in Auld Lang Syne caricature and swings his kilt to manner born; he is partnered by Bert Brownbill as a typical browbeaten regional husband.

Pat Phoenix adds gusto to her role as the man-chasing factory secretary who fixes herself in same boarding-house as the Scot husband; she's expert hip-swiveler and gets laughs with her "other woman" tactics, Alison Bayley is wrongly cast as a too-stern and unsympathetic femme in part of Mrs. Blackburn.

Setting of Blackpool boarding-house garden and interior is locally authentic, and Harold Boyes stages adequately. But play's theme has little to hold, and it shapes as mediocre trifle geared too low in quality.

Three by Tardieu

Paris, July 7.

Jacques Polieri presention of three one-act plays by Jean Tardieu. Direction, Jacques Polieri; scenic effects, Tristan Fabris; music, Anton Webern; film and slide effects, Hy Hirsh. With Georges Aubert, Roger Montsoret, Jean Pommier, Jean-Loup Philippe, Claudine Huze, Solange Sicard. At Alliance Francaise, Paris, June 22, '59; $2.50 top.

Here are three one-act, avant garde theatrical entries. They are called "poems to be played" and incorporate projections of abstract paintings and filmed segments. However, it adds up to a legit "experiment" for its own sake. Not a thing for translation or export.

First is "Sonata for Three Men" in which they palaver about the greatness of space in trying to find some sort of identity in it. They are backed by a film of their doings on stage. They sit on stools throughout and often turn backs to the audience.

The second is "Rhythm in Three Beats." Here six girls in tights mouth sonorous phrases and gyrate before a projected abstract painting. Last playlet, "The ABC of Life," is the longest and most ambitious in summing up everyday life and man's place in its hectic pace by a series of scenes and off-stage concrete sound effects, again using projected slides and film footage.

Writer Jean Tardieu claims he is creating an anti-theatre movement to do away with the usual and conventional and get at the core of human existence via played poetry.

Verlorener Sohn a la Maison

(Prodigal Son At Home)

Zurich, July 5.

Schauspielhaus presentation of drama in seven scenes by Gebhard Scherrer. Staged by Oskar Waelterlin. Sets, Peter Bissegger; technical direction, Ferdinand Lange; lighting, Walter Gross. At Schauspielhaus, Zurich, June 27, '59; $2.55 top.

Erich Pluess	Peter Oehme
Bill	Fred Tanner
Kramer	Erwin Parker
Deacon	Walter Kiesler
Martha	Traute Carlsen
Pat	Friedrich Braun
Tyler	Paul Buehlmann
Lobb	Otto Maechtlinger
Connie	Angelica Arndts
Rev. Weatherby	Alfred Schlageter
Paul Grunder	Peter Brogle
Bauer	Hanns Krassnitzer
Groeblin	Horst Sachtleben

This new Swiss play had the benefit of a once-in-a-decade exploitation gimmick: it won first prize in a drama contest by the Schauspielhaus on occasion of its 20th anni and, as per contest rules, had to be preemed anonymously, with the author to be revealed one week after the preem. (He remained anonymous even to the stagers.) Revelation disclosed a newcomer, Gebhard Scherrer, 36. He should stay anonymous.

Here is the Zurich season's worst play. If the best out of 129 plays, the imagination shudders to conjure the rest.

The plot was meant to be a present-day version of the Bible's Prodigal Son parable, the twist being that today's Son, instead of enjoying the fatted calf, goes to his doom. It's a deacon's son who turns sailor but pretending all the time to be a missionary and accepting Dad's collected funds. He uses the dough to get his whole body tattooed with obscene pictures which he exhibits for money, acquiring a roll. Upon his return, he is unable to reconcile with his father and, after unwillingly destroying the lives of two men, dies of a heart attack.

Involved in the mixed-up proceedings are: several depraved sailors, a prostie, a rundown Reverend; a rape with ensuing sex murder, a man losing his mind, lying, cheating, cowardice—and all this dipped in the gravy of some obscure "deeper meaning" with incredibly flat dialog, loose ends too numerous to count and some borrowings from more skillful writers (of which Thornton Wilder is but one)—it's all a big spectacular flop.

Under Oskar Waelterlin's direction, the cast struggled valiantly.

Atlanta Subscriber Fare

Atlanta, July 21.

The Atlanta Broadway Theatre League is offering subscribers six legit shows for the 1959-60 season. That's one more than the organization, operating under the auspices of the Atlanta Music Club, brought in during the previous semester.

The lineup includes the touring company of "My Fair Lady," "Two for the Seesaw," with Hal March, who's currently costarring in the play on Broadway; "Dark at the Top of the Stairs," "Dear Liar," costarring Katharine Cornell and Brian Aherne, and "Look Homeward, Angel." The sixth show hasn't been set yet.

"Seesaw," "Stairs" and "Angel" are being sent out under the Broadway Theatre Alliance touring setup. The productions will play the 2,000-seat Tower Theatre here. The local BTL series is managed by Marvin McDonald, with J. Lee Friedman as coordinator.

Ray Lawler's New Play Opening in Melbourne

Melbourne, July 14.

Australian playwright Ray ("Summer of the 17th Doll") Lawler's new play, "The Piccadilly Bushman," is to have its world premiere at the Comedy Theatre here in September. The new play, a comedy-drama, is a lighter work than "The Doll," and will have an all-Australian cast of nine — six men and three women.

The play is set in the Sydney harbour-side suburb of Vaucluse. It is about an Australian actor who returns to his wife after successful film appearances in England. He considers going back to England to further his career, but his wife opposes the idea.

Production of the play will be by John McCallum, assisted by William Rees, one of J. C. Williamson Theatres Ltd's permanent producers.

Vanguard Due for Detroit Sub-Supported in Fall

Detroit, July 21.

Vanguard Playhouse, a resident company operation, is earmarked for a November opening on the site of the former downtown Cinema Theatre here. Plans call for the raising of $50,000 capitalization through the sale of 5,000 memberships at $10 each.

Heading the project are Kenneth E. Schwartz, Alfred R. Glancy Jr., Byron H. Lasky and Joseph Gistiark. Schwartz is president of the Northland Playhouse, local summer theatre operation, and manager of the Cass Theatre, one of the legit touring showcases here. Glancy is a heavy backer of Broadway shows and was also represented on the Main Stem as co-producer of "Miss Lonelyhearts" during the 1957-58 season.

Inside Stuff—Legit

Andrew Rosenthal, author of "Red Letter Day," in which Gloria Swanson is touring the strawhat circuit this summer, is taking steps to force the star to eliminate "numerous unauthorized changes and revisions" in the comedy. There had been reports that the actress had altered the play, but Rosenthal was understood to be in England and unaware of the situation.

However, in a wire to VARIETY last weekend from New York, the playwright declared, "I feel it is important you know that the version now being presented of my play, 'Red Letter Day,' is being done with numerous unauthorized changes and revisions. I hope to meet early this week with Miss Swanson, the two producers, Bruce Becker and Harold J. Kennedy, and my agent, Helen Harvey, of the William Morris office, to try and straighten out this disturbing stuation."

"Red Letter Day," originally produced in England in 1952, opened its current tour June 29 at the Grist Mill Playhouse, Andover, N.J., operated by Kennedy, who staged the present edition. It played the following week at the Famous Artists Playhouse, Fayetteville, N.Y.; last week at Becker's Tappan Zee Playhouse, Nyack, N.Y., and is this week at the Westport (Conn.) Country Playhouse.

Red Letter Day

Bruce Becker presentation of three-act comedy-drama by Andrew Rosenthal. Direction, Harold J. Kennedy; advance director, Albert Penn; setting and lighting, David Johnston; theatre decor, Willis Sammons. Stars Gloria Swanson; features Buddy Rogers, Lois Wilson, Ethel Britton. Opened July 13, '59, at Tappan Zee Playhouse, Nyack, N.Y.; $4.40 top.

Although "Red Letter Day" is an American play by an American author, it was produced in London in 1952, but until now never in the U. S. The reason is obvious—it's barely adequate as a star vehicle for summer stock, but unsuitable for Broadway.

Andrew Rosenthal, who's had several unsuccessful Broadway productions, has here written glibly of a shallow woman's silly emotional reaction to her 50th birthday. She acquires basic wifely wisdom in time to rescue her crumbling marriage and reestablish maternal relationships with her three children for the third-act curtain.

Except for the childish mother, who's at least plausible, if not attractive or sympathetic, none of the characters has reality, and the situations, particularly the unraveling events of the third act, seem contrived. As always, the author has a knack of writing slick comedy lines, but they're mostly lost in this inept production.

Gloria Swanson, starring in the part of the self-centered wife, is unconvincing, lacking either the theatrical perception to see what might be a sympathy-winning humor in the character or the acting skill to get laughs with anything except outright mugging.

As the Washington bureaucrat-husband who's begun to stray, Buddy Rogers is personable, but doesn't add dimension to an ill-defined part. His frequent smiles to the audience are a trifle disconcerting. Lois Wilson gives a professional performance as his level-headed sister who learned too late the value of holding on to an errant husband.

Ethel Britton overacts the stock role of a predatory multiple-divorcee and there are passable bits by Robert P. Curtis as an earnest adolescent, Eleanor Ayers as a ready-for-romance daughter, Carlton Colyer and Betty Rollin as the bravely independent older son and daughter-in-law, Harry Klekas in the embarrassingly trite part of an amorous Latin American, and Rosemary Murray (doubling from boxoffice treasurer duties) in the inevitable bit of a slovenly, sullen maid.

Harold J. Kennedy, who operates the Grist Mill Playhouse, Andover, N.J., and packaged "Red Letter Day" for the strawhat circuit, has given the show what might be generously called routine staging, but within the limits of summer stock conditions, David Johnston's setting of an East Side Manhattan house looks reasonably authentic. All in all, "Red Letter Day" boils down to a bad play poorly done.

The Tappan Zee Playhouse, on a main street in Central Nyack (on the Hudson River, about 30 miles north of New York), is a fairly attractive house. Despite the grubby immediate neighborhood, the theatre has been improved for its second season, with an effective air-conditioning system and an inviting, intimate atmosphere. The house staff is unusually courteous and solicitous, though inexperienced, as at most strawhats.

"The Merry Wives of Windsor" is good fun, a happy addition to the American Shakespeare Festival Theatre list at the "third" Stratford and will certainly be a top preference this season.

In their only collaborative effort of the summer's three new entries, John Houseman and Jack Landau again demonstrate their skill in hoking up Shakespearean farce on Connecticut's ample stage. They've assembled a pleasurable lot of troupers, led by a standout Falstaff.

Physically and risibly Larry Gates' performance of the comic character gives an exciting example of what repertory is for.

The hilarity is generously shared. Nancy Wickwire and Nancy Marchand as the Mistresses Ford and Page, whose attractiveness brings the miseries to Falstaff; Hiram Sherman as the jealous Master Ford, Sada Thompson as the buxom conniver Mistress Quickly, Morris Carnovsky as a broadly-drafted Dr. Caius, Richard Waring as the proper parson Sir Hugh Evans, Jack Bittner's Host, Will Greer's Shallow and Frederick Warriner's Slender, and the bombastic Pistol of Richard Easton contribute substantially to the jollity of the situation piece.

This "Windsor" moves. The duel between Sir Hugh and Dr. Caius, the toting of Falstaff in the buck-basket, the flight of the big knight as the old woman, and the forest finale are lively credits to the stagemanship and the stage itself.

Interesting scenic panel drops by Will Steven Armstrong are a fresh factors which for the first time puts into the background the lattice blinds which have been dominant in ASFT's productions. The spreading of the oak tree for the forest scene is excellent. In the latter episode Tharon Musser's lighting is particularly effective.

Road Tuneful; 'Lady' $108,100, S.F., 'Story' $66,600 (7), L.A.; 'Man' 60G, Chi

Business on the road last week was solid for the musical trio. "Music Man," "My Fair Lady" and "West Side Story." The only other touring entry was "Two for the Seesaw, " which closed Saturday (18) in San Francisco. The three tuners, incidentally, were berthed separately in Chicago, Los Angeles and Frisco.

Added to the road list this week as a Civic Light Opera offering on the Coast is "Oklahoma," which opened last Monday night (20) at the Curran Theatre, San Francisco.

Estimates for Last Week

Parenthetic designations for out-of-town shows are the same as for Broadway, except that hyphenated T with show classification indicates tryout and RS indicates road show. Also, prices on touring shows include 10% Federal Tax and local tax, if any, but as on Broadway grosses are net; i.e., exclusive of taxes. Engagements are for single week unless otherwise noted.

ALBERGHETTI $43,100, 'ROSE MARIE,' OAKDALE

Wallingford, Conn., July 21.

Toppling all records in its six years of operation, the Oakdale Musical Theatre racked up a sensational $43,100 last week with Anna Maria Alberghetti in "Rose Marie." To meet the b.o. demand a extra matinee was played Friday (17). Top ranged from $3.60 weeknights to $4.20 Friday and Saturday nights.

Current at the tent is "Wish You Were Here," with Julius La Rosa.

Stratford, Conn., $39,300 With 'Romeo' and 'Wives'

Stratford, Conn., July 21.

The American Shakespeare Festival, scaled to a $5.75 top, grossed a sturdy $39,300 last week for eight performances split evenly between "Romeo and Juliet" and "Merry Wives of Windsor." The previous week's take for the same split was $39,200.

"All's Well That Ends Well" bows at the 1,453-seater July 29 matinee.

'Tunnel' Modest $13,500, Philly Park Playhouse

Philadelphia, July 21.

"Tunnel of Love" grossed $13,500 at the Playhouse in the Park last week, with Larry Parks and Betty Garrett costarred. Rainy weather was a factor in the disappointing business.

The Playhouse is bringing back "View from the Bridge" for the week of Aug. 3-8. Current is "Glass Menagerie," with Jo Van Fleet, Eli Wallach and Anne Jackson.

'Sport' $3,800, Corning

Corning, N.Y., July 21.

"Third Best Sport" grossed a moderate $3,800 last week at the Corning Summer Theatre.

Tone-Strasberg 'Caesar' $17,400, Westport, Conn.

Westport, Conn., July 21.

"Caesar and Cleopatra," costarring Franchot Tone and Susan Strasberg, grossed an okay $17,400 last week at the 755-seat Westport Country Playhouse. The previous week's take for "A Piece of Blue Sky," starring Shelley Winters, was $16,900. The top is $4.85 Saturday night and $4.40 weeknights. "Red Letter Day," starring Gloria Swanson, is current.

"Caesar," packaged for a four-week strawhat tour by Playhouse co-producers Henry T. Weinstein and Laurence Feldman, ended its trek with the local stand.

Record $36,816 on 'King'; 'Women' $10,000 in Indpls.

Indianapolis, July 21.

Starlight Musicals broke its boxoffice record last week with a fat $36,816 in six performances of "King and I," starring Annamary Dickey and Renato Cibelli. The outdoor theatre seating 2,950 is scaled to $3, upped to $3.50 Friday and Saturday.

Starlight opened the season briskly July 6-11 with $26,800 in six for the touring production of "Babes in Arms" starring Julie Wilson. "Silk Stockings" is current. First two weeks' combined gross is ahead of that for first month last year, when operation was plagued by rain.

Avondale Playhouse, dramatic stock tent, had a satisfactory $10,000 for "The Women," starring Mary Beth Hughes, Irene Harvey and K. T. Stevens in six performances July 14-20, all seats $2.75. Alan Mowbray is current in "Nude With Violin."

The Ziegfeld Follies

Music Circus. Some of the material falls flat, and much is old hat. But Wheeler is fresh, and he draws laughs with ad libs as well as in sketches directed by Hank Ladd and supervised by veteran comic Bobby Clark.

The "Ziegfeld Follies" title has traditional overtones, of course, but has otherwise become meaningless, and there's little resemblance between this summer evening antic and the lavish productions of the late Florenz Ziegfeld. A veteran of seven editions of the Follies and 51 years in show business Wheeler is at his best in sketches like the ancient satire on "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" and "That Merry Wife of Windsor," both by Clark, and on a speciality number in which he portrays a "Mother." Less effective is a sketch "Oh, Gentle Sleep," written by Ladd and performed by Ladd and Wheeler, who were a team from 1938 to 1943.

In the Ziegfeld manner, there are attractive showgirls standing around, notably tall Kay Reid, a long-haired brunette among close-cropped blondes. Terrell has rounded up several talented young performers for this revue, notably dancer Helen Wood, singer India Adams and comedienne Connie Sawyer.

Miss Wood's terping is outstanding and she gets applause "The Man and the Mannequin," conceived by Jim Russell and danced with him. The striking, slim redhear dances in many styles, all of them well.

Miss Adams has a vibrant, rich voice, and she actually sings in tune.

Miss Sawyer, a rubber-jointed blonde, is in and out of most of the sketches, drawing laughs. Her clowning as the tired mother of 27 being interviewed in a "Person to Person" type show saves an otherwise dull sketch. She also scores in a satire of a folk singer, complete with a zither which won't zith.

Others featured are Bob Brooks and Tom Dillon, pleasant-voiced singers; Kiko do Brazil, who does an effective dance beating a tambourine; Lee Davis, an adequate straight man, and Russell, a talented dancer.

Apparently, the magic of the "Ziegfeld" name is wearing off. Attendance was only fair for the first week. The revue closes at Lambertville next Sunday (26).

'VAGABOND' OK $34,400 FOR 2D WEEK, DALLAS

Dallas, July 21.

The State Fair Musicals presentation of "The Vagabond King" climbed to $34,400 last week in the second stanza of a fortnight's run at the 1,426-seat Musical Hall here. The musical, with Burgess Meredith, Richard Torigi, Lee Venora and Jean Sanders, grossed $30,600 the previous week.

Current is the one-man show, "An Evening With Maurice Chevalier."

'Darling' Skimpy $35,000 With Rainy Weather, K.C.

Kansas City, July 21.

Starlight Theatre had poor weather last week, to hold "Say Darling" to $35,000, the lowest of the season to date. Complete rainout Friday night (17) and threatening showers other nights crimped attendance. The cast included Eddie Bracken, Johnny Desmond and Jane Kean.

Current is "New Moon," which opened a 7-night run in the Swope Park theatre last night (Mon.) with Earl Wrightson, Jan McArt, Richard France, Chele Graham and Gloria LeRoy.

Hans Conried in 'Tall' Record $21,500, Chicago

Chicago, July 21.

Hans Conried in "Tall Story" broke the house record at Edgewater Beach Playhouse the week ending July 19, with a gross of $21,500.

The show was sellout at the 1,000-seater, at a $3.95 top, but the gross was slightly less than capacity owing to three benefits sold at cut-rate.

Keith's, Wash.

municipal undertaking to afford housing for local cultural pursuits. RKO's current lease may continue to December, 1961.

Meanwhile, the fire - damaged Sam S. Shubert Theatre has bounced back into the local news. Although it has been sold to be razed for a parking lot, an anonymous philanthropist has offered (through Rep. Harris B. McDowell; D.-Del.) to buy the house and turn it over to the city. Whether it is available for purchase remains to be seen.

National Mgt. Is Leary

According to Louis A. Lotito, New York booking representative and general manager of the National Theatre, Washington, there aren't enough touring shows available to support two major legit houses in the Capital. He points out that the National has been lighted an average of about 40 weeks a season in recent years, with about 75% of the bookings pre-Broadway tryouts.

Although the competing Shubert was available during that period, it had less than a dozen lighted weeks a season, as there were simply not enough road shows to support both houses. Lotito concedes that Keith's might play touring ballet, opera and concert groups, and possibly also offer local presentations along the line of the N. Y. City Center.

Such a setup could hardly support the proposed financial setup (including $1,500,000 mortgage payoff), however, so the deficit would presumably have to be assumed by the city or Federal government with tax-provided funds. The National pays real estate and admissions taxes, and would thereby help finance the arrangement, Lotito figures.

If Keith's, as a municipal operation, should go after touring legit bookings, it could presumably offer lower sharing terms and thereby grab off most of the limited number of available productions. It would be using public funds, including taxes from the National, to do so, Lotito notes.

B'way Fair; 'Drum' Record $63,752 'Redhead' $56,300, 'Majority' $50,700, 'Destry' $54,300, 'Pleasure' $20,800

Broadway, with 14 shows on the boards, was uneven last week. Business dropped for some shows and climbed for others. A few entries held steady.

The list of sellouts and virtual capacity entries dwindled to four, "Flower Drum Song," which set another house record for the St. James Theatre, plus "Gypsy," "Music Man" and "Raisin in Sun."

Keys: C (Comedy), D (Drama), CD (Comedy-Drama), R (Revue), MC (Musical-Comedy), MD (Musical-Drama), O (Opera), OP (Operetta).

Other parenthetic designations refer, respectively, to weeks played, number of performances through last Saturday, top prices (where two prices are given, the higher is for Friday-Saturday nights and the lower for weeknights), number of seats, capacity gross and stars. Price includes 10% Federal and 5% City tax, but grosses are net; i.e., exclusive of taxes.

Groucho Record $13,469 With 'Elizabeth' at Spa

Saratoga, N.Y., July 21.

Rolling along to his biggest season in 13 years at the 594-seat Spa Summer Theatre, on the State Reservation, John Huntington reported an all-time gross of $13,469 last week with Groucho Marx in "Time for Elizabeth," at $4 weekend top.

The Marx take surpassed the $12,300 the James Masons pulled last year in "Mid Summer," and the $12,500 figure Beatrice Lillie rang up in 1956. Week before last, Shirley Booth grossed $8,900 in "Nina." The opening production, "Diary of Anne Frank," starring Jacob Ben-Ami, hit $7,900.

Nat'l Cultural Center To Include 3 Buildings; Set Fund Drive for Oct.

Washington, July 21.

New York architect Edward Durell Stone disclosed yesterday (Mon.) tentative plans for the proposed $35,000,000 National Cultural Center here. It would include three large buildings joined by a common hall "of magnificence like Versailles's Hall of mirrors" overlooking the Potomac River with underground parking facilities for possibly 2,000 cars. Stone's initial ideas for the three buildings include an opera house of traditional horseshoe with 3,800-4,000 seats, and stage and backstage facilities comparable with other great opera houses of the world, so companies like the Metropolitan, LaScala and Vienna "will feel at home."

Also a theatre usable half-size and full-size to accommodate plays and operettas with mass appeal (about 2,000-2,200 seats), or plays where performers want more intimacy with audience (1,000-1,200 seats). A partition would cut seating in half, with side entrances available for smaller theatre egress.

Also, a symphony hall of "Ballroom" type with about 3,000 seats which could be covered or removed for grand balls of national character (like presidential inauguration ball).

Within the buildings would be smaller rooms to be headquarters for national culutral groups, aimed at making the Center genuinely nationwide in scope for the performing arts. Similar rooms would house rehearsals, radio-television facilities, smaller programs like chamber music and the like.

Stone, temporarily retained to devise architectural plans (with the specifications determining the exact amount of money which must be raised privately on a national basis to finance construction), says the structures should represent the "whole history of architecture" rather than "mannered types," because the Center will stand "for generations."

He describes the river site on rising ground as "magnificent," demanding a "huge hall" which could be used by the U. S. for showiest occasions, like receptions for visiting heads of government. Stone outlined his plan at a meeting of the Center's board. Trustee executive vice - chairman Corrin Strong, wealthy Washingtonian, said the fund-raising effort will get underway in October.

"The Performance of his Lifetime"*

*"John Beal, as the Stage Manager, is giving the performance of his lifetime. . . . This production of OUR TOWN is definitely not to be missed."

GEORGE FREEDLEY,
New York Morning Telegraph

"Thanks to Mr. Quintero and to John Beal, in a brilliant performance as the Stage Manager, the play comes alive quickly and fully, taking hold of the senses and imagination in a powerful way. . . . Mr. Beal is superb as the relaxed, unpretentious, warm-hearted commentator."

WHITNEY BOLTON,
New York Morning Telegraph

"The present revival of the play . . . is impeccable. John Beal is quietly but totally effective as the Stage Manager, and readily conjures up churches, houses, hills, and stars with the slightest gesture of his pipe. . . ."

DONALD MALCOLM,
The New Yorker (April 11, 1959)

"A Perfect Guide . . . The pivotal role of the Stage Manager is entrusted here to John Beal, and he plays the casual, friendly guide to perfection."

CHARLES McHARRY,
New York News

"Wilder's poetic ramblings, particularly in the long speeches of the Stage Manager—who as well as being narrator is a combination bit player, God, prompter and stage hand—seem to me some of the most effective sustained pieces I know in the recent American theatre. In the highly demanding role of the Stage Manager, John Beal contributes a compassionate performance . . . an admirable achievement."

THOMAS MEEHAN,
The Villager, New York

"John Beal, the Stage Manager and narrator of the drama, is exactly right—without the excessive folksiness many actors lavish on this key role. . . . I urge you to see this masterly revival."

EMORY LEWIS,
CUE Magazine

"The production is fortunate to have John Beal in the role . . . Beal manages to be droll and even manages to give a believable New England flavor to his characterization."

JACK GAVER,
New York Mirror

"Arena staging is perhaps the perfect style for OUR TOWN . . . Things are fine when John Beal, most moving of performers, relaxes as stage manager and narrator to tell the story . . . intriguing as he introduces the characters . . . and tugs at the makeshift backdrops 'for those that need scenery'."

VARIETY

"OUR TOWN is still the enchanting play Mr. Wilder wrote. . There are no false notes among the players . . . Mr. Beal . . . can bear down firmly on the third-act poem in praise of what is 'eternal in all of us'."

WALTER KERR,
New York Herald Tribune

"John Beal is currently living up to the tradition set by the great Craven."

ROBERT COLEMAN,
New York Mirror

"Jose Quintero has staged a memorable performance. . . . like something composed on the spot by reflective people interested in nothing but truth. As the garrulous stage manager, and good genius in general, John Beal is casual and familiar without pretending. He moves quietly through the play like an interested observer—amiable without hokum or sentimentality."

BROOKS ATKINSON,
New York Times

"In the part of the stage manager, who sets the stage and also performs the duties of host, John Beal is excellent. In this part it would be easy for an actor to be bucolic, thus patronizing both the play and the audience. But Mr. Beal's friendly manner is genuine. He addresses the audience—modestly. Toward the characters he maintains an attitude that is sympathetic without being officious. He observes his neighbors with affection, but he does not presume to participate in their affairs, and he stands entirely outside the performance during long interludes."

BROOKS ATKINSON,
New York Times (Sunday)

"OUR TOWN back again. It's better than ever. . . . More enchanting than before. . . . Singularly gifted players grace the setless stage. John Beal is unassumingly warm as the narrator."

FRANK ASTON,
New York World-Telegram & Sun

. . . A hit in OUR TOWN and on the screen in SOUND AND FURY."

WALTER WINCHELL,
New York Mirror

"Nice to see John Beal have such a renascence of his career—on the stage at the Circle in the Square, where his performance in the revival of OUR TOWN garnered critical raves—and at the Paramount in THE SOUND AND THE FURY."

RADIE HARRIS,
Hollywood Reporter

"John Beal is excellent as the drunken brother." (in 'The Sound and the Fury').

PAUL V. BECKLEY,
New York Herald Tribune

"A large share of the success of its mood must depend on the stage manager, its Yankee combination of Greek chorus and Chinese property man, and here the current production is particularly fortunate. For John Beal brings to it just the right note of humor, sympathy, quizzical shrewdness, modest wisdom and unostentatious folksiness in the most satisfying portrayal of the part I have seen since the late Frank Craven created it in 1938."

RICHARD WATTS JR.
New York Post

". . . It is impossible not to mention John Beal's intelligent, humorous and modestly philosophical portrayal of the stage manager and narrator."

RICHARD WATTS JR.
New York Post (Weekend Edition)

"Of course the acting is of great quality, and John Beal, as the stage manager, brings a most refreshing colour to the part."

SAUL COLIN,
Plays and Players

". . . It is his quietly spoken account of life and love and death in Grovers' Corners that holds the tale together. Beal provides a deeply affecting portrait of an off-hand but thorough guide to the little town. . . . In fact, Quintero and his colleagues might like to know that one man's eyes are moist now, remembering what they have done."

EDWARD SOTHERN HIPP,
Newark Sunday News

". . . Mr. Beal's excellent work as the rewarding narrator . . . and it is he who sets the mood and establishes the personality of the town and its people."

ROWLAND FIELD,
Newark Evening News

"Holding all these pieces together is the stage manager, played casually, warmly and most understandingly by John Beal. He sets the mood, introduces the players for the scene, even thanks them when their stint is done. He handles his liaison work between actors and audience with sensitivity and respect."

ROBERT E. RHODES,
Newsday, L. I., N. Y.

"John Beal bears the large burden of the evening, as the narrator, and he is handsomely relaxed and homespun—down to the extent of a down-East accent."

JOHN McCLAIN,
New York Journal-American

"It also places, at the outset, a more than ordinary demand on the actor who plays the Stage Manager. John Beal meets the challenge with a hospitable friendliness and a subtle but positive exercise of the actor's authority—that indefinable combination of voice, attitude, and movement which persuades a gathering of people to become an audience. . . . Mr. Beal's thoughtfully mellow Stage Manager moves with affectionate familiarity among the folk. . . . In a period when shock effect, stridency, and nerve-wracking tension have become the order of the drama, the decency, dignity and charity of OUR TOWN are twice welcome. . . ."

Kiepura-Eggerth

Both dark Polish tenor Jan Kiepura and blonde Hungarian soprano Marta Eggerth have professional credits as long as a Wagnerian overture. Of late years they have found a special market for their talents on the intercontinental, romantic, schamltzy, waltzy circuit. As a kind of Herr and Frau Operetta they dispense the musical standbys of Austria, Hungary, Germany, Poland. Russia and Italy, in those languages. They are sure to please the customers.

For the first Saturday (18) evening presentation in the brand-new and not-yet established circular theatre of Central Park the pair drew a fairly full audience, the attendance weaknesses being in the $3.95-top section. Add the incongruity that the hilly topography of Central Park allows some 3,000 or more citizens, both sitting and standing, to cuffo the performances with fairly clear sight lines and the benefit of blaring sound towers that carry for blocks (What was all that guff from Commissioner Moses about everybody should pay to be amused in Central Park?)

Arthur Lief in charge of the pit orchestra overtured first with "Fledermaus," second half with "Gypsy Baron." That sets the scene and tells the story. However in singing solo and singing together the Kiepuras provided plenty of vocal range and change of musical idiom and pace. The tenor has also developed his own brand of spoken badinage. Both performers display their experience and authority. Only they could say tellingly what it may be like to hold down a circular platform in these surroundings for an entire performance.

They open with Noel Coward's haunting "Bittersweet" duet and follow with "Chocolate Soldier." Then Kiepura exists. His own renditions favor Polish as hers favor Hungarian. Their long joint association with "The Merry Widow" is exampled, solo, by his "Maxim" and, for the finale, with their classic waltz number. Miss Eggerth introduced to N.Y. a new Charles Kalman song, "Que J'Aime Paris," with the composer taking a bow from the audience.

This attractive pair of global troupers work hard (each carried a tiny chest mike) and are handsomely presented, the lady exposing first a lovely white and then a lovely blue satin gown. They adapted to their surroundings with instinctive showmanship and were accepted at once and adopted by the bow-off around 11 p.m.

There's no question that the present amphitheatre is an attractive one with its border of geraniums under lights. At first exposure the mike-engineering hits loud and the ear must accustom itself to the flood of voice and music from behind while viewing the performers in front. Perhaps, too, there is a small ghost at this site—the ghost of the enterprising but ill-fated young member of the Grace shipping family who had the first design and season here and receipted (per report) some $900,000 in bills. As to the merits of that ghost story, here is not the place to weigh them. But the ghost could be felt loitering around. Land.

Eglevsky's Divertissements

With Andre Eglevsky, Melissa Hayden, Lupe Serrano, Allegra Kent, Edward Villella, Judith Green, Eugene Tanner, George Li, Susan Borree, Gretl Bauer, Janet Morse, Linda Yourth, Ivan Allen, Lawrence Rhodes, Simon Sadoff Orch. At the Theatre in the Park. Jean Dalrymple, director. Opened July 17, $3.95 top.

Delayed one night by rainfall, the Theatre in the Park, run in conjunction with New York's Hudson Celebration, unveiled under still uncertain skies an uncertain ballet performance. Arena-style theatre, located amidst choice greenery in Central Park, a superstructure covering the Wollman Memorial ice rink, is probably one of the more beautiful outdoors around. Edward D. Stone, the architect who designed the U.S. Pavilion at the Brussels Fair laid out this site and has done it magnificently and with good taste. Circular platform is surrounded on all sides by red-splashed chairs and a fringe of flowers. Behind all is a great backdrop—the N.Y. skyline.

Unfortunately, the show that went with the premiere failed to measure up. Fact that the dancers were unaccusfomed to working in a theatre-in-the-round, and had a comparatively small stagespace, was unrelated to the fact that the bulk of the dances put on by Andre Eglevsky looked raw and green. Works appeared under-rehearsed.

Eglevsky, who is one of the finer ballet products domestically, did recruit a representative company. They operated as individuals not as an ensemble. The weak and wobbly presentation seemed especially unfortunate at a moment when New York was overwhelmed by Sol Hurok's Soviet group at Madison Square Garden. It was no-contest on the cultural front.

The highspot of this open air recital is the Pas de Deux from "Sylvia" with Eglevsky and Melissa Hayden using George Balanchine choreography. While not completely satisfactory because of a certain cold professional mien, it still had enough grace and style to merit its tremendous response. Same twain also repped the mob's accolade with their work in the William Dollar contribution, "Circus Life," and there was another Balanchine effort "A la Francais" a colorful, but undistinguished bit.

Individually, there were outstanding performances. Edward Villella, who reached his peak in "Paquita" a pas de trois with Allegra Kent and Judith Green. Lupe Serrano and Eugene Tanner did excellently in Dollar's "The Duel" with assists from Ivan Allen and Lawrence Rhodes. Susan Borree, George Li, Linda Yourth, Gretl Bauer, and Janet Morse, all added up to good dancers on their own, but it is a pity they never got to dig each other artistically. The elements of a great evening were there.

The lighting (from four hugh towers) by Abe Feder and the sound mixing were excellent, although on the latter, the end product sounded harsh and metallic spoiling the fine efforts of the orchestra (partly under stage) of maestro Simon Sadoff. Jose.

Off-B'way Review

The Connection

Living Theatre Repertory presentation of two-act play by Jack Gelber. Direction, Judith Malina; design, Julian Beck; lighting, Nicola Cernowich; original tunes, Freddie Redd. Opened July 15, '59, at the Living Theatre, N.Y.; $3.90 top.

Cast: Leonard Hicks, Ira Lewis, Warren Finnerty, Jerome Raphel, John McCurry, Garry Goodrow, Louis McKenzie, Jamil Zakkai, Henry Proach, Barbara Winchester, Carl Lee.

If there's a limit to what can be called avant garde and theatre in the same breath The Living Theatre may have reached it with its current production of "The Connection." Assuming that Living Theatre's purpose, as stated by its proprietors, is to bring new theatrical form and dimension, this jazz play in two acts by Jack Gelber goes one better. It transcends form by being formless and in place of dimension it has good jazz unrelated to anything or anyone.

What Gelber has managed in this two-acter is to place a roomful of dope addicts together, waiting for a "fix" in a Village "pad." The place is as authentic as the mind's eye is likely to conceive for such a meeting ground. And the occupants are frighteningly dopey looking.

But there they sit, with nothing to do, and little to say until the "cowboy" brings them their heroin. And when that happens they have even less to say. Most of them just pass out.

The jazz comes along every time the undertow threatens to suck up everyone and wash away the audience. It's fine progressive jazz, played by Freddie Redd, piano; Jackie McLean, alto; Clyde Harris, drums, and Jimmy Corbett, bass. There ought to be somewhere south of 14th St. where they can make music and not be interrupted by idle buzzing.

Of the actors, Leonard Hicks, as a sporadic narrator, and John McCurry, as Sam, the friendly Negro giant of the collected "junkies," manage to make some of their lines sound almost intelligible.

At the beginning it seems that maybe Gelber is kidding, and that the sardonic humor will come later. But that turns out to be a delusion. The playbill solemnly reports that the director, Judith Malina, wishes to dedicate this production to "the memory of Thelma Gadsden, dead of an overdose of heroin at the Salvation Army in 1957, and to all the other junkies dead and alive in the Women's House of Detention."

Then what is Gelber trying to say? That narcotics are bad, that our society is infected by an even more powerful narcotic than heroin, that there is original sin, that things around us are grim? Possibly so.

"The Connection" is scheduled to be played in repertory with William Carlos Williams' "Many Loves," a piece of avant garde theatre that seems almost old fashioned beside this latest offering. Nedi.

L. B. Mayer, Presley & Kern

Such variegated biographies as film pioneer Louis B. Mayer, Elvis Presley and Jerome Kern are on Holt's lists for this fall and winter.

Bosley Crowther, who authored "The Lion's Share," saga of Metro, calls his book "Hollywood Rajah (The Life and Times of Louis B. Mayer)," while Louisville Courier-Journal reporter Alan Levy titles his saga "Operation Elvis." Accent is on the rock 'n' roller's conversion from civvies to GI. David Ewen's "Jerome Kern: A Biography" is another in his treatments of tunesmiths, as he did with George Gershwin and Richard Rodgers.

Saluting Lippman's 70th

N.Y. Timesman James Reston is co-editor with Marquis Childs on the Harcourt-Brace book titled "Walter Lippmann and His Times," dealing with the N.Y. Herald Tribune syndicated opinionator's writings for nearly a half century. Publication is timed to coincide with his 70th birthday on Sept. 23, George F. Kennan, Arthur Krock, Reinhold Niebuhr, Carl Binger, Harry S. Ashmore, Frank Moraes, Arthur M. Schlesinger Jr., Raymond Aron, Iverach McDonald, Allan Nevins and the authors are among the contributors to this book of opinion on Lippmann's influence on the American political and social scene.

HB will also bring out Negro dancer Katherine Dunham's "A Touch of Innocence," an account of her first 18 years. Harcourt, Brace is also publishing London playwright Peter Shaffer's "Five Finger Exercise," a West End hit which Frederick Brisson & the Playwrights Co. plan to produce on Broadway this winter, with John Gielgud staging.

Thomson's Kemsley Takeover?

Roy Thomson, 65, who owns a score of Canadian dailies besides the Edinburgh Scotsman and a group of other dailies in Scotland, is conducting negotiations with the Viscount Kemsley newspaper chain in London, with statement scheduled for next Thursday (23). Toronto-based Thomson is currently after the Kemsley newspaper chain, with the value of the Kemsley papers jumping 65% on the Thomson negotiations. Besides the four Sunday newspapers in London, plus 12 provincial dailies and a large group of weeklies, Thomson is bidding for the Kemsley group, including London Sunday Times—not associated with the London Times—but Viscount Kemsley, 75, is not prepared to part with the Sunday Times.

Speculation on Thomson's takeover bids for the Kemsley newspaper empire followed this week when shareholders were apprized of negotiations which would be of advantage to Kemsley shareholders.

Censors Hypo 'Anatomy' In Chi

Sales of "Anatomy of a Murder" in the Dell paperback edition have soared in Chicago since that city's police censor board made objections several weeks ago to the picture version. Up to that point, some 40,000 copies had been sold in the Windy City, but since then sales have passed the 100,000 mark. According to Charles Levy Jr., newspaper and periodicals distributor in Chi, the book is a hot seller. The censor brouhaha was "the greatest thing that could have happened to it," says Levy.

Circulator now rates "Anatomy" best soft-cover item in Chi since "Peyton Place," which hit about 125,000 all told. "Anatomy" started off okay in Chi, then sagged. And then came the censors.

Borneman's Novel

Script writer Ernest Borneman has authored a new novel, "Tomorrow Is Now," published in London by Neville Spearman ($2.15) which he describes as "a sort of Marxist analysis of what's wrong with the Welfare State."

The author, who has written three previous novels, was at one time head of UNESCO Films Division in Paris, was also head of the script department of Granada-TV Network and has done 73 tv shows and films in America, Canada and Britain.

Tougher Mass. 'Obscene' Law

While obscenity of films, pamphlets, ballads and so forth can be determined on casual observation, it takes longer to determine if books are obscene says the Massachusetts Senate. A new draft, increasing penalities for the sale and distribution of "obscene things and obscene books" was substituted by the Senate for a bill which proposed increased penalties in the obscene literature law.

Penalties would be increased from two years in jail to 2½ with provisions for five-year prison sentences. Fine would be boosted from $100-$1,000 to $100-$5,000. The distinction was made because of the longer time required to determine if books are obscene.

Mexico's Writer Quest

The Society of Mexican Writers has announced a contest aimed to turn up new writing talent of promise. Main prize will be a year's scholarship which successful contestant is to use "exclusively in the production of literary work."

Julio Jimenez Rueda, writer and professor at the National University, said that writing is entering a period of decadence not only in Mexico but throughout Latin America. He observes, "The novelists, or more rightly phrased, the pseudo-novelists who cause sensation today, are nothing more than a group imitating (badly) European writers. They can't distinguish between satire or comedy, foolish whims of imagination or impudence. And the same thing holds true in theatrical works which do not attempt to attract the public by quality of the work but only by morbid or animal passions."

Taylor on the '20s

"Joy Ride," by Dwight Taylor (Putnam; $3.95), is a moving, witty record of the Flaming Youth set of the 1920s. Author is the son of Charles and Laurette Taylor. His stepfather was dramatist J. Hartley Manners.

As a young man, Taylor contributed to the old Life magazine and to Vanity Fair. John Barrymore, to some extent a frustrated artist, urged the lad to attend art school. The writer knew most of the top public figures of the 1920s, and many of them are dealt with revealingly in his pages. Stage, screen and literary personalities of the period are involved, but most important is Taylor's youth's-eye view of a turblent era; some of the most telling and sensitive reporting to date on the Jazz Age.

John Thompson's Shift

John Thompson returned from the N.Y. bureau of Britain's Daily Express to take up the post of drama reviewer but after only a few months he has quit to join Independent Television News.

Thompson is succeeded by Bernard Levin, who will still retain his writing job with The Spectator. Levin has appeared frequently on tv as a provocative interviewer on general topics and sometime ago contributed a weekly tv critical column to the Daily Express under the pen-name of Felix Battle.

Nick Kenny's 'Poems to Inspire'

Over the years Edgar A. Guest, Arthur Guiterman, Berton Braley, Ogden Nash, Margaret Fishback not to mention Robert W. Service with his lyrical paeans to denizens of Nome and the Klondike have proved that poets needn't languish in garrets. Certainly one of the most commercial is radio-tv editor Nick Kenny, poet laureate at the Hearst syndicate and the N.Y. Daily Mirror, his home paper, not overlooking an enviable string of ASCAP credits.

His latest, "Poems to Inspire" (T. S. Denison; $3), tells it best in the title. "The old sailor"—his U.S. Navy background permeates his column almost daily—had done an admirable job. This is his seventh book of poems. Who says the iambic pentameter ain't commercial?

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Hollywood, July 21.

Though nepotism has been around ever since Noah wanted one of his sons to follow him in boatbuilding and stick to the sea, the word never really got a working over until Hollywood producers tried to take care of their relatives at the expense of other stockholders. It has recently become even more pronounced in the offices of members of Congress.

But in the professions it is not too common. Fathers have a hard time convincing their children to join them. This is notably true in the families of writers, and it is equally true that second and third generations of writers don't seem to hold up as well as second and third generations of doctors, lawyers and picture producers.

But I have followed the case-histories of a few from infancy and without much encouragement from their parents some of them have succeeded in the most circuitous ways.

A minor note in this symphony of success has just come to me from a suburb in New Jersey. I knew her as a little girl named Judy Mishkin. When two years old, not getting the attention of her mother when calling "Mama," she shouted, "Hey, Bee!" That brought Mama on the run. Any specialist in behavior-patterns could have foretold right then that she was destined for Madison Avenue.

If the Hollywood formula were operating in New York, Judy would certainly have been apprenticed to her father, Leo Mishkin, a critic for a New York morning newspaper (the Telegraph), and in the time probably would have been slipped either into his niche or one of the vast tv and radio networks.

Judy Calls A Cop

Instead, she married and moved to New Jersey. She soon found that life in a suburb required she learn how to drive a car. But to take a driving test she had to have somebody with a license accompany her. Most young men she knew, her husband among them, were commuters who worked in New York and were not available when the license division was open. Thus not knowing anybody with a license, she appealed to the police. They suggested she contact a radio or tv station. She did.

She found one willing to broadcast her appeal for help. In fact, he was willing to help her himself. And, incidentally, he wanted to know, what she was doing?

Nothing, she admitted, but before her marriage, she told him, she wrote advertising for a Madison Ave. mill. They wanted to see some of her stuff, and promptly hired her at a better salary than she earned on Madison Ave.

Another of these self-propelled Gee-Whiz kids and one who has gone higher in a shorter time is Sally Belfrage, author of "A Room In Moscow," and, coming up, "A Farm In Israel." Twenty-two years ago while her mother and father, both writers, were going around the world with an embryo, the Scully Circus was asked to find them a house, an obstetrician and a car on their arrival in Hollywood. This we did. So we have known Sally Belfrage from her first breath.

Previous to that I knew her father when he was pressagent for Sam Goldwyn in London on "Whoopee" and later when he became entertainment editor of Lord Beaverbrook's Sunday Express. His wife was Molly Castle who had been a sort of literate Lolly Parsons on the same London rag.

Both parents continued writing in Hollywood about the time Sally was born. Cedric had a bestseller, "Away From It All," and was lured to Universal as a scriptwriter. Molly kept writing for fun mags.

Sally was not a particularly pretty baby, but she grew up to be a stunning beauty. Her first book showed she could write with the Chekhovian detachment of a mature writer.

This Is What Became Of Sally

Several years ago, when her father was heaved out of America in one of the McCarthy purges and thus became, as he is today, editor-in-exile of the National Guardian, Sally, who was American-born and could have remained behind, chose to go back to England with him.

Later she joined the 160 young Americans who went to the Festival of Moscow the summer of 1957. When our State Dept. said that any American going on to Red China from Moscow would have his passport confiscated on his return, Sally Belfrage was one of those who ignored the limitations on the right to travel. In fact, 25% of the Americans on the junket went to Red China with her.

Of course, she had an advantage over most of them in that she enjoyed a dual citizenship and if the American State Dept. denied her the right to travel, the British proved to be not so fussy.

Actually when she returned from Peking to Moscow, instead of returning home to London, she got a job in the Soviet capital and stayed there five months. This wasn't easy because it involved not only a job but a place to live and a sponsoring organization. These parts of a jigsaw had to fit the demands of a Russian bureaucracy which was about as inefficient as anywhere in the world but which seemed to produce more fear among its people, a fear not shared by Sally, and, as far as she could see, not justified by those who shared it.

While she was hunting copy in these alien capitals her father was doing the same for his paper. Being old friends, they offered us their apartment in London while they were in absentia. We stayed there three weeks and whenever the telephone rang, which was often, it proved to be a call from some young man waiting to talk to Sally, wanting to know when she would be back, or where he could write to her. Indeed, she seemed as popular as Zuleika Dobson.

But that wouldn't mean that she knew how to take vast and complicated subjects such as Soviet Russia and Red China and write about them in simple and unprejudiced terms. Mischa and Boris and Sonya become real people in "A Room In Moscow" and Sally becomes more real than any young American, barring possibly Debbie Reynolds.

Red Skelton Co-Billed With Mao

Here is a sample of how she saw Canton:

"The mud streets were small and the shack homes leaned precariously on one another, with the last shack in some rows leaning on a beautiful new apartment house or cultural palace. The shops were like caves, gaping holes in the wall. In a row, one selling ivory toothbrushes, then a pharmacy with curious powders and pills, even antlers, and a huge birth control display outside, then pens and long bamboo brushes, then baskets, clocks, clothing, shoes, books, a photography studio with one picture of Mao Tse-tung and one of Red Skelton in the window. At the end a little cafe with the customers sitting on tiny stools drinking tea and eating a kind of mess that simmered in a huge pot in a corner. Everything was shiningly clean."

Her book has been translated into several languages and though Hollywood and Moscow are now getting together on an exchange of product, I have yet to read where any producer has bought "A Room In Moscow." The book has an air of remarkable maturity, but it was her youth and beauty which got her by barriers that Vice President Richard M. Nixon may find it impossible to hurdle when he visits Moscow this summer. Being a beautiful nobody she got deep inside the Russian way of life and made friends easily and everywhere.

Certainly no American since F. Scott Fitzgerald, who when he was 23 wrote "This Side of Paradise," has leaped to literary fame so young. Sally is now 22 years old, has a $4,500 advance from her publishers to write about Israel's collective farms and will probably come out with a book even more acceptable to the general public than "A Room In Moscow."

Her rapid acceptance as an author must surprise even her parents who hadn't the slightest idea that she was going that way. They knew boys were crazy about her and to this day can't figure out when she got time to write.

Foreign Stars

talent say that this is a fairly common trait, particularly among stars who—like Delon—already have quite a name in Europe, but are virtually unknown in the States. It's apparently difficult for them to grasp the disparity in their own minds.

On a recent U.S. tour, Jacques Tati garnered a lot of copy on behalf of himself and of "Mon Oncle," but the picture still failed to go over in a big way. Zenith International plans to bring over Jeanne Moreau to help publicize "Les Amants." A number of other international stars are due in, including several from Britain.

Laurence Harvey, John Brainc and Jacy Clayton all connected in various ways with "Room at the Top" were brought into N.Y. and toured by Continental Distributing, which has every intention of continuing this policy. Cy Harvey's Janus Films plans to import several Swedish femme players.

The indies feel that, with the motion picture world continuing to shrink, there is more interest than ever today—at least in the big cities—in European performers. This is borne out by the kind of attention some of these personalities have been getting in the press and the magazines. Topping 'em all, of course, is Brigitte Bardot who, however, has no intention of visiting the States. Reasoning here is that—publicitywise—she's better off as a mystical, far-off sex symbol than in person in New York. Stars like Maria Schell have benefitted from the big buildup given them by the fan mags, tv and the press.

One of the problems with foreign stars is language. It's fine if they speak English, or even only broken English. Both Sophia Loren and Gina Lollobrigida got by fine in that fashion. It's a lot more difficult, however, if the star doesn't have any English at all.

How Not to Win

feet away from the stars and director Sidney Lumet. Paley cheated five feet and got ordered back. Paley packed it in.

"Ludwig explained: "Only Sam Falk of the Times and Muky can take close stuff. We're planning an intelligent and literate publicity campaign. Sam lets the Times look through and use some of his stuff, then Sam and Muky handle private distribution. It's their huckle. We've got an ironclad arrangement with the photagrapher's union."

"Ludwig got ahold of Miss Woodward and told me I had "exactly a minute and a half" with her. He stood around and interpreted some of her answers for me. Afterwards, she wandered around and drank coffee. Brando wandered around, too.

"Ludwig said he'd given all the papers in the area the brush but that a week ago he'd had Falk get out some canned-type prints and that the papers used them, too.

"Later on, he said, the Times magazine section would give the shooting a big wallop. He conceded that what he was really after was Look, Life and Time.

"The veriest flunky has decency about the way he wears his public face. These people have none.

"They suppress legitimate news, corrupt your right of expression, trample on your freedom of assembly and then slap you on the back with their figuratively loathesome paws. I'd like to spread the word about them."

John Dos Passos

was so taken with the idea of success. We were good friends."

Dos Passos don't think much of modern fiction but he likes J. D. Salinger's "Catcher in the Rye," William Faulkner, the early Hemingway, and E. E. Cummings. Lately, he's been re-reading Dickens.

The bubble-gum patent came about because Gene Towne, a Hollywood writer, was sitting in Dos Passos' kitchen watching Lucy Dos Passos, an 8-year-old, try to blow bubbling.

"I said I always thought there should be a water pistol that shot bubbles and Towne began sketching it and later we got a patent. Nothing came of it," he said. "There are too many devices like that. About all I got out of that idiotic bubble-gun was lunch with a man known as the 'bubble king.' "

Dos Passos who likes to duck interviews kept reporter Casey waiting quite awhile before he saw him. Casey should have no complaint, however. When VARIETY tried to find Casey, it was quite a process, too. You call the Washington Post, state your business, and, if cleared, are given the phone number of a bar where Casey picks up his messages when the mood strikes him.

Steel Strike

pay resumed—and from all indications that would be some time.

Operators of outdoor theatres and amusement parks, who depend on the short Summer season were pessimistic about their chances of breakng even for the balance of the warm weather. Indicative was the Hershey, Pa., installation, which normally is flooded with visitors this time of the year.

'We'll get thte picnic crowds," said one of the Park officials, but thte spenders will be among the missing. In fact, we've already noticed a drop, and this is only the beginning."

Here in the Capital City, the strike brought an immediate reaction. Adjoining Steelton was practically a deserted city as the Bethlehem furnaces were banked, and when the layoffs at the Pennsylvania Railroad came the day following the strike, theatres, clubs and all facets of entertainment were prepared for a retrenchment program.

"This is the sixth strike since the end of the War (World War 2)," said a local theatre manager, "but it sure looks like the worst of the lot."

The pill is an especially bitter one to swallow here, as the summer had gotten off to a flying start. Theatre business was holding strong. "South Pacific," on a four-show a day schedule, was playing to full houses as it entered it's third week, and "Diary of Anne Frank" had a heavy advance sale as it opened hard on the heels of the strike call.

Radio and television stations also were on the firing line, with sponsors cutting back schedules as quickly as possible. Automobile agencies, who were reporting shortages a month ago, were among the first to send in their quit notices.

OFF-B'WAY'S BULGING BUDGET

Getting Khrushchev-Nixon Tape To U.S. a Real Cloak-&-Dagger Affair

By BILL GREELEY

"I felt like a spy," says Ampex Tape Corp.'s international prexy Phillip Gundy, the man who got the 10½-inch Nixon-Khrushchev video tape past 10,000 miles of red tape between Moscow and New York tv exposure.

Gundy, with the Ampex exhibit in the model tele studio at the American National Exhibition in Moscow, got the video tape reel through Russian customs wrapped in a dirty shirt and onto an SAS flight in time for the three-network exposure Saturday night in 23 hours.

Nearly collapsed in a N. Y. hotel room, but mighty happy over the weekend of spy-story international events that got the tape aired, Gundy outlined his hectic trip this way:

After he had guided Khrushchev's "little finger" to the button that re-created the off-hand rough-and-tumble between Nixon and the Russian premier on the Ampex monitor, Gundy knew he had something "dynamic and exciting." He grabbed the reel and got to his hotel where he literally conned a Russian agent for SAS airlines into working on an immediate reservation for N. Y. He told the agent, "I'll get the airline more publicity than it's ever had." The agent, apparently as alert to the Bob Six's Denver-to-N.Y. Jet Showplane; 'Gypsy' (Merm) a Must—Natch!

Washington, July 28.

Continental Airlines' prexy Robert Six (Mrs. Six is Ethel Merman) will inaugurate his new jet flights from Denver with a "Gypsy Caravan" run on Aug. 16, he told friends here during his recent appearance at the Civil Aeronautics Board.

For $139, plus air fare from Denver, passengers on Aug. 16 can get four plays, hotel accommodations at the Waldorf, lunch at Sardi's, dinner at Ruby Foo's, and a midnight snack and late show at the Latin Quarter.

The plays? "Redhead," "Two for a Seesaw," "Flower Drum Song," and—naturally, "Gypsy," starring Miss Merman.

Hilda Simms as Blanche In 'Streetcar' in Stock

Negro actress Hilda Simms will appear as a white girl when she plays Blanche DuBois in next week's production of "Streetcar Named Desire" at the Peninsula Playhouse, Fish Creek, Wis. Other members of the cast will be white.

An all-Negro production of the Tennessee Williams play, with Miss Simms starring as the former southern belle, was announced for off-Broadway production about a year ago, but was abandoned.

New Global Money At B.O. for Films

Hollywood, July 28.

A vast, new, mass audience market which has scarcely been tapped by American film industry has arisen throughout the world, according to Alfred E. Daff, former Universal exec v.p. just returned from six-month global tour. Countless millions of working-class people, primarily in Europe, have only recently come into their own financially and are now able to buy theatre tickets frequently where previously it was a sometime luxury, Daff said.

Most important job film industry faces is replacement, as customers, of one class of people by another, Daff emphasized. "Greatest danger would be for industry to put on white tie and tails. Pictures remain the mass entertainment."

Middle-class audience to which industry has grown accustomed through decades is now able to afford more expensive luxuries, like autos and tourism and saves its coin for these purposes, he declared.

While Europe is still main U.S. film market, "Siam is no longer a country you give away with Singapore when apportioning markets." Same growth potential of film audiences is taking place in Africa and elsewhere at rapid pace. But, stressed Daff, it's new

76 PRODUCTIONS COST $1,000,000

By JESSE GROSS

The investment in off-Broadway production rocketed to an estimated $1,000,000 during the 1958-59 season. Of that amount, approximately $700,000-$800,000 is figured to have gone down the drain on unsuccessful offerings.

The financial outlay, indicative of the steady growth of the basement and belfry circuit from its shoestring status of a decade ago, covers a total of 76 professional productions during the semester ending last May 30. Of the number, 65 are believed to have lost part or all of their investments, four are figured as hits, two are excluded from the rating and five, still running, are in the undetermined category.

The list of productions includes three regular Phoenix Theatre offerings and the independently-produced "Once Upon a Mattress," currently running at the 1,150-seater. The four Phoenix entries represent the heaviest investments, with "Mattress" the top-budgeted at $100,000. The other three are figured to represent a combined cost of at least $150,000-$200,000.

The Phoenix, incidentally, wasn't included in VARIETY'S off-Broadway summary for 1957-58, in which the investment for the season was estimated at $600.000 for 59 productions. The top stake in the shows covered in that season's rundown was $50,000 for "The Girl of the Golden West." Not included in either season's tabulation are

Tokyo 'Me-Too' On A Film Festival

Hollywood Telefilm Prod. Zooming; 108 Series Roll on $180,000,000 Tab

Hollywood, July 28.

Hollywood is riding the crest of its biggest telefilm boom ever. By the middle of August, it will put into work a total of 108 network and syndicated film series, representing a production outlay of about $180,000,000. It will place on film the staggering total of 2,270 hours of programming between August and next June.

This production season will mark the first time Hollywood will top the 100 series mark in its history. Previous high has never exceeded 90. Chief reason for the vidpix skyrocket is the increasing network emphasis on film—fully 70% of the three-network nighttime schedule will be on celluloid. This means there are 81 network series scheduled for fall, whereas previous high was 65.

Moreover, the 108-series figure is deceptively conservative, since fully 20 of these series are 60 minutes in length. By earlier standards, when there were no hour-long film shows on the air, the Hollywood boom would take on the more remarkable aspect of a total of 128 series in terms of film time consumed.

Still another factor in the Coast tv film boom, though not a major one, is the complete absence from

'Chatterley' Paves Way For Brigitte in the Nude

Brigitte Bardot can now be seen in the nude in New York State and her appearance in the altogether on the screen is no longer classed as either "immoral" or "obscene."

Kingsley-International, following the U. S. Supreme Court's "Lady Chatterley's Lover" ruling, re-submitted its Bardot starrer. "Love Is My Profession," to the N. Y. censor. This time the version included a brief bit of BB running into a room naked. The censor passed it.

The same bit was scissored out of the picture when it was first submitted. It's a flash shot that isn't directly related to the action of the picture.

Joe Louis Forms Triangle Records

Hollywood, July 28.

Joe Louis, already notched with the tag of being one of the greatest heavyweight champions of all time, is taking on a new fight—that of the recording business.

The former champion, still attempting to figure out a way to conquer his tax problems with the Government, has formed his own recording company, Triangle Records, and closed a deal with the Allied Record Distributing Co. for pressing and distribution.

Initial platter going into release on the ex-champ's label is "Never Look Back" b/w "Do Unto Me" which features a new singer called Norman Thrasher. Latter, from Louis' adopted hometown of Detroit, was a member of the Midnighters, a rock 'n' roll group.

Partnered with Louis in the diskery is Bill Graham, ex-N.Y. promoter, and songwriter Cecil Count Carter. Gerald Wilson, one-time trumpeter with Cab Calloway and the old Jimmy Lunceford orch, handled the orchestrations and conducted the session which was under Eddie Beal's supervision.

Mississippi's Eastland Issues Proclamation Of War Versus 'Chatterley'

Washington, July 28.

Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss.) has called for a wave of public protests against Supreme Court decision in the "Lady Chatterely's Lover" film censorship case.

Not only is the New York censorship law crippled by the decision, declared Eastland in a Senate speech, but "it would seem the Hollywood code of decency also has been rendered obsolete and ineffective."

If the court holds that a state cannot bar a film because it advocates adultery, the lawmaker said, "presumably the decision would be the same with respect to the right to urge sodomy, or bigamy, or miscegenation, or even rape."

Eastland, Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, has co-

USSR Jams Radio, Distorts Print But Yanks Could Get Through Via Ballet?

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Thanks to the recent visits of the Moiseyev, Beryozko, Bolshoi, and Festival dance companies, the Russians have won a major propaganda victory in the United States, even though in the instance of the Bolshoi they "skimped" on their productions. In contrast the Royal Danish Ballet which played the Metropolitan Opera House some years ago built new scenery scaled for the N. Y. dimensions which were authentic copies of the home-theatre settings. Denmark is a poor kingdom of 4,000,000 population. "Mighty Russia did not take us that seriously."

The quotation is from a retrospective commentary on the Russian ballet invasion written by an American, Richard Pleasant, who was founder-director of Ballet Theatre here. He is advancing the arresting thesis that the United States ought to now get busy and organize an American ballet invasion of the Soviet Union in turn on the grounds that if the Russians jam radio and distort print they would not be able to edit American ballet which has plenty of talent and skill but lacks financing.

VARIETY recently (May 20) expressed the view that had the Bolshoi dancers attended, as they were supposed to, but did not, the premiere of Lincoln Kerstein's N. Y. City Ballet's "Episodes to Webern" this might well have given them considerable shaking up because of George Ballan-

Bishop of Fort Wayne Calls 'Variety' Story 'Shoddy Journalism'

Fort Wayne, Ind.

Editor, VARIETY:

You know, of course, that your little squib about "Pious Fort Wayne" in a recent issue of VARIETY is a pretty shoddy piece of cheap journalism. The parenthetic remark that Fort Wayne is "heavily Catholic" was apparently inserted for some purpose or other, perhaps to heighten the element of surprise that in such a clean-minded community there could be this unexpected rash of indecent entertainment.

The truth is that the population of Fort Wayne is about 25% Catholic, with perhaps an equal number of Lutherans and several other Protestant groups. The fact that a few establishments have resorted to a very old and very dirty trick to stimulate lagging business hardly justifies the caption of your article. "Pious Fort Wayne Discovers Sex." If you intend your readers to find this story funny, you have a low estimate of their taste in humor.

Sincerely yours in Christ,
Most Rev. Leo A. Pursley, D.D.

Heading up committee will be Jack L. Warner, Samuel Goldwyn, Buddy Adler, Steve Broidy, Jack Karp and Samuel Briskin.

Can Sue U. S. On Violations Of Copyright

Washington, July 28.

Without a dissenting vote, the House passed and sent to the Senate a bill making it possible to sue the U.S. Government for violations of copyright in the U.S. Court of Claims.

Now, the Government can't be sued without its consent, but Government employes connected with any copyright infringement are subject to suit as individuals. The House agreed that the Government itself should have liability if federal employes infringe on copyright in line of duty.

Mostly book and magazine copyrights are involved.

Strip Show Doesn't Mean You Can Strip; CBS-TV Axes 'Go' Seg

Hollywood, July 28.

CBS-TV censors have scratched an "On the Go" segment picturing the activities at a school for strippers. The half-hour CBS-TV stripped daytimer was taped recently by the show's crew at the Largo, local strip joint which also operates a school for the burley queens. Candy Barr, who headlines the room, is also one of the instructors.

Network refused to play the tape on grounds it tends to glorify the take-it-off profession. "On the Go" unit, which considers the tape morally harmless, will screen it privately for the press next week coincidental with a press showing of its new $300,000 mobile tape truck.

Ban Top U.S. Disks On Zealand Radio

Sydney, July 21.

Censors of the government-controlled New Zealand Broadcasting Service have thumbed-down top disks, much to the ire of N. Z. listeners.

Disks redlighted include Johnny Horton's "Battle of New Orleans." The reason? Because of its alleged "anti-British sentiments."

From "South Pacific" the bluenoses have tabooed "Bloody Mary" and "There's Nothing Like a Dame." The burnup, however, is that "Bloody Mary" may be aired provided the entire score of "S.P." is played.

"Kiss Me Kate" is on the nix list, with such hits as "Always True to You in My Fashion," "Too Darn Hot" and "I Hate Men" remaining on ice.

Harry Belafonte platters, "Brown Skin Girl" and "Man Smart," are locked away for keeps under the edict.

Tune from "Annie Get Your Gun" — "Doin' What Comes Natur'lly," has gotten the axe and stays in the wax for keeps.

As previously reported, it was this same censorship group who nixed "Bugs Bunny" disks because it was considered the "English was not of a high enough standard" for New Zealand moppets. The very same moppets, however, are yelling for a revision of the ban.

American comedian Stan Freberg's disks, including "John and Marsha," have been sent to the storehouse; likewise Laurie London's "He's Got the Whole World in His Hands."

Biggest laugh to radio men in Australia is the fact that the New Zealand officials will not permit "Hollywood Red Riding Hood" to be played before 10 p.m.

Theatrical Journalists Now Eligible as Patients In Will Rogers Hospital

The Will Rogers Memorial Hospital will make its facilities available free to newspaper and magazine writers covering show business, according to a Council of Motion Picture Organization ad in Editor & Publisher last Saturday (25).

Service will extend to the scribes and their immediate families. Ad was signed by Abe Montague, president of the hospital, and Robert J. O'Donnell, chairman of the board. The hospital treats all diseases of the chest, including lung cancer and heart disease.

Move to admit the press was voted at a board meeting June 27.

Jerry Lewis to Guest With Conn. Symph Orch

Westport, July 28.

Jerry Lewis will make his bow with a class symphony Aug. 21 as guest at a dividend concert of the summer Connecticut "Pops" series at Fairfield Univ. The comedian and management are huddling over the program, for which a name conductor will lead the first half.

The extra concert is being underwritten by the King Cole Supermarket, in nearby Bridgeport.

English Subtitled 'Lovers' For Tourists in Paris

Paris, July 28.

"Les Amants" (The Lovers), French-made picture, is being exhibited on the Champs-Elysees with English subtitles as a lure to British and U.S. film fans who are not likely to see it in their countries in unexpurgated form.

Usually the O.V. (Original Version) tag applies to Yank films (English dialog and French subtitles), but titling a local lingo film into English is a new switch.

War on Sex, Horror, Dawn Patrols

Lima, O., July 28.

Parent-Teacher groups, church leaders, and other civic groups, representing (on paper) more than 2,500 members, have banded together to support the newly-formed "Clean Up Movies In Lima Committee," which is launching a campaign to eliminate (a) sex and horror films in local theatres, and (b) "dusk-to-dawn" five-feature offerings at nearby drive-in theatres.

Group is studying city and state laws on "obscenity" as well as Legion of Decency and other systems, according to Robert Walsh, of the Christian Family Movement, spokesman for the organization.

Groups represented include PTA's, Catholic, Lutheran, Jewish, and Christian associations.

58-62c Tobacco at Georgia Auctions Called Omen of Entertainment Boom

Valdosta, Ga., July 28.

Chant of tobacco auctioneer (they really make those gibbering noises as they sell the leaf) resounded in 28 Georgia-Florida markets as the flue-cured tobacco sales season got under way Thursday (28).

Right off the bat smiles started decorating faces of growers with crop bringing as high as 62c per pound, early averages leveling off to about 58c per pound. These were considered good prices, reflecting an increase in government support prices. Before sun had set on first day sales tobacco firms had handed over $5,000,000 to Georgia-Florida growers.

Last year tobacco crop brought $54,464,000 into pockets of Georgia-Florida growers. (Of the 28 tobacco belt markets, 23 are in Georgia, five in Florida, the latter all near the Georgia line.) Revenue from tobacco constituted 14.9% of Georgia's entire crop valued in 1958.

United States Dept. of Agriculture Marketing Service with HQ here, has indicated the belt's yield is up 17%, while the national production will be about the same as 1958. Department said earlier a .9 of a cent increase in the average government price support, making it 50.5c a pound for the belt's untied tobacco. That's good and

Mayor Honors R&H In N.Y.'s 1st Music Award

At a luncheon this Friday (31) at Sardi's, Mayor Robert F. Wagner and Richard C. Patterson Jr., commissioner of the Dept. of Commerce & Public Events, will announce the first Mayor's Scholarship award in honor of Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein 2d. It calls for a one-year free tuition at the Mannes School of Music which ranks with the Juilliard and Manhattan music schools.

The Mayor's Scholarship is given annually in the name of a Gotham citizen and the R&H award thus is a double first—both as the inaugural award and a first in the arts.

Top editors have been invited to this lunchfest.

Greenwich Village which has been successful thus far in holding the political "planners" from making it over into something different is again implementing the "retain the arts for the parks" movement. For the four Mondays of August there'll be something unique—outdoor chamber music. Moreover, the works will often be obscure scores. An enthusiast comments, "if it was winter, Carnegie and not free, the top critics would be present."

LEE POSNER—A CRITIC FOR 15%

Private Enterprise & USSR Films

[Will Sig Shore Beat Majors to Market?]

Prediction that his company will release a big Soviet film long before the other Russian pictures hit the market came last week from Sig Shore, president of Vitalite and Famous Producers Releasing Corp., importers and distributors respectively. The Moscow film in question is "Ilya Muromets," shot in color and widescreen with a large cast and unusual special effects.

Shore and Joseph Harris, prez and chairman of the board of Vitalite, leave for Paris in a few days on their way to Moscow. Harris, who's the financier and has his finger in many pies, also heads up Art Theatre of the Air, Inc., in which he's partnered with Richard Davis of United Motion Picture Organization. Harris is chairman of the board and Davis is president.

"Art Theatre of the Air" has been set up to sell films to tv. It has taken over Davis' tv library, including "Rififi" and others. Company also owns close to four hours of film on Soviet dance groups, including the Bolshoi Ballet, most of the footage being in color. Harris' plan is to have a renowned choreographer or well-known star interpret the dancing on the soundtrack. Some additional footage also may be shot.

Harris said last week that, while in Russia, he may speak to acquire additional ballet material. Some of the ballet film which Art Theatre of the Air has duplicates material which Matty Fox shot in Los Angeles last month when the Bolshoi troupe visited there.

On the theatrical side, Vitalite, in addition to "Muromets," has acquired "Tamango," costarring Dorothy Dandridge and Curt Jurgens, and "The Executioners," German documentary on the Nuremberg trials.

According to Shore, plan is to have "Muromets" out long before any of the seven Soviet films acquired by the major companies for release in the U.S. hit the theatres. He said the Russians negotiated on a barter basis and Vitalite may sell them a film in return.

Holland, With No Industry of Own, Will Help Others Produce There

Hollywood, July 28.

Dutch government has established a special department to coordinate film production matters and assist foreign producers with their problems while locationing in that country, according to Richard Thorpe, just returned to Hollywood from making "The House of Seven Hawks" there. Film stars Robert Taylor for Metro release, and shooting was greatly facilitated by Dutch assistance, producer-director says.

While not a production country, there not being much market for Dutch-language films, Netherlands government, nevertheless, will subsidize three pix this year in the hope of putting nation on the map motion-picturewise, Thorpe reports.

Judge Stops Fischer From Circulating Chaplin Pix; Roy-Lopert Protected

Federal Judge Leo F. Rayfiel in Brooklyn Federal Court last week granted a permanent injunction to prevent unauthorized showings of Charles Chaplin's "Modern Times" and 14 other Chaplin features.

Injunction represented a victory for the Roy Export Corp., which controls the copyrights on the Chaplin pictures. Lopert Films had joined Roy Export in bringing suit to stop Robert B. Fischer of Washington, doing business under several corporate names, from further releasing Chaplin oldies.

Lopert Films is the authorized distributor in the U.S. of "Modern Times." It is a subsidiary of United Artists.

One film not covered by the injunction was "The Gold Rush," over which legal proceedings are still pending. Roy Export has authorized Lopert to release the 1942 version of the film, which has a sound track and narration by Chaplin. International Art Production Management Co., one of the Fischer concerns, has been releas-

Universal added to its holdings in Decca Records, acquiring 28,900 shares to bring its total to 289,500, which constitutes more than 10% of the outstanding shares.

Decca, meanwhile, controls Universal, owning more than 80% of the outstanding shares.

In Moscow-Critics Pay

Regarding the Aug. 3-17 Moscow Film Festival (first), scheduled for a little theatre within the Kremlin, participation of the International Films Critics Assn. is now in doubt.

Body would have sent a delegate and handed out a tab. Word from Moscow when it came was "Nyet."

Allen-Broccoli Talk Eros Buy

Warwick Productions, the Irving Allen-Cubby Broccoli firm based in London, is reportedly negotiating to buy out Eros Films, the British production-distribution firm operated by the Hyams brothers, Phil and Sid. In addition to distributing its own pix in Great Britain, Eros also handles the Republic backlog, the reissues of a number of American major companies, and product from U. S. indies.

Warwick, whose production output is financed and released by Columbia, is committed to provide Col with two or three more films under its present deal. There is a possibility that when the present agreement expires Warwick and Col may terminate their affiliation.

It's thought that the acquisition of Eros would give Warwick an opportunity to acquire bank financing for future productions. An added source of income also would be the revenue coming in from the distribution of films other than those on Warwick's own production slate.

'HERCULES' STRENGTH EXCEEDS CRITICS

Minneapolis, July 28.

Questionable distinction of garnering the most caustic and severest critical slams—the worst panning — of any film within memory here goes to "Hercules," playing its local firstrun in seven subsequent-run neighborhood houses day and date, instead of downtown where nearly all attractions have their local preems.

Aided by extra large institutional newspaper ads and a television campaign, however, the picture, despite critics' derision, is doing boff business.

HE COLLECTS AS LINGO PUB REP

When the major film companies have a film which they think might be of special interest to the foreign language groups in New York, they call in Lee Posner. The head of All-American Press not only will tailor their advertising and promotion to hit that (narrow) mark, but he'll also personally review the film and he might mention it in the motion picture column which he writes.

Posner's operation is unique, if for no other reason than that he manages—at least in his own mind—to divorce his function as a critic from that of the publicist and the space salesman.

Posner deals with some 17 foreign language papers in New York City. He writes reviews for Il Progresso, which serves some 2,500,000 Italians and Italy-descended families, and he does a Sunday feature column for the important El Diario, which serves the Spanish-language population, vastly swelled by the influx of Puerto Ricans.

Most of the foreign films are screened by representatives of the foreign language press and by Posner. These reps, severely conscious that they serve a Roman Catholic readership, make sure that there's nothing offensive to Catholics in any film which the papers may be called upon to promote or advertise. Says Posner: "They have nothing to do with the (Catholic) Legion of Decency. They're very broadminded."

Once the pictures are cleared, Posner then approaches the distributor with a request for an allocation. Money is spread out among the language group publications concerned, Posner helps whip the publicity into shape and to place the ad. For this he collects a regular 15% separate from ad agency 15%, commission as a publisher's representative, "I create publicity," Posner said. "I take all the stuff they give me and revise it for the media which I serve." He added that this didn't prevent him from occasionally noting that a picture wasn't very good.

Posner also has dealings with France Amerique, the French paper in N. Y. "Occasionally we recommend it for pictures with Catholic appeal," he said.

Foreign-Domestic Liaison for UA To Nathanson

Moving in a new direction, with the aim to create a closer tie between foreign and domestic merchandising activities, United Artists has upped Morton Nathanson to become its director of international advertising and publicity. Nathanson, with UA for seven years, had been publicity manager.

He'll continue to headquarter in New York, but will do considerable travelling. In his new position he will continue to supervise domestic publicity while devoting himself to the task of creating greater cohesion between the foreign and domestic sides on the ad-pub level.

Nathanson will function on the domestic side under Roger Lewis, newly-elected ad-pub and exploitation v.p. for the company, and on the foreign side under Arnold M. Picker, v.p. in charge of foreign distribution.

In creating a post that straddles the foreign and domestic divisions, UA is seen moving closer than any other of the distributors to the concept of the truly international market, a concept that has received a good deal of lip service but has never been actually put into practice. Theory is that, with American merchandising methods most effective, and recep-

Attorneys Front for Syndicate Leasebacking RKO Theatres; Unique Limited Partnership

A group of attorneys, fronting for a syndicate, have set up a limited partnership to take over five prime RKO houses in the New York area. Deal carries a 20-year leaseback arrangement under which the RKO chain (now part of List Industries) will operate its showcases and take a capital gain.

Company which has been formed to take over the RKO houses is Theatre Realty Co. Partnership, in which the actual principals weren't identified, went into effect July 17 and will remain operative through June 30, 1983.

Theatres involved are the RKO 86th St., RKO Albee Theatre in the Bronx, RKO Fordham in the Bronx, RKO Flushing and RKO Madison in Queens. Final arrangements are to be set tomorrow (Thurs.). Meanwhile, neither RKO Theatres nor reps for the syndicate were willing to provide any additional details.

Filing attorneys are Milton Kestenberg, Meyer Shatz, Joseph H. Schwebel and Otto Kluger. Kestenberg's office registered considerable annoyance at the notion that the story might be published "before we have given it out." Shatz referred all queries to Kestenberg, who was away and couldn't be contacted.

Chi Film Houses: 161

(337 In 1948)

Chicago, July 28.

Chicago's count of picture houses continues to drop, the latest figure being 161 (including the lone drive-in within city limits). That's four less than a year ago at this time, and 12 fewer than in January, 1958.

Extent to which economics have altered the biz here is shown in the 1948 tally, when Chi boasted 337 filmeries.

Exhibs, Not Folks, Rap Long Films

Minneapolis, July 28.

Charles Winchell, president-general manager of the Minnesota Amusement Co. theatre chain (United Paramount circuit in this territory) doesn't agree with those exhibitors, including many drive-in theatre operators, who have been yelping because all important pictures nowadays have two or more hours running time and, in their opinion, "are too long" for patrons and the boxoffice.

Winchell says he himself doesn't object to the much greater average length of pictures pretty much all down the line because in nearly all instances these "long" pictures hold the interest continuously during their running time and supply "that much more entertainment."

He says he hasn't heard of any customer complaints about picture's lengths.

"In fact," declares Winchell, "at the admission prices we're now compelled to charge for these superior pictures the public has the right to expect—and probably does—and wants, I believe . . . a virtually full afternoon or evening of entertainment, the same as the legitimate live theatre provides.

"The kind of long pictures the public is getting today doesn't exhaust patrons or make them restless. Instead, these pictures send customers out of the theatre feeling more as if they've had their money's worth, even though they've paid $1.25 or $1.50 instead of the standard $1 admission.

EXHIBS NOW CONTROL 'HARRISON'S REPORTS'

Harrison's Reports, weekly newsletter, almost invariably four pages in size, founded 40 years ago by P. S. Harrison, has passed into new control, dominantly exhibitor leaders prominent in the Allied States movement. These comprise Horace Adams, Harry Hendel, Benjamin Berger, Jack Kirsch, Ben Marcus, Trueman T. Rembusch, Ruben Shor, Jack Whittle, Wilbur Snaper and Abram F. Myers. With Pete Harrison's retirement to his California home, where he has been long domiciled although the publication office continues in Manhattan, managing director Al Picoult has been succeeded by David Martin as the editor.

Harrison's Reports, at $15 domestic subscription—sans any advertising—accented "a reviewing service free from the influence of film advertising."

Pete Harrison's great and good friend Spyros P. Skouras—both are proud of their Greek heritage—was regarded as a favorable influence for the sheet in its economic pursuits.

As final tribute to founder-publisher Harrison's career, as reflected in his newsletter, there is mention that the entry of Will

Noonan and Marshall Get 20th-Fox Upbuilder As Yok-'Em-Up Potential

Hollywood, July 28.

Twentieth-Fox has inked Tommy Noonan and Pete Marshall for buildup as a comedy team. Deal involves three pix to be made under pair's NooMar Productions, in which they are partnered with George O'Hanlon, and an option for 12 additional pix over a six-year span.

Initial film will be "The Rookie," to roll Aug. 3, followed by "Coffee House" and "Two Nuts in Search of a Bolt," all scripted by Noonan and O'Hanlon. Noonan also will produce and O'Hanlon direct trio.

Twentieth has allocated $240,000 to exploit team, promotion to start midway through production of "Rookie." Studio apparently figures time is ripe for development of a new comedy twosome, since there has been no successful screen team since splitup of Martin and Lewis several years ago. Noonan and Marshall have teamed for past two years, holding a six-month playing time record at Tropicana in Las Vegas.

HUB SHOWMEN WAIT THAT AUTO BREAK

Boston, July 28.

Proposed garage under historic Boston Common, a bright hope for the downtown deluxe film houses, hit a snag this week, but Mayor John B. Hynes re-emphasized the need for such parking and said he hopes the Massachusetts Parking Authority will be able to proceed with construction in the near future.

Park and Recreation Commission refused to give its sanction to any garage plan where entrances or exits would front crowded Tremont Street, where three film houses (Astor, Memorial, Orpheum, Beacon Hill) are located. The commission indicates that once this and other technical changes are made in the plans it will give "notice of intent to assent" to the conveyance of 13 acres of Common land to the Authority. It said too that it will vote for final conveyance of the land when revenue needed to build the garage is in hand, and when the commission has a feasibility report.

Divide on Question: Bottom Fallen Out Of Art Theatres In U.S. Market?

Has the bottom fallen out of the art theatre market in the U. S.?

Many who are active in that specialized branch of the business say that that's what's been happening all over the country. A number of arties have shuttered and others are having a tough time with pictures that, at one time, used to do business.

Pessimistic attitude isn't unanimous, however. There are those who, while they concede that the import mart isn't flourishing, maintain that it's all relative. A $35,000 or $50,000 gross on a picture is still nothing to sneeze at, they argue, and terms like "crisis" and "failure" are conditioned to a large part on what a distributor paid for a film in the first place.

"If you've bought a film for a $15,000 or $20,000 guarantee, or less, and it grosses $50,000 in rentals, what's wrong with that?" one of the smaller independents asked last week. "It's still good money in a limited market. Of course, for the big fellow, who has paid $100,000 and has a big organization to maintain, that kind of gross isn't enough and he almost can't afford to handle such pictures."

What's apparently happened is that the important foreign films, the ones with a strong grossing potential, are being dubbed and are channeled into the commercial market where their income is, of course, apt to be quite high in comparison with subtitled releases. In addition, the shortage of Hollywood features has contributed to a widening circulation of dubbed entries.

Fewer Top Films

Meanwhile, the arties are suffering. They're getting fewer top films from Europe, and the public is passing up the fair-to-middlin' pix. "There just aren't enough top films for the art theatres," complained Cy Harvey of Janus Films, a distributor and an exhibitor (in Boston). "The small films die at the boxoffice. The few big ones we get are as big as ever."

But a distributor like Sandy Weiner of Films Representatives disagrees. He cites the case of "Razzia," which produced a $150,000 gross (film rental) in a subtitled version only. Weiner's biggie is "He Who Must Die" which he releases for Frank Kassler Picture, which none of the distribs wanted and which kicked around for several years before Kassler picked it up for a song, so far has netted $230,000, Weiner said. It took out $55,000 from the Beekman in N. Y. alone. "What's wrong with that kind of gross?" Weiner asked.

What worries the indies is that, if the impression gets around that the arties are having it rough, the regular exhibitors may start worrying and tightening up on bookings.

Titles Vs. Dubs

This doesn't change the fact, however, that the art mart isn't thriving and the split in the art field—subtitle vs. dub, i.e. art release vs. commercial release—is becoming more pronounced. The

Pampanini Vs. Torres Legal Hassle Settled

Mexico City, July 21.

The lengthy legal tassie involving Italian actress Silvana Pampanini and producer Miguel Contreras Torres has been amicably settled out of court. Pampanini has agreed to do a picture for producer Torres. She will do one film next year and Torres also will get an option on her services for another.

With legal troubles over, Pampanini is free to leave the country whenever she wishes. A court order has restricted her movements in recent months. Actress will get 150,000 pesos ($12,000) for the first Torres film.

Torres began his legal action last November, seeking 1,000,000 pesos ($80,000) redress for contract incompletion and damages. His original bill of particulars stated that Pampanini had received an advance on a two-film contract, but failed to show up for shooting. Actress' denial charged that the accusations were false and that she was ready and willing to film two pix for Torres.

National Boxoffice Survey

Heat Slows Trade; 'Story' Back in 1st, 'Murder' 2d, 'Hole' 3d, 'Circus' 4th, 'North' 5th

Resumption of torrid weather in many key cities during the past week, reminiscent of familiar summer dog days, will hurt first-run trade a bit this session. However, the continued flow of strong films into the big keys will keep exhibitors happy.

"Nun's Story" (WB) is rebounding in current stanza to regain first place after dropping to second a week ago. It is running well ahead of $300,000 total gross in the cities covered by VARIETY. "Anatomy of a Murder" (Col) is pushing up to second spot from third place of last round, and looks to do even better as it opens in additional key cities.

"Hole in Head" (UA), which was champ last week, is dipping to third position. "Big Circus" (AA), seventh a week ago, is climbing to fourth spot, via some added, big play-dates. Pressing "Circus" is "North by Northwest" (M-G), which is a strong fifth-place winner despite being its first week out in circulation to any extent.

"Five Pennies" (Par), eighth last round, is winding up sixth. "South Seas Adventure" (Cinerama) is landing in seventh spot as compared with ninth a week ago. "Last Train From Gun Hill" (Par), which was fifth last stanza, is taking eighth money.

"Horse Soldiers" (UA), sixth a week ago, is winding up ninth. "Don't Give Up Ship" (Par) is capturing 10th place. "Darby O'Gill" (BV) is landing 11th spot (same as a week ago. "Room at Top" (Cont) rounds out the Top 12 list.

"Diary of Anne Frank" (20th), "This Earth Is Mine" (U), "Middle of Night" (Col), "South Pacific" (Magna-20th), and "Gigi" (M-G) are the runner-up pix in that sequence.

"Porgy and Bess" (Col) continues to pace the promising newcomers, showing great in Chi, big in L.A., capacity in N.Y. and smash in Frisco. "Holiday for Lovers" (20th) looms a bit spotty among newies, being good in Detroit, bangup in N.Y. at Paramount and sluggish in Pitt. "Scapegoat" (M-G) is rated wow in Boston.

"Mummy" (U), another new entry, looms cool in Boston. "Legend of Tom Dooley" (Col) is rated hotsy in Detroit. "Private's Affair" (20th) is nifty on opening round in K.C. "Love Is My Profession" (Kings) looks brisk in K.C. and Minneapolis, good in Boston but fair in Washington and mild in Pitt.

"Sleeping Beauty" (BV), fair in Louisville, is boff in St. Louis and lush in L.A. "Ask Any Girl" (M-G) looms okay in L.A. and Frisco. "Al Capone" (AA) shapes stout in Chi.

"Around World in 80 Days" (UA) still is hotsy on extended general run in L.A. after marathon run previously at higher scale. "Imitation of Life" (U) continues sturdy in Louisville.

"Say One For Me" (20th), good in Washington, looks okay in K.C. "Hercules" (WB), okay in Indianapolis, shapes strong in Cincy and Toronto.

J. J. Frankel: 'I'll Rent in Moscow, Tradeshow Films'

J. Jay Frankel, prez of MJP Corp., this week firmed up plans for "tradeshowing" some 20 American films at the Moscow international film festival, which opens Aug. 3. Original plan had been to screen only "Black Orchid" in Moscow.

The only American picture to be shown within the framework of the Moscow festival—but out-of-competition—is "The Diary of Anne Frank." While the State Dept. picked the film on artistic grounds, the selection has been criticized as unwise on two counts: 1. Because it in no way relates to life in the U.S., and 2. because it is a long, heavily dialoged production which has little meaning for Soviet audiences.

The film industry itself was not consulted in the selection of "Diary." The various companies were asked to submit available titles. The State Dept. picked "Diary" from six films that had been screened.

Frankel said Monday (27) that he planned to rent a Moscow theatre and hold screenings in the afternoons and evenings, primarily for the Iron Curtain delegations. There is no intention of admitting the public.

Among the titles Frankel, who reps the Paramount and Warner Bros. product for the Soviet Union and other Communist countries, intends to show in Moscow are "War and Peace" (already sold to the Soviets), "Vagabond King," "Funny Face," "To Catch a Thief," "The Court Jester," "September Affair," "Spirit of St. Louis," etc. All of the 20 pictures have been cleared by Washington for possible sale to the Russians and others.

Frankel is due to leave N.Y. this week for Yugoslavia. He'll go to Moscow from there.

Charles Brackett's Claustrophobia

Hollywood, July 28.

The only thing that ever gives him claustrophobia, says Charles Brackett, is a small budget. For this reason, among others, the writer-producer is a happy hold-out to the highly publicized—and sometimes over-publicized—trend towards independent production set-ups.

Brackett is a contract producer at 20th-Fox at the moment and he has been under contract as writer, as writer-producer or as producer since he arrived in Hollywood 25 years ago. He wants none of the "freedom" of indie status.

The so-called independent producer, says Brackett, is usually less independent than the contract man. It simply means a lot more work for little more return and that highly problematical.

"For one thing," he claims, "when it comes to spending my own money on production I become recklessly thrifty. Since color film costs more than black-and-white, I would be in favor of shooting everything in black-and-white. When the studio makes the decision, the studio wants color, for the very good reason that audiences like color."

In other directions, Brackett feels that indie status really means that the producer must take on a great many details that are often outside his knowledge, many of them distracting from his true creative function.

San Sebastian Film Festival

San Sebastian, July 28.

David O. Selznick motored down from Biarritz to attend UA rep George Ornstein's "Shake Hands with Devil" party and told VARIETY (1) "From now on, I'll base in Hollywood and leave Yank shores only for locale exteriors," (2) "I've already recouped on 'Farewell to Arms' with limited exhib areas still untapped," and (3) "Hollywood's Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Sciences— not MPEA—should coordinate American cooperation with European film festivals."

In three years, Italo-Spanish film entente has registered 60 coproductions, according to Italo delegation chief Giacomo Rancati who led after-dinner speakers chorusing bi-nation film friendship at swank Italian feed atop Gudamendi . . . ANICA's secretary general Achille Valigiami privately thought chances bright and two countries would eventually agree on 'national' coproductions—i.e. above-the-line talent from one country only, in line with Italo-French film pact . . . Warner Bros. veepee for Europe Arthur Abeles is in favor of shifting Rene Huet's Spain Hq. from Barcelona to Madrid but Huet fears his veteran Catalan staff will reject resettlement in the Spanish capital city.

Steve ("Hercules") Reeves, came to fest from Madrid-based Italo-Spanish coproduction, "The Last Days of Pompey," besieged by throngs of Basque bobbysoxers . . . Fest jury chairman Melvyn Douglas has a legit rehearsal start next month for Lawrence and Lee's "The Gang's All Here"—a presidency theme hooked to the Harding administration which Kermit Bloomgarden will produce and George Roy Hill direct for an Autumn curtain . . . Douglas went the full route of Basque dance routines at the Gaztelubide private gourmet society feed.

French film director Rene Clair, told fest's biggest press conference tollvision in the U.S. will not compete with exhibs but will basically seek elderly audiences in the 60-80 year bracket and that portion of the public no longer on never attending movies . . . Metro's Spain rep Cesar Alba foresees a minimum of four months to dub 490 voices in "Ben-Hur," now earmarked for Madrid-Barcelona roadshow preems during the 1960-61 season . . . Disney's foreign sales manager Ned Clarke and European Julian Berman optimistically wound four days of uninterrupted Hotel Maria Cristina confabs with government officials, MPEA's Frank Gervasi and Spanish distribs—aimed at a three-license import quota for the coming season and designation of a Disney rep in Spain . . . Spain's N.Y. Daily News correspondent Ralph Forte, a best performance juror at San Sebastian, goes blue-ribbon next month in the U.S. seat at Venice fest's Golden Lion jury, where he can hablar Espanol with Luis Gomez Mesa, critic and film scribe named Spain's panel-picker . . . Thrift policy adopted by most delegations this year found its best expression when J. Arthur Rank's man Harold Sargisson convoked British scribes to a news conference in a Basque pub . . . Argentina turned up a powerhouse delegation headed by Roberto Talice that include producers Enrique Faustin, Miguel Machinandiarena, Celestino Anzuola; impresario Clemente Lococo; film directors Hugo Fregonese, Luis Cesar Amadori, Enrique Cahen Salavery; screen stars Zully Moreno, Amelia Bence, Mabel Carr and Alejandro Rey, and widely-read film scribe Chas de Cruz . . . Cesareo Gonzalez repeated with the savviest dinner reception of the fest in honor of Mexico's Rosita Arena and Spain's Amparo Rivelles who will star with Arturo de Cordova in "El Amor que yo te di" (The Love I Gave You), a Suevia Films-Cesareo Gonzalez production.

British Film Producers Assn. prexy Arthur Watkins believes London can become the hub of world film production if Britain's lawmakers, exhibitors and trade unions will support BFPA's campaign to ease restrictive clauses in current coproduction formula . . . Selling price of German films in the Spanish market dropped 20-25% in less than a year as a result of re-established Yank-Spain film relations, according to German Export Union delegate Constantin Lagopulo, who feels market value will re-adjust upwards once three-year Yank blockbuster backlog has been absorbed.

Golden Seashell for best film short was awarded Germany's "Abseits" (Aside) with honorable mention for Canada's "Serenal" and Italy's "Letter from El Alamein" . . . Accent on youth, so vividly established by Cannes fest's "jeune vague" was excitingly exemplified in the Polish and German entries. Jerzy Passendorder's direction of "Zamach" (Partisan Mission) and Alfred Vohrer's mise-en-scene of "Verbrechen Nach Schulchluss" (Crime After Class), second film assignments in each case, together with the top-flight casts in both, all in their early twenties or younger, stirred considerable fest enthusiasm.

Screen rights to an invaluable source for future screenplays, the complete works of Spain's great contemporary novelist, the late Pio Baroja, were acquired by film critic Miguel Perez Ferrero — better known as Donald of ABC . . . Screen actor Virgilio Texeira London-bound for a tele appearance on the Bebe Daniels-Ben Lyons show, "Life with Lyons" . . . Jesus Arozamena, scripter of "Ultimo Cuple," "La Violetera," and "Carmen of Granada," in screenplay huddles with Benito Perojo and Cesareo Gonzalez on subsequent Sarita Montiel vehicle to roll this year . . . Hugo Fregonese accelerating plans to set Gary Cooper and Leo Carrillo in a major Spain production of "Don Quixote" next year . . . Yank screen and tele director Jeff Hayden scouting film properties for an Eve Marie Saint vehicle with a European background . . . Eva Bartok Rolls-Royced to San Sebastian and pulled all stops plugging her tome "Worth Living For" (Putnam, London), containing an on-the-record chapter of her seven-month Hollywood sojourn . . . In the German entry, "Der Rest Ist Schweigen" (Rest Is Silence), Hardy Kruger sends out for the Herald-Trib and the "last two issues of VARIETY" . . Adolfo Marsillach, who received the best performance award playing the role of Nobel prize-winning medic Ramon y Cajal, will not abandon his prominent niche in the Spanish theatre world as actor-director-producer . . . Festival-framed faces: Eve Marie Saint; First Lady at San Sebastian; fragrant Japanese Keiko Kishi, wife of French director Yves Ciampi; striking presence of Anouk Aimee; volatile Emma Pennella; Germany's dainty 15-year old screen vet of 16 films, Cristina Kauffmann; Garbo-like Luz Marquez; virile Jorge Mistral and handsome Vicente Parra.

SCREEN SOAP OPERA CLEANS UP

'Nun's Story' Wins at San Sebastian

But Some Catholics Decry Selection—Spanish Festival Lacks Glamour—Top Pix Sparse

By HANK WERBA

San Sebastian, July 28.

Hollywood walked off with two of the three main awards July 20 at San Sebastian's Seventh International Film Festival. Grand prize Golden Seashell went to "The Nun's Story" (WB) and one of the two Zulueta awards for best fest performance was conceded to "Nun's Story" star Audrey Hepburn. Runner-up Silver Seashells were awarded to Alfred Hitchcock's "North by Northwest" (Metro) and to the Italo-Argentine coproduction "From the Apennines to the Andes."

Smattering of hostile dissension greeted grand prix ceremony. Unwise programming of "Nun's Story" as fest curtain-raiser reduced the impact the film merited and many in attendance regarded the Fred Zinnemann opus as a violation of Catholic dogma and structure. Others joined chorus of protest on behalf of Polish entry, "Zamach," a popular choice overlooked by official jurors.

Of the 22 features entered from 18 countries, only an embarrassing handful qualified for any jury consideration. "The Nun's Story," "North by Northwest," "Zamach" and Germany's "The Rest Is Silence" were the only unchallenged contenders in jury debates. "Silence" received honorable mention while a semiofficial jury of international film critics voted "Zamach" best at the fest. Runner-up award to "Apennines" was a consolation gesture to appease heavyweight Italian and Argentine delegations.

Spain's "Salto a la gloria" (Leap to Fame) garnered the Cantabrian Pearl as the best Spanish-language entry and Zulueta cup laurels for its star, Adolfo Marsillach.

"Ari No Machi No Maria" (Ragpickers' Angel), a mediocre Japanese film, was doctrinal choice of International Catholic Film Office (OCIC). Like "Nun's Story," "Angel" features a young female missionary. However, in the oriental version, the missionary (sans habit) dedicates and sacri-

Cines Venezuela Takes Over There For Universal

Universal has closed shop in Venezuela, turning over distribution of its pictures to a local outfit controlled by Cines Venezuela, the largest theatre chain in the country. Transfer took place July 1.

Reasons for the switch aren't clear, but oily Venezuela is a very expensive territory to operate in. At the same time, it's also one of the most prosperous and lucrative markets in Latin America.

While U maintained its own releasing organization in Venezuela, it had a tie with the indie Rialto Castellana circuit. It'll maintain that outlet in the future, but will supplement it with houses provided by its new distributor. Name of the company which now releases the U product in Venezuela is Tropical Films. It also handles the Allied Artists pictures.

Not all of the American distribs maintain offices in Venezuela. Metro is handled by 20th-Fox (which in turn is handled by Metro in Peru) and United Artists is released via Distribuidora Salvador Carcel. Headquarters of all the outfits are at Caracas.

U's last general manager, Ramon Garcia, has been named area supervisor. Most of the U employees have been absorbed by Tropical.

TED WILLIAMS FISHING

It's Boxoffice In Massachusetts — Second Film Unreels, Third Due

Boston, July 28.

Color film showing Red Sox slugger Ted Williams fishing off Puerto Rico has been booked to open at the Derby and Empire theatres in Fall River, Mass. tomorrow (Wed.). Pic was produced by Beacon Features, a new Hub film production outfit.

Coproducers of the subject are Barbara Keane and Len Sanderson. Reeler is being teamed at Fall River with "Anatomy of a Murder." It's actually the second film Beacon has made with Williams, showing him fishing. A third is in the offing.

British Rushing To Russia While U.S. Filmers Shy

When it comes to sending personalities to the Moscow international film festival which opens next week (Aug. 3), the Americans appear to be boycotting the event.

With the exception of Spyros P. Skouras, prez of 20th-Fox, who's in Russia privately and on his own, not a single "official" Yank representative or star is being sent to the fest, either by individual companies or by the Motion Picture Export Assn. The matter of representation was discussed at a recent meet at MPEA.

In sharp contrast, reports from London indicate that the British are hard at work lining up personalities and stars to put in an appearance at Moscow. The Russians invited a number of U. S. names during the Cannes festival in May, but indicated they wouldn't pick up the tab.

In Latin America, the Mexicans have decided to skip Moscow alltogether. On the other hand, they're staging a Mexican film week in Red China later this year.

Since the U. S. State Dept. doesn't recognize the Moscow fest, its status being that of an "approved" rather than a "recommended" festival, it isn't sending an official Government rep either. Instead, a man from the local U. S. Embassy will rep Washington. The American entry at Moscow is "The Diary of Anne Frank," but it will be shown out-of-competition.

ROSS HUNTER'S 'NO APOLOGIES'

Operating on the philosophy that today's film audiences, particularly women, desire glitter, glamor and escapism in their entertainment, producer Ross Hunter, Universal's top money-maker, is tailoring his production schedule to meet these needs. His pictures, he revealed in New York this week, will be loaded with elegant fashions, lavish sets, and lush backgrounds. Based on a personal survey of theatre audiences. Ross, whose "Imitation of Life" has put Universal back in the black, declared that women want "the type of glamor that can take them away from their daily chores."

In New York for homeoffice conferences on the launching of "Pillow Talk," the Doris Day-Rock Hudson starrer, Ross acknowledged that his pictures might be dubbed soap operas. "But what's wrong with soap opera?" he asked. He admitted, too, that film critics usually don't like his pictures. "I'm not unhappy about it," he said. "I don't do pictures for the critics. They don't pay admission. I only try to make what I think the public likes."

Somewhat of a specialist on the so-called women's picture because of his success with "Imitation," "Magnificent Obsession," "Written on the Wind" and others. Ross, who has made 21 pictures for U, is busily engaged in assembling a program that will carry him into late 1960. So far he has six pictures on his slate. Although his contract as a studio producer still has four years to run, Ross is negotiating with U officials for a new pact that will give him a participation arrangement.

With "Pillow Talk," a picture that aims to transform Miss Day from the girl next door to a sexy glamor girl, set for release in October, Ross is readying "Back Street," a remake of the Fannie Hurst story; "Matilda Shouted Fire," a British stage play due for a London opening shortly; "Little Eva," a teenage entry starring Sandra Dee; "Elephant Hill," starring Susan Hayward, and "Peter and Catherine."

"Little Eva," which will be filmed in Hollywood, is likely to be Ross' first follow-up to "Pillow Talk," for which U has high hopes on the basis of rough cut preview showings. The other pix on Ross' slate will be made abroad. "Back Street," with a screenplay by Elinor Griffith, who dittoed on "Imitation," is set for a November start, with shooting to be done in Rome, Munich and New York. Ross is only retaining the latter part of the Fannie Hurst novel. The earlier sections are being completely updated. "Elephant

Beretta Argues New Fed 'Recognition' Rates Locarno Official U.S. Nod

Locarno, July 28.

Vinico Beretta, director of Switzerland's Locarno Film Festival, reported in detail last issue, that it is time that the United States industry was present officially. Locarno is now "recognized" by the Federation of International Film Producer Assns. Beretta emphasizes that little Switzerland gives about $1,500,000 to American majors every year and, though small, it is a sizable sum with Locarno also becoming important in a commercial sense.

For the first time in its 12-year history, most of the top Swiss exhibs and distribs attended the recent fest (July 9-19) and a lot of pix were bought and sold. Yanks participate via features sent by local exchanges. But Locarno would like a Motion Picture Export Assn. attendance like other fests.

MPEA has its hands full with fullscale participation on the recommended fests like Cannes, Venice, Sans Sebastien and Berlin. However there may be a more official representation next year now that Locarno is a "recognized" fest for the first time.

Yanks this summer copped best direction and acting awards via two United Artists pix "Killer's Kiss," made by Stanley Kubrick in '54, and for Ernest Borgnine in "The Rabbit Trap." The local UA rep said that it helped sales.

'TOM THUMB' TO NABES

Primed By Tieup Made With Chocolate Milk Drink

Minneapolis, July 28.

Helped by a highly effective tieup with chocolate milk company, arranged by local M-G-M branch manager Sid Eckman, the puppet film "Tom Thumb," finally released to subsequent-run neighborhood houses here after having been withdrawn from release following its loop firstrun last Christmas, is making a big boxoffice splurge uptown.

The chocolate milk company has been plugging the picture over radio and tv and in supermarkets throughout the city and offering the "Tom Thumb" record at a greatly reduced price if the purchaser presents one of its mlik labels.

In U. S.-Canada: 17,700 C'Scopes; 4,100 Are Ozoners

CinemaScope equipment in the domestic, i.e. U.S. and Canadian, market has reached the saturation point with some 17,700 installations. This gives 20th 13,215 possibilities, latter representing the situations where any one film can play on its first time out.

The 17,700 include 4,100 drive-in theatres. While 20th doesn't expect more than a handful of additional installations, any new theatres and drive-ins that go up are very likely to feature C'Scope equipment.

In 20th's estimate, the U.S. and Canada now count around 21,000 houses between them. Some 20th features, due to repeat bookings, have gone as high as 18,900 dates.

READYING 'TORMENTED'

Gordon-Steinberg Feature Has No Releasing Deal Yet

Hollywood, July 28.

Bert I. Gordon and Joe Steinberg have set up Cheviot Productions as an indie film unit, initial project to be "Tormented," scripted by George Worthing Yates from Gordon original.

Pair will co-produce and Gordon direct. Two additional properties currently are being readied as follow-ups. No releasing deal yet has been inked.

Fess Parker's Word For Yank Exhibs Is 'Apathetic'; Calls Houses 'Sloppy'

Hollywood, July 28.

Fess Parker, in from a 14-city bally tour for Paramount's "The Hangman," returned with a sizzling blast at exhibs for their failure to promote films. Also, for their "sloppy" theatre operation, the two combining to retard rather than boost theatre attendance.

Claiming he didn't see a "single instance" of an exhib doing one thing to promote the pic he was playing, Parker said: "There's nothing wrong with Hollywood product, but even the best product needs selling and all that theatre managers seem to be doing is opening the doors, hiring enough ushers and seeing that the popcorn machine is working."

Figuring he personally met more than 1,000 persons on his month-long tour from N. Y. to Frisco, Parker commented that the public's attitude toward motion pictures at best was "unenthusiastic," whereas it was highly conversant about television.

"Most of the people I met hadn't been to the movies in some time," he declared, noting all were aware and enthusiastic about tv. "Several times I'd be at a party and would ask how many had seen a movie in the last month. Except for one salesman who passed his time on the road by seeing films, I drew one blank after another."

Parker traces this apathy on the part of the public directly to sloppy running of theatres and lack of local promotion of films.

"Theatres, both the big ones and the neighborhood houses, are tired-looking," he charged, further explaining that theatre owners seem to feel no responsibility other than putting a picture on the screen.

"This is not the case in England," he stated. "When I travelled there two and one-half years ago, I saw that exhibitors were highly competitive and did things to lure audiences. Here it seems that theatres are still being run as they were in the motion picture industry's more lucrative days, but today there are 999 more diversions the public can take advantage of."

As an example of exhibs' lack of incentive in exploring a picture. Parker reported that Paramount made 30- and 60-second tapes promoting both "Hangman" and Parker's current Cascade disk, "Strong Man," and additionally taped open-end interviews with actor.

"The tapes were available to every exhibitor in the United States through Paramount's seven fieldmen," thesp pointed out, "and I personally wrote to 150 theatremen, telling them about the tapes and that they could use them free of charge."

Not one tape has been used to this date, Parker asserted.

Loew's Theatres' Tisch Brothers Divide-the-Work

Atlantic City, July 28.

Both Preston R. Tisch, who heads the Tisch family's local hotel and motel operations, and Lawrence, a brother who as president of Tisch Hotel Inc., operates the family's swank Americana Hotel in Miami Beach, will seek places on the board of directors of Loew's Theatres when elections are held in September.

Preston Tisch so advised newspapermen here when quizzed about the family's purchase of controlling interest in the Loew's chain, which owns 120 theatres in 67 cities; 12 office buildings, and New York City radio station WMGM.

Tisch Hotels Inc. now controls 15% of the 2,668,389 outstanding shares of Loew's Theatres, Preston said.

As a result of the new acquisition, the Tisch interests will have two divisions, he added. Lawrence will continue as president of Tisch Inc., and move to New York to devote himself to the Tisch's expanding financial and business interests.

Preston will continue to head Tisch Hotels-Motels Inc., and will move from Atlantic City to Miami Beach to supervise operation of the Americana. He will also continue his supervision of the Tisch family's Atlantic City and New York (Hotel Belmont Plaza) and hotel-motel operations.

Herbert A. Hofmann, treasurer of Tisch Hotel-Motel operations since 1950, has been named executive vice president of the corporations. He has his offices at the Americana.

Joe Schenck's Broken Hip

Hollywood, July 28.

Joseph M. Schenck, founder and former board chairman of 20th-Fox, was reported in fair condition at Cedars of Lebanon Hospital after a fall Monday (27) in which he suffered a broken hip.

Schenck is 76 years old.

Blue Denim
(C'SCOPE)

Provocative drama about teenagers contemplating an abortion because of their inability to communicate with their parents. Excellent b.o. chances.

20th-Fox release of Charles Brackett production. Stars Carol Lynley, Brandon de Wilde, Macdonald Carey and Marsha Hunt. Features Warren Berlinger, Buck Class, Nina Shipman and Vaughn Taylor. Directed by Philip Dunne. Screenplay, Dunne and Edith Sommer; based on the stage play by James Leo Herlihy and William Noble; camera (C'Scope), Leo Tover; editor, William Reynolds; music, Bernard Hermann. Previewed in N.Y., July 23, '59. Running time, 89 MINS.

Janet Willard	Carol Lynley
Arthur Bartley	Brandon de Wilde
Major Malcom Bartley	Macdonald Carey
Jessie Bartley	Marsha Hunt

Woman in Car	Junie Ellis

"Blue Denim" is a provocative drama with strong appeal for teenagers and their parents. Since the Charles Brackett production has the ability to attract the blue denim set, rated as the most frequent film-goers, as well as a substantial number of adults who will be interested in the theme, the picture rates as a strong boxoffice contender.

Based on the Broadway stage play of the same name by James Leo Herlihy and William Noble, it recounts, often movingly and intelligently, the torments of a pair of high school lovers who are about to become unwed parents. The desperation of these babes in the basement—a 15-year-old girl and a 16-year-old boy—is further highlighted by their inability to communicate with their parents.

The youngsters depicted in the film are not juvenile delinquents. Both stem from fine, upstanding middle class families. The girl's father is a college professor determined to raise his only daughter to emulate his dead wife. The boy's father is a retired Army officer given to reciting platitudes about the value of service life and unable to forget his moments of past glory. His mother is preoccupied with the preparations for the upcoming wedding of her older (19) daughter.

The distance that exists between the parents and the children makes the former the last ones that the troubled teenagers would turn to in their moment of utmost despair. Consequently, the children seek their own solution and make arrangements for an abortion. They are aware of the consequences of such a move, but feeling neglected and alone, attempt to proceed with the plan of desperation.

It is only at the last moment that the parents discover the utter helplessness of their children and realize, for the first time, their failure to establish a rapport with the young members of their family.

Undoubtedly due to production code restrictions, the Edith Sommer and Philip Dunne screenplay has been considerably watered down. The picture is tied up neatly in a blue ribbon to conform with code standards. The word "abortion" is never mentioned although it is obvious what is taking place. Moreover, the ending deteriorates to cliche melodrama. A big, black limousine, complete with a Charles Adams-looking femme, shows up to take the girl to the abortion rendezvous. Then there is the last-minute automobile chase as the two parents speed through the night to save the girl in the nick of time from the clutches of the unethical physician. In the play, the abortion is completed and the girl survives and it is from this point that the education of the obtuse parents begins. The film has the girl going off to have her baby in another city and the boy—this time with support of his father—joining her on the train.

Despite the subject matter, stark dramatics are interspersed with comedy scenes. The boy and his sidekick meet in the basement to guzzle beer, smoke cigarets, play poker and otherwise act as "big shots." There are also sequences involving a high school dance and a basketball game.

Carol Lynley, 20th-Fox's new teenage hope, repeats her stage role with the same eclat and sensitivity. She gives evidence of realizing the plans that the film company has in store for her. As her young lover, Brandon de Wilde, successful bridging the gap from his moppet roles in "Member of the Wedding" and "Shane," gives a moving performance as the confused 16-year old learning the realities of sex. Warren Berliner, also from the stage play, is fine as his wise-cracking buddy and confidante.

Good depictions are also rendered by Macdonald Carey, as the boy's father; Marsha Hunt, as his mother; Vaughn Taylor, as the girl's father; Nina Shipman, as the boy's sister, and Buck Class, as her fiance.

For the most part, Philip Dunne's direction captures the spirit of the theme. It is best in displaying the torments of the adolescents, but falls down when it resorts to melodrama. The film, in black and white, has been given topnotch production values. Technical aspects, including Bernard Hermann's music, Leo Tover's cinematography, and Lyle R. Wheeler and Leland Fuller's art direction, are all first-rate. Holl.

Cry Tough

Topnotch melodrama set in a N.Y. Puerto Rican quarter; strong entry for program market.

Hollywood, July 24.

United Artists release of Harry Kleiner production. Stars John Saxon, Linda Cristal; costars Joseph Calleia; features Harry Townes, Don Gordon, Perry Lopez, Frank Puglia, Joe de Santis, Arthur Batanides, Paul Clarke, Penny Santon, Barbara Luna. Directed by Paul Stanley. Screenplay, Kleiner, based on novel by Irving Shulman; camera, Philip Lathrop, Irving Glassberg; music, Laurindo Almeida; editor, Frederic Knudtson. Previewed July 23, '59. Running time, 84 MINS.

Miguel Estrada	John Saxon
Sarita	Linda Cristal
Senor Estrada	Joseph Calleia
Alvears	Arthur Batanides
Emilio	Paul Clarke
Cortez	Joe De Santis
Incho	Don Gordon
Toro	Perry Lopez
Tina	Barbara Luna
Lavandero	Frank Puglia
Senora Estrada	Penny Santon
Carlos	Harry Townes

Producers of "Cry Tough" latch onto fresh territory to backdrop the action of this punchy melo about a Puerto Rican quarter of N.Y. Well-produced right down the line and studded with better-than-average performances for this type of film, subject matter despite certain downbeat features is given interesting development which will help its chances in the program market.

The Harry Kleiner production marks the first time that a film has dealt with problems of the second generation Puerto Ricans in Manhattan, where in a squalid Spanish Harlem—the barrio, as it's known—life is filled with violence and unrest. John Saxon takes on the role of a restless young man just released from a year in prison, determined now to go straight and break loose from his festering environment "the hard way," rather than return to the gang and easy money.

Kleiner, who also scripted from an Irving Shulman novel, builds his plot dramatically and with logic, sum total emerging a strong exposition on one of today's social problems while providing suitable entertainment. Saxon delivers powerfully in what is probably his outstanding performance to date, and in Linda Cristal, as one of the quarter's "hostesses" who would rather live with a man than be married, he has an engaging costar. Joseph Calleia registers effectively as the father, unable to understand ambition and a desire to get away. In standout roles, Harry Townes is the gang leader who wants Saxon back; Don Gordon is a menacing figure with a vicious blade-tipped umbrella always at hand; Perry Lopez, another gangster, dies in a knife fight with Saxon; and Barbara Luna is the sister.

Paul Stanley's direction is sharp and rigorous and photography by Philip Lathrop and Irving Glassberg sets a fine mood, as does Frederic Knudtson's fast editing. Laurindo Almeida's musical score and Edward Carrere's art direction are atmospheric. Whit.

Have Rocket, Will Travel

Revived Three Stooges in a sci-fi comedy. Strictly for juve market.

Hollywood, July 28.

Columbia Pictures production and release. Stars The Three Stooges (Moe Howard, Larry Fine, Joe De Rita); with Jerome Cowan, Anna-Lisa, Bob Colbert. Producer, Harry Romm. Director, David Lowell Rich. Screenplay, Raphel Hayes; camera, Ray Cory; music, Mischa Bakaleinikoff; are director, John T. McCormack; title song, George Duning and Stanley Styne; editor, Danny B. Landres. Previewed at Iris Theatre, July 17, '59. Running time, 76 MINS.

Moe	Moe Howard
Larry	Larry Fine
Curley Joe	Joe De Rita
J. P. Morse	Jerome Cowan
Dr. Ingrid Naarveg	Anna-Lisa
Dr. Ted Benson	Bob Colbert

Columbia is bringing out "Have Rocket, Will Travel" at a time when the Three Stooges are enjoying "rediscovery" and new popularity via television. Hence, whatever the picture's production shortcomings, it will probably do well in the summertime juvenile market.

It's a silly hash of sight gags and sound effects loosely organized around a funny enough theme: handymen Moe Howard, Larry Fine and Joe Di Rita (who replaced the late Curly Howard) accidently get trapped in a rocket programmed for Venus and become Earth's first representatives on that planet.

Producer Harry Romm has given the film a fairly handsome physical presentation for a picture of this type. The rocket props have a cinematically businesslike look and footage shot at real rocket installations is used effectively as a realistic backdrop for the zany antics of the Stooges.

With the juvenile audience almost exclusively in mind, Romm and director David Lowell Rich concentrated on the usual Stooges routines, which have amused juveniles for more than 20 years, and on a large variety of very good special effects. While most adults will consider the films a crashing bore, there's entertainment in: a flame-throwing giant spider, a talking unicorn, an arm-waving thinking machine, a variety of space phenomena and a number of photographic stunts—shrinking the Stooges to fit in a bird cage, materializing objects in thin air and a chase through corridor of doors involving two sets of Stooges.

Space limitations prohibit explaining how all of these elements are worked into the plot, but it doesn't matter anyway since the story was not considered foremost. The time devoted to the romantic sub-plot, awkwardly written for Anna-Lisa and Bob Colbert, is wasted as were the talents of these attractive young people. A title song by George Duning and Stanley Styne also seems superfluous. Jerome Cowan does his usually professional job as the apoplectic boss.

In the opening scenes there is a monkey which promises some hilarious situations but these never transpire. Ray Corry's camera work is efficient. The editing, however, is choppy, particularly in the latter half. John T. McCormack's art direction is generally apt, but whoever selected the chaparral setting as the surface of Venus erred. It's a fairly safe bet that the audience for whom this production is designed will not seriously object to these defects. Glen.

Face of Fire

Ponderous New England-set, British-produced film carrying poor indications for American market.

Hollywood, July 7.

Allied Artists release of Albert Band-Louis Garfinkle production. Stars Cameron Mitchell, James Whitmore; costars Bettye Ackerman, Royal Dano, Mike Oscard, Robert Simon, Richard Erdman; features Howard Smith, Lois Maxwell, Jill Donahue. Directed by Band. Screenplay, Band; story Stephen Crane; camera-art director, Edward Vorkapich; editor, Ingemar Ejve; music, Erik Nordgren. Previewed July 1, '59. Running time, 79 MINS.

Ned Trescott	Cameron Mitchell
Monk Johnson	James Whitmore
Grace Trescott	Bettye Ackerman
Jake Winter	Royal Dano
Jimmie Trescott	Mike Oscard
The Judge	Robert Simon
Al Williams	Richard Erdman
Sheriff Nolan	Howard Smith
Ethel Winter	Lois Maxwell

This British import, lensed in Sweden with a partial Hollywood cast, is based on Stephen Crane's short story, "The Monster," carrying a New England background at turn of the century. Dull and ponderous, film is old-hat by today's standards and will probably have rough going.

Cameron Mitchell and James Whitmore delineate the two principal characters, a small-town physician and his handyman, latter beloved by hamlet's entire population. When the handyman's face is burned off in a fire which ravishes the doctor's home, during which he rescues his employer's young son, his frightful appearance causes panic and feelings of the town's people change to the extent that they try to kill him. Yarn ends on an upbeat note.

Produced by Albert Band and Louis Garfinkle, from latter's screenplay, action is practically nil. Under Band's slow direction, cast suffers via unrealistic roles and performances are little more than walk-throughs, although acting itself is competent enough. Betty Ackerman portrays Mitchell's wife, Mike Oscard their son, Royal Dano leader of group out to destroy the faceless Whitmore, Richard Erdman a bum, Robert Simon a judge, in co-star roles.

Technical departments are capably handled, including Edward Vorkapich's camera work and art direction, and music by Erik Nordgren. Whit.

O Vecech Nadprirozonych
(About Supernatural Things)
(CZECHOSLAVAKIAN)

Locarno, July 21.

Czech State Film production and release. With Jan Pelikan, Milos Kopecky, Ladislav Pesek, Oldrich Novy, Irena Kacirkova, Jaroslav Marvan. Directed by Milos Markovec, Jiri Krejcik, Jaroslav Mach. Screenplay, Vladimir Bor, Frantisek Daneil, from three stories by Karel Capek; camera, Jiri Safar, Vladimir Novotny, Josef Stecha; editor, Jan Kahout. At Locarno Film Fest. Running time, 100 MINS.

Old Man	Jan Pelikan
Kupr	Milos Kopecky
Knotek	Ladislav Pesek
Karas	Oldrich Novy
Marta	Irena Kacirkova
Hubner	Jaroslav Marvan

Sketch pic comes up with two out of three fairy tales which are successful in making the supernatural and the macabre quite risible. Third is somewhat talky. This type film is chancey at best Abroad and looms mainly for dualers or lingo situations.

One tale has a timid clerk who takes the blame for another's mistake. He suddenly sprouts a halo and some fine satiric jibes at bureaucracy and medicine follow. Then he tells off his boss, reveals he did not make the mistake and loses his halo. Second is about a man who accidentally hits a hearse and awakens a dead old man about to be buried. He is hounded to death by the old man, who has lost his pension, and the old man ends up tending his grave.

Foregoing two yarns have pace and bring off their whimsy well. Third is about a jealous husband whose young wife fools him via a mindreader. It is somewhat overdone. Acting is fine as are technical aspects. Mosk.

Unruhige Nacht
(All Night Through)
(WEST GERMAN)

Locarno, July 21.

Europa release of Carlton-Realfilm production. Stars Bernhard Wicki; features Ulla Jacobsson, Hansjorg Felmy, Ann Savo, Erik Schuman, Werner Hinz. Directed by Falk Harnack. Screenplay, Hurst Bud Juhn; camera, Friedl Behn-Grund; editor, Georg Jauss. At Locarno Film Fest. Running time, 100 MINS.

Pastor	Bernhard Wicki
Melanie	Ulla Jacobsson
Fedor	Hansjorg Felmy
Ljuba	Ann Savo
Ernst	Erik Schuman
Arnim	Werner Hinz

Sombre pic deals with "good" Germans during the last World War. A pastor discourses on the guilt of those who knew the war was wrong and did nothing about it. Warnings are given that similar states of mind may be springing up in Germany. But all this is wrapped up in a slow moving, sanctimonious film that makes its points only in talk—not in feeling. So this looms primarily a local item with slim chances abroad.

A protestant pastor is called in to minister last rites for a man who is to be shot for desertion during the last war. In looking over his papers the pastor finds that the man deserted to help a Russian girl he loved and really did no overt harm for he had never had love in his life before. The man gets some consolation from the pastor, and is shot.

Direction is somewhat stolid and fails to transfer the theme from words to visuals. Result is a plodding pic. Russian atmosphere is to obviously studio and lacks feeling and authenticity. Playing is heavy though Bernhard Wicki manages to give the pastor some depth. Practically complete low key lighting is in keeping with the downbeat theme and slow progression. Technical credits are good. Mosk.

Musik I Morker
(Music and Shadows)
(SWEDISH)

Locarno, July 21.

Terra Films production and release. With Mai Zetterling, Berger Malmsten. Written and directed by Ingmar Bergman. Camera, G. Strindberg; editor, Lennart Wallen. At Locarno Film Fest. Running time, 90 MINS.

Ingrid	Mai Zetterling
Bengt	Birger Malmsten

Ingmar Bergman has become a directorial name to be reckoned with among film buffs in most Western countries. His "Wild Strawberries" is clicking currently in N.Y. and he also got stateside attention for "Naked Night" "Seventh Seal" and "Smiles of a Summer Night." His old pix are now being released abroad as interest in his highly personalized pix continues.

This is an early one with melodramatic aspects but already attesting to his individual outlook and talents. Here a pianist loses his sight in a military training accident and finally finds a meaning in life through the love of a young housemaid. Set in the 1930's, this also brings in class issues. It is the fine insight into a blind man's world and his final adaptation that give this film its main values.

It is well acted and incisively directed by Bergman. But his insistence on some sentimentality makes this somewhat chancey for offshore placement except for arty spots on his name alone. This is technically excellent. Mosk.

Les Quatre Du Moana
(The Four of the Moana)
(FRENCH-DOCUMENTARY-COLOR)

Locarno, July 21.

Gaumont production and release. Lensed (Ansco), and interpreted by Bernard Gorsky, Pierre Pasquier, Roger Lesage, Serge Arnoux; editor, Raymond Lamy; commentary, Paul Guimard spoken by Gerard Oury. At Locarno Film Fest. Running time, 90 MINS.

The Moana is a small sailing ship that took four men around the world in three years. Pic details their adventures and underwater fishing, etc. This is simply made and well welded together and gives some arresting undersea footage.

But the pic is somewhat long and emerges primarily of dualer possibilities abroad or could be trimmed down for a good medium-length supporting feature. Color is good. A straightforward commentary has kept this always coherent. Mosk.

Kapitanskaia Dotschka
(The Captain's Daughter)
(RUSSIAN-SCOPE)

Locarno, July 21.

Mosfilm production and release. Stars Ia Arepina, Oleg Strijenov, Serguei Loukianov. Directed by Vladimir Kaplounovsky. Screenplay, N. Kovarski from story by Alexandre Pushkin; camera, E. Goulidov; editor, A. Antokoloski. At Locarno Film Fest. Running time, 100 MINS.

Grinev	Oleg Strijenov
Macha	Ia Arepina
Pougachev	Sergeui Loukianov
Chavrabine	V. Dorofeev

Russians have filmed the same Alexandre Pushkin short story that served as a basis for the Yank-Italian pic, "The Tempest" (Par). It has less production aspects but a clearer story line. It emerges a well-made, well-told tale with possible exploitation aspects abroad but limited by being preceded by "Tempest."

Here a young Czarist officer is sent off to a military outpost for gambling and drunkeness. He falls in love with the captain's daughter but has to fight a sinister officer also condemned to the outpost. All is brought to a head by the conquering arrival of a peasant who has a tartar and peasant following, by passing himself off as the real Czar.

Film abounds in solidly photographed sequences plus fine acting and narrative. It rarely shows big battles or the court figures of the time, and even has the peasant usurper begging forgiveness of the people before his execution. Pic is in a scope process, and has fine technical aspects. It is well directed to make this an absorbing Russo costumer. Mosk.

(POLISH)

Locarno, July 21.

Polski State Film production and release. With Maria Wachowiak, Tadeusz Janczar, Gustaw Holoubek, Saturnin Zurawski. Directed by Wolkcieck Has. Screenplay, Stanislaw Dygat from story by St. Dygat; camera, Mieczyslaw Jahoda; editor, Zofia Dwornik. At Locarno Film Fest. Running time, 100 MINS.

Lidka	Maria Wachowiak
Paul	Tadeusz Janczar
Mirek	Gustaw Holoubek
Felix	Saturnin Zurawski

This film deals with upper class comportment in Poland just before the last war and during it. It sketches interclass relations and coming of age of an upper-class, meandering boy and a lower class girl who has married well. Its theme and rather melodramatic treatment make this a chancey item abroad except for some lingo or arty spots.

Pic is well mounted and displays a good feeling for the period and the disorientation of the upper classes. In keeping with the so-called new freedom in Poland, this tries to show both sides of the question, and leaves its hero a fairly sympathetic character. Acting is good and direction knowing if somewhat overdone in its nostalgia for early periods and its black painting of most of the upper classes. It emerges a curio item at best. Mosk.

BEST-BET AFTER BOWLING ALLEYS

Seeking new uses for old theatres and additional income for drive-ins, the theatre industry is eyeing diversification into the lucrative roller skating field, rated next to bowling as America's top recreational sport. The Roller Skating Foundation of America, the industry's trade association, has been receiving inquiries from exhibitors relating (1) to the conversion of indoor theatres and (2) to the construction of roller rinks as adjuncts to going drive-ins.

About 25 theatres in the U. S. mainly the far west, southwest and midwest, have already built roller skating facilities to serve as a source of supplemental income for the theatre business. Balaban & Katz, the Chicago theatre circuit, is among those mulling the possibility of converting some theatres into roller rinks. According to Joseph F. Shavelson, executive v.p. of the Roller Skating Foundation, it takes between $30,000 and $60,000 to convert a theatre to a roller rink. There are advantages as well as disadvantages to such conversions. Modern roller rinks require ample parking facilities and most of the old theatres are in areas where land for parking is not usually available. Another disadvantage is that the inclined theatre floors have to be levelled. Moreover, many theatres are badly shaped for a roller rink, which for best conditions requires a 70x100 foot rectangular area.

Angles

On the plus side, however, are such available facilities as a sound system, rest rooms, concession stands, and, of course, the building. A modern building, 120 ft. x 90 ft., especially built for a roller skating rink, costs between $96,000 and $180,000, excluding land costs. Drive-ins, located in sections where inexpensive land is available, would be more inclined to construct new buildings. Ozoners in mild climates can build outdoor rinks for about $30,000, employing a newly developed surface material.

A recent survey of drive-ins in the eastern area revealed that the majority of the outdoor theatres are located in areas where inexpensive land is available. As a consequence, it's believed that the construction of an indoor roller rink as an adjunct to the ozoner operation could give the theatre-owner a business that would result in income for 12 months of the year. In the period when the drive-in is closed because of weather conditions, the drive-in area could be employed for parking facilities. Since drive-ins have become full recreational spots, many including amusement centers, minature golf, children's playgrounds, and occasionally a swimming pool, it's felt that the addition of a roller rink would provide another money-making

British Cinemas Showed Nearly 15% Gross Drop in 1st Quarter From '58

London, July 28.

The 3,829 cinemas operating in Britain during the first quarter of this year, with seating capacity totalling 3,630,000, showed $52,217,000 (14.9%) drop in gross boxoffice take compared with first quarter of 1958. Admissions, at 162,901,000, were 18.3% down in the same period, and 1,000,000 below the level of the fourth quarter of last year.

An increase of just a bit better than ½c over the 1958 fourth quarter in the average take per admission brought the average to 32½c., which was almost entirely accounted for by houses seating 1,501 to 2,000. Here the average per admission went up 1½c. over the previous quarter.

A breakdown, prepared by the Board of Trade on these official figures, indicates that smaller theatres once more showed much greater declines in admissions than the larger. The 870 houses seating 500 and under, took a 23.3% drop over the first quarter of 1958; the 1,514 seating 501-1,000, with 46,036,000 admissions, were 22.5% down; the 817 holding 1,001-1,500, admissions totalling 43,393,000, dropped 18.2%; the 1,501-2,000 seaters (37,218,000 admissions) were down by 13.8%.

The BOT points out that the decline in admissions as compared with a year earlier was again smallest in the London and South Eastern region, where 560 cinemas reported 37,405,000 admissions and registered a decline of 14.1%, and that a particularly large drop (23.3%, with 385 cinemas reporting 14,123,000 attendances) occurred in the Northern region where a new television station opened during the quarter. Also in the Welsh and Southern regions

'Woodpecker' Mdse. Nest Moving to Coast

Hollywood, July 28.

Walter Lantz shifts his merchandising unit which licenses "Woody Woodpecker" and other cartoon characters for commercial uses to the Coast from Chicago around Sept. 1.

Producer is remodelling part of his studio here to provide room for operation, which will bring all Lantz activities under one roof.

Velde, Lewis and Lober as Veeps At United Artists

United Artists strengthened its top executive echelon last week with the election of three new vice-presidents—James R. Velde, Roger H. Lewis and Louis Lober. All of the positions are newly-created.

Velde, who was general sales manager, became v.p. in charge of domestic sales. Lewis moved up to v.p. in charge of advertising, publicity and exploitation from his present post as national director thereof. Lober became v.p. in charge of foreign operations. He formerly was manager of the foreign department.

Stepping into Lewis' former title is Fred Goldberg, who was named UA national director of advertising, publicity and exploitation. He had been Lewis' executive assistant.

The entire ad-pub and exploitation department will continue under the supervision of Max E. Youngstein, UA v.p. and one of the partners in the management team which took over UA eight years ago. At the sales level, William J. Heineman, also a v.p. and a partner, continues in his position of director of sales, and Lober will function under Arnold Picker, UA's foreign sales v.p.

Commenting on the election of the new veeps, prez Arthur B. Krim explained that it reflected "the same spirit of growth internally that the company has been able to achieve in the entertainment industry."

Heineman, Lewis, Mort Nathanson, UA's publicity manager and now elevated to a new and international status, and Seymour Poe, producer's rep, have left for London to view "Solomon and Sheba" there. When they return, a number of promotional meetings will be scheduled to "shake down" the new working order.

AB-PT Equals 90c On ½ of 1959

American Broadcasting - Paramount Theatres racked up a net operating profit of $3,886,000, equal to 90c a share, for the six-month stanza of the current fiscal year. The profit represents a 28% increase over the $3,042,000, or 70c a share, recorded for the comparable period of last year.

Estimated net profit for the second quarter of 1959 rose to $1,573,000 (36c a share) from $1,188,000 (27c a share), a 32% increase over the corresponding quarter of 1958.

According to AB-PT prexy Leonard Goldenson, the theatre division had its best second quarter since 1955. The showing, he added, more than made up for the first quarter deficit and resulted in an overall six-month improvement over last year.

The ABC television network, Goldenson reported, continued to improve its competitive position. He said that in markets where the three networks have equal competitive facilities, ABC-TV showed the largest increase in share of audience for the current tv season. He also noted that the past three months have been an active selling period for the 1959-60 schedule of programs and that the scope of the net's fall programming structure will be enlarged by programming, for the first time, the 10:30-11 p.m. slot throughtout the week.

It was also disclosed that Am-Par Records, an AB-PT subsidiary, continued to show improved results, being represented recently on the best-selling charts with four of the top 10 most popular single records.

Par Pays 50c Divvy

Board of directors of Paramount Pics last week declared a quarterly dividend of 50c per share on the company's common stock.

Melon is payable Sept. 11 to stockholders of record Sept. 1.

Manchester Daily Raps Roger Lewis

[He's Promoted]

Manchester, N.H., July 28.

Continuing its insistence upon censorship of its own film theatre ads, the Manchester Union-Leader, New Hampshire's largest newspaper, has published a lengthy editorial criticizing Roger H. Lewis of United Artists, who, the newspaper said, "declares that the calibre of movie ads is going to get worse instead of better, and that his company doesn't intend to be hampered or intimidated by what he chooses to call backstair censorship by newspapers."

"Mr. Lewis knows, just as millions of others know," the editorial said, "that the movie industry constantly and continually exploits the vulgar and obscene with no other purpose in mind than to stimulate boxoffice action.

"We firmly believe the industry, time and again, takes the most offensive, most suggestive scene from the film and then surrounds it with tricky words and phrases of double meaning and outright ambiguity and offers it as an inducement, nay a sensual stimulation, to lure the customer inside.

"No, Mr. Lewis, perhaps we can't stop your multi-million dollar traffic in muck. But we say this: don't peddle it to this newspaper. If you do, we will continue to flush it into the sewer where it belongs."

New Pix Boosting Det.; 'Circus' Wow $26,000 'Pennies' Bright 21G, 'Ship' Solid 22G, 'Murder' Huge 20G, 4th

Detroit, July 28.

Five stout newcomers are giving downtown biz a great hypo this week. "Big Circus" is wham at Palms. "Don't Give Up Ship" shapes solid at Michigan while "Five Pennies" at Madison looks real bright. "Legend of Tom Dooley" looms torrid at Broadway-Capitol. "Holiday for Lovers" is rated good at the Fox.

Meanwhile, "Anatomy of A Murder" stays terrific in fourth round at United Artists. "North by Northwest" looks fine in third week at the Adams. "Middle of Night" is strong in second week at Trans-Lux Krim. "South Seas Adventure" rolls along sensationally in 43d session at Music Hall.

'Diary' Dandy $14,000, Denver; 'Hole' 14½G, 2d

Denver, July 28.

Although the city is loaded with holdovers, biz is holding up nicely. Only one newcomer, "Diary of Anne Frank," is great at the Centre. Ace holdover looks to be "Hole in Head," stout in second round at Paramount. "Nun's Story" still is fine in third session at the Denver.

Estimates for This Week

Aladdin (Fox) (1,324; 90-$1.80)—"South Pacific" (20th) (6th wk). Good $4,500. Last week, $6,000.

Paramount (Indie) (2,100; 75-$1.25)—"Hole in Head" (UA) (2d wk). Solid $14,500. Last week, $24,000.

'Pork' Rich $14,000 In Toronto; 'Ship' Big 20G, 'Earth' Great 9½G, 3d

Toronto, July 28.

Among newcomers, "Pork Chop Hill" and "Don't Give Up Ship" loom tops, with biz generally excellent around the city. "Hercules" in second stanza shapes hefty, ditto such holdovers as "This Earth is Mine," "Room at the Top" and "Five Pennies." "South Pacific" is pushing ahead in sixth frame while "Diary of Anne Frank" still is rated wow.

Estimates for This Week

Downtown, Glendale, Prince of Wales, State (Taylor) (1,059; 995; 1,200; 695; 75-$1) — "Hercules" (WB) (2d wk). Swell $17,000. Last week, in 10-house tiein, record $85,000.

Eglinton, Palace, Runnymede, University (FP) (1,080; 1,485; 1,385; 1,556; 50-$1) — "Don't Give up Ship" (Par). Big $20,000. Last week, "Rhapsody" (M-G) and "Flame and Flesh" (M-G), at first three houses, $13,000; latter three, "John Paul Jones" (WB), $5,000.

Heat Sloughs Hub; 'Train' Fast $17,000, 'Scapegoat' Wow 19G, 'Circus' 12G

Boston, July 28.

Solid week of heat with mercury hitting 90° will slough deluxers hard currently. Launching of four new films failed to overcome inertia. Biggest is "Last Train From Gun Hill" at the Memorial although "Big Circus" at Paramount is comparably as great. "Mummy" is potent at the Pilgrim. "Scapegoat" looks standout with wow takings.

"Hole in Head" is pacing the holdovers in fourth week at the State. "Anatomy of Murder" holding up nicely at the Gary in third. "Nun's Story" is still great at Met in fifth round. "Horse Soldiers" shapes nice at Orpheum in fifth. "Don't Give Up Ship" looms okay at Astor in fourth stanza. "Room at Top" holds up fine at Kenmore in the 11th week.

State (Loew) (3,600; 90-$1.50)—"Hole in Head" (UA) (4th wk). Big $10,000. Last week, $15,000.

'Beauty' Fairish $6,000, L'ville; 'Murder' $7,500, 'Life' Stout 5G, H.O.s

Louisville, July 28.

First-run trade shapes normal this week. Mary Anderson, with "Verboten" and "Face of a Fugitive," is not particularly outstanding. "Sleeping Beauty" at regular tariff at Rialto is fine. Third week of "Anatomy of a Murder" at United Artists is neat. Still going strong is "Imitation of Life" at the Kentucky in thirteenth round, where nearly as big as some opening week.

Estimates for This Week

Brown (Fourth Avenue) (1,200; 60-90)—"Love Is My Profession" (Kings) (5th wk). Big $4,000 in final 6 days, after last week's $4,500.

Kentucky (Switow) (900; 75-$1.25) — "Imitation of Life" (U). Still sturdy in 13th week at $5,000, same as last week.

Mary Anderson (People's) (1,000; 60-90) — "Verboten" (Col) and "Face of a Fugitive" (Col). Medium $4,500. Last week, "Hercules" (WB) (3d wk), $5,000.

Rialto (Fourth Ave.) (3,000; 60-90)—"Sleeping Beauty" (BV). First local showing at regular scale doing barely fair $6,000. Last week, "Say One For Me" (20th) (3d wk), $6,500.

United Artists (UA) (3,000; 75-$1.25)—"Anatomy of a Murder" (Col) (3d wk). Smash $7,500 after second week's $8,000.

'Murder' Mighty $35,000 in Cincy

Cincinnati, July 28.

Hefty newcomers and strong holdovers are rocketing Cincy grosses to holiday strata this stanza. Biggest push is by "Anatomy of a Murder," sock day-dater at Shor's downtown Keith's and hilltop Twin Drive-In. "Horse Soldiers" is in fast stride at the flagship Albee. "Hercules" retains plenty power in second week at Palace. "Nun's Story" remains in fourth frame on mainline. "Five Pennies" holds okay in fourth week at suburban Valley. Long-run "South Seas Adventure" is on the upbeat with lift from Cincy Reds' out-of-town rooters.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (3,100; 90-$1.25) — "Horse Soldiers" (UA). Sturdy $13,000. Last week, "Nun's Story" (WB) (3d wk), at 90-$1.50 scale, $11,000.

Capitol (SW-Cinerama) (1,376; $1.20-$2.65)—"South Seas Adventure" (Cinerama) (39th wk). Fine $19,000 with assist from extra shows for visitors during home stay of Cincy Reds. Last week, $18,500.

Grand (RKO) (1,400; 90-$1.50)—"Nun's Story" (WB) (m.o.) Good $8,000. Last week, "Don't Give Up Ship" (Par) (m.o.), at 90-$1.25 scale, eight days, $7,000.

Keith's (Shor) (1,500; 90-$1.25)—"Anatomy of a Murder" (Col). Wham $17,000. Holds. Last week, "This Earth Is Mine" (U) (2d wk), $7,500.

Palace (RKO) (2,600; 90-$1.25)—"Hercules" (WB) (2d wk). Strong $15,000 in wake of $23,500 preem for downtown tops in some months.

Twin Drive-In (Shor) (1,600 cars; 90-$1.25)—"Anatomy of a Murder" (Col). Tall $18,000, showing on one side of double screen. Last week, "This Earth Is Mine" (U) (2d wk), $8,000.

Valley (Wiethe) (1,200; $1-$1.50) —"Five Pennies" (Par) (4th wk). Okay $6,000. Holds for fifth week. Last week, $6,300.

'CIRCUS' LIVELY 10G, INDPLS.; 'STORY' 6G, 3D

Indianapolis, July 28.

Biz is spotty at first-run theatres here this stanza, holdovers again dominating the setup. Hottest new starter is "Big Circus," which is doing well at Circle to lead city. "Hole in Head" in second stanza at Loew's continues solid. "Nun's story" looms nice in third Keith's stanza.

Estimates for This Week

Circle (Cockrill-Dolle) (2,800; 75-90)—"Big Circus" (AA). Big $10,000. Last week, "Last Train from Gun Hill" (Par), $7,500.

Indiana (C-D) (3,200; 75-90) — "Hercules" (WB) (2d wk). Oke $7,000. Last week, $16,000.

Loew's (Loew's) (2,427; 90-$1.25) —"Hole in Head" (UA) (2d wk). Nifty $8,000. Last week, $12,000.

'Murder' Hot $19,000, Pitt; 'Story' 15G, 4th

Pittsburgh, July 28.

City is loaded with holdovers and extended-runs but biz is holding nicely. Standout newcomer is "Anatomy of a Murder," big at the Harris. Ace holdover is "Nun's Story," still great in fourth at Warner. Also smash is "Hole in Head," which is getting almost as much in second round as opening week at the Penn.

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Shea) (1,635; 85-$1.50)—"Holiday For Lovers" (20th). Sluggish $6,000. Last week, "This

'Murder' Fast $15,000 In Balto; 'Darby' Fair 10G, 'Hole' Sock 9G in 2d

Baltimore, July 28.

New product and favorable weather have helped the first-run situation here. Making the biggest impression for a newcomer is "Anatomy of a Murder" which opened big at the Stanley. "Darby O'Gill and Little People" shapes fairish in first at Hipp. "Hole in the Head" still is smash in second at the Town.

Also on the credit side are "Room at Top," stout in 13th frame at the Playhouse. "Nun's Story" is good in fourth at the New. "Last Train From Gun Hill" is nice in opener at the Mayfair.

Estimates for This Week

Century (R-F) (3,200; 50-$1.25)—"Room 43" (Indie). Slow $6,500. Last week, "Mummy" (U) and "Curse of Undead" (U), $6,000.

'Circus' Loud $15,000, Buff; 'Train' Good 11G

Buffalo, July 28.

Trade shapes spotty here this stanza with some of newcomers not measuring up to expectancy. "Big Circus" looms as standout new entrant with fancy takings at Lafayette. "Last Train From Gun Hill" is just good on opening round at Paramount, but "Day of Outlaw" is rated mild on initial frame at the Buffalo. "Anatomy of a Murder" looks big in third frame at Century while "Nun's Story" is sturdy in third at the Center.

Estimates for This Week

Buffalo (Loew) (3,500; 70-$1)—"Day of Outlaw" (Indie) and "Riot in Juvenile Prison" (UA). Mild $8,000. Last week, "Horse Soldiers" (UA) (3d wk), $5,000 at $1.25 top.

Center (AB-PT) (3,000; 70-$1)—"Nun's Story" (WB) (3d wk). Sturdy $9,000. Last week, $12,000.

Century (UATC) (2,700; 70-$1.25) — "Anatomy of a Murder" (Col) (3d wk). Big $10,000. Last week, $10,500.

Lafayette (Basil) (3,000; 60-$1)—"Big Circus" (AA) and "Rawhide Trail" (AA). Fancy $15,000. Last week, "Sleeping Beauty" (BV) (2d wk), $4,000.

Paramount (AB-PT) (3,000; 70-$1)—"Last Train from Gun Hill" (Par) and "Hidden Homicide" (Indie). Good $11,000. Last week, "Hercules" (WB) and "Island of Lost Women" (WB) (2d wk), $12,000.

Teck (Loew) (1,200; 70-$1.25)—"Hole in Head" (UA) (2d wk). Good $10,000. Last week, $15,000.

Cinema (Martina) (450; 70-$1)—"This Earth Is Mine" (3d wk). Okay $2,000. Last week, $2,200.

'North' Socko 11G, Mpls.; 'Story' 7G

Minneapolis, July 28.

Trade continues encouragingly brisk and justifying the large number of holdovers. "The Big Circus" and "Five Pennies" are new but only the latter is good.

It's fifth week for hard-ticket "South Seas Aventure" still smash at Century. Fourth round of "Nun's Story" shapes big at Lyric. Second for "North By Northwest" is smash at the Gopher.

Estimates for This Week

Academy (Mann) (947; 85-$1.25) — "Darby O'Gill" (BV) (2d wk). Okay $4,500. Last week, $6,000.

Century (SW-Cinerama) (1,150; $1.75-$2.65)—"South Seas Adventure" (Cinerama) (5th wk). Still smash at $22,000. Last week, $23,800.

Gopher (Berger) (1,000; 85-$1)—"North by Northwest" (M-G) (2d wk). Smash $11,000. Last week, $13,000.

Lyric (Par) (1,000; $1-$1.45) — "Nun's Story" (WB) (4th wk). Holding at tall $7,000. Last week, $9,000.

RKO Orpheum (RKO) (2,800; 85-$1)—"Five Pennies" (Par). Fairly good $8,000. Last week, "Last Train From Gun Hill" (Par) (2d wk), $6,500.

RKO Pan (RKO) (1,800; 75-90)—"H-Man" (Col) and "Woman Eater" (Col). Good $5,000. Last week, "Don't Give Up Ship" (Par) (4th wk), $5,000 at 85c-$1 scale.

State (Par) (2,200; 90-$1)—"Big Circus" (AA). Very well sold but city doesn't go for circus pix. Looks poor $6,000. Last week, "Horse Soldiers" (UA) (3d wk), $4,500.

Suburban World (Mann) (800; 85) — "Room at Top" (Cont) (2d run) (2d wk). Good here just as it was downtown where it had a long run. Fine $2,000. Last week, $2,500.

World (Mann) (400; 85-$1.25) — "Love Is My Profession" (Kings) (4th wk). Lofty $5,000. Last week, $6,000.

'PORGY,' 'NORTH,' 'HOLE' BIG GUNS

Chicago, July 28.

With few free sideshows in town and pleasant weekend weather, Chi first-runs are headed for hefty tallies again currently. Blockbuster array is now joined by "Porgy and Bess," bowing with great $27,500 at McVickers on roadshow policy. Only other new bill is Monroe's "The Young Land" and "Juke Box Rhythm Racket," expecting oke $5,000.

Holdovers generally are taking fat coin. "Last Train from Gun Hill" is excellent at Roosevelt second while "Diary of Anne Frank," continuous at the Surf, shapes big in ditto frame. "Anatomy of a Murder" looks torrid in third Woods session.

"North by Northwest" is rated great in fourth stanza at United Artists. "Nun's Story" looms sock in fourth week at the Chicago. "Horse Soldiers" lags with so-so fifth week at State-Lake. Esquire's "Five Pennies" is brisk in fourth round. Same sesh for "Darby O'Gill and Little People" looks good at Garrick.

Oriental's "Hole in Head" is hotsy for sixth lap. Third term of "Room at Top" shapes socko at Carnegie. "Al Capone" is sturdy in 12th stanza at Todd's Cinestage, while "Gigi" still is dandy in 22d week at the Loop.

Estimates for This Week

Carnegie (Telem't) (485; $1.50)—"Room at Top" (Cont) (3d wk). Hot $5,000. Last week, $6,000.

Chicago (B&K) (3,900; 90-$1.80)—"Nun's Story" (WB) (4th wk). Sock $33,000. Last week, $34,000.

Esquire (H&E Balaban) (1,350; $1.25-$1.80)—"Five Pennies" (Par) (4th wk). Trim $12,000. Last week, $14,000.

Garrick (B&K) (850; 90-$1.25)—"Darby O'Gill" (BV) (4th wk). Nice $10,000. Last week, $12,500.

Loop (Telem't) (606; 90-$1.80)—"Gigi" (M-G) (22d wk). Exciting $12,000. Last week, $12,500.

McVickers (JL&S) (1,305; $1.80-$3.50) — "Porgy and Bess" (Col). Launched to great $27,500.

Monroe (JL&S) (1,000; 65-90)—"Young Land" (Col) and "Juke Box Rhythm Racket" (Col). Good $5,000. Last week, sub-runs.

Oriental (Indie) (3,400; 90-$1.80)—"Hole in Head" (UA) (6th wk). Dandy $25,000. Last week, $29,000.

Palace (SW-Cinerama) (1,434; $1.25-$3.40)—"South Seas Adven-

Providence, July 28.

"Hole In Head" is proving a gold mine for Loew's State currently. "Nun's Story" also is hep in second at Majestic. RKO Albee's "Darby O'Gill" is happy, also in second. Second round of "Don't Give Up Ship" is rated good at Strand.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (2,200; 65-90)—"Darby O'Gill" (BV) and "King of Wild Stallions" (AA) (2d wk). Very happy $6,000 after $10,000 in first.

Majestic (SW) (2,200; 65-80)—"Nun's Story" (WB) (2d wk). Neat $5,500 after $9,000 opener.

State (Loew) (3,200; 54-80)—"Hole In Head" (UA). Rousing $15,000. Last week, "Horse Soldiers" (UA) (3d wk), $4,500.

Strand (National Realty) (2,200; 65-80)—"Ask Any Girl" (M-G) and "Gunfight at Dodge City" (UA). Opened Sunday (26) to just mild biz. Last week, "Don't Give Up Ship" (Par) and "Gunmen From Laredo" (Col) (2d wk), good $5,000.

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net; i.e., without usual tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include the U. S. amusement tax.

H.O.'s, Hot Weather Dent B'way B.O.; 'Lovers' Fine 32G, 'Hole' Hot 63G, 2d, 'Circus' Good 62G, 2d, 'Story' Big 142G

Return of hot and humid weather the latter part of last week is taking its toll at Broadway deluxers in the current session. The warmer temperatures made such a dent at the boxoffice that even much cooler weather Sunday and Monday (27) won't be able to recover the losses. Absence of many fresh entrants, too, is a downbeat factor.

One major newcomer, "Holiday For Lovers," is heading for a bang-up $32,000 or close opening week at the Paramount. Other new entrant, "The Possessors" landed only a so-so $8,500 at the arty Paris on initial stanza.

"Hole in Head" continued its amazing pace with a great $63,000 for second session at the State. "Big Circus" with stageshow is holding with a very good $62,000 probable for second stanza at the Roxy. First week topped expectations, getting a solid $76,000.

"Nun's Story" plus stageshow continues money champ with a very big $142,000 likely in current (6th) session at the Music Hall. It stays a seventh week before opening "North by Northwest" on Aug. 6.

"Porgy and Bess" continued at capacity with $37,000 in fourth stanza at the Warner, now being in fifth week. "Anatomy of a Murder" still is great, with $40,000 likely for fourth round at the Criterion and $19,500 likely for same week at the arty Plaza, where day-dating.

"Horse Soldiers" continues socko with $24,500 in sight for current (5th) session at the Astor. "10 Seconds To Hell" shapes slow $7,000 in second frame at the Victoria, with "Blue Denim" replacing tomorrow (Thurs.).

"Diary of Anne Frank" continues nicely with $15,000 for 19th round at the Palace, same as previous week. "Middle of Night" held at trim $12,000 in sixth week at the Forum and $7,500 for same session at the arty Normandie.

"Five Pennies" looks to wind sixth (final) stanza with mild $16,000 at the Capitol, "Last Train From Gun Hill" replacing today (Wed.). "John Paul Jones" still is limping with dull $5,500 for sixth round at the Rivoli, with "The Fisherman" replacing Aug. 5.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,094; 75-$2)—"Horse Soldiers" (UA) (5th wk). This round ending tomorrow (Thurs.) looks to hit sock $24,500. Fourth was $31,000. Stays on, at this gait.

Capitol (Loew) (4,820; $1-$2.50)—"Five Pennies" (Par) (6th-final wk). Sixth week ended yesterday (Tues.) was fair $16,000 in 6 days. The fifth, $23,500. "Last Train

Paramount (Fox-Evergreen) (3,107; 90-$1.50)—"Last Train from Gun Hill" (Par). Okay $8,000 or near. Last week, "Say One for Me" (20th) (3d wk), $4,300.

'Earth' Solid 10G, Omaha; 'Circus' 7G

Omaha, July 28.

Big story at the downtown first-runs this stanza concerns the fabulous "South Pacific," entering in 40th week at the Cooper. Rather than slipping, it's now climbing and is back to near-capacity biz. "This Earth Is Mine" is strong at Orpheum but "Watusi" is just so-so at the State. Second semester of "Big Circus" is okay at the Omaha.

Estimates for This Week

Cooper (Cooper) (708; $1.50-$2.20)—"South Pacific" (Magna) (40th wk). Sensational $7,500. Last week, $7,000.

Omaha (Tristates) (2,066; 75-$1)—"Big Circus" (AA) (2d wk). Okay $7,000. Last week, $8,500.

Orpheum (Tristates) (2,877; 75-$1)—"This Earth Is Mine" (U). Excellent $10,000 or near. Last week, "Nun's Story" (WB) (2d wk), $8,500.

State (Cooper) (743; $1)—"Watusi" (M-G). Fair $5,000. Last week, "Sleeping Beauty" (BV) and "Grand Canyon" (BV) (5th wk), $5,000 at $1.45 top.

'North' Wham $20,000, St. Loo; 'Murder' Ditto

St. Louis, July 28.

Big ones this stanza are "Anatomy of a Murder," wow at the St. Louis, and "North by Northwest" great at Loew's. Mighty holdover biz is shaping for "Hole in Head" in second week at Orpheum. "Don't Give Up Ship" shapes stout in second at Fox while "Sleeping Beauty" in seventh frame at Pageant looms big.

Mex Film Industry Facing Crisis In Prod., Distrib, Exhib Branches; Need to Abandon Makeshift Setup

Mexico City, July 21.

They're crying the blues here, with complete Latin abandon over the picture industry's future. There is no healthy state of affairs despite official and industry protestations to this effect. A check of production, distribution and exhibition executives brought forth freely the comment that, in general, the Mexican industry faces a "frank crisis in all three branches." Cautiously enough, none of the industry top brass cares to have his name pegged to this statement.

Concensus of opinion is that if the current blundering and makeshift efforts continue for another two years, there may be "bankruptcy" on all fronts. Least effected will be the two major exhibition chains controlling about 75% of all houses in the Republic, the handful of lesser chains and the strongest of the independent exhibitors. But poorly financed independents may be squeezed out of the picture altogether.

Production End Weak

The production end is equally weak, and bound to become weaker now that the film Bank has intimated that it will be putting up coin only for fully approved quality scripts. This has caused considerable anguish among the "fringe" producers here and the quickie elements who would have to seek capital elsewhere. And a lot of the hangers-on, the so-called patrons of the film industry, will disappear.

Producers are already preparing what are almost tearful petitions to the Film Bank asking that they not be left out in the cold. And as a practical gimmick, they are turning to the ever-present "influential persons" to exert pressure so that the hard Film Bank policy is reversed. But apparently the government has had more than enough of film industry "inefficiency" and is not inclined to "protect" so-called producers who "get rich at the expense of public funds without investing a penny of their own."

Indicative of the seriousness of the situation, even as it affects better financed operations, is the recent dissolution of the partnership of Oscar Brooks and Ernesto Enriquez. Both are top rank producers here but they had to part company because production activity did not produce enough dividends to be split two ways.

Distrib Setup Chaotic

As for distribution, both Mexican and foreign, the situation is chaotic. Mexican films have grabbed a lot of exhibition time from Hollywood distributors, this is not bringing about the expected flow of peso profits because the public is shunning the stereotyped national production in most cases. On the international scene, Cimex has not been able to achieve the distrib necessary to bring coin from foreign markets.

Federico Heuer, of the Film Bank, confidently said that "everything will be straightened out in due time." But he is evasive as to when, and what new measures are to be taken. An evasive Heuer refused also to talk about a possible federal purchase of minority shares of Cesar Santos Galindo in the Churubusco Studios. This also is reported in film circles. Another strong report has it that a "revolutionary" change in the film biz may be announced shortly by the government.

Cinema Admish Freeze Hurts

Meanwhile, with no overnight solution in sight, mounting costs, the general boxoffice freeze on admissions, and a dip in attendance all aggravate the problem. One observer said, after returning from a tour of the U.S. and Europe, that in no other country has he seen as "bad" a situation as now exists in Mexico today.

Even the South American market, traditional for the Mex industry, is laying a turkey. Understood that far from producing revenue, poor exploitations and weak distrib is killing off this market. Reported that first-run releases of Mexican product total no more than two a piece in Cuba, Argentina, Venezuela, Brazil, etc. They have to be satisfied with second-run and nabe houses. Further, in secondary markets such as Bolivia, etc., practice is to wait until copies are freed from general showings in Peru, Colombia and other areas. All this means a downward dip in receipts, with this not helped any by revaluations or weak currencies in South American areas.

One Outspoken Critic

While the big boys refuse to make any public statements, cameraman Agustin Jimenez has no such compunction. "It's the fault of all of us," he said, "for we take less to work in bad pictures. And one must work to live." The constant diet of inferior pictures which result bring no prestige to Mexico nor its film workers, he added. And producers are only interested in turning out as many films as possible at the least cost to themselves.

The only hope for Mexico's floundering film industry appears to be a vigorous new Film Law. This has been talked about for some time now. It is expected that measure will be passed in 1960, with chief goals being to improve production so that markets both here and in the international field can be improved.

Italo Film Biz Worried Over Pix Aid Delay

Rome, July 21.

Italian film industry circles are worried over further delays which have held up government consideration of the long-pending new picture aid legislation.

The old law expired June 30 and has not been renewed or extended, thus virtually leaving the industry without a legal aid basis: i.e. producers making films in this period are taking a chance with their investments, naturally hoping (or expecting) that when voted, the new law will cover them via retroactivity as well as remain as proposed without subsequent legislative changes.

Fact that local filmakers are generally confident (though irked by red-tape delays) is evidenced by large number of pix of various importance currently being shot or about to begin in this country.

Counting "Yovanka and the Others," the DeLaurentiis item directed by Martin Ritt, which is the latest starer here, 15 feature pix are under way in Rome right now, with five more shooting exteriors around Italy. Fourteen other Italian features, most co-produced items, are currently under way in other countries, notably France and Spain.

JEROME ROBBINS COPS FRENCH LEGIT PRIZE

Paris, July 28.

Although the Theatre of Nations, which recently woundup its season, does not give out awards, the Young French Drama Critic's Circle decided to hand out kudos on its own. They are called The Challenges: Top prize went to the East German Opera-Comique for its staging of "The Tales of Hoffman." Jerome Robbins got the nod for the best choreography for his "Ballets U.S.A."

Other prizes went to Joan Littlewood for the best direction of the London Theatre Workshop presentation of Brendan Behan's "The Hostage." Best actress prize went to Rina Morelli in the Stoppa-Morelli Co. mounting of Diego Fabbri's "Figli D'Arte" (Children of the Road) from Italy, best dancer to Edouardo Serano with the Hispano Pilar Lopez Co. and best ballerina to Maria Orlando of the Royal Ballet of Stockholm.

FORD LATIN TV FILM?

Manhattan Atty. Jacob Gerstein In Paris for Dickering

Jacob Gerstein, Manhattan lawyer, flew last week to Paris to confer there on details which may culminate in a one-hour television program intended for use in Latin republics under Ford Motor Co. auspices.

Production details are not worked out but it is contemplated that the film special in mind will be shot by CRT Productions of Spain.

British Studio Labor Hassle Near Concord

London, July 28.

The trouble that led to a one-day token strike in British studios last Monday (20) now looks well on the way to being sorted out. The stoppage was called by the National Assn. of Theatrical and Kinematograph Employees, involved about 4,000 workers connected with production, and affected every studio excepting the Danzigers' New Elstree outfit.

The halt call was issued following the cancellation of a meeting skedded between NATKE and a committee of the British Film Producers Assn. to discuss revising the wage structure. The union claimed that the producers pulled out of the proposed get-together without warning, while the BFPA reps afterwards stated that the non-meeting was due to a misunderstanding. Anyway, a three-hour confab was held last Wed. (22) after the strikers had returned to work the day before. Another talk is set for Thursday (30) after the BFPA executive gets a report tomorrow (29).

The broad NATKE claim is for the pay rates of its members, which include many studio people not concerned directly with work on the floor, to be brought more into line with those of other labor grades in other studio unions.

Lococo Circuit in Arg. Booking Dollar-Costly Names Despite 'Depresh'

Buenos Aires, July 21.

The Lococo Circuit seems to be taking a big chance in a depression year, by booking dollar-costly names and acts for its major showcase, the Opera, which is celebrating its 23d anni. The circuit is reported now dickering with Marlene Dietrich, which would be a big "coup" for Buenos Aires, where there are many fans who still preserve records of "The Blue Angel," as prized possessions. The reported $6,000 asking price, works out at around 516,000 pesos. Dietrich's song, "Oh Johnny," is currently one of the best-sellers in sheet music and disks.

The circuit also was dickering recently with Silvana Pampanini, who was to have come from Chile. This deal is still not definite. Following three recitals by Peruvian singer Yma Sumac, who had not been here since 1937, the Lococos have singed Italian chansonnier Giacomo Rondinella, whose opening, scheduled for July 17, was postponed when the singer was held over in Sao Paolo, where he had great success. Rondinella was to have appeared on a double bill at the Opera.

On Aug. 6, the Lococo Circuit has "Stars of the Russian Ballet" opening at the Opera, for five days with two performances daily. Prices range from $3 to 50c.

The Ballet combines stars from the Bolshoi and Stanislavsky Theatres, the Leningrad Ballet and Moscow Dance Academy. Vadim Evlampiev is orchestra leader. A fillip is given to publicity by mentioning leading dancer Nathalie Dudinskaia as star of the Artkino film, "Swan Lake," which was a hit here two years ago.

Today's Theatre Inc. has been authorized to conduct a theatres business in New York, with capital stock of 200 shares, no par value. Herbert Semmel is a director and filing attorney.

Argentine Congressmen Lose Seats As Colon Makes With Big Reforms

CLAUDIO ARRAU'S RETURN

After 20 Years He's Hailed In Native Chile

Santiago, July 21.

Claudio Arrau, the Chilean concert pianist, came back to Chile, as "the hometown boy who made good," after being away 20 long years, and was overwhelmed with honors. After a series of sell-out concerts in Santiago, Valparaiso and Concepcion, he trekked to his native burg of Chillan for another performance. There his compatroits threw him a banquet and tagged him "illustrious son" of the community.

A sadness touched the visit. He chose the home of Eulogio Fuentes, an old lawyer friend of his late father, to rehearse for his concert last night (15) at the Central Theatre. During the rehearsal, his host died of a heart attack.

At last concert at the popularly-priced Caupolican Theatre in Santiago the capital city present him with a parchment naming him an "illustrious citizen," too.

Quality Angle Of French Pix Aid Puzzling

Paris, July 28.

The form that "quality" payments are to take under the new Film Aid Law is still being mulled in film circles here. From 1956 through '58, some 57 French films and coproductions got about $2,975,000 via this type of aid. And 13 new pix have already received coin this year, $40,000 to $150,000 per pic. The new quality setup is not quite clear as yet, but may follow the same pattern.

Original monies were given to pix that "by their nature could serve to open new perspectives for the French cinema, plus bolstering local and foreign prestige, and for the treatment of great important themes and problems in France." This will probably apply to the new aid, too, but a new special jury may have other ideas about which films fill these precepts.

In 1959, the three Cannes Film Fest prizewinners, now doing big boxoffice here, were all recipients of quality aid. They were "Orfeu Negro," "The 400 Blows" and "Hiroshima Mon Amour." Others that obtained aid were "Les Cousins," "I, A Negro," "Marie-Octobre," "Rendezvous Du Diable," "The Law," "Guts in the Sun"; "The Motorcycle Cops," the only comedy among them; "Tu Es Pierre," "Stars At Noon," and "La Sentence."

Four of the above were full-length documentaries and the others dramas. Producers are awaiting clarification of the new "quality" touchstones but most feel it will still go to those producers giving worthy new talents a chance and dealing with unique, offbeat subjects that will enhance French prestige at home and abroad.

PAKISTAN TO SPEND $2,000,000 ON PIX BIZ

Karachi, July 21.

Pakistan Government plans to spend one crore rupees (equal to about $2,000,000) in the development of the country's film industry. This allocation will be made by the government from funds of the second Five-Year Plan. About 75% of the money will be spent on studio equipment and the remaining 25% on cinema equipment.

When this plan takes material shape, the Pakistani studios will be completely modernized with the latest equipment. The crying need of having more and better class cinemas would be met to a great extent via this government outlay.

A suggestion to the State Dept. made by U.S. Ambassador to Argentina, Willard L. Beaulac, that an American opera name be sent to the Colon in B.A. as part of the ANTA-administered program has resulted in selection of Phyliss Curtin. She'll sing four performances of "Manon" there starting Aug. 21.

By NID EMBER

Buenos Aires, July 21.

There is a great tightening-up at the Colon Opera this year. For the 9th of July Argentine Independence Day Gala performance, Congressmen were flabbergasted on finding they had not been allocated free seats. Management assigned 15 stalls for the Senate and 30 for Deputies, which brought a great wail from those Congressmen most apt to bleat about the need for "austerity" in expenditure.

Regime also omitted the Champagne intermission supper traditionally served in the Golden Room of the Foyer on these occasions. The suppers not only involved considerable expense, but held up resumption of the performance for at least two hours.

Before the present Season (Argentine Winter) started on June 13, the Municipality's Cultural Secretary, Dr. Aldo Cocca, now the guiding hand through opera houses is still temporarily managed by Architect Juan P. Montero, stated that budget limitation would involve very considerable restriction of the Colon's brilliance. Season proper will run seven months; the Autumn cycle was taken up with Symphony concerts, with the participation of the Colon Orchestra and of the Buenos Aires Philharmonic. The former was conducted by Juan Jose Castro and the latter by guest conductor Jacques Singer, whose popularity with orchestra and public is proverbial, and who received a marked ovation at the conclusion of the Beethoven cycle.

Season will also include 30 ballet and 50 opera performances, plus 20 solo recitals. Two contemporary operas were heard in June, Arnold Schoenberg's monodrama "Erwartung," conducted by Roberto Kinsky, and Luigi Dallapiccola's opera "Volo di Notte," conducted by beginner Antonio Tauriello. The first was sung by Argentine soprano Sofia Bandin, probably the most difficult role of her career. Critical praise was more generous with the decor of these productions, than with the musical side, but the Management's daring in trying for novelty was respected, given the circumstances.

Impresario Cocca's opening press conference stressed the assistance the Colon is receiving this year from the U.S. Embassy, in making it easier to line up talent without big dollar fees. The two concerts by the Washington Symphony, under Howard Mitchell's baton, on June 19 and 20 were a sellout, and could not have been lined up without State Dept.—ANTA subsidy. Iriberri Concerts handled visit here and the gross for both concerts was well over 250,000 pesos. Limitation of the amount of "paper" deadheaded to politicos makes it better business now to stage concerts at the Colon. For the Washington Symphony's performances, even U.S. Embassy officials bought their own seats, setting the example for Argentine Congressmen.

Rose brocade curtains of the Colon loges are in process of renewal for the first time since the theatre opened 50 years ago. Stalls are also being renewed, while increased accomodation for booking offices and the press have been arranged. A rehearsal room has been opened up for orchestra. Stage lighting system is being modernized. All these expenditures must come out of income, so no wonder a tight hand is kept on the purse strings.

Byron Janis is due for concerts in August, both at the Colon and in other theatres. Jose Iturbi was here in June.

Jan Peerce single concerts Aug. 1 in McKinley High School, Honolulu, for George D. Oakley's Artists Service.

Alarcon of Giant Mex Circuit In New Plea for Higher Cinema Scales

Mexico City, July 28.

Exhibitor Gabriel Alarcon, of the vast Gold Chain, in a new appeal to city administration and federal authorities for a readjusted, higher cinema admission scales, warned that Mexico will lose out in seeing the super-spectacles already released and yet to be released in Hollywood.

This will not only mean that Mexican patrons will be deprived of "some of the best film entertainment of recent years" but also will represent a financial loss to exhibitors who are finding the going rough, according to Alarcon. He added that already Hollywood is crossing Mexico off its distribution lists for super spectacles such as "Ten Commandment" (Par), "War and Peace" (Par), "Around World in 80 Days" (UA) and others. But the tendency is continuing even in less ambitiously budgeted films, Alarcon pointed out. When a picture has a $3.000,000 to $5.000.000 budget, there is no profit in releasing it in Mexico when the cinema top price is four pesos (32c).

Current boxoffice freeze means that even the speculators cannot earn more than a maximum of 20.000 pesos ($1,600) daily. And this figure, Alarcon said, is often matched by even low-budgeted Mexican films of far inferior quality. Alarcon has the backing of exhibitors and the powerful National Chamber of the Film Industry in the current bid to get admissions in first-runs up to at least six pesos (48c) for ordinary program fare, and double this or more for spectaculars.

Mayor Ernesto Uruchurtu, who has steadfastly insisted that he will not allow a new boxoffice admission price, has no comment to make about the present exhibit campaign. His feeling on the matter of a low boxoffice scale have not changed.

As for exhibition of Mexican product, Alarcon said this was proceeding along normal lines and that talk of heavy backlog of canned films is "exaggerated." There are many films uncompleted, lacking trailers, press books, copies, sound dubbing, etc. But as for fully completed films, he said that the Gold Chain had only 10 awaiting exhibition time.

City of Chi Lawyers Over-Rule Cop-Censor On Polish '8th Day'

Chicago, July 28.

For only the second time, as far as the trade and legal profession here recalls, Chicago's legal department has reversed a Police Censor Board ban, this one affecting Continental's Polish-made "Eighth Day of the Week," which involves pre-martial sex induced by the Warsaw housing shortage. The Commies have also banned the feature, written by expatriate Marek Hlasko.

Technically, the action was the mayor's, but the decision actually was by Corporation Counsel John Melaniphy. He gave no reason for it. Continental's lawyers had pointed out that "Eighth Day" was verboten also in Poland, which found it most unflattering to the state.

Previously, Melaniphy had overruled the censors on Trans-Lux' "Case of Dr. Laurent," but with the difference that court action by the distributor had already been started.

Continental's Chicago counsel, state representative Abner Mikva, said he didn't know when the picture would be shown here. Likely possibilities in the fall, however, are the World Playhouse or the Surf.

(In the case of another film, "Garden of Eden," produced by the American Sunbathers Assn., and already court-approved in Massachusetts and Ohio, Melaniphy upheld a permit denial, and Mikra said suit would be filed probably within a fortnight. The ban, he stated, violates the first amendment.)

Preem Snubs Big Powers

London, July 28.

The major powers got a deliberate snub at the London preem of Columbia's "The Mouse That Roared." Members of diplomatic corps were invited—but only those representing the comparative "mice" among the countries, including Liberia, Israel, the Yemen, Ghana and Nepal.

List was pruned for publicity purposes, film being a comedy about a small country that declares war on the U.S. It didn't quite work out. Some minor powers resented being regarded as such — and not all representatives turned up. How small can you get?

Sol Fisher's Own 'Russian Fest' Of 8 USSR Revivals

Minneapolis, July 28.

Circuit owner Sol Fisher is trying to cut in on the present "rage" for Russian entertainment in U. S. with a "Russian Film Festival" at his local neighborhood Varsity theatre, adjacent to the U. of Minnesota. It's the first ever held in the territory.

Sol Hurok's "Russian Dance Festival" show out of Madison Square Garden is due here shortly for a three-day engagement and the latter garnering plenty of advance publicity as well as having large newspaper ads run for it. Hence, Fisher rounded up eight Russian pictures for his 14-day "Festival." He's actually stealing a march on the Hurok "Festival" with the screen one of his own.

In twin bill he's offering "Grand Concert" and "Boris Godunov," "Stone Flower" and "Concert of Stars," "Alexander Nevsky" and "The Fabulous Sadko" and "Potemkin" and "Stars of the Russian Ballet."

The regular Varsity admission of 85c has been upped to $1 during the "Festival."

Fisher is the only Twin Cities' exhibitor to have offered occasional Russian films, playing them at his "fine arts" Campus which also is located within shouting distance of the U. of Minnesota.

Wallis Renews Nathan

Hollywood, July 28.

Paul Nathan signed new five-year pact as associate producer with Hal Wallis Productions, starting Jan. 1, 1960.

Nathan has been with Wallis for past 15 years, during producer's entire tenure as an indie. He started as Wallis' secretary when latter headed Warner Bros. production.

MCP's Setup

Los Angeles, July 28.

Newly-formed MCP Film Distributing Co has closed a four-picture deal with Emerald Productions of Eugene, Ore., first release to be "Stump Run," starring Edgar Buchanan.

Remaining trio will be lensed in Panavision and color, and still are to be set.

Of Stanley Warner Grosses 'n' Girdles

Shields & Co. brokerage house recently estimated Stanley Warner profit as derived 78% from Latex and other diversified properties. However, SW sticks to its fixed auditing policy of giving no breakdowns between theatres and industrials within its constellation of income-producers.

A net profit for the 39-week period ending May 30 of $3,591,300, more than double the income for same period of a year ago, was recorded by Sannley Warner Corp. and its subsidiaries. Earnings are equivalent to $1.77 per share of common stock. For the comparable stanza of a year ago, the net income was $1,706,000, equal to 83c per share.

At the same time, the company revealed that the net profit for the quarter ending May 30 was $1.337,600, equal to 66c per share, as compared with a profit of $266.500, equivalent to 12c a share, for the same quarter a year ago. The net earnings for the most recent quarter was more than five times the profit for the corresponding quarter a year ago. Both the earnings for the 39-week period and for the third quarter are said to represent the highest profits in the history of the company.

For the current 39-week period, theatre admissions, merchandise sales and other income amounted to $92,869,800, an increase of 9.3% over the $84,953,000 for the corresponding 30 weeks of a year ago. As has been its long-time policy, Stanley Warner does not provide a breakdown as to the income from its theatre division, Cinerama activities, and International Latex Corp., its girdle, bras, baby pants, rubber gloves and pharmaceutical subsidiary.

During the 39 weeks ended May 30, unusual property dispositions, a writeoff of the cost of certain securities, less a profit realized on the sale of the securities resulted in a loss of $2.469,000. Because of losses from unusual property dispositions, there will be a saving of $925.000 in taxes. As a result, $925,000 of such losses has been charged against operating income for the 39 weeks, representing the equivalent of the federal income taxes which would have been payable had no such losses existed. The balance of $1,544.100 has been charged to earned surplus, equal to 76c per share. For the same period of a year ago, the earned surplus was $682.000, or 33c per share.

For the third quarter, $1,434.600, equal to 71c per share, was charged to earned surplus as compared with $553,400, or 26c per share, for the same stanza last year.

Assoc. British Picture Report Tips That England's Com'l TV Near Peak

London, July 28.

The warning issued to Associated British Picture Corp. Ltd. stockholders by chairman Sir Philip Warter in the ABPC annual report that they "should not assume that the record figures under review will be maintained" is read here as still further confirmation that commercial tv operations in Britain have reached or are near their ultimate profit peak. Because it's clear that, not unexpectedly, it's the subsidiary ABC Television that is the major moneymaking outfit in the group, though the report shows that the film-making distribution and exhibition side is holding its own fairly well.

From the film business, in fact, ABPC raked in trading profits of $6,675.000, only about $500,000 less than the average scored over the four years before the company went into tv in 1955. Television, though came up with a solid $8,542,000 in this 32d year of the group's operations to bring in an all-time high. Total dividend for the year is 60%, less tax.

The report reveals that ABPC now operates 349 cinemas with a net book value of about $44.000.000, these including 15 in which Todd-AO has been installed at a cost of some $840,000. In the section on tv, the report refers to the acquisition of its new subsidiary Iris Productions Ltd., headquartered at Teddington Studios.

Other points in the report are that $630,000 has been set aside for a bonus to the corporation staff and that there's concern over the future of the newsreel. In a brochure issued to stockholders simultaneously other facts brought out include that the staff totals 15,000; 12 artists and six producers and directors are now under film contract, while three players are under tv contract; Teddington tele studios, when fully made over, will have 625-line equipment in anticipation of Britain's changeover to the Continental lineage system; and that, with 3,500,000 homes reached, ABC-TV's audience at the weekend is larger than that of any other commercial tv company.

After the annual meeting on Aug. 14, meetings will be held to sanction bringing the articles of association up to date.

Jewish Center Choices

San Antonio, July 28.

Seven attractions have been lined up for a selected art film series opening at the San Antonio Jewish Community Center. They are: "Diary of a Country Priest" (France), "Murderers Among Us" (Germany), "The Good Earth" (U.S.), "Ten Days That Shook The World" (USSR), "The Quiet One" (U.S.), "The Green Man" (Great Britain), and "Ditte, Child of Man" (Denmark).

All showings are scheduled for alternate Wednesday nights with the first pic shown on July 22.

Surviival of Li'l Theatres Theme Of Ohio Session

Cincinnati, July 28.

Allied States units of West Virginia, Indiana, and Kentucky are co-sponsoring a joint Ohio Valley indoor and drive-in convention Sept. 14-16 at the Sheraton-Gibson Hotel here. West Virginia Allied, under the direction of Rube Shor, will host the meeting. Working with Shor on the general convention committee are Richard T. Lochry, president of Allied Theatres Owners of Indiana, and E. L. Ornstein, president of Allied of Kentucky.

The regional convention, it's said, was developed to offset the drop in exhibitor attendance at state meetings caused by the large number of small theatres that have closed in this area in recent years. It's felt that one well-attended meeting for the Ohio Valley area will benefit exhibitors and will give speakers, both from exhibition and distribution, a larger audience.

Theme of the convention is the survival of the independent theatre, both small town and sub-run operations. It's contended by Allied that (1) each town, no matter the size, is entitled to a showcase operation, (2) that sub-runs are still an important part of exhibition because of their ability to assure complete coverage of all areas and maximum profit on pictures, (3) the drive-in operation has come of age and should be considered an important and integral part of exhibition.

Discussions at the joint convention will include Allied's "white paper," the American Congress of Exhibitors and "exactly what the independent theatre can expect of it in the future."

Further Litigation On 'Star Is Born' Feature; Warners Vs. Sid Luft

Los Angeles, July 28.

While Sid Luft's request for court permission to file a $14,000,000 damage suit against Jack L. Warner and Warner Bros. Pictures Inc., over "A Star Is Born" and two other film projects was denied, ruling by Superior Judge H. Eugene Breitenbach left the door open for an amended complaint to be filed later.

Luft, husband of Judy Garland, had asked that he be allowed to file a cross-complaint to a $30,000 suit brought against him last December over a note signed by him.

Proposed action, in which Luft was joined as plaintiffs by Miss Garland and Transcona Enterprises, in which couple is partnered, asked payment of $4,000,000 claimed as "overcharges" made by WB against "Star," and another $10,000,000 figured as profits from two films which never were made but had been contracted for by WB in a three-pix deal.

Luft contended in counter-suit submitted to court that receipts from "Star" were between $8-$9,000,000 but due to overcharges there were no profits. Among the $4,000,000 overcharges claimed was $1,000,000 for ad-promotion, when contract stipulated no more than $175,000 would be spent for this purpose, according to complaint.

Luft also alleged in counter-complaint that the $30,000 note given to Warner was an evidence of an advance, given for a combo vacation and promotional tour of Europe for "Star," to have been repaid out of profits, which were non-existent.

Can U.S. Majors Make Good On Russian Films For State Dept.?

A number of independents would like to take over Soviet films which have been assigned to the major companies for release in the United States. At the moment it looks as if such switches just aren't possible.

Reason is the language of the basic film deal with the Soviets, which states very specifically that "major distribution" is required on the seven Russian films which the majors have purchased.

The indies who are interested feel that, considering the very nature of the market, and the majors' own past history with foreign film, the Soviets would actually be better off having their films released by smaller outfits who can take some time selling them. It's pretty much the same theory that applies to most foreign pictures that aren't aimed directly at the mass market.

Some of the majors themselves aren't too happy with the setup. They know, on the one hand, that selling a Soviet film commercially isn't going to be easy unless it's a picture of unusual quality; and those who have seen all of the presently-involved seven Russian features say only one or at the most two qualify under that description.

On the other hand, the sales people are aware that, for the sake of the quid-pro-quo in Russia, they'll be expected to make some sort of favorable showing. All but one of the Russian films are dubbed into English, though it has yet to be established whether or not these dubbed tracks (recorded in London) are available for use in the States.

Only one of the Soviet films—"The Cranes Are Flying"—was dubbed in N.Y. This is generally considered the best of the Russian films among the seven that have been acquired. It's been a big hit in Europe.

Question is what the Russians' attitude will be. If they're interested in financial returns, the indies argue they'd be the best bet. If they want circulation, and are impressed by the number of dates booked (without reference as to how many people actually go to see these films), then major release is the answer.

There's a feeling that, on the first couple of Soviet releases—and particularly on "Cranes," which already has had some publicity—the curiosity value will be great and the audience may be quite considerable. Soviet films have had free access to the States in the past, but they've never played more than a couple of houses.

Pictures-for-Orphan Periods Is Still Hyman's 'Orderly Propaganda'; AB-PT's Best Since '55 2d Quarter

The second quarter ending June 30 was the best for the theatre division of American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres since 1955. At the same time, the month of June was the best since 1954.

This was disclosed last week by Edward L. Hyman, company veepee, at one of his periodic meetings with the trade press at which he brings up to date his efforts to advance his ideal of "orderly release" of product throughout the year. Hyman, who has dedicated himself to eliminate the so-called orphan periods, is sanguine about the product availability for the September to year-end stanza, which in the past few years has been very poor.

Although noting that he doesn't ever expect "to see Utopia" as far as orderly release is concerned, Hyman is nevertheless confident, on the basis of the release slates he has obtained from the film companies, that the September to December stanza this year will witness a reverse of the downward trend. He stated that indications are that twice as many quality films as heretofore will be available for the concluding months of 1959.

In circulating the final release schedule, obtained after numerous meetings with distributor representatives, Hyman urged that it be analyzed carefully now in connection with exhibitor business-building drives and that any weak spots in the slate should be noted and plans made now to obtain quality product or "sleepers" to fill the gaps.

Hyman is also spearheading an all-out exhibitor drive to plug films and film-going during the September to December period. In this connection, he has toured the country and has participated in numerous business-building forums. And in particular the quality product which will be available during the drive period.

Hyman has kept up to date the release information for the drive period and has now compiled the latest release data in a schedule containing the releases of all companies from July through the end of the year. The schedule has been circulated to exhibitors around the country who have endorsed orderly distribution and are supporting the September to December drive.

The film industry has come through its "transitional period" and he noted that business has shown a decided improvement thus far in 1959.

How They Stack Up

Hyman will next concentrate his propaganda efforts on the April-May-June period, a stanza he feels needs more quality releases. He plans to go to the Coast in October or November to compile all the data on pictures and releases in preparation for April, May and June. He believes that the accomplishments of the exhibitors' September to December drive will have an influence in inducing the film companies to release topnotch product from April to June.

The release schedule compiled by Hyman, although containing some holes, shows the following totals from June to the end of the year. Allied Artists, 7; Buena Vista, 6; Columbia, 20 (plus the special release of Porgy and Bess"); Metro, 12 (plus the special release of "Ben-Hur"); Paramount, 9; 20th-Fox, 15; United Artists, 17; Universal, 7; Warner Bros., 10.

Hyman also revealed that the AB-PT circuit is continuing to install 70m equipment in its key houses. Between 12 and 15 theatres have been equipped or are in the process of being equipped. What Hyman believes will be a first will be the installatoin of 70m equipment at AB-Pt's Indian Drive-In in Phoenix, Ariz. The drive-in, a 1,350-car unit, is being completely renovated and will be enlarge to accommodate 1,700 cars.

Allied Guitar Offkey As Congress of Ehibs Serenades Companies

Although the American Congress of Exhibitors and representatives of the Motion Picture Assn. of America are scheduled to hold a "summit" meeting on Friday, 31), preceded by a session tomorrow (Thurs.) of C. and E.'s committee, signs of growing disenchantment with the policies of the Congress, in Allied States circles, continue to mount.

In a letter to Allied board chairman, Abram F. Myers, Trueman T. Rembusch, Indiana circuit operator and a former Allied prexy, charges that the C. of E. is out to wreck local exhibitor organizations by setting up individual memberships. Rembusch bases his complaint on a recent mailing piece sent out by the Congress of Exhibitors urging all theatremen to become members of the organization. It's noted in the letter addressed "to all circuit operators" and signed by Merlin Lewis, administrative secretary of the Congress of Exhibitors, that membership in C. of E. does not, in any way, affect your membership in any other organization. It's also pointed out that the Congress requires no dues or assessments.

However, Rembusch feels that the plea for individual membership in the Congress of Exhibitors is an effort to sabotage the existing trade organizations and particularly Allied. "It was my understanding," he states, "that C. of E. was limited to being an organization of organizations, not an organization made up of individual memberships."

Rembusch further charges that he has yet to see the C. of E. accomplish one constructive thing. "We might as well admit it. We were booby-trapped when we went along on this one, but do we have to stay booby-trapped?"

The Indiana theatreowner is further disturbed by the fact that Stanley Warner, of which Congress chairman S. H. Fabian is president, is seeking permission from the Federal Court to operate a theatre already under construction in Cheltenham Township, near Philadelphia. Rembusch feels that all the Congress of Exhibitors is doing is lulling "the small exhibitors to sleep while the former affiliates acquire theatres." He also feels that the Congress of Exhibitors will wreck Allied's "white paper" campaign.

Roller Rinks

source and would serve as a lure to attract the teenage crowd.

Unlike bowling alleys, where alcoholic liquor is frequently sold, the roller rinks maintain a strict policy of not serving hard drinks. Because of this restriction, roller rinks, as are theatres, are eligible for government loans via the Small Business Administration. The roller rinks and theatres are the only entertainment industries eligible for such loans. Such loans, whether direct or the participation kind, can be made to finance construction, conversion or expansion; to finance purchase of equipment, machinery, supplies and material, and to supply working capital.

The roller rink industry is expanding currently in three areas—(1) it is following the population move to the suburbs., (2) via the conversions of theatres to rinks, and (3) the construction of new rinks as part of drive-in theatres. There are presently some 4,800 rinks in the U. S. This year it's expected that a total of 500 new rinks will be built.

Income from the roller rinks comes from admissions (between 50c and 80c), from skate rentals (between 25c and 50c), from skate sales, and from concessions (estimated at 25c per person). The Roller Skating Foundation estimates gross receipts of $855 per week or $45,000 a year for a rink that will accommodate 420 skaters, on the basis of 100 skaters per session, eight sessions per week, an admission charge of 60c, skate rental charge of 35c, and average volume in concessions and sale of equipment.

Estimated weekly expenses are figured at $200 per week for five part-time employees and one full-time staffer.

Chaplin Films

ing the 1925 version of the picture on which copyright has expired. Lopert and Roy Export have charged "unfair competition" rather than infringement of copyright.

Chaplin pictures covered under Judge Rayfiel's injunction include "A Dog's Life," "The Kid," "Shoulder Arms," "The Idle Class," "The Circus," "City Lights," "The Great Dictator," "Monsieur Verdoux," "Sunnyside" and "The Pilgrim." No distribution arrangement for any of these films have been made.

Story is that Fischer's outfit acquired the contents of the Chaplin vault on the Coast from another party who in turn is said to have bought it from Oona O'Neil, Chaplin's wife, who visited the U. S. after Chaplin had already departed to reside permanently in Europe. The vault contained prints of virtually all of Chaplin's films. Several of them have been playing around the country, booked by Fischer's companies.

San Sebastian Fest Prizes

fices her life to succor and convert the downtrodden.

Not Too 'Festive'

Motion Picture Export Assn., was again saddled with responsibility for making the Basque inauguration a brilliant and festive occasion. Combined efforts of MPEA delegate Frank Gervasi, his aides and a public relations team produced only a par opener in the face of inadequate festival organization, "Sirimiri" (Basque for drizzle, even when it rains), absence of Audrey Hepburn at "The Nun's Story" gala and a general festival economy wave that included MPEA.

Undersecretary for Information Vilar Palasi opened the 10-day gathering; Director General for Cinema Munoz Fontan closed it. Eva Marie Saint flew from the U.S. to grace "North by Northwest" send-off. Her two-day round of personal appearances was triumphal.

Notoriety note was furnished by Eva Bartok. There was no shortage of Spanish screen favorites; the rest were second stringers from neighboring lands.

Absence of dames and trade names is only one aspect of blighted hopes this year. Other handicaps stemmed from the continued reliance on non-pro provincial staffers, a tight-cornered budget (around $50,000) and, particularly, the quality of screen fare in contest.

Cheaply Farcical

To many visitors, especially those who actively avoid subgrade features the year around, farce calibre of well over half the 20-odd entries was deporable. Sentiment here is that festival director Antonio de Zulueta must establish a "quality standard" even if forced to reduce programmng drastically. Yank entries were outstanding; British and German, beyond reproach.

Another viewpoint holds that San Sebastian is in danger of becoming nationalized. Concept introduced last year of constituting a magnet film fair for Latin American countries has not been achieved. As a result, delegations come with limited objectives—essentially to better film trade relations with Spain in conferences with government authorities and Spanish film industry leaders.

Future of film commerce with Spain dominated fest talk following dramatic entrance of this country in the European Economic Organization and announcements of extensive and fundamental changes in economic policy. Immediate reaction from authoritive quarters was that eventually, possibly late this year, Spain's film structure would be reshaped radically to affect dollar remittances, import quotas, blocked peseta accounts and numerous phases of Spain's film aid program. Nor are drastic consequenes envisaged as a result of devaluation.

On the plus side, San Sebastian proved a holiday for cinema club and cinematheque fans. Seven of the Brussels Fair's 12 all-time best films were screened in extra-curricular morning sessions. Government banned "Potemkin," "Mother" and "Earth" while "Citizen Kane" and "Joan of Arc" prints failed to arrive. Why Spanish authorities reversed original approval of Russ trio at a festival where Polish, Czech, Bulgarian and Yugoslav entries were officially programmed, was not revealed.

Retrospective series in homage to Rene Clair drew crowds for "Straw Hat," "Under Paris Rooftops" and "July 14." Outstanding in fest's Information Section screenings were Rossellini's "India," Cannes prize-winner "400 Blows," "Hercules" and Bulgaria's "Stars."

Perennial signal features of every Basque film reunion are San Sebastian's plethora of four-star seafood eateries, cordial hospitality and striking oceanside settings. Active role played by Mayor Antonio Vega de Seoane as simpatico host to visitors and press from over 20 countries, was an added factor this year.

British B.O. Off

where, again, tv enterprises began operations within the past year. Wales, with 9,226,000 admissions reported from 315 theatres, showed a 20.8% decline over the first quarter of 1958, while the Southern area (180 cinemas, 7,046,000 admissions) suffered a drop of 22.5%. The dip in Scotland, 20.6%, with 520 theatres registering 20,866,000 admissions, was also above the national average.

Maybe significantly, the percentage fall in admissions compared with the first three months of 1958 was relatively low in the Eastern region (15%, with 205 cinemas reporting 8,056,000 admissions) and in the Southwest (15.7%, 217 theatres, 7,664,000). Television coverage isn't yet complete in these areas.

Further BOT comment on the whole position is that there was an increase in sickness in the first quarter of 1959 as compared with 1958, which "may have reduced admissions in this quarter by several millions." It's added that the exceptionally bad weather of the first part of the year may have had its effect.

Harrison's Reports

Hays into the industry resulted in the breakup of the Motion Picture Theatres Owners of America and that Allied States was formed after MPTOA's demise; "the failure of the 5-5-5 Conference was the result of producer manipulation"; "theatre divorcement and the outlawing of block booking and other predatory trade practises," and other items.

The contrast between the operation of Harrison's Reports by an independent publisher objectively reporting industry relations and the new ownership, with its frankly weighted Allied States interests, speaks for itself.

Hill," which will have a screenplay by William Rose, will be filmed on location in India, with interiors set for London. Doris Day has been signed to star in "Matilda," which like "Pillow Talk," will be made in association with Miss Day's Arwyn Productions. Ivan Goff and Ben Roberts have been signed to write the screenplay.

Ross rates "Peter and Catherine" as the biggest undertaking of his career. Start of the film, for which A. S. MacKenzie is writing the script, depends on the availability of certain stars. Ross envisions shooting the film in Russia, with the Bolshoi Ballet doing a sequence.

Leon Uris, author of "Exodus," and Otto Preminger, who'll produce and direct the story for the screen, have had a falling out. Uris has withdrawn from the project, and it's now possible that the picture won't location in Israel after all.

U.S.-BRITAIN PROMOTE PROJECTION CAUSE

The recently organized Council for the Improvement of Theatres and Motion Picture Projection, being administered by Theatre Owners of America, has agreed to coordinate efforts with the British Film Producers Assn.

The British group, acting on the basis of complaints about the quality of the presentation of films, and particularly the standard of sound production, set up an all-industry committee to consider means by which the standard of exhibition in theatres could be improved. The committee is investigating sound reproduction and picture presentation.

Token One-Hour 'Strike' Vs. U.S. Productions

London, July 28.

A token protest by the Electrical Technicians Union against two Columbia films shooting at Shepperton Studios here—"Our Man in Havana" and "Suddenly, Last Summer"—was called off after one day's action last week. Members of the union quit work at 4:30 p.m. instead of the usual 5:30 p.m. closing time.

The protest, although affecting only the Col pix, was aimed in general at American production in England. The token "strike" was based on the claim that U.S. shooting schedules were "too short." If the protest had continued, it could have resulted in considerable extra expense for Col as well as other U.S. companies shooting in London.

More Film-Making In Israel Looms

The number of American films scheduled for production in Israel and using the dramatic setting of the new nation continues to grow. Latest addition is "Ballad of Red Rock," an original story by Meyer Levin, which Darryl F. Zanuck has bought and which is to roll in Israel in November. Juliette Greco will be in the lead.

Story deals with young Israelites who risk their lives during their vacation periods digging in Arab territory "out of a profound need to discover their archaeological past." Six of these young archaeologists have been killed so far.

Still pending is a film deal on Levin's new novel, "Eva," which Simon & Schuster will publish Aug. 21. It concerns a young Jewish woman who survives the Nazi holocaust by disguising herself as a Christian, finally making her escape to Israel.

Levin, who authored "Compulsion," which Zanuck's son, Richard Zanuck made into a film, had another original yarn about the Dead Sea Scrolls optioned by a French-Italian producing team now seeking a U. S. coproduction deal.

Levin has been living in Israel since 1958. He made his home there 30 years ago in a Utopian colony and he lived in Israel again after World War II when he produced and directed his own film, "The Illegals."

For some time, American companies have shown a hesitancy about shooting in Israel, partly because of Arab resistance to such pictures and partly because of local conditions. Lately, several projects utilizing Israeli locales have been skedded, including Stanley Kramer's "My Glorious Brothers" and a film on the Maccabees. Also Leon Uris' "Exodus."

IATSE Warns: 'Our Boothmen Won't Do Film Inspection for Exchanges'

Minneapolis, July 28.

Local here of International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes via its boothmen branch charges that the distributors on Film Row here are skimping on print inspection and repairs by not employing enough inspectors to do the work properly.

Notification has gone forth from the union to all the film exchanges that henceforth when a print is received in a condition that requires other than routine inspection and repair an offshift projectionist will be called to overhaul it and his time will be billed to the distributor at the prevailing overtime rate.

"We neither solicit nor do we want the work, but if we must take over film inspectors' duties, which has been about one in every four times that a print is used, we emphatically must refuse to do so unless we are fully paid for doing so," declares the IATSE notification to the exchanges.

The notification also points out that "whenever a projectionist makes a splice other than running repairs, he is in effect scabbing on the exchange workers who are supposed to do the work."

"If, however, the projectionist's renumeration demand exceeds that of the exchange worker, it obviously would be to the film companies' advantage to man their exchanges with an adequate inspection staff," asserts the IATSE notification. "At least, that is this directive's hope and purpose."

DALLAS UPSURGE TOLD IN MANY LONG-RUNS

Dallas, July 28.

Attendance at Interstate Theatre Circuit houses in Dallas is keeping up with the national trend toward the increased popularity of films for entertainment, according to James O. Cherry, city manager here for the circuit.

"More people are going to movies than they did in 1958 in Dallas," Cherry stated.

Cherry said national surveys have shown a trend of 80.000.000 in movie attendance weekly for the summer across the nation as compared to 75.000.000 a year ago. (This is Texas arithmetic apparently—N.Y. guesses 40+ million-a-week attend films—Ed.)

He pointed out that estimates by the Council of Motion Picture Organization indicate that total film patronage this year will exceed the totals amassed by all other forms of entertainment, including football and baseball.

"You have only to look at the number of holdover engagements for good pictures in Dallas to see where this trend is heading," he said.

He cited such runs as "Shaggy Dog" (Buena Vista) at the Esquire Theatre for 13 weeks, "Auntie Mame" (WB) for 13 weeks at the Village on a return engagement after six weeks earlier downtown, "Some Like It Hot" (UA) for nine weeks downtown and "Sleeping Beauty" (Buena Vista) for seven weeks at the Tower on a "roadshow" reserved seat policy.

Herb Gaines, new Warner Bros. manager in Albany will move his family to the capital city in August. He succeeded Ed Segal, transferred to Boston.

Harold Zeltner Also Promoted By Byrne

Metro sales veepee Jack Byrne has promoted Saul Gottlieb to the post of eastern division sales manager. At the same time, he elevated Harold Zeltner to Gottlieb's former position as N.Y. metropolitan district manager.

Gottlieb began working for Metro in the booking departments of the Buffalo, Cleveland and Detroit branches in 1928. He became N.Y. metropolitan district manager in 1951. Zeltner joined the company 23 years ago and held various sales positions in Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Chicago and New York. He became N.Y. branch manager in 1958.

Washington Ditto of Loop Experience on 'Anatomy'; Start at the Beginning

Washington, July 28.

Columbia's "Anatomy of a Murder" is smash b.o. here in its third week at $1-$2 range at Trans-Lux Theatre, but is creating a remarkable ticket-selling pattern at the house, as is the case in Chicago (VARIETY, July 22).

Ed Rosenfeld, manager of three Trans-Lux-owned houses here, reports virtually no tickets are sold after beginning of film, until it ends again. Theatre is completely filled for 4, 7 and 10 p.m. shows, but there are empty seats at 10 a.m. and 1 p.m. screenings.

"For any other picture you can name," explains Rosenfeld, "there's always a rush to get in before 5 when the prices jump. But in this case, no one comes before 5. If they don't make the 4 show, they wait until 7, apparently willing to pay the extra dollar to see it from the beginning."

People are turned away at the 7 and 10 screenings, he says.

"Wish they'd come to the first two shows when we have seats," he adds.

Int'l Film Congress To Meet in Edinburgh

Edinburgh, July 28.

Film enthusiasts from all parts of the world will meet at an International Film Societies Congress to be held here Sept. 5-6 during the Edinburgh Film Festival. It will be held under the banner of the Federation of Scottish Film Societies.

Congress will give delegates a chance to see the pick of film festival offerings. It will include attendance at the fifth annual British Film Academy Celebrity Lecture.

Miceli Files Antitruster

Boston, July 28.

An antitrust suit for $1,000,000 damages against eight majors and four exhibitors has been filed in U. S. District Court by Lawrence Miceli, operator of Metro Drive-In at Palmer, Mass.

Conspiracy among the defendants as to price fixing, block booking, selective contracts, and clearance is charged in the complaint, which charges specifically that the ozoner has been deprived of playing firstrun product. Defendant theatres are in Palmer and Springfield.

Film Row Wage Hike (IA) Starts

With the official inking of a new pact between the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and the film companies, white collar and other exchange employees, received a $6 across-the-board wage increase. The hike was in the pay envelopes last Friday (24).

The film companies are now tallying up the amount due each employee in retroactive wages. The pact is retroactive to Dec. 1, 1958, expiration date of the previous two-year contract.

India, Arab Republic To Co-Prod. 'Khayyam'

New Delhi, July 28.

Film companies of India and the United Arab Republic will team up to produce a screen biography of famed 12th Century Persian astronomer-poet, Omar Khayyam. Actors are backers of both co-producing outfits—Bharat Bhooshan's Viswabhrarati Films, of Bombay, and Magda Films of Cairo, named after actress Magda.

Omar opus will be lensed in color in the two countries, with sound tracks in Hindi and Arabic. Permission has been sought from the respective governments. Stars of both countries will play the leads. Magda Films hopes to sign a leading musical director, Farid ul Attrish, for the feature.

2 VETS DEPART B&K

Chicago, July 28.

Waldo Bail and Dave Arlen, both vet ad-pub staffers for Balaban & Katz, are ankling to join the self-employed ranks.

Bail, in the picture biz a total of 34 years, is leaving for a ranch he bought near Bend, Ore., to raise cattle and quarter horses. Before B&K, he put in a long stretch with Paramount, managing theatres around the midwest.

Arlen is pulling out for a partnership in a local ad agency, Wexberg-Arlen, with expectations of adding show biz accounts to the current client list. He was a Chi VARIETY staffer for a year before joining B&K 17 years ago, and before that was assistant publicity chief in Hollywood for Columbia.

2 Suits Hit Stanton Theatre Corp.

Rohauer of California and Jewel of N. Y. Charge Copyright Violation, Negative Withholding

Washington, July 28.

Stanton Theatre Corp. here has been hit by two suits asking over $150.000 in damages in connection with its handling of 20 films, including "Gold Rush" and "Ecstasy."

California producer Raymond Rohauer accused the firm of failing to return some 18 pictures, infringement of copyrights, making incomplete payments, copying "Gold Rush" and marketing it in the East. He's asking a minimum $100.000 damages. Films named in the suit included "City Lights," "Great Dictator," "The Kid," "The Hunchback of Notre Dame", and "The Idiot."

Second suit was filed by Jewel Productions Inc. and Domestic Music Corp. of New York. It asks $50.000 in damages for alleged copyright infringement and failure to return "Ecstasy" and "Lucrezia Borgia."

CHAIRMEN FOR CHICAGO

TOA's Nov. 8-12 Convention Designates Leaders

Chairmen of the 12th annual convention and trade show of Theatre Owners of America at the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, No. 8-12, have been made known by George G. Kerasotes, TOA prexy.

David Wallerstein, Balaban & Katz topper, will serve as honorary chairman and will deliver the welcoming address as spokesman for the host city.

Co-chairman are Gerald J. Shea, New York; Richard Orear, Kansas City, and Dwight L. Spracher, Seattle. Shea is president of Shea Enterprises and Jamestown Amusement Co.; Orear is president of Commonwealth Amusement Corp., and Spracher is affiliated with United Theatres of Washington.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Some foreign film distributors, noting progress made in the fight against censorship, are deploring the release of certain imports with pronounced sex overtones. Argument is that such films are likely to generate a new wave of censorship sentiments and activities in the non-censorship states.

Mentioned specifically is the French "Les Amants" (The Lovers), which Zenith International (Dan Frankel) is releasing. The picture recently passed U.S. Customs without a single cut. It's been tagged one of the most erotic productions of recent memory.

Frankel's reply to those who would criticize release of the film is that it's got artistic merit which will be recognized, just as U.S. Customs recognized it. In any case, he argued recently in N.Y., fear of censorship is a poor reason for not releasing any picture.

Several indies, while in no ways favoring censorship, have grown somewhat conservative and would prefer the status quo to more battling in the courts. They fear that, if one or two "sensational" films come along, and are violently denounced by the Roman Catholic Church (usually the tipoff for determined local action), censorship on a statewide level may be strengthened.

Minnesota circuiteer Bennie Berger, currently is sailing into companies for "taking away" from exhibitors the benefit the latter were supposed to derive from the admission tax slash to one dollar and under. Film companies have done this, charges Berger, simply by making 60%, instead of the previous 50%, now the standard terms for practically all of the so-called blockbusters even in the smaller situations.

"We don't owe COMPO a single thing for getting the admission tax altered because the 10% relief we were supposed to have gained has been grabbed off hoggishly in toto by the film companies via this upped percentage," declares Berger.

"I'm actually sorry now they've reduced the tax. I'd prefer that the government have the money for defense purposes, perhaps to build more battleships, than it go to the greedy film companies which it's now doing."

As a result of Minnesota exhibitors' losing fight against daylight saving time in the legislature, part of the annual North Central Allied convention next fall will be devoted to formulating plans to make exhibition more effective politically and to improve its public relations. President Frank Mantzke points out that the legislature disregarded exhibitors' well-being and that during the lawmakers' debates on the fast-time subject not one word of concern was heard anent the harm that the DST does to the boxoffice, although exhibition's spokesmen had made clear to the legislators that it may mean the difference between life and death for a number of theatres.

"Even those legislators who fought and voted against DST didn't have anything good to say about exhibitors," says Mantzke. "They were opposed because for the sake of their farmer constitutients and their small-town merchants."

The Town of Bethlehem, N.Y. Board of Appeals has granted David and Donald Halsdorf permission to convert the Delmar Theatre, into a garage. The brothers, owners of nearby Vets Garage, sought a zoning variance to reconstruct the theatre (long the only conventional in that suburb), which is 398 feet from St. Thomas Catholic Church. A minimum of 500 feet is required in the zoning ordinance. The Bethlehem Community Assn. had opposed the appeal, contending the ordinance was "clearly written to protect all church property and the establishment of a precedent might apply to any church in the area. The Halsdorf's attorney presented a letter from Rt. Rev. Msgr. Raymond F. Rooney, who stated the conversion "would not be detrimental to the church."

Hollywood attorney Stanley Fleishman, who has made something of a name in southern California as a specialist on censorship cases, is representing Chicago magazine retailer John Kappos in his trial there on charges his sale of the magazine "Exotic Adventures" violated Illinois obscenity statutes.

Fleishman will challenge the constitutionality of the Illinois laws in his defense of Kappos. Attorney will claim the state laws are the toughest (and most foolish) in the country, making it illegal for a book (or any artistic work) to stimulate sexual desire. (Fleishman is back in L.A. now while the case is put over until Aug. 10. City of Chicago is prosecuting.)

What was considered a particularly effective technical novelty at the just terminated Berlin Film Festival was a special telephone service installed by the German SPIO-Export-Union. This service operated day and night and informed callers about the more important festival details (films, receptions, meetings etc.) in German, English and French language. One just called over the telephone exchange or the switchboard of the hotels the number 255. The informations were on tape. Initiator of this "public relations to the bed" idea was Fred Ritter, UFA's former press chief in Germany.

First edition of Wien Film Co.'s Studio & Production magazine (Betriebs-Zeitung) schedules shooting in all Austrian studios for months to come. Stress is especially laid on wooing foreign producers to come to the Austrian capital. General production trend includes less pictures in work but more careful shooting. Published by the chief of the Wien Film, Dr. Friedrich Erban, and edited by Wilhelm Guha. Mag has no public sale.

Another $500.000 may be added to the budget of "Spartacus," the Byrna production for Universal which has—they say—already gone from a $5.000.000 budget to $9,000.000. Reports are that the Kirk Douglas film, which has been shooting on the Universal lot on the Coast, may shift to Yugoslavia for the inclusion of a key battle scene. It's estimated the cost for location jaunt would be $500,000.

Eddie Reyna, buyer and booker for Frels Theatres, with headquarters at Victoria, Tex., gave the welcoming address in Spanish at Riverside Park here for the opening of the merged Pan-American baseball league before a crowd estimated at 5,000. Reyna will go with the players as one of their strong supporters to Mexico as well as other league towns in Texas.

Davis Films Into 55th St.

B. S. Moss Theatres, operators of the 55th St. Playhouse in N. Y., and Richard Davis, prez of United Motion Picture Organization, have made a deal under which five of Davis' French films will be dated at the 55th St.

Pictures involved are "Le Beau Serge," "Young Girls Beware," "Sans Famille" and "Speaking of Murder." The fifth, "Grisbi," is current at the theatre. Davis' own Fine Arts Theatre on the east side is having a long run with "Room at the Top."

National Screen Service's Promotional Publication

National Screen Service is issuing a new promotional publication titled Screen Time.

New magazine, in the planning stage for several months, will be made available to exhibitors six times a year. It will include all the promotional material which heretofore has been sent out in various special flyers and promotional brochures. The September-October kickoff issue is now available.

Dear Art:

Last week I managed to screen the "Mr. Hollywood Movie Bee" trailer. I want to congratulate you on the excellent production and the tremendous backgrounds which you used in this trailer. It has nothing but showmanship in it, and it certainly should have a tremendous impact on any audience.

I trust that many exhibitors will take advantage of this fine medium for selling their top attractions which will play their theatres this Summer and Fall.

Kindest regards,

TV's Swing to Local News Operation; N.Y. Flagships Getting Into Fray

Indications are that within the next several weeks WCBS-TV, the Gotham flagship of CBS, will divorce its news operation from the network's and establish its own independent news-gathering force, perhaps for the purposes of concentrating on local news angles. There is also a belief, unconfirmed at the moment, that WRCA-TV, its N. Y. rival, will do the same thing.

Drive for local news coverage appears to be getting stronger all the time, not only in N. Y. but throughout the country in television as well as radio.

WCBS Radio in early June divided from CBS Radio on news. An indie operation, a kind of experimental setup in N. Y., was established. And it's no secret that executives at WCBS-TV, its sister station (which is operated under a separate administrative aegis from WCBS Radio), were plugging hard for the radio experiment to succeed. And certain CBS sources say now that WCBS Radio has "made it."

Merle Jones, who heads CBS-TV owned & operated stations, is known to favor some mode of editorial expression for WCBS-TV. His idea is for the station, in the largest market in the country, to get for the first time into editorials, more specifically, into editorials on local matters. Jones seems just to be waiting for WCBS-TV to come up with a satisfactory format for editorializing. And, more than likely, if the station does the editorials they will be limited to irregular airing of pertinent subjects rather than force the Gotham flag into a series of day-in-day-out editorials, which by their very number, might dissipate themselves.

This, too, is part of the swing to local news operations. It's believed that the network, already understaffed in the news areas, cannot concentrate on local reportage. If it happens at WCBS-TV, the station will be the last of the CBS o&o's across the country to divide from the web.

NBC's Reversal

As for WRCA, the NBC station in N. Y., it was once independent from the network in news coverage. But less than two years ago, after a relatively brief trial on their own, WRCA and WRCA-TV were reabsorbed by the network news operation under William McAndrew.

It's the competition of the indies in radio that might have forced the hand of WCBS Radio to begin its own news shop at the beginning of the summer. In radio, stations are going more and more independent, and while some are still hot for international coverage as handled by the networks they are offering in equal amounts local and regional news stories.

In television, it's become a matter of pride. For ever so long, the general critical contention has

Frankenheimer Resolves Snarl

John Frankenheimer has resolved his contractual snarl which threatened to throw him out of the box on producing-directing the premiere of the new Sunday night "Sunday Showcase" on NBC-TV in September. As result he can now go ahead with his deal which permits him to produce-direct two major NBC entries which will be taped prior to the date that his CBS contract expires at the end of September. In return, however, Frankenheimer must deliver to CBS two drama specials within the next three-year period.

In August Frankenheimer will tape the Sunday preem show, S. Lee Pogostin's "People Kill People Sometimes." Geraldine Page, Jason Robards Jr. and George C. Scott will star. On Sept. 15 he starts work on taping the Ingrid Bergman drama for the Tuesday night Ford series, a James Costigan adaptation of "Turn of the Screw." It will go on the air in October. Frankenheimer left last week for Europe to discuss script with Miss Bergman.

Ex-Faubus Aide Buys Little Rock AM Station

Washington, July 28.

Claude Carpenter Jr., former righthand man to Arkansas' Gov. Orval Faubus, has bought a North Little Rock radio station with the Federal Communications Commission's approval.

Carpenter bought KNLR from L. R. Luker for $36,000.

Carpenter was executive secretary to Faubus for several years, resigning in late 1958 to manage the write-in campaign of segregationist Dale Alford against moderate Brooks Hays for Congress in the Little Rock district. Alford defeated the incumbent Congressman, Hays, by about 1,200 votes, and the election is now the subject of an investigation by a House Elections Subcommittee. Carpenter was administrative assistant to Alford for several months but has returned from Washington to Little Rock. He remains on the federal payroll, however, as Alford's Little Rock representative.

Chas. Collingwood New Host of 'P-P' In Global Format

Charles Collingwood has been confirmed as the new host of "Person to Person," which producers John Aaron and Jesse Zousmer are going to turn into an international affair, with tapes to be made of guests caught in their worldover domiciles, from Ipswich to Istanbul. Meantime, Pharmaceuticals Inc., which is signed as full sponsor of the Friday night CBS-TV 30-minute stanza, has sold off alternate weeks to Warner Lambert.

New host Collingwood will probably do all the shows, if it doesn't prove too difficult getting him from various locations abroad back to the U. S. to handle also live, domestically-made portions of the show. Yet it's always possible for Collingwood to do several foreign guest appearances at one time, for methodical insertion into the program later on. This would leave him free to return to the U. S. to do most, if not all, the live segments which mostly will be paired off with the overseas-made tapes.

New arrangement by Zousmer and Aaron, who were set this week to handle "P to P" again, was designed to alleviate the burden the program, formerly hosted by Edward R. Murrow, is carrying after six years on the air. Figuring was that CBS was running out of decent guest selections, and that, under such circumstances, the program might not last more than another season. But with the international jazzup, which even allows for repeat guests, program could go on indefinitely. For instance, Duke and Duchess of Windsor were originally interviewed at a suite in N. Y. Waldorf Towers, but they reportedly extended a standing invitation to the "P to P'ers" to come visit (via tape) their lavish home outside Paris. Moreover, there were some visitors to U. S. who never got on the show, because they preferred to be visited at home in Europe than be peeked at in temporary hotel apartments. These people, too, are fresh fodder for "P to P."

Swafford's Philly Post

Philadelphia, July 28.

Thomas J. Swafford has become the new vicepresident and general manager of the CBS-owned radio station WCAU, here. He replaces Joseph T. Cennolly, who will be assigned new duties within the CBS sphere after recovering from major surgery he underwent last week.

Swafford was with WCBS, the N. Y. o&o, as sales manager since June, 1958, and before that was a salesman for CBS spot sales in N. Y.

Geo. Gobel's 'Lonesome' Format Sans Guestars; 'Hopes to Recapture '54'

Hollywood, July 28.

After two unhappy years in an hourlong format, George Gobel will attempt to recapture the spirit and format of his early half-hour show next season as Jack Benny's skip-week Sunday night stablemate on CBS-TV.

"We weren't happy with the Tuesday night hour," declares David O'Malley, Gobel's manager. "NBC gave us a choice of taking it or not being on television," he said. "But the hour wasn't right for George. He had to try things that weren't right for him. This time, we're going to try to recapture something of the 1954-55 show."

Elements of the new skip-week half-hour are already set. Fred de Cordova will produce-direct, Ed Simmons is set as head writer, with a staff comprising Keith Fowler, moving over from the George Burns scripting stable, and Gobel regulars Frank Scully and Tom Koch.

No "Alice" this year in the form of an actress: Gobel will make frequent references to her, but the comic and his writers feel that using a real person will "lock them in" too much, requiring a powerhouse skit every show. By the same reasoning, there won't be many guest stars on the show, unless an idea motivates their presence. "If we have to write for them, we tend to get locked in again," says O'Malley. Show will have a regular stock company cast for Gobel to "bounce off."

By the same token, Gobel himself will do no specials or comedy guest shots on specials or other shows. He will essay two dramatic

British Com'l A-R's $19,975,000 Profit Just as Forecast

London, July 28.

The Associated - Rediffusion group, controlling the commercial tv company serving the London area weekdays, made a consolidated profit of $19,975,000 last year before tax. Forecast, made in February by chairman J. Spencer Wills, was that the total would be $19,600,000.

A brief announcement on the state of financal affairs for the year ended April 30 also reveals that A-R has increased its capital to $21,000,000, read here as further confirmation that the board intends shortly to apply for a Stock Exchange quotation. The capital originally was $1,400,000, afterwards upped to $14,000,000. The extra $7,000,00 now capitalized comes from the sale of TV Times, weekly publication covering programs, to a new subsidary in exchange for shares.

Provision has been made of some $12,166,000 for taxation. Recommended final dividend is 12½%, following the interim of 11½% on the previous $14,000,000 capital.

Who Put Gremlins in Bob Kennedy

Boston, July 28.

Who was responsible for stilling the voice in Boston of Robert Kennedy, chief counsel for the Senate Rackets Committee, four times on the Jack Paar Show Wednesday night (22) in his Hoffa blast?

Pulling no punches, Kennedy urged viewers to write their Congressmen, but as he named the men and the companies which he said corruption helped Jimmy Hoffa extend his power, the sound was suddenly gone and only the picture remained.

WHDH-TV, Channel 5, which carries the Paar show here, checked with the telephone company, on whose lines the show is transmitted, after noticing deletions, and learned that they occurred somewhere between Cleveland and Binghamton, N.Y., but could not determine why Kennedy's remarks were cut.

In New York, Bert Miller, night exec officer NBC, said the taped show was "clear as a bell, both audio and video" going out of New York. The WHDH-TV check, made almost immediately after the first deletion, revealed that other engineers from Binghamton to Cleveland were aware of the sound failure and trying to pin it.

WHDH-TV said it was able to determine definitely that there was no fault in its own transmitting facilities and that the broadcast was arriving with part of the sound deleted.

John Chapman, public info supervisor for New England Tel & Tel, said the phone company would "definitely investigate" to determine the cause of the sound failure.

Hoffa In a Huffa

Threatens Libel Action Against Paar, NBC Over Bob Kennedy's Cracks on TV

NBC-TV's "Jack Paar Show" added another disgruntled viewer to its list. In this instance, it was James Hoffa, prexy of the Teamsters Union, who notified the web, Paar and Senate Rackets Committee counsel Robert Kennedy, that he was going to sue all concerned about statements made by Kennedy on the Paar program Wednesday (22).

Kennedy also made an appearance on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press" Sunday (26) and slammed Hoffa's behavior pattern on the labor front. NBC said it had not yet received any legal papers from Hoffa but did receive a wire threatening a libel action.

Past weekend was indeed a Hoffa period with the head of the teamster union appearing on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation" (26) immediately before Kennedy faced the reporters on "Meet the Press" and denounced the union leader.

Kennedy charged Hoffa with "collusive deals with employers," betrayal of union members and putting "criminals in high position in the union." Kennedy said Hoffa should sue him for libel at once and let the courts decide who is right. "If he loses," Kennedy said, "he should resign as president of the teamsters, because if he is guilty of anyone of those charges he is not worthy to be president."

Paar, during his interview with Kennedy, sensed that the latter's remarks might be subject to libel and referred to the "hot potato" nature of the interview.

Paar, in his own right, has been no slouch in arousing the ire of sundry individuals and institutions. In recent times he has verbally lacerated Walter Winchell,

Rodgers, Actor, Named To WNTA Program Job

Douglas Fletcher Rodgers, which is also his stage moniker, is the new program director for WNTA-TV, N. Y., effective the beginning of next week. He'll be replacing Jack Linn, who left the station for a similar post at rival WNEW-TV.

Rodgers, who'll report to Malcolm C. Klein, veepee in charge of the station, spent eight years as producer and director with NBC.

Summer Coming Alive for NBC-TV With Pre-Taping

Nine and a probable 10th show are already marked for pre-taping this summer or before the end of September by NBC-TV. All but one are specials, and seven of the nine definite pre-tapes will be done by NBC in N. Y.

Network has evidently not completed its August-September taping schedule, but just how many more programs will be made in advance of airing is not known yet. Tentative part of the scheduling concerns one of the Ford Tuesday stanzas. NBC-TV will tape in mid-September "Turn of the Screw" with Ingrid Bergman starring.

Gene Kelly-Donald O'Connor-Carole Lawrence show, was taped last week in Hollywood; "Best of Durante," in Hollywood, being taped Aug. 24.

In N. Y. the list reads as follows: on Aug. 12, taping begins on "Ransom of Red Chief," one of the Rexall one-shots; Aug. 17 starts some of the Bell Telephone special shootings; John Frankenheimer will do "People Kill People Sometime" starting Aug. 24; "What Makes Sammy Run?" in two parts, goes before the cameras Aug. 29; first Art Carney show, Aug. 26; first Coca-Cola show on Sept. 15, and some Bell Telephone commercials on Sept. 7.

BERLE EAST FOR SCRIPT HUDDLES

Milton Berle arrives from the Coast latter part of the week for huddles with writers and NBC on his forthcoming video plans. All told Berle will make four tv appearances during the '59-'60 season, two of them being his own specials and two guest shots for Lucy & Desi (Sept. 25) and Danny Thomas (no date set yet though it'll be taped Aug. 31).

In turn, Thomas will guestar on Berle's first NBC-TV special in September, with Desi & Lucy guesting on the second one.

Berle opens Aug. 8 at Atlantic City's 500 Club.

AFTRA-WGA In WNEW Dickers

WNEW Radio is carrying on simultaneous negotiations with the American Federation of Television & Radio Artists and Writers Guild of America East, and so far the dickers have been wrought with odd angles, one of which almost set an important precedent — but not quite. Negotiations are for news writers, who, of late, have also become commentators for the N. Y. radio station.

As it appears now, WGA and ATFRA, which as two distinct unions have evidently worked with unusual harmony throughout the situation, will have separate contracts written with WNEW Radio. But for awhile it appeared that WGA and AFTRA would sign a single contract, with ample cross-reference in it to the needs of both. It would have marked the first time known that two disparate unions became parties to the same labor pact in broadcasting.

WNEW, pressing its coverage of

MURROW'S BRIGHT TOMORROW

Anchors Aweigh & Anger's Away

Precise connection of Edward R. Murrow's bid for a commission in the U.S. Naval Reserve, which would give him rank of commander as public information specialist, with his roaming "sabbatical" or his expanded CBS role when he returns, wasn't quite clear to his associates. Nor did Murrow himself attach any particular significance between his radio-tv job and the request for the Navy assignment. Simply a case of wanting to "learn something about that branch of the service." Navy says if Murrow passes his physical he'll probably get it.

Far transcending in importance the "Anchor's Aweigh" yen (he once also held an Army Reserve commission) is the "Anger's Away" status of the new-found Murrow-CBS happiness, as detailed in the accompanying story.

First 13 for Ford In Robinson's Pocket As He Leaves for Europe

Hubbell Robinson Jr. left over the weekend for a 10-day swing of London-Paris-Sweden in connection with the upcoming weekly Ford specials on NBC-TV, with the first 13 entries safely tucked away. Series preems Oct. 6 with the 90-minute "Wonderful World of Entertainment." This is a substitute for "The Fabulous Fifties," Robinson's having finally yielded to CBS-TV's insistence (and threatened ligitation) that it had top priority on the title and the show by virtue of the fact that Leland Hayward had it in preparation as a General Electric special for the past two years.

Second entry will be Jerry Lewis in a dramatic show. Third will be Ingrid Bergman in James Costigan's adaptation of Henry James' "Turn of the Screw." Fourth will be Art Linkletter's "Kids Say the Darndest Things" with Linkletter as host-emcee.

Robinson is being accompanied abroad by John Frankheimer, who will produce-direct the Bergman play. They've taken Costigan's script with them. It'll be taped in N.Y. in September. In London Robinson will resume negotiations for Charles Laughton and the Stratford players for a performance of "Midsummer Night's Dream" and renew dickers with Alec Guinness for a special.

"Wonderful World of Entertainment," with an all-star cast, will treat with all aspects of show biz as they reflect on political-social-economic attitudes of America. Jess Oppenheimer will produce with Dore Schary as creative consultant.

Corning Glass On a TV Spree

In an unprecedented broadcast spread for the company, Corning Glass has buys and orders in an all three webs and a 64- market spot campaign planned.

Company has bought into ABC-TV's "Alaskans," "Cheyenne" and "Sugarfoot-Bronco" hour shows and have orders in for a piece of NBC-TV's "Fivefingers" and CBS-TV's "Lineup," also hours. Show gives the firm a Saturday through Wednesday nightly outing for pre-Christmas promotion of glass wear.

A spokesman at Corning's agency for consumer products, N. W. Ayer, says that the campaign if successful may be carried beyond the holiday selling season.

Impetus for Corning's tv spree is said to be the highly successful spot campaign a year ago for company's electric skillet.

Bob Finkel's Setup

Hollywood, July 28.

Bob Finkel, producer-director of the "Dinah Shore Chevy Show," has formed his own company. Teram Productions, to produce additional tv shows, and packages. First acquisition is the television rights to "Babes In Arms," the Rodgers and Hart musical, as a potential tv special.

Finkel has also acquired "Affairs of Anatole," Arthur Schnitzler play.

Can Niven Stay In Russia for CBS? Network Hopeful

These next five days are crucial for CBS and its international news operation. They may tell whether the network can return permanently to Moscow after a lockout of nearly 10 months.

Last week, CBS got its first break in the cold war being waged against the American network by the Moscow hierarchy. Web got a temporary visa for reporter Paul Niven to enter Russia in order to cover Vicepresident Richard M. Nixon's 11-day trip there, but the staffer's visa is technically good only until Sunday (2).

CBS now claims that its problems with the adamant Russians are "gradually thawing out," giving hope that Niven's visa will be renewed, and thus reestablishing a CBS news base inside Russia after a lengthly freeze-out. "It all depends," a high-ranking CBS spokesman observed, on whether the atmosphere here is right."

CBS was barred last October after the network's dramatic program "Playhouse 90" presented a stanza called "The Plot to Kill Stalin." Network tried a number of times, even through Washington, to regain official Soviet recognition, but always met with failure. Russians even barred a CBS-employed technician from participating in a USSR-U.S. cultural exchange program.

KTTV'S GIANT RATING ON 'MISS UNIVERSE'

Hollywood, July 28.

KTTV ran roughshod over all Los Angeles competitors on Friday night's finals of the Miss Universe pageant, registering a 45.9 ARB rating, with 81.4 share of audience between 10:30 and 11 p.m. Telecast reached over 3,483,800 viewers. The 45.9 rating was five times that of the three network stations combined, also four times of all L. A. tele stations combined.

Sponsor Max Factor ordered a special ARB survey which, because of telephone use during the late hours, was taken before the final selection of Miss Japan. Audience, according to KTTV, was the largest in Southern California ever to see a television show during the summer months.

ALL IS FRIENDLY AGAIN AT CBS

By GEORGE ROSEN

Even before he departs this country for his global swing and year's sabbatical (which officially started July 1), Ed Murrow has made his peace with CBS—and vice versa. Upon his return next July, it's been learned, the Ed Murrow-Fred Friendly partnership will go into peak operation, with Murrow to do no less than 10 full hour prime-time "in depth" news-public affairs shows as part of a cycle of 26 to be helmed by Friendly as exec producer. Whatever its title, "See It Now," just "See," plain "Now" or "CBS Reports," it'll be the old Murrow-Friendly no-holds-barred documentations as part of an expanded news roster already being blueprinted for the '60-'61 semester.

The happy CBS-Murrow "reunion" came about a couple weeks ago, thus clinching once and for all the future status of the network's No. 1 news analyst. Until then speculation was still rife as to whether Murrow would even return to the network upon completion of year's sabbatical. (Actually the "sabbatical" now in force will find Murrow doing no less than 33 "Small Worlds," a half dozen of which have already been completed; two full-hour Bell & Howell, B. F. Goodrich-sponsored news programs, one on missiles and the other on Iran, plus occasional on-the-spot "crisis" coverage during his world tour.)

Nor will Friendly be exactly inactive during the '59-'60 season while Murrow is out of the country (Murrow leaves Aug. 27; will be gone until next June), for the producer has negotiated a deal which, in addition to riding herd on the Sunday "Small World," he'll be exec producer of all 12 prime time 60-minute special news shows next season, including the half dozen Bell & Howell shows.

Whatever the causes for disenchantment that resulted in Murrow's decision to exercise a contractual right to travel, study or just relax for a year, after he had been informed by the network that there would be no more "See It Nows," the fact remains that the burying of the hatchet" was presided over by Murrow and corporate prexy Frank Stanton themselves as the architects of the ambitious '60-'61 plans.

Murrow returns in time for the political conventions next July, then settles down, in collaboration with Friendly, to perhaps the most active phase of his career as CBS' top news star.

'Brenner' Bumped For 'Mr. Lucky'

On the insistence of Lever Bros., the sponsor, CBS-TV will replace "Brenner" on Oct. 17 next with a Don Sharpe-Blake Edwards production called "Mr. Lucky." Deal for the new Saturday-at-9 half-hour telepic was closed late last week on the Coast by CBS-TV.

"Lucky" will be kind of a Raffles-type character, with the plot upbeating contemporary action-adventure angles. Spartan Productions, the Sharpe-Edwards outfit, is seeking a lead now and will go into production immediately after pinning one down.

They've already hired Henry Mancini, who got all that play for creating the "Peter Gunn" music on NBC, to compose an original score for "Lucky."

CBS was high on "Brenner," a yarn about N.Y. police, done in N.Y., but Ogilvy Benson & Mather, the Lever agency, has been charry of the hard-hitting show's effect on the buyers of Lever's proprietary goods. Network is looking for another time slot for "Brenner," which came on early this summer.

Webs Fight It Out for Remaining $25,000,000 in Uncommitted Coin; Battle for Menthol Cig Market

There's about $25,000,000 in tv ad funds loose as the networks move into the tail end of the selling season, and web sales staffs last week were in a hard selling scramble for a share.

The network pitchmen, who have the funds pegged almost to the penny, were bumping heads in the offices of the remainder of the prospects.

Sources of the late funds are varied: new product hassles brewing in a range from small cars to menthol cigarets: major tv accounts adrift and with new agency affiliations making late plans; traditional holdouts looking for a bargain; and the few who discover they have enough money for a good buy after all.

In the small car race, the big three, GM, Chrysler and Ford can promote their entries heavily through specials. This, of course, doesn't mean they also will not want a frequency pitch to back up special introductions.

American Motors is considered a particularly hot prospect because of recent tv and sales successes. Company pulled out of network in '58 with budget troubles. But this spring an intensive spot campaign was carried out in 76 markets and sales leaped to an alltime high in May of 43,556. Company says the good times are continuing into July. With the profit picture good, and the added competition for Rambler of the big three little wheels, network exposure is a good bet.

The cigaret money is fairly well down, but additional funds for network are likely since Madison Ave. discovered through motivation research that John Q., associates mentholated smokes, by some wild process of reasoning, with good health. Brown & Williamson's Belair, P. Lorillard's Spring, Philip Morris' Alpine are coming out of test areas and into network on existing shows and possibly on new Groucho Show Lottery?

Minneapolis, July 28.

In reply to a complaint from a local attorney anent the Groucho Marx show allegedly operating a lottery because at one point contestants bet $500 of their winnings on a chance for $10,000, the producers answered that the show will be changed next fall when its filming is renewed.

With the change every contestant will get a crack at the big money without risking any of the early winnings, he was informed.

The local lawyer claimed that $500 is a consideration for a chance, making the program illegal in Minnesota.

On this point, the producers explained that NBC attorneys took the view that since the contestant actually wasn't paid his initial winnings yet he still was playing with NBC's money and no consideration was involved.

ABC-TV Rallies Affils Around '59-'60 Schedule

Maximum effort by affils to promote ABC-TV's $75,000,000 programming investment for the '59-'60 season was urged by Leonard Goldenson, prez of American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, in his address before the two-day affiliation meet at the Park Sheraton Hotel.

The meet, which wound up yesterday (Tues.), was attended by station managers and station promotion managers and ABC execs.

ABC-TV prexy Oliver Treyz cited the growth of the network the past season to its present prominence, but warned against complacency. He called the new season "a critical one for ABC Television and our affiliates." He stressed the need for web-affiliation cooperation in the areas of promotion - publicity - exploitation and advertising. He pointed out that of the three webs, ABC-TV has the most changes in its programming, stating that 64% of ABC-TV's schedule is new programming.

Others addressing the meet included Thomas W. Moore, programming v.p.; Julius Barnathan, v.p. for affiliates; Giraud Chester, daytime programming v.p.; Michael J. Foster press information v.p.; and Sid Mesibov, exploitation director.

A second meeting for midwest and farwest station managers and promotion managers is scheduled for Chicago Thursday (30) and Friday. This will be followed by regional sessions for station promotion managers in Dallas, Aug. 3-4 and in Los Angeles, Aug. 6-7.

Option Time Switch

ABC-TV is changing the web's nighttime option time to the hours of from 8 p.m. to 11 p.m., Monday-through-Sunday, the same span held by CBS. ABC-TV's prior nighttime option time period was 7:30 to 10:30 p.m.

Web is making the change in its affil contracts as they are renewed. Shift is dictated by the greater saleability of the 10:30 to 11 p.m. slot, as opposed to the 7:30 to 8 p.m. period. Changing the contractual arrangements helps the clearance situation.

Post-65 Ticket For Bannister

Harry Bannister, NBC's vice president in charge of station relations, who enjoys something of an "elder statesman" role at the network, has joined the charmed circle (there are only a few) among NBC-RCA execs who have been handed a post-65 ticket beyond retirement age. Under the company's compulsory retirement rule, Bannister was slated to step out, but recently the network renegotiated his contract.

Those continuing beyond 65 are few and far between. Gen. David Sarnoff is one of the exceptions, having been voted a new 10-year contract by the board. Among others continuing to function; producer Sam Chotzinoff and John Royal.

DICKER FRANCIOSA FOR CBS 'KILLERS'

Hollywood, July 28.

A. E. Hotchner and Gordon Duff are dickering with Anthony Franciosa for his first tv appearance in three years, as star of Hotchner's adaptation of "The Killers." the first of the Ernest Hemingway specials on CBS-TV Nov. 19.

Franciosa has given a tentative okay, subject to seeing the final script. Actor, here for the lead in 20th-Fox's "The Story on Page One," hasn't done a tv stint since he rose to pic prominence early in 1957.

It's A 315 Compromise At Best On 'Equal Time' As D.C. Decision Nears

By LES CARPENTER

Washington, July 28.

High noon is approaching for "equal time" on Capitol Hill.

And after all the gongs have sounded. Sec. 315 will likely exempt news shows and spot news coverage. The language spelling out this clearance is probably yet to be written. Odds heavily favor different words from those now in either the Senate or House versions of limited Sec. 315 relief.

The two bills awaiting a vote in both chambers aren't drastically unalike, except the Senate bill frees panels and documentaries while the House bill doesn't.

It looks as if the Senate bill will pass the Senate and the House bill will pass the House. Then a compromise will have to be worked out.

Meanwhile, the Sen. Hubert Humphrey-"Face the Nation" controversy remained in the news. Humphrey's fellow Minnesota Democratic Senator, Eugene J. McCarthy, urged a "full-scale" Senate investigation of CBS' cancellation of Humphrey's appearance on the panel show before voting on "equal time" legislation, calling the web's action "badly reasoned, arbitrary and inconsistent." McCarthy added: "In my opinion, the CBS ruling borders on the ridiculous and argues against any hasty repeal of the 'equal time' provision of the Communications Act."

There was little chance of a Senate probe, but it was evident that the CBS decision to call off the Humphrey show hurt rather than helped "equal time" relief. It added new fuel to the widely held thinking among politicians that broadcasters are not to be trusted too far in "equal time" situations, which is the reason Sec. 315 was written into the law in the first place.

McCarthy noted that Sec. 315 refers to "legally qualified candidates" for office, adding: "The attorneys for CBS do not have the authority to declare who is legally qualified or who is not." (CBS bumped Humphrey, contending he was a candidate for the Democratic Presidential nomination. Humphrey countered he's not until he announces himself as such, which he has not done. And he hasn't.)

The House Commerce Committee rewrote the Harris compromise "equal time" bill previously approved by its Communications Subcommittee. The new version, composed by Rep. John E. Moss (D-Calif.), was approved by the committee by a 25-1-1 vote. One member said "no" and another voted "present."

The Moss language exempts appearances of candidates on "any bona fide newscasts (including news interviews) or on-the-spot coverage of news events (including but not limited to political conventions and activities incidental thereto)" where such appearances are "incidental to the presentation of news."

Idea of this rewrite was to describe in greater detail the exemption. Brief Harris compromise had removed from Sec. 315 umbrella "newscasts (including news interviews and on-the-spot coverage of newsworthy events."

Leaders of "equal time" effort had counted five or six votes within the committee against the Harris compromise and had found the objections of all but two of them could be met with the more specific Moss wording.

House is expected to vote on the bill within a couple of weeks.

Senate may vote later this week on the Senate bill which frees from Sec. 315 "any newscast, news interview, news documentary, on-the-spot coverage of news events or panel discussions."

In the opinion of House managers of the "equal time" bill, the House will not agree to exempting panels and documentaries, and Senate will have to recede before any final version of the bill acceptable to both houses can be cleared for the Eisenhower signature.

If the bills pass both houses, as is expected, a House-Senate conference committee, composed of senior Commerce Committee members of both houses, will be named to frame mutually agreeable language.

EDITORIALIZING ON WBC FRISCO AGENDA

Looks as though the big topic on the agenda of the Westinghouse Broadcasting public affairs-news conference in San Francisco in September will be on-the-air editorializing. Broadcast chain, which sponsors the annual event, surveyed the invited stations and later disclosed this one subject was one of the "biggest interest" to tv and radio stations.

WBC says that 80% of those stations invited have already accepted.

CBS-TV Formats A 2-Way Package On '60 Olympics

Picking up where ABC-TV recently left off, CBS-TV is interested in—and likely to get—the 1960 Winter Olympics from Squaw Valley, Calif. Network is "talking" to the American committee, represented by Danny Seymour, radio-tv topper for J. Walter Thompson, and a deal looks imminent, especially since neither ABC-TV nor NBC-TV are interested any longer.

ABC decided that the snowy sports event would by itself prove too costly. But CBS, on the other hand, figures that it can offer prospective sponsors a package consisting of the relatively inexpensive summer games (on tape from Rome) and the Squaw Valley events. On this basis, CBS says the worst that can happen is it will break even. Besides, CBS says, it is interested in the prestige that exclusive Olympic coverage will provide.

One of the essential reasons ABC backed off, to the consternation of the Squaw Valley Committee and JWT, which for a moment seemed to be without the promise of any tv deal whatsoever, was that it couldn't also lay hands on part of the Summer Olympics as well. CBS had them tied up tight.

When ABC-TV seemingly was committed for the Winter Olympics, it was believed generally that the cost of the remote from the California mountains would run as high as $1,000,000, including the price of the Winter Olympics rights. However, a CBS source stated that the technical cost of a remote would not run his web more than $500,000, not counting rights.

CBS would not detail its pending deal on the cost of Winter Olympics rights, but did confirm that it was not the same as the one ABC would have had. ABC-TV was to have spent about at least $150,000 for rights, with a sliding upward scale, depending on the type of sponsorship it got for the five days of Squaw Valley television.

"We will try to get as much money as possible for the Squaw Valley Committee," said CBS. Network would go no further in clarifying its rights deal.

KWK's Film Biz Salute

St. Louis, July 28.

KWK will spearhead an area-wide musical salute to the motion picture industry Aug. 2-Aug. 16 in cooperation with picture exhibitors on the Missouri and Illinois side of the Mississippi.

Features include showcasing Academy-Award winning tunes on KWK shows plus talks on the economic, cultural and public service contributions made to St. Louis each year by local picture exhibitors. Local record retailers will set up special displays during the "salute" weeks, and picture houses will spotlight special lobby displays and will run 60-second film trailers plugging the "salute."

Mex TV's Talent War Looms Over Exclusive Pacting

Mexico City, July 28.

A talent war may be looming up in television as sponsors eye advantages of signing up actors to longterm exclusive contracts. In the past casting has been on a hit or miss basis, with talent freelancing and producers engaging in a hectic grab bag for performers. This has not worked out for both camps; actors have had to rush about making rounds seeking prospective jobs; and producers have often been caught short with inadequate performers.

It is rumored that sponsors have been urging producers to initiate the contract basis into programming to "safeguard" the quality of programs and prestige of artists being developed.

Youthful actor Lorenzo de Rodas, one of the first to ink a pact for a year, said that new trend will be "beneficial to talent as well as for sponsors." Working on an exclusive contract basis frees player from preoccupations and necessity to appear on two or three programs a week to maintain a family.

As star of the "Family Theatre" here, telecast Wednesdays, de Rodas has been built up in past year to present position as a television audience favorite.

Move to ink other top and upcoming entertainers appears to be gaining momentum, and may bring some semblance of order into television casting. However, no one speaks about whether or not pay scales are being boosted at the same time.

KANE'S LONGTERM CANADA TV PACT

Toronto, July 28.

One of the longest deals the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. has signed with any of its artists (the others are Wayne & Shuster and Joan Fairfax, respectively for five years and two years), is that of Jack Kane, who has pacted a three-year contract with the CBC in which he will swing his baton for 20 one-hour shows during the 1959-60 season next fall, plus the same number the following season.

Kane will also be on the podium this coming season for his 60-mins. semi-monthly show of "Cross-Canada Hit Parade" and his every second Monday night of his "Music '60," another hour-length show.

Toronto—Jan Rubes, Czech-born bass-baritone has become host for the Canadian network television series "Rhapsody." Singer has had his own CBS Trans-Canada radio show, "Songs of My People" since 1953.

DON'T PIN HOPES ON POST-'48s

ITC's Tape-&-Film Formula

In this transition period of whether to use the film or vidtape technique, Independent Television Corp. has come up with this answer—use both techniques on the same show for maximum exposure.

Many syndication entries, strictly available on vidtape, are trailing behind in sales because of the market potential at this point. Divorced from the commercial acceptability of the show, a vidtape entry has only 60 markets at present to cultivate. Most of the major markets are accounted for, but nevertheless the 60 number spells limitations.

Then, there is this other problem, evidenced in ITC's syndication of "Ding Dong School." Many vidtape equipped stations, especially those with only one vidtape recording unit, prefer the show on film at this point, if given the choice. They find that their single vidtape machine is kept so busy with local commercials, vidtaping local shows, etc., that they don't want to use the equipment for a syndicated entry.

ITC, which is syndicating "Ding Dong" both on vidtape and film, has found that of the 70 stations lined up for the show, only 14 outlets have indicated they want the vidtape version. The remainder either haven't made up their mind yet, or prefer film. Patently, ITC's distribution of "Ding Dong" would be severly limited if the stripped show only was available on vidtape.

Action Replaces 'Group Paralysis' As Vidfilm Buyers Spread Their Coin

The hedging of tv film buyers, on the regional and local levels, which was so characteristic of last season appears to be a thing of the past. Action on virtually every front has replaced the "group paralysis" of last summer.

The regional biz is coming in at a healthy pace now. Stations also are inking deals for the fall. The only major first-run property still unaccounted for on the regional level is United Artists Television's "The Vikings."

A recap of biz written by the major telefilmeries indicates the rosy color of the summer spark. Key regionals for Ziv's "This Man Dawson" include H. P. Hood & Son of New England and American Tobacco; Independent Television Corp.'s "Four Just Men" copped three major regionals and the Crosley station group before being put into the market-by-market hopper; National Telefilm Associates on top of its 93-market renewal on "U.S. Marshal," moved DX-Sunray into its corner with "Grand Jury"; and MCA TV's "Shotgun Slade" and Screen Gems' "Manhunt" also are perking on the regional front.

The liveliness of the tv film buying also is reflected on the local level. One of the key telefilm users in N.Y., for example, refuses at this stage to divulge what it's buying for the fall season. The reason is that it doesn't want to galvanize the competitive stations into counter buying action.

With few exceptions, most of the syndication houses have had a tough winter and spring and the current upsurge is more than wel-

Try New Tack On Vidpix Export Unit

The telefilm export committee, chaired by Merle Jones of CBS, is due to have another meeting next month.

The committee, which was formed to organize a telefilm export association, has been holding meetings the past six months without too much success.

Now, a new approach for the formation of an association will be tried. Instead of attempting to get 18 or 20 telefilmeries to agree on a common organization and program, an attempt will be made to work with a small group of telefilmeries. If the small group can come up with the answers, an association could be formed by the comparative handful of companies. The association would then invite other telefilmeries to join.

Reason for the adoption of the "small group" course of action is that it was found that with all the telefilmeries represented from the start, there was too much conflicting points of views, paralyzing the formative moves for an association.

'Jim Bowie' Sales

ABC Films has made 17 sales on "The Adventures of Jim Bowie" in the last month and 12 new sales on "The People's Choice."

"Bowie," Scott Forbes starrer produced by Lou Edelman, is going to WXIX, Milwaukee; WFAA, Dallas; CBLT, Toronto, and WSB, Atlanta among others.

New stations for "People's Choice," Jackie Cooper starrer, include WALA, Mobile; WBKW, Buffalo; and WCHS, Charleston. The sales come on top of five-a-week strip contracts by WCBS, New York; and KTTV, Los Angeles.

Fineshriber Out, Screen Gems Nod For Lloyd Burns

Key international job for Screen Gems, the Columbia Pictures vidfilm subsidiary, will fall to Lloyd Burns. Burns, who heads SG's Canadian operation, will technically replace William Fineshriber, although there is no present certainty he will have Fineshriber's title as director, international operations.

It was rumored several weeks ago that Fineshriber and Screen Gems had a falling out, but it was only last week that the situation was crystallized in the appointment of Burns. Fineshriber, who was on vacation last week, has not announced his future plans.

With the expanding international telefilm market, plus the fact that SG is well entrenched in overseas sales, the SG international post ranked as one of the most important in the foreign telepic field. It is believed, however, that some of the field work and perhaps even some of the administration that came under Fineshriber's aegis will fall to Columbia's European setup.

MGM-TV CO-PRODUCTION DICKERS ON 'RAFFLES'

MGM TV is scouting a co-production deal with producer Bernie Prockter on a "Raffles" series, to be filmed in England.

Another co-production deal on the MGM TV agenda is the one with Lelo Productions, the Alan Jay Lerner-Frederick Loewe company. The Lelo project, slated to be filmed at Metro studios outside London, is a series based on the writings of columnist Art Buchwald. It's planned that the 39 telepix subjects will include some 60-minute productions in addition to the general half-hour episodes.

MAJORS NOT SO HUNGRY FOR COIN

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

Never before has the outlook for a sell-off of post-'48 features to tv by major Hollywood studios looked dimmer.

What's altered the forecast so rapidly is the success of many film studios in getting into telefilm production. Warner Bros., for example, with its heavy schedule of telefilm programming on ABC-TV, should gross about $30,000,000 with its vidfilms. Columbia's Screen Gems subsid is another example of a "boom-boom" telefilm situation.

Principal argument of those who had been forecasting a lifting of the post-'48 ceiling had been that economic necessity would drive the majors to make the move. It was maintained that the majors now are receiving millions of dollars yearly from the licensing of their oldies to tv. When those millions cease to come in, or are sharply reduced, the majors would be forced to make some settlement with the Hollywood talent guilds for pix made after the cutoff date of August, '48. It was predicted that in about three years, the situation would come to a head for many of the pix companies.

But with a WB grossing some $30,000,000 from telefilm production, does that company need the revenues derived from features-to-tv selling? (WB sold its entire pre-'48 library for about $21,000,000.) Granted that the features-to-tv sales represents clear, fresh monies in the tills of the motion picture companies. But monies derived from that source has to be matched against the possible damage to the more lucrative theatrical boxoffices.

When studio after studio dumped their pre-'48 cinematic vaults in the tv market more than three years ago, the situation was entirely different. They were just getting their feet wet in telefilm production, their revenues from that source hardly equalling that of today.

Not all the majors are riding high on the telefilm production bandwagon. Loew's MGM-TV didn't make a network sale this year. Ditto Paramount Pictures. But all of pix companies want in

Lotsa Candidates For Harris' Slot

Rumor mill is rife on who's slated to get the production v.p. post at CBS Films, due to be vacated shortly by Leslie Harris who is moving over to Independent Television Corp.

Prominent among the names mentioned are Al Scalpone, onetime Coast production topper for CBS-TV and now an indie producer; Robert W. Stabler, Filmaster prexy; Hal Huff, CBS o&o program director; and Dick Brill, web producer.

Merle Jones, who heads up the CBS division governing the film subsid, wants to make a decision shortly and he's understood to be angling for a production topper with a track record.

No choice has been made as yet, although a flock of applications began arriving for the post as soon as Harris made known his intentions of exiting. At ITC, Harris will be head of the newly-created post of production topper for ITC's international division, headquarters in London.

The team organizational setup at CBS Films, under Jones, will continue. John Howell remains sales v.p.; Sam Digges, administrative v.p.; and Ralph Baruch in charge of foreign sales.

Comedy Relief as WB's Formula, So Tatelman Takes Cue for 'Alaskans'

By BOB CHANDLER

Hollywood, July 28.

Use of comedy is on the upbeat in what until recently were television's straight adventure, mystery and western shows. Comic touch, naturally, has been instrumental in the success of "Maverick" and "77 Sunset Strip," and Warner Bros., which produces the two segments, intends to push it further.

Harry Tatelman, producer of Warners' new "Alaskans" series skedded for ABC-TV Sunday nights, will use comedy as a key element in the show. Not only because Warners has found comedy elements in straight actioners pay off, but for special reasons of his own for this particular series.

For one thing, title of "The Alaskans" conjures up a somewhat cold and forbidding picture in the viewer's mind, Tatelman points out. His aim with comedy is to give viewers what amounts to a pleasurable surprise. For another, the Alaska of 1898, setting of the show, was filled with "characters," con men and comic situations.

Emphasis of the series, which stars Roger Moore, Jeff Yorke and Dorothy Provine, will be on action-adventure, but in researching the show Tatelman has found so many situations that lend themselves to comedy that many plot lines will have a comedic base. One segment, for example, will deal with Moore's efforts to get a shipment of turkeys up from the States in time for Thanksgiving. Another deals with a con man who set up a "telegraph office" with lines presumed to run to the States but who actually laid only five miles of line.

Tatelman's already done much with comedy relief in another of his productions at Warners, "Sugarfoot." In latter, the comedy was born of necessity, since Will Hutchins portrays a scrawny tenderfoot who exists by brain instead of brawn. "If we hadn't brought comedy into it, the character would have gotten awfully pious and dull after a while," he says.

The producer has no delusions about television's role. He sees it as a medium for entertainment and escape. "When a guy gets home at night and sits down in front of the box, he doesn't want to be reminded of his troubles. He wants to get away from them. The way to do it is to keep him interested and make him laugh

Downbeat on Features

Australia, which is booming as a telefilm market, isn't too much of a market for features-to-tv at present.

Reason for the pix downbeat "down under" is that the Australian film industry, mainly exhibitors, have united to help prevent any new features to tv sales. So far the organization has been quite effective. Ace up its sleeve is the threat of possible sanctions against any American theatrical film distributor who sells cinematics to tv. Such a threat has tended to immobilize the major companies.

Screen Gems, one of the big companies active in feature-to-tv distribution abroad, has sold some cinematics to Australian tv, as has Associated Artists Productions, now called United Artists Associated. But Metro is staying out of the market because of the upsurge of exhibitor pressure.

Virtually Entire U.S. Sked Getting An Aussie Airing

Charles Michelson Inc., the N.Y.-based buying agent for Australia's Television, Inc., Ltd., has bought 48 telefilm series for telecasting "down under," the largest group purchase for Australia in history.

Besides telefilms, the purchase includes the formats for live shows, cartoons and wrestling on film. The two show formats bought include "Tic Tac Dough," and "Concentration," from NBC International. Scanning the entire catalog bought, it appears as if U.S. television exported itself nearly in toto to Australia, minus the specials.

This is the lineup:

"Hollywood Star Playhouse," MCA; "Bonanza," "Danger Is My Business," "Fibber McGee & Molly," "It's A Great Life," "Lawless Years," "Nat King Cole," "Philip Marlow," "People Are Funny," NBC International; "Bronco," "Hawaiian Eye," "Alaskans," "Bourbon Street Beat," Warner Bros.; "Sergeant Preston of the Yukon," Independent Television Corp.; "DuPont Theatre," "Peter Gunn," "Yancy Derringer," Sharpe-Lewis Productions.

Also "San Francisco Beat," "Rawhide," "Richard Diamond," "Perry Mason," "U.S. Border Patrol," "Gunsmoke," "Navy Log," "Trackdown," "Mr. Adams & Eve," "Small World," "Wanted Dead or Alive," "Have Gun Will Travel," "Gene Autry," and "Red Skelton," CBS Films; "Thin Man," MGM-TV:

SILVERS, 'TRACKDOWN' SALES PILING UP

CBS Films' two off-network entries "Trackdown" and the "Phil Silvers Show" are racking up sales at a nice clip.

"Trackdown," the newest entry, has been sold in 18 markets, many of the stations inking a two-year deal covering the 71 "Trackdown" episodes. Total biz inked on the series to date is about $400,000. Stations inking for the series include KTTV, Los Angeles; KGMP, Honolulu; WTVT, Tampa, Fla.; KROD, El Paso; WCHS, Charleston, W. Va.; and KOOL, Phoenix.

Silvers show, already accounted for with Carling's large regional, has been sold in an additional 26 markets. New cities on the roster include Chicago, Denver, Des Moines, Salt Lake City, Louisville, Indianapolis, and Philadelphia.

20th Unloading More Pre-'48's

Coming down the features-to-tv pike is a sizeable group of pre-'48 cinematics from 20th-Fox, to be distributed by National Telefilm Associates.

Disclosure of the new NTA-20th-Fox distribution deal, still to be ironed out, came as 20th-Fox moved to acquire NTA's o&o, KMSP, Minneapolis-St. Paul station, for a reported $3,500,000.

Twentieth-Fox is understood to have some 300 pre-'48's still uncommitted to tv, the largest group of Hollywood oldies other than that held by Samuel Goldwyn Productions. How many of these are deemed commercial for the tv market remains to be seen. But it's probably over 200. (Incidentally, the commercial standards for the features-to-tv market have been lowered in the recent past in light of the relative cinematic famine.)

NTA under its old deal still has 78 features to cull from the 20th-Fox backlog. These 78 were keyed for distribution in the fall. But NTA's new deal may change that plan.

VARIETY-ARB FEATURE CHART

VARIETY's weekly feature chart, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, covers two markets. Each week the 10 top rated features for the two markets will be listed.

Factors which would assist distributors, agencies, stations and advertisers in determining the effectiveness of a feature show in a specific market have been included in this VARIETY chart. Listed below is such pertinent information regarding features as their stars, release year, original production company and the present distributor included wherever possible along with the title. Attention should be paid to such factors as the time and day, the high and low ratings for the measured feature period and share of audience, since these factors reflect the effectiveness of the feature and audience composition, i.e., a late show at 11:15 p.m. would hardly have any children viewers, but its share of audience may reflect dominance in that time period. In the cities where stations sell their feature programming on a multi stripped basis utilizing the same theatrical throughout the week a total rating for the total number of showings for the week is given, the total rating not taking into account the duplicated homes factor. Barring unscheduled switches in titles the listed features for the particularly rated theatrical filmed show are as accurate as could be ascertained.

L&M'S RUSSIAN ROULETTE YEAR

The 'Omnibus' Dilemma

Champions of "tv uplift" programming — as exemplified by "Omnibus"—are once more rallying to the cause with the threatened demise of the hourlong entry which has been a network staple for seven years. It's not the first time that the program has faced a bleak future, but that last-minute reprive via sponsorship always cropped up in the past. And invariably "Omnibus" improved with age, last season attaining a new qualitative high in program content and presentation.

NBC-TV has sold out the 4:30 to 5:30 "Omnibus" time to a brace of sponsors more interested in sports (golf) programming. That NBC is hesitant about finding a new slot, sans sponsorship, for the show is understandable since it already is committed to a $4,000,000 Sunday night drama schedule which may or may not be sold, and last year defrayed an out-of-pocket cost of $625,000 on "Omnibus" because of its single sponsor (Aluminium Ltd.) status.

"Omnibus" is no stranger to the three tv networks, having roosted in a variety of time periods, in each instance adding to the networks' programmatic laurels. The suggestion has been broached in some quarters: why not perpetuate the entry on a three-network rotating basis, with each web participating in the underwriting, if not on an alternate-week basis at least as a once-a-month attraction. The industry-wide prestige aspect alone, it's contended, would more than compensate for the tab.

CBS-TV's 'Hausfrau Reporters' To Cover Both Coasts in '59 'Televisit'

The second (and perhaps last) CBS-TV "Daytime Televisit Week" is slated for Sept. 13-19, with hausfraus representing every state in the Union visiting not only New York but the network's Hollywood branch as well.

Having collected what it estimates as $1,000,000 worth of free publicity from the first such junket, in the fall of '58, CBS-TV has gone and added a female from the newest state, Hawaii. Her participation comes before Hawaii officially enters the union, but CBS figures it set a precedent last semester by injecting an Alaskan before that state had officially made it in.

In all, there will be 51 women, one from each state and the District of Columbia, which is a total of one more than last time. Picked by local tv stations and newspapers, each of the females, as was the case last year, will be delivered from home to N.Y. for a minimum of three-days to interview performers on CBS daytime programs, talk to executives of the web and inspect network facilities. After that, for this season's new twist, the hausfraus will be flown to Hollywood where they'll ditto the general list of activities. Every day of the two-ply trip, they're expected to write copy for the local papers about tv in general and CBS in particular.

What few people have realized since the initial "Televisit" was that it constituted television's first genuine "audience junket." For years, tv has been running press or personality junkets, sometimes to where an audience was situated, but never before had it been visa versa.

CBS expects that maybe the junket will have used up its worth

Canada Dry's Coin Into ABC's Disney

Canada Dry, which had been flirting with NBC-TV, moved into ABC-TV's corner and bought a half-hour alternate week schedule on "Walt Disney Presents," starting this fall. Agency is J. M. Mathes.

Earlier in the buying season, Canada Dry came to NBC-TV with a proposal for 10 specials, but the web after looking over the proposed formats and personalities rejected the specials because they lacked the requisite stature. Client and agency then made revisions, some more acceptable to the web. But in the midst of NBC-TV's fresh look-see, Canada Dry was weaned into the Disney slot by ABC-TV.

The Canada Dry buy puts the Friday night Disney hour starting at 7:30 p.m. three quarters sold out. The other sponsors inked are Hills Bros. and Mars.

—Of Robes & Roles

The long reach for tv talent is poking into some high places these days.

Following the word that former president Harry S. Truman will do one of Jack Benny's CBS-TV shows, it's learned that U.S. Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas will appear in one of the John Gunther "High Road" skeins on ABC-TV.

The high judge is now on an eight-day pack trip to Mt. Adam in Washington state with the "Road" production crew starting last weekend (25). Highlight of the footage will feature Douglas, an inveterate outdoorsman and hiker, scaling the mount.

Ford of Canada's Specials Splurge; $2,500,000 Budget

Toronto, July 28.

While spokesmen of the Ford Motor Co. of Canada and the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. will not immediately comment, there is talk between the two of a $2.500.000 deal which will include the sponsor's launching in the Fall of a $500,000 to $750,000 per spectacular over the trans-Canada network of CBC's 48 tv stations.

The Ford-CBC package would include 19 made-in-Canada spectaculars, running from 60 minutes to 120 minutes each, the other half to be sponsored separately by Ford in the United States on a U. S. network basis but these to be purchased by the CBC for telecast in Canada, with collection charges via wire etc., to be collected from Ford of Canada Ltd. by the CBC.

The Ford sponsorship bill for the full series will not only be the biggest in Canadian tv, but it will be the first time that serious drama, classical concerts, ballet and opera have been sponsored on a regular basis.

Admiral Orders Its TV Set Out of Russia

Chicago, July 28.

Admiral Corp. is protesting the display of a tv receiver bearing the Admiral trademark in the Soviet Exhibition of Science, Technology & Culture currently in New York. Company prexy Ross D. Siragusa addressed a letter to Alex N. Manzhulo at the New York Coliseum claiming infringement by the Russians of Admiral's proprietary trademark and asking that the tv set be removed from public display.

WHAT HAPPENED TO NINE SHOWS

It's very possible that in modern-day television there is nothing that quite compares with the game of musical chairs as played by Liggett & Myers on NBC-TV during the past season. TV historians would have to look in vain for anything approximating the $20,000,000 Russian roulette gamble (representing time and programming on nine different shows) that might well have been one of the factors in NBC's decision to play it "big big big" on specials next season and spare itself the kind of embarrassments exemplified by the L&M nine-show parlay.

Of the nine shows to which Liggett & Myers (on behalf of Chesterfield, Oasis and L&M ciggies) attached its sponsor identification card, only one survives as an L&M entry when the fall curtain goes up, and in this instance ("Black Saddle") it switches over to ABC-TV. As a postscript commentary, L&M will be throwing its entire tv budget in ABC-TV's direction next season, with the exception of a half-sponsorship stake in CBS-TV's new "Hotel de Paree' western.

Here's the "who-what-when-where-&-how" rundown on L&M's "Operation Cancellation" for '58-'59:

Season started with sponsorship of Eddie Fisher's alternate-week hour show Tuesdays; "Steve Canyon" Saturdays at 9; "Brains and Brawn" Saturdays 10:30 and Ed Wynn Thursdays at 8. By early spring Wynn was out; "Steve Canyon" was shifted to Thursday at 8; "Black Saddle" was installed Saturdays at 9. A month later Eddie Fisher was cancelled; "Behind Closed Doors" went in Thursdays at 9, only to subsequently get the axe. "Brains & Brawn" went next, with "D.A.'s Man" as the Saturday 10:30 replacement. This is going, too.

With Fisher's demise, L&M bought the Jimmie Rodgers Show" and "Pete Kelly's Blues" to fill the Tuesday brace of half-hours. But "Pete," even before preeming was shifted to Sundays 8:30 and "Steve Canyon" moved to Tuesday at 8. Both however, were destined for cancellation, with L&M buying "Dragnet" to displace "Pete Kelly" for the summer months and Rodgers getting his notice. "Black Saddle" moves to Friday night 10:30 on ABC-TV. "Steve Canyon" is vanishing from the Tuesday at 8 slot.

Two agencies were involved: McCann-Erickson and Dancer, Fitzgerald & Sample.

Remington Yens TV News Specials

Remington Typewriter is eyeing sponsorship of two NBC-TV news specials on the topic of African nationalism, which Chet Huntley will front. Network tentatively plans to slot them between 7:30 and 8:30 p.m., on consecutive Mondays next November.

Since "Love & Marriage," slated for 8 p.m. on Mondays, is only half sponsored, and since the 7:30 "Richard Diamond" series is not sponsored at all, web figures it won't be too difficult preempting the Monday hours for the Huntley shows.

NBC-TV is also planning two other news-pubaffairs specials at the moment. One is to be called "Vertical Frontier," an Air Force-inspired one-shot destined for Aug. 2 in the Sunday 1:30-2 p.m. anchorage. Other, on alcoholism, is in the works as well but no time or date for exposure set.

Quinlan's Quinine to Relieve Chi Headache: Equal Time for Mex Bulls

By LES BROWN

Chicago, July 28.

Humane societies and other groups vigorously protesting the scheduled airing of WBKB's video tape spec, "Bullfights From Mexico City," have not succeeded in quashing the showing, but Sterling (Red) Quinlan, boss of the ABC station, in effect has granted them equal time to debate their point of view. The tapes from Mexico, running 65 minutes, will go on this Saturday (1) at 10 p.m. Its detractors will get air time exactly a week later in the same slot.

Quinlan previewed the tapes last Wednesday (22), apparently in hopes of winning endorsements from the watchdogs of animal welfare for the way his station had cleaned up the bloodshed through editing. But the strategy backfired.

The anti-cruelty faction still didn't approve of the show, while certain aficionados from the press complained the deletions represented censorship of art, arguing the death of the bull is part of the ritual. (Actually, the original tapes showed only one of three bulls dying, and that was one which had been stabbed badly, the sword entering a lung. It was mainly this gory scene that was edited out of the tv presentation.)

J. J. Shaffer of the Anti-Cruelty Society said he feared the bullfights on WBKB would be precedental (and, indeeed, Quinlan has had queries from other stations around the country about the reception to the Mexican-made tapes) and that it might influence children to do harmful things to animals, or even to themselves. Not for nothing is bullfighting outlawed in this country, he pointed out.

Quinlan stated that the one-shot special had an educational purpose

Daniel & the Lions

While CBS and NBC are shooting darts at each other for scheduling rival versions of Stephen Vincent Benet's "The Devil and Daniel Webster" for the fall, small Gotham indie WEVD beat both webs to the punch and presented a recorded version of the Benet classic last night (Tues.)

In its summer rebroadcast series of "Theatre Studio of the Air" it presented the recorded version made by the Theatre Studio of New York with Lou Antonio, Lonny Chapman, William Clemens and Ann Whiteside in the cast.

Mobile Vidtapes Now Big Business; New Coast Setup

Hollywood, July 28.

Hollywood will get its second mobile vidtape rental unit into action next week with the establishment of VTR Mobile Productions Inc. as a mobile rental outfit.

VTR is partnered by Bill Kayden, producer of the all-tape "On the Go," Irvin Atkins, exec of John Guedel Productions, which packages "Go," and Dave Carson and Hank Gilbert. Company is an outgrowth of "On the Go" in more ways than one, however.

Unit which VTR will use is the one presently being used by Guedel for the CBS-TV daytimer. But next week, Guedel gets delivery on a huge, $300,000 self-contained mobile unit, complete with two tape recorders, three camera chains with room for a fourth, air conditioning, power generator, lights and reflecors, and even a couple of Zoomars. Truck also has a 40-foot-long dolly track on its roof for a camera mounted there.

Upon arrival of the new unit, VTR, operating as a private enterprise (Kayden continues as "Go" producer), takes over the present unit, a two-truck affair with recorders mounted in one and mobile equipment in the other. Rental rates will range from $1.000 to $2.000 per eight-hour day. Minimal rate reps use of two camera chains and one recorder; maximum is two recorders and a three-camera setup. Rates represent equipment rental only; producers must provide their own crews.

First assignment of the new outfit is a San Diego remote for Coca-Cola, a segment of the first "America Pauses" special for fall.

Ampex Gets $2,500,000 Order From Educ. Center

Redwood City, Cal., July 28.

Ampex Corp. has received a $2,500,000 order from the National Educational TV and Radio Center, New York, for videotape recorders to be delivered to 43 ETV stations throughout the U. S.

Funds for the purchase are coming from a $2.706,000 grant made to the center by the Ford Foundation.

John F. White, president of the ETV center, and Ampex President George I. Long Jr. made the announcement jointly. The purchase followed a comprehensive study of all types of broadcasting equipment conducted by a tv technical group named by the center.

In addition to equipping ETV stations, the order will also provide Ampex recorders at the center's studio in Arbor, Mich.

Warner Lambert's Heavy TV Budget

Warner Lambert is on a last-minute buying spree.

Following closely last week's purchase of the "Gale Storm Show," ABC-TV Thursday's 7:30 p.m., drug firm put orders in for half of two Milton Berle Sunday specials, Oct. 11 and Nov. 1, and a Jimmy Durante one-shot special Friday night Sept. 25, all NBC-TV. Same time company is buying alternate thirds of NBC's hour skeins, "Laramie," Tuesday night 7:30, and "Five Fingers," Saturday night 9:30.

Company is also a purchaser for alternate weeks of CBS-TV's "Person to Person" (see separate story).

CHURCHMEN TO AIR SEX, VIOLENCE ON AIR

Framingham, Mass., July 28.

"Sex and Violence by Way of Radio and Television — What Christians Ought to Do About It" is marked up for discussion at this week's five-day conclave of church leaders at the Congregational Conference Center.

The 12th annual Eastern Christian Social Action Institute, with church leaders from 11 states, Washington, D. C., and Puerto Rico attending, is sponsored by the Social Action Committee of the Mass. Congregational Christian Conference and the Council for Christian Social Action of the United Church of Christ.

The discussion group on sex and violence will be conducted by Rev. John J. Grant, associate editor of The Pilot, Boston Catholic Archdiocesan newspaper, and Alden Eberle, asst. gen. secy., Boston YMCA.

VARIETY-ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top ten network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top ten syndicated shows in the same particular market. This week ten different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top ten shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting, competitive programming in the particular slot, etc., is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 150 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top ten network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U. S.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Andy Williams Show

Last week's third installment of the "Andy Williams Show" summer replacement for Garry Moore on CBS-TV proved if anything that the initial entry, which won critical kudoes, was anything but a fluke. In fact the 60-minute layout proved beyond doubt that the network has a hit on its hands—if it can find a place for it in the fall. Aside from Williams' own clean-cut, facile deportment, the Norm Jewison-Perry Lafferty director-producer teamup (a carryover from the half-hour "Hit Parade") brought forth a showcase that was entirely imaginative in concept and execution, demonstrating that, with proper cerebral resources, you don't need a $125,000 budget to bring in an hour variety stanza. What could easily have been a pedestrian guesting stint by Andy Griffith, for example, was transformed into an infectious bit of byplay through the simple expedient of some ingenious camera treatment and harnessing the direction. The June Valli guesting was similarly nice to take and if at times there seems to be an overcuteness on the weekly LP segment, nonetheless the overall free-wheeling simplicity and style stamps this as the runaway entry of the summer semester.

Chevy Show

The summer Chevy show has been one of the delights of the hot months with a consistent record of good taste and superior production, all adding up to top entertainment. Paced by Janet Blair and John Raitt, with guesters as needed, the staff has been getting out a show worthy of a permanent niche.

Sunday's (26) edition over NBC-TV showed its usual top form with Miss Blair and Raitt performing a set of amiable tunes and guesters Wally Cox, Jocy Bushkin and Joyce Jameson helping the proceedings to a favorable conclusion. Cox seems to be coming out of a shell. He's now essaying material that seems to have been written for him. It clocked laughs, but not of the slow, folksy variety that Cox has been accustomed to. This could mean nightclubs for him again, if he makes good in a few more situations like this. Miss Jameson seemed somewhat lost in this wealth of material. Her marilyn-monroesque impressions were brief and got over; but a sense of curiosity remained as to her potential. Bushkin's pianistics comprised amiable configurations that were filled with an easy humor and a bright delivery.

The two major efforts were a library skit, excellently put together, and a Mexican sequence that also carried a lot of charm. In all these events, Miss Blair and Raitt put over top performances and added stature to one of the better shows of the summer season.

Perry Presents

At the midseason point, this summer stand-in for the Perry Como show shapes up as a neat musical stanza showcasing some excellent vocalists. Tony Bennett, a consistent pro who has been heading up the series, has been joined by Peggy King, a pert performer and nifty vocalist. For the past few weeks, the Four Lads, a versatile combo, has also been slotted on the show.

Last Sunday night's (25) session was a straightforward session of songs with a minimum of production gimmicks to get in the way of the music. The most elaborate sequence involved a rundown of tunes that identified stars like Al Jolson, Sophie Tucker, Judy Garland, etc. Bennett was standout on such tunes as "One More For The Road" and "The Party's Over" while Miss King was given a top chance on a tricky arrangement of "St. Louis Blues." The Four Lads, who are exiting the show to launch a nitery tour, was slotted on a couple of pleasant ballads and were given a heavy plug sendoff. The finale, with the whole company, was a birthday party routine that brought the curtain down on a bright note.

Hy Gardner

Hy Gardner in his hour of gab on WNEW-TV on Saturday (25) tried an unusual stunt which had mixed results. It had performers interviewing columnists, an offbeat role for both, and it gave an indication of what might happen when a performer is bent on revenge for bad reviews, unfavorable comment, etc.

Joey Adams and Johnnie Ray interviewed columnists Gardner (N. Y. Herald Tribune), Earl Wilson (N. Y. Post), and Louis Sobol (N. Y. Journal-American). Ray, getting his turn first, seemed to be in genuine quest of knowledge. He submitted queries that deserved and got serious answers.

Of the pillarists, seen almost everywhere with their spouses, he asked how influential are the wives. Sobol, who admitted to a wife with strong reactions, admitted that he would turn to Peggy for the femme angle, probably to see how business would hold up for the matinees.

On the other hand, Adams generally couched his questions in the form of a tirade. Colloquy during this period was Adams' demand to know how dare the columnists turn critic and review talent. Sobol properly reminded him of the time in Leon & Eddie's when Sobol gave it to him for having a dirty act, and Adams had the good sense to take the suggestion. "Yeah," agreed Adams, "but you put it in the column instead

As for the dialog among Sobol, Wilson and Gardner, there was a lot of interest. All these lads have lived through some picturesque periods, and all seem to have mellowed somewhat with the passage of time.

OPERATION NOAH
With Chet Huntley, narrator
Producer: Reuven Frank
Director: George Murray
30 Mins.; Sun. (26), 6:30 p.m.
NBC-TV, from New York

A constantly absorbing film account of the rescue of wild animals and other African game from the rising Zambesi River was seen on "Operation Noah" in the "Chet Huntley Reporting" spot over NBC-TV Sunday (26) with Huntley doing a well-phrased commentary.

Henry Toluzzi, who did the camera work, emphatically rates a bow for his accomplishment performed under difficult handicaps. Photographing frightened and charging animals is never a simple assignment and his mastery of the camera was exemplified in countless instances throughout the film.

"Operation Noah" was prompted by the fact that many animals including antelopes, rhinos, elephants and smaller game were caught in the flooding waters that ultimately will form a large lake above the Kariba Dam in Rhodesia. Toluzzi's camera was focused on the hardy band of game wardens and their African helpers who used small boats to search each emerging island for the trapped animals. With the aid of nets and other equipment, they were able to herd the creatures to safer territory.

Parts of the film took on all the aspects of a wild game thriller particularly one scene where a released wart hog charged at Toluzzi. Other exceptional bits of photography were shots of the graceful leaps of antelopes and the herding of the animals into the large nets. Among other outstanding shots were those of the African assistants who formed a line of beaters, banging on pans and yelling at the same time, before pouncing on the animals and binding them for shipment to the mainland.

"Operation Noah" produced by NBC News was well-edited and made for good midsummer programming fare. It brought the highly-charged wilderness of Africa into the humdrum existence of many viewers and as a result of Toluzzi's film footage, some who saw the program, are undoubtedly shopping Abercrombie & Fitch and Henry Modell's bargain basement this week for camp beds, mosquito netting, heavy firearms and other African equipment with the intent of joining the Rhodesian rangers on their rescue mission.

BARRY GRAY—FULL COVERAGE
Producers Gray, Budd Getschal
Director: George Snell
30 Mins., Mon.-thru-Fri., 10:30 p.m.
SEALY MATTRESS (half-sponsor)
WNTA-TV, New York
(Getschal)

Barry Gray's return to tv suffers excruciatingly from bad writing, making the title of his nightly WNTA-TV news-feature-interview stanza a misnomer. His rendering of the "first news of the night" at 10:30 was faulty in other ways, too.

The news stories were windy, the leads often being buried until the final minute or, in some cases on his opening night (27), lost entirely. He very definitely needs a trained newspaperman to rewrite for him and he also needs some decent graphic material. Films he used were dull and indifferently edited. He spent a full 15-minutes on "news," which is more than most of WNTA-TV's competitors spend at night, and that probably led to the hopeful title, "Full Coverage." But a quick look at the WCBS-TV and WRCA-TV news the same night, at 11, made it clear that WNTA-TV has a very long distance to travel before it can do in 15 minutes what those stations, do in nine or 10.

And on his initialer, Gray spent the last several minutes in some rather verbose observations about Jacqueline Gay Hart and on Ralph Bunche and the West Side Tennis Club. WNTA-TV called them editorials, but they weren't very provocative nor very pertinent. Since no interviewees were present on the opener, perhaps Gray, whose natural style is conversation or "argument," was forced to stretch by inserting these faint monologs.

If Gray did have a competent writer, he might have achieved some prominence for the final editorial. On alleged failings in the new Boeing 707 jets, it had the meat, but it was spread in little pieces all over the dinner plate.

WINK MARTINDALE'S DANCING PARTY
With Eddie and Betty Cole, Jan, Dean and Dave "Baby" Cortez others Producer: Al Burton
Director: Bob Searles
60 Mins., Sat., 7:30 p.m.
KHJ-TV, H'wood

Years ago on KCOP Zeke Manners staged dancing parties in the cramped quarters of what passed for a studio. Al Jarvis came along later with a ditto of the leather pushing adoloscents. But it really never caught on big until Dick Clark gave it the big personality push. Comes now a chap from Memphis named Wink Martindale, who is well equipped to duplicate his success, at least, on the local level.

Such a format as this must rise or fall on the man who is the ringmaster. In Martindale it is half way home. He's a bright, refreshing youngster who doesn't try to be a comic and keeps his place when the others are on view. There's nothing new in dance parties, per se, but "Wink" has laced in a few features to give it pace and variety. Faves of the record spinners, in the juvenile stakes are trotted out to lip-sync their biggest sellers and a game is played to immobolize the dancing feet. A variation of musical chairs, with a cowbell as the device, had three

MAX FACTOR, CHEVROLET, SQUIRT
KTTV, H'wood

The biggest goof of the television year is that the finals of this annual pageant in Long Beach weren't spread country-wide. It's safe to venture than no show of the upcoming season, spec or otherwise, will come close to approximating its home audience. Stations that opposed it might just as well have shut down.

What made the show so attractive to the setsiders was a factor not inherent in other shows. The viewers had a part in it, guessing the winner. A show with such a wide appeal and genuine interest shouldn't be confined to one station. All three sponsors (Max Factor, Chevrolet and Squirt) have national sales and the winner, Miss Japan, must have been spread over the front pages of every daily paper in the country.

As for the pageant itself, it was not only well handled but worthy time on any network. Byron Palmer as emcee of the affair was discreet, affable and never obtrusive. Too bad his work wasn't seen nationally, what with such a shortage of his high type of ringmaster. Presiding for the sponsors and the station were Bill Welch and Betty White, who kept up a running commentary on every phase of the competition without detracting from the parade of pulchritude. They knew their place and never tried to steal the camera from the shapely dolls. Their interviews were especially bright and at times humorous to keep the mood light and the subjects at ease.

If fault to find, it could be with the camera work in the earlier competition. At times the girls were photographed fat and dumpy. At other times tall and leggy. It improved considerably in the finals. It must have been a source of annoyance to the soft drink sponsor when one of the babes remarked that she spilled some Coca-Cola on her friend's dress.

It is hard to understand that with sponsors vieing for specials they'd overlook this natural, at a time when the networks are barren of anything of this stature and clogged with reruns.

THE JACK LeLANNE SHOW
Producer: Russ Warner
30 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Fri.; 11:30 a.m.; Sat. 11 a.m.
WNTA-TV, Newark-N. Y.

There's a burst of energy coming out of that tv screen from WNTA-TV, that lively Newark-N. Y. indie. It's a stripped half-hour one-man calisthenics show telecast every morning except Sunday.

Jack Le Lanne, a physical culturist who's been at the glamour video dodge on the Coast, does the hip, hop, hep calling. He chatters zestfully and cheerily about bustlines, hiplines, waistlines and what-not-lines, to the accompaniment of a tuneful organ. He also pitches a four dollar "glamour stretcher" to viewers.

If the femmes wanting to stay in trim stop talking about their wish and begin exercising, the show might garner an audience. Otherwise, there will be some clicking exercise to another channel.

LeLanne himself comes off okay before the cameras. Only props used on the opening were a chair and the "glamour stretcher." Dave Bacal was the organist.

Nikita & Nixon (New Act)

The wonders of tape in the forging of television's global link were never more forcefully, speedily or so eloquently dramatized as over the weekend when the three U.S. television networks programmed (in color on NBC) the Ampex-taped telerecording of the now historic joust between Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev and Vice President of the United States Richard N. Nixon at the opening of the U.S. Exhibit in Moscow.

Only hours after the dailies' Page One "black and white" presentation of this Nikita & Nixon diplomatic dueling, American tv audience were viewing the memorable event.

The parrying and ad lib jockeying-for-position between the Soviet's No. 1 man and the United States' No. 2 man naturally invited a variety of interpretations (the sometimes almost childish braggings of both parties concerned, literally on a my-father-is-better-than-your-father level; the sense of "playing to an audience"; the inevitable assumption of Nixon's personal aspirations; the more ominous overtones and undertones of what appeared to be said in jest). But over and above all this was an excitement and sense of immediacy inherent in the telecast bespeaking a new and vital era in global mass communication. There was something that was startling in the camera's closeup of Khrushchev's cock-of-the-walk attitude, his penchant for talking rather than listening, revealing himself in moments of emotion not generally associated with the heads of state.

In its Sunday night (7 to 7:30) repeat of the tintcast, NBC-TV brought on as an afterpiece a panel consisting of David Brinkley, Frank McGee and Frank Bourgholtzer for interpretive viewpoints. It was a penetrating summation, pinpointing the overt effect of the diplomatic byplay and providing a deeper analysis of the political implications.

SECTION 315
With Howard K. Smith, Dr. Frank Stanton, others Producer: William Weston
Director: Michael Zeamer
Writer: Art Barron
30 Mins., Sun. (26), 6 p.m.
CBS-TV, from New York

There's always been a timidity on the part of television in utilizing its own facilities to take up the cudgels on its own behalf. There was a striking departure from the norm on Sunday (26) when CBS, the most eloquent and outspoken of all the networks in the current fight for a liberalization of Section 315 of the Communications Act, devoted a half-hour to a pictorial "editorial" on the whole question of equal time for political candidates.

Perhaps to the average viewer this was anything but scintillating television; perhaps CBS President Frank Stanton, the most aggressive of all 315 foes, who deemed the occasion important enough to make a personal appearance, overreached himself in asserting that throughout the land there has been an "overwhelming protest" in favor of repealing or liberalizing the act. It would be comforting to believe that the American electorate as a whole displays such keen interest in the matter. Whatever the decision of Congress in amending 315 (at best it looks at the moment as though it'll be a watered-down compromise exempting news shows and spot news programs from the equal time provision), the fact remains CBS deserves considerable credit for taking such pains to dramatize the issue.

With Howark K. Smith an narrator and with chapter & verse footage at its disposal, CBS went into the matter quite exhaustively as it reviewed the Lar Daly case which sparked the whole issue, and dwelt on the application of the law and the proposals for change. If it was stacked in favor of championing CBS and the industry's fight for liberalization, all the more credit to CBS for leaving the inescapable conclusion that there was weight, authority and responsibility behind Dr. Stanton's remarks that the television industry is trapped by a paralyzing law which, if allowed to continue, will black out some momentous events as the '60 Presidential elections draw nearer.

Perhaps to point up the absurdities of 315, CBS is giving equal time next Sunday to opponents of the network thinking.

SUMMER AUDITIONS
With Fran Scott, Marilynn Lovell, Mavis Rivers, Dick Cathcart, Jerry Antels, others Producer-Director: Bob Cawley
30 Mins., Thurs., 7:30 p.m.
KRCA-TV, H'wood

As a summer experimental, this opener of a series that may carry into the fall has merit if not talent worthy a scout's cuff note. It had its pleasant moments for those who like their music uninterrupted save for a brief flurry of leather pushing. The appeal was geared to the younger element, much as the Chevy summer show finds its favor among the adult appreciation of better music.

It can be assumed that those who took part were more concerned with the showcasing than the paycheck. Fran Scott, a lively, refreshing youngster, paced the parade of talent and kept it moving with his own vocals and an instrumental jazz combo. Taking their turns were Marilynn Lovell, who took the steam out of the beat with a ballad lushly intoned; Mavis Rivers, a Samoan with an easy approach to a song; Dick Cathcart, who has a puppet dancing on his horn while he toots a tune; Jerry Antels, and NBC choreographer, who added acrobatics to his time steps, and the jazz group that blew up a raucous storm.

Bob Cawley, staff director at KRCA, produced, directed and shared the writing with Hal Dickenson and Scott. Local station live ones, perforce reduced to tight budgeting, didn't permit for much production but there were enough people on stage to fill the home screens without the decorative embellishment. Coming up Friday night will be "Leisure Time," a travel-type show. There'll be a change of format every week, as long as it lasts. Not even a spot advertiser helped to defray the cost.

KWDM Brings 200G

Des Moines, July 28.

Radio station KWDM, Des Moines, has been sold, subject to FCC approval, to General Broadcasting Service of Iowa. Station now is owned by the Des Moines Broadcasting Co. of which Geo. W. Webber is president

Application filed in Washington reported the sale price at $200,000

TV Networks' Relations With Telepix Subsids Pose Some Jittery Problems

How close should the telefilm syndication subsids of the three webs function with their respective parent companies? That's a thorny question which blows hot and cold—dictated in many instances by the political winds blowing in from Washington.

Both CBS' subsid CBS Films and NBC's California National Productions represent healthy enterprises with the ABC Films subsid trailing behind. But in the cases of CBS Films and ABC Films, and to a similar degree CNP, they are not utilized as program suppliers for their respective webs.

The networks feel free in making co-production deals with outside producers for product. But in the main similar deals with their subsids are nixed for fear that it'll draw frowns or perhaps adverse legislation from Washington. Webs. too. feel free in originating their own programs, but they will not draw on the talent of their telefilm subsids for such originations. Again, it's a case of anti-monopoly jitters.

This leaves the subsids in a peculiar situation. Each of them pitch series for national sales, sometimes in competition with the "inside" and "outside" packages of their respective webs. Hardly a sale is made on a series pitched by one subsid for a competitive web. The whole situation on the national level is a shadow area for the subsids.

In syndication, the subsids have a much more free-wheeling operation. CBS Films and CNP are fortunate in one respect in the competitive market-by-market struggle. They have some of the most successful off-network entries, "Phil Silvers," "Dragnet," et al. But even in syndication, a shadow area for the subsids crops up. In some cases, they pitch a national spot deal or a major regional in competition with their respective parent companies.

To put it simply, they travel a narrow line, replete with bumps along the way.

'What's the Law' As 5-Min. Segs

Hollywood, July 28.

George Bilson, onetime RKO short subjects boss, has acquired rights to "What's the Law," syndicated legal-human interest column, and embarks on production of 260 five-minute segments for tv next month.

Column, written by Gotham attorneys Jack & Michael Strauss, is syndicated by the Bell Syndicate and appears in 63 newspapers. Bilson figures it's a natural as a five-minute strip for national sponsorship, in terms of the tight time situation and the ability of a sponsor to gain sponsor identification at low cost.

Bilson will put 15 of the shows, with himself as producer-director, before the cameras Aug. 5. William Moris agency is handling the sale.

'Secret Life of Hitler' Sold in 13 Markets

"Secret Life of Adolf Hitler," new syndication telementry of WPIX, N. Y., has been sold in 13 markets.

Stations inking for the 60-minute filmed show, narrated by Westbrook Van Voorhis, include: WBZ, Boston; WBAL, Baltimore; WFIL, Philadelphia and other Triangle Publication stations; WTCN, Minneapolis; WFBM, Indianapolis; WSN, Nashville; WCKT, Miami; and WHCT, Hartford.

WPIX also syndicated "Russian Revolution" and "Cold War-Berlin Crisis."

Set Up Globe Video News

Hollywood, July 28.

Globe Photos, in an expansion into telenews coverage, has formed Globe Video News as a separate division.

Herbert Bernard will produce Hollywood news segments, to go out under title of "Magazine of the Air."

Cartoon Sales

Sterling Television has made sales in nine new markets for "Famous Story Cartoons," a series of animated films for kids that downbeat sadism and depend on charm of characters and storyline.

Major recent sales include WBNS Columbus, KCOP Los Angeles, KOIN Portland, WLWI Indianapolis; KIRO Seattle. Sixty-five films are complete and 65 more will be finished in the next six months.

Fashions Special For Syndication

Chicago, July 28.

CBS Films is syndicating an hourlong filmed special on the Paris contours, which is being prepared by the public affairs department of the Chi o&o, WBBM-TV. The first of its kind on tv, the special will break in all markets on Sept. 1, official release date for the Parisian fall fashions. Markets thus far in line are Chi, New York, and Los Angeles.

Chi station got the assignment because the idea for the special film originated there. WBBM-TV started with comparatively modest plans to film 30 minutes of the fall openings in Paris for a local sponsor, but the project grew when the network's syndication arm got interested.

Harriet (Sis) Atlass, director of pubaffairs for the station, will produce it. She left for Paris last weekend with writer Hal Fisher, commentator Lee Phillip and a complete crew. CBS facilities in Paris will probably be put to use.

Show will cover the fall openings of the major fashion houses including the houses of Dior, Cardin, Lanvin, Belenciaga, and Jacques Heim. Also covered will be hat, jewelry and hair fashions and the Grand Soiree, annual taffy pull for all the designers in Paris.

In Chicago, the show will get a prime evening slot, probably at 6:30 p.m. Deal for a sponsor is understood near.

De Met Gets Okay On Baseball Playbacks

Chicago, July 28.

Film packager Pete De Met has the greenlight from both major leagues to proceed with his plan to video tape 26 of this season's baseball games for playback next fall and winter. All 16 clubs of both leagues have now cleared the idea.

Plan is to alternate American and National League games from week to week, each one edited down to an hour's length. De Met feels that baseball buffs don't lose their interest in the sport, or love of it, just because of the cold seasons.

Vidpix Chatter

Len Weiner has joined MGM-TV as sales representative for the commercial production department . . . Frank Granville has been signed as story editor for Ziv's "Lock-Up" series. Ten writers also were pacted for the skein, including Stan Silverman, Stan Cutler, Lee Berg, Stuart Jerome and Gertrude Fass . . . "Acts of Violence," a collection of short stories edited by William Kozlenko, MGM-TV's director of programming, goes on the bookshelves this month. Pyramid Books is the publisher. . . . TV Stations, Inc., which currently represents 119 stations in buying tv syndicated product, is in the midst of expanding its market list to encompass major markets. The combine, helmed by Herb Jacobs, heretofore has represented smaller markets. Addition of major markets to its representation list would heighten the importance of the outfit as a buying agency.

'Scene of Crime' Georgetown Entry

Hollywood, July 28.

"Scene of the Crime," all-tape series with Patric Knowles as host and a group of guestars featured, is being produced as a half-hour syndicated series by Georgetown Film Productions at Centaur Studios here.

Georgetown prexy - producer Richard Morley has completed three half-hours, with Patrice Wymore and Tom Conway guesting on the first. Lynn Bari and Nehemiah Persoff on the second and Diane Spencer and Sidney Skolsky on the third. Guest stars must attempt to solve a crime from clues on the scene. Frank Gadette directs.

Georgetown will attempt to sell off the three tapes before scheduling full production. Consolidated Labs is doing tape-to-film transfer work, transferring directly to 16m instead of the customary tape-to-35m-to-16m procedure. Consolidated is working with CBS-TV here on the transfer operation. Georgetown feels it will need film prints for the smaller outlets while selling larger markets the tapes.

'CALIFORNIANS' INTO 9 MARKETS

Since the program went on the syndicated market two weeks ago, California National Productions has sold daily strip versions of the off-network "Californians" western half-hour to stations in nine tv markets. Skein is also being offered by the NBC telefilm subsidiary on a once-weekly basis.

Nine multi-weekly takers are KDAL, Duluth; KRON, San Francisco; KFJZ, Fort Worth; WWJ, Detroit; WPIX, N.Y.C.; KGUN, Tucson; KPHO, Phoenix; KHSL, Chico, Tex.; WKBT, La Crosse.

Meanwhile, CNP has also sold color editions of "Cameo Theater," 26 films from the old NBC "Matinee Theater" lineup, to 10 stations, among them four NBC o&o outlets.

Reactivation of Station Group Buying of Vidpix Seen by Frieberg

Trade practices, like tv programming run in cycles—at least as those practices pertain to station group buying.

Hardie Frieberg, syndication sales topper of Independent Television Corp., feels that ITC's Crosley deal on "Four Just Men" presages a reactivation of station group buying. Crosley bought the ITC series for its five markets, Cincinnati, Dayton, Columbus, Indianapolis, and Atlanta.

Frieberg reasons this way: Prime syndication time for the local station is at a premium today, with the networks biting heavily into the 7 to 7:30 p.m. (EDT) and 10:30 to 11 p.m. time periods. Compared to years ago, the local affil has a few time slots open in the 10:30 to 11 p.m. (EDT) period, and more (but not as great as previous years) in the 7 to 7:30 p.m. (EDT) slot. It's important for the local station, in this tight situation, to get prime syndication product.

Practically the only way a local station can bid competitively with region advertisers is if that local staton is part of a station group, Westinghouse, Corinthian, Triangle, etc.

The station groups in previous years were very active in the syndication field, in many cases triggering product in the market by their group buying. Last season, when product was comparatively heavy, they took a hiatus. But now, Frieberg forecasts, they'll be back in full force, driven by the desire to insure prime product for the few premium syndiacted slots left.

TV Program Control In Wrong Places; Networks Scared Or Lack Leadership?

With Viewer Squawks Hitting Alltime Peak, What Are The Panaceas For More Enlightened Era In Television? Webs' Forfeiture of Role Seen Major Contributing Factor; Agencies Pass Buck To Conceal Own Sins

The Sleeping Beauty

By LESTER GOTTLIEB

INTERVIEWER: Will you please tell our audience your name, please?

RIP: Rip Van Winkle.

INT: That sounds familiar, Is that a pseudonym?

RIP: Look, fella, that's my name. Don't confuse me with any hifalutin language.

INT: Oh, no offense, Mr. Winkle. Anyway, let's get down to business. Please tell our friends why you are here.

RIP: You know why I'm here, 'cause that's why you invited me.

INT: True, true. I'll be glad to tell them. Viewers, Mr. Winkle is the only man left in these United States without a television set. Now I understand you once owned one . . .

RIP: Correct. Had one of the first in 1948. Never forget how pretty that Kyle MacDonnell looked. And Roberta Quinlan was a nifty, too.

INT: Then some years back, through a strange, scientific fluke you fell asleep and . .

RIP: Nothin' scientific about it. I was watching a spot announcement. Had some dwarfs bowling in it. There was a crash like thunder and I dozed off. Didn't wake up till yesterday.

INT: And our researchers found you, whisked you here by National Airlines, the Airline of the Stars . . . the same jet flights Sandra Dee and Ricky Nelson use . . . and now our viewers can meet you and we can bring you up to date on all the televison you missed during your history making siesta.

RIP: Got'cha. But first I gotta question for you. What was the last mystery melody?

INT: Sorry, I don't dig you.

RIP: I'm not asking you for spade work, pal. But I sure loved "Stop The Music." Always hoped they would call me and I could win all that loot.

INT: Oh, yo mean "Stop The Music." Well that hasn't been on in years. Frankly, Rip, those big money shows aren't around much. There was some trouble.

RIP: Hold on, boy. Bert Parks is clean as a whistle.

INT: Oh I meant no offense to Bert. He and I are buddies.

RIP: O.K. Just watch that! Well you see, I love nice music. Another favorite of mine is "The Hit Parade." How's Dorothy Collins? And Russell Arms? And good old Snooky?

INT: Rip, I'm sorry to tell you but the "Hit Parade" is off the air, too.

RIP: That's terrible news. What about my other favorite . . . "Voice of Firestone?"

INT: That's gone.

RIP: They wouldn't dare!

INT: Well don't worry, old timer. We've got some marvelous new shows like "Bat Masterson," "Wyatt Earp," "The Californian."

RIP: All sound like westerns to me. What'dya think made me buy a tv set in the first place. Stopped going to the movies. Too much gunsmoke.

INT: That's a big hit on tv.

RIP: Say, how about that big funny guy; you know who I mean. Had that cute little girl as his partner. They used to kid silent movies, do pantomime; stuff like that?

INT: Oh, you mean Sid Caesar and Imogene Coca. They broke up.

RIP: Ridiculous. They had a big Hooper.

INT: That's gone, too. We now got Nielsens, Trendexes, and Arbitrons.

RIP: Hooper was good enough for me. Well, what about Jackie Gleason?

INT: Off.

RIP: Burns and Allen?

INT: Kaput.

RIP: Lucy and Desi?

INT: Finis.

RIP: Well, what is popular?

INT: The rating leaders are "Gunsmoke," "Wagon Train," "Rifleman," and "Have Gun Will Travel."

RIP: They don't sound funny.

INT: Well, Rip, things have changed. So have the sets. One sponsor wants me to present you with a brand new 1959 RCA 27-inch color television set.

RIP: Don't know if I want it. But, wait a minute. How's old channel Nine? The Old Redhead, Connie?

INT: Channel Nine is great, Rip. They got Million Dollar Movies. They run continuously. Have you seen John Garfield in "Four Daughters?"

RIP: Not interested. I'm talking about my Brooklyn Bums.

INT: Well, Rip, I'm sorry to tell you.

RIP: How's Jackie Robinson?

INT: Jackie's now an executive with Chock Full O'Nuts.

RIP: I knew that boy was gettin' too heavy.

INT: Well, Rip, times have changed. But we're glad to have you back and you do have your wonderful prize.

RIP: Young man, you keep that set, I'm going.

INT: Going. Where?

RIP: Back to sleep.

By GEORGE ROSEN

The abuses hurled at television during the past ('58-'59) season reached unprecedented proportions. Everybody and his brother was there to take a swipe at the medium, including many from within the industry itself, claiming that unless the television networks get hold of themselves and do something to check the deterioration in programming, the nation's citizenry would wind up as a pack of morons.

True or false? And if so, who, specifically, is to blame?

And what are the panaceas, if any, that can translate the medium into something more meaningful both as entertainment and enlightenment.

The recent Foley Square (N.Y.) hearings conducted by the Federal Communications Commission as part of the Government agency's look-see into network practices was disturbing from one major aspect—everybody concerned (and these included some of the most hep buyers of tv programming) was in agreement that (1) the past season was pretty much of a fiasco; (2) something has to be done about it. But equally disturbing was the fact that no one had an effective remedy. And if the Danny Seymours, the Terry Clynes, the Dick Pinkhams, the Tom McDermotts and the Bob Foremans, who in the aggregate are responsible for buying the giant slice of prime time tv entertainment in America, are as baffled, as uncertain and as pessimistic as the lay viewer—what hopes are there of a more promising tomorrow?

Actually the hearings were notable for a lack of candor, the wallowing in generalities and the unwillingness to be specific and to pinpoint. (Corner these selfsame guys in a secluded bar on a summer afternoon and they'll unburden themselves of more in 10 minutes than the entire week of hearings produced.)

It's all very well for an agency exec, as happened, to pin the rap on the networks in asserting that control of programming rests with the webs, possibly as an excuse for his own deficiencies in committing his agency's clients to five clinkers in a row, but how does this square with the facts? And if the networks do control programming (five will get you 10 in the best placed tv circles if you can prove it), then how does this tally with the established fact that in most cases the final say on scripts rests with the agencies, resulting during the past season alone in many a verboten show and a succession of watered-down scripts. But who were there among these agency brethren to concede the point?

Networks Forfeit Role

The blunt truth is, whatever the protestations to the contrary, that control of programming is no longer vested in the networks. Whatever the reasons for the abdication (and the networks inevitably will call attention to the fact that they have no other alternative, what with the Government anti-trust sleuths breathing down their collective necks), a look at the records is enough to clinch any argument. For example, of the approximate 200 specials on the programming agenda for '59-'60, practically 175 of them will come from the outside. The networks virtually had no say at all as a General Mills, an Equitable Life, a Pontiac, a Coca-Cola, an AT&T, a Rexall, a DuPont, a Chrysler and a Hallmark, to name but a few, delivered outside packages to the networks, with the webs, in turn, merely serving as carriers.

Just as with the specials, the webs, with but minor exceptions, are more and more obliged to accept the rank-and-file, week-to-week program product emanating from the outside. Today Warner Bros. is perhaps the greatest single force in tv programming. That's a statement that would have been laughed at five years ago. It's the Revues, the Four Stars, the Desilus, 20th-Fox TVs, Screen Gems, Ziv, the David Susskinds, the Goodson & Todmans, the Bob Saudeks, the George Schaefers and the Mildred Albergs and their ilk who "run the tv program shop."

There are those with more than a smattering of knowledge of the trials and tribulations of the networks who will argue that the fault basically lay elsewhere than in the webs' fear of Government reprisals—that, in truth, this "falling from program grace" has its roots in a lack of proper leadership at the top among the networks. They will argue that everybody's been taking the easy way out, with a continuing cycle of pedestrian and humdrum fare, drugging the American public, because the will and the courage to gamble on inventive ideas and spraying the program rosters with imagination, has been forfeited. And forfeited because the kind of leadership that's required doesn't seem to be around.

Evidence would seem to bear out that the responsibility for a more enlightened—and entertaining—programming era rightfully should rest with the networks. One has only to recall the "finest hours" of NBC and CBS of an earlier period; of the Bill Paley-ordained patterns, of a more latter-day Pat Weaver era when the excitement of "something new and daring" was generated by the networks. Why, then, the abdication?

On the other hand, the networks, or at least CBS and NBC, are beginning to take a particularly aggressive stand in giving prime attention to news-public affairs in-depth treatment in order to acheve more balanced program schedules. (ABC for the most part prefers to sit it out while still copping a plea that it needs circulation while "growing up.") Whether for reasons of creating a grandstand play to impress the Washington hierarchy; whether it's because the sponsor climate appears more favorable these days (as witness the Bell & Howell underwriting of the CBS effort), the fact remains that the two networks are showing an admirable awareness of their responsibility to all viewers. The cost load is a heavy one, running into many millions, since, in the sum total, it's mostly a sustaining burden, to which CBS and NBC are responding courageously.

Certainly on this basis the networks shouldering this responsibility merit consideration when the final reports are tallied by the D.C. sleuths. There can be no question that network timidity these days (the failure, for example, to push their own shows in accepting lower-quality entries from the outside), stems in large measure from the threats of FCC-Congressional reprisals. A false step can tip the scales in stripping them of option time—time that adds up in the aggregate to millions of dollars. What happens to this option time when it's returned to the stations? Invariably it translates itself into half-hour lower-case crime mellers out of the syndication grist mill.

It's a tantalizing, vicious cycle. The networks, sometimes at the expense of sacrificing a more showmanly, laudatory house-built program, "play ball" with the sponsor or the agency in accepting outside programs for fear of anti-trust repercussions, exacting as a penalty the threatened loss of option time. And with the loss of this option time (plus revenues that could be siphoned into upgrading news-public affairs) the same network stations would have a field day with mediocrity.

One needn't necessarily feel sorry for the "poor, downtrodden networks." They're in business to make money—and, brother, they make it. But they got a point.

The Myth About TV Music

By HARRY SOSNIK

One of the first comments people are prone to make when a musical show is discussed or has gone off the tv airwaves is: "Oh well! Music is too expensive." The real reasons are carefully avoided.

In exploding this myth of the high cost of live music in tv which has been falsely perpetuated by some people who use it as an excuse for the use of recordings for their own selfish monetary ends, it would be well to examine the cold facts and let them speak for themselves.

Percentage wise, the music budget allotted for most musical spectaculars is infinitesimal in relation to the overall cost and the importance of music to a musical show. Sometimes the music is as little as 2½% of the total. In a recent two-part dramatic extravaganza which was considered one of the most ambitious undertakings in the history of tv and which cost $800,000 (more or less) a seven-piece group of musicians was used. The $4,000 for music amounted to .05% or one half of 1% of the cost of the entire show. In the big musicals the musical director has the task of holding the show together on the air and at times saving situations when serious fluffs are made by performers on air. This small budget policy clearly indicates the lack of importance and respect in which music is held. It also disproves the statements that music is costly.

As far as musicians' salaries are concerned there is a very important fact not commonly known. The recent financial increase for freelance musicians is the first since 1951 and amounts to approximately 6%, which is very little in relation to the spiral in costs of living and the numerous wage increases in other labor unions in the industry during the past nine years. A musician gets $27 for recording three jingles or $9 per jingle and no residuals, while a singer gets thousands of dollars per year depending on the length of the run of the jingle.

Of all the unions in tv, the musicians' union has been the most cooperative. Even to the extent of practically unrestricted use of video taping on any day while even the chorus singers' union has penalties beyond certain hours and has a higher scale than the working musician plus residuals in commercials.

There is no leakage, time wasted or featherbedding in the music department in spite of the enormous physical handicaps as far as studio facilities are concerned. Other departments are much more expensive and in many cases unjustifiably so. I have seen situations where a small prop that could be purchased for a few dollars in a store would cost $15 to $20 more through the prop department. Yet no complaints ever changed that situation and the musician is the whipping boy throughout the industry. The music budget is the first thing to be pruned.

On a big show very often a single performer, and not necessarily the biggest star, will cost more than the combined costs of a musical director, a 30-piece orchestra plus arrangers, copyists and librarian.

I hope that the facts as outlined will contribute in some small way towards clearing the air of this cloud which has been hung on music for so many years and will enable people to take another appraisal of the inherent values in music and the contribution it can make to programs when used with intelligence. Also, in removing the cost myth and reevaluating its importance, I feel that music budgets might be set up on a more realistic basis after discussions with any intelligent musical director who would understand the requirements. In this way music could be treated with more of a sense of importance to the overall structure of programs that are dependent on music for their very being.

Why Broadcasters Editorialize

By NATHAN STRAUS

(Pres., WMCA, N.Y.)

Rather than ask why I editorialize, one might just as well ask why I am involved in radio broadcasting—for radio without a point of view is a wasted medium of communication. That is why WMCA began broadcasting "The Editor's Desk" about five years ago.

We believed that we were not only adding something new to the station's personality, but also meeting more fully our responsibility to the community. This responsibility involves the inclusion in every broadcast day of a program which provides more than mere entertainment.

As the first radio station to broadcast regularly scheduled editorials, we were "warned" by many of our colleagues that this type of programming would be the downfall of WMCA. In fact, we were re-exposed to all the platitudes and myths which hedge in this sensitive area. Among them are the following cliches:

> Advertisers shy away from anything except bland, middle-of-the-road discussion or opinion.
> Listeners will be alienated by airing political views which differ from their own.
> People do not really listen to radio. They use it as a kind of tranquilizing background of music and news while engaged in other activities.
> "Playing it safe" is the best station policy to insure growth in audience and in advertising revenue.
> The FCC frowns on editorializing.

That is what we were told.

But what really happens when a station takes a stand on every kind of controversial issue day after day? What happens when radio attacks government policy, endorses political candidates, exposes racial stereotypes? Is the station switched off, put out of business, picketed, rejected?

Good for Business

WMCA, the only New York radio station that schedules controversial programs as part of a steady and regular broadcast diet, has experienced an unprecedented rise in average ratings and advertising revenue during the years in which it has devoted more and more attention to editorializing and other thought-provoking programs.

Two conclusions must be drawn from this experience. If a station's programming deals regularly with those matters about which the public really cares, more and more listeners will tune in. If such programming attracts a sufficient number of listeners, the advertisers will not shy away—and billings will rise.

But a once-a-month or even a once-a-week editorial cannot sit alone like a single duck on a large pond. A reward fund for the lynchers of Mack Charles Parker, a depth interview with a critical German editor, a series of spots on good health and an attack on organized crime is the kind of "company" into which we put our editorials.

Even before the introduction of "The Editor's Desk" series, WMCA's interest in editorializing was a matter of public record. We repeatedly recommended action on this subject to the FCC prior to official granting of permission in 1949. Since then, we have campaigned for the adoption of editorializing by all radio stations as an important industry policy.

If radio is to live and grow, it must take a stand on issues of local, national and international importance. Newspapers that pursue this policy command the respect and loyalty of readers and advertisers alike. That is why we began by presenting our editorials frankly fashioned in the same style as newspaper editorials. It is why we believe that broadcasting up-to-the-minute news is only the first step. Even more vital is the contribution to community thinking of the dissemination of ideas—a goal impossible to achieve without the expression of a point of view.

The facts speak for themselves: "The Editor's Desk" has met with enthusiastic reaction from the press and listeners alike. We have been gratified by this response as well as by the stream of letters, both in agreement and in disagreement, from "average" listeners and from listeners who are prominent figures in public life.

Radio station "personality" is just a fancy name for programming. Nothing that a radio station says about itself tells its audience much. But everything a station does during its program day builds its "personality" for listeners.

WMCA's editorials have become an important and exciting element in the programming that makes up our 24-hours broadcast day. We contribute to the entertainment of our listeners through music. We keep our listeners informed on current news, fashion, literature, education, and history, by our comprehensive daily public service schedule. The editorials complete our personality.

With full faith in its applicability to commercial broadcasting, I strongly recommend point-of-view programming to all radio stations. The respect of the public, the continued support of the advertiser, the growth of the station's listening audience—and, indeed, the growth of the industry—depends on the willingness of broadcasters to adopt this policy.

By ROBERT D. SWEZEY

(Exec. v.p., WDSU Broadcasting Corp.)

New Orleans.

The decision to broadcast editorials on our radio and television stations in New Orleans was most deliberately made. Actually, it took us about three years to work it out. Quite obviously, the project meant the assumption of additional responsibilities and a great deal of sustained effort. We were willing to undertake it only when we were confident that we could do it well and that it would make a real contribution to the thought and activity of the community.

We realized at the outset that the weight of an opinion is in direct proportion to the regard in which its publisher is held. Ours was a relatively new company; it seemed to us essential first to establish its reputation as a solid, energetic, good citizen in the community in order to give its opinion the significance we wanted for it. We did everything we reasonaby could to earn rather than create what in current jargon is known as a "favorable image" for our stations in terms of public service and credibility.

We concentrated on building what we considered an adequate news staff, under the supervision of a director who was a former newspaper editor with many years of experience in reporting and editorial writing. We now have a 12-man, highly professional news staff, including, so far as I know, the only fulltime Washington correspondent serving a single tv-radio operation. We have tried to give a consistent, complete and imaginative news coverage, emphasizing particularly those local and regional developments which in our opinion are not being fully treated in the press.

Newspapers Going Soft?

We purposely initiated our editorial service on the effective date of the merger of our two local newspapers under one management and control. Reviewing the situation, we had concluded that we were the only local organization qualified, in terms of facilities and personnel, to provide a competent substitute for the independent editorial voice which had been silenced by the merger. This meant, of course, that we had to start from the beginning, not on a tentative experimental basis, but with a daily editorial schedule, treating just as a newspaper would matters of national scope as well as those of primarily local and regional interest. To remove any possible question as to the responsibility for the content of our editorials, each one of them has been clearly identified as an official expression by our company. The editorials have ordinarily not exceeded two-and-a-half minutes, which our news director considers optimum length.

It had been our observation that over a period of years the newspaper editorial has in many instances lost its punch, virility and real significance. It has shied away from controversy. Many newspapers have, so far as we could see, virtually surrendered their editorial function to the syndicated columnists. All of the figures we had seen on editorial readership convinced us that if we did the job vigorously and efficiently, we would reach a much larger audience than the editorials in the local press. Our research people now estimate that our daily editorial, broadcast twice on the television station and five times on the radio station, is reaching an audience some 10 times the size of that which reads the editorials in the local newspapers.

Our policy of tackling controversial matters at any time we have felt our opinion might aid in their solution has greatly increased the public interest in our editorial service and the public respect for our stations. Our willingness to provide equal time for the expression of opposing viewpoints has been much more of a benefit than a hindrance, because it has permitted us a fuller and more dramatic treatment of issues. It has also convinced the public that we have no ax to grind and that we are sincerely trying to get at the truth.

Not once since we began our editorial broadcasts several months ago has any advertiser or any civic group or organization attempted to bring pressure upon us to change or refrain from expressing our candid opinion on any subject. Our views have of course been heartily criticized from time to time, principally over our own facilities, but it seems to us that this has merely added to the zest and effectiveness of our service.

The continuing and lively audience response to our editorials assures us that we are providing a vital leadership which is a public good and has resulted in greatly enhancing the stature and community identification of our stations.

We have proceeded at all times with the self-imposed cautions that we must be right, that we must be fair, and that we will speak on an issue only when we feel that we have something constructive to say which needs saying. The hours we spend in our editorial committee (which includes members of the news staff and company officers) to determine topics and approach, the efforts of our fulltime editorial research assistant, the review and discussion of finished editorials by company executives, have brought us all closer to the life of the community and given us far deeper appreciation than we should otherwise have the meaning of developments in the news.

The search for facts upon which to predicate a sound editorial has frequently led us to news stories which would not have been uncovered and which have not been treated by the press.

After several months of experience, we have no question whatever that our decision to editorialize in New Orleans was a wise one, consonant with the fullest performance of our license requirements to act in the public interest, convenience and necessity. We could scarcely, in good conscience and good business, have refrained from following that course.

By LAWRENCE H. ROGERS II

(Pres., WSAZ, Inc., Huntington, W. Va.)

Huntington, W. Va.

In a single decade television has exploded from the cyclops curiosity of the corner saloon to the conversational headquarters of nearly every American home. Whether they are willing to admit it or not, the television licensees of this nation hold in their hands the entire responsibility for a service which occupies more time and attention on the part of the American people than any other non-working pursuit. And at the current rate of television growth and labor union demands, television will soon outrank working.

I'm one of those people who believes that television has a great . . . even frightening . . . obligation to inform, to challenge, and to exert community leadership.

This is one of the main reasons why I inaugurated editorials on WSAZ-TV: editorials which are the product of and delivered by the management, rather than by members of the news department. There is a very good reason for this technique. For 10 years we have relied heavily upon our original concept of a regional news operation to build local pride and loyalty toward our station on the part of audiences in hundreds of widely divergent communities. We have built a professional news organization, and we depend upon only newsmen for on-the-air news announcers. We require our news people in their research, writing, and on-the-air delivery, to be fair and objective. Of course, there are limits to any matter of objectivity where the human mind is concerned; but some of our men come pretty close to it most of the time. The reason is simply that they are fair, unbiased, and thorough . . . and as nearly objective as our constant efforts can make them. It is our feeling that to use this same staff in the delivery of editorials would create the impression that every news program is automatically tinged with some element of editorial opinion or shade of hidden meaning. We decided the easy solution to this problem was for me to do the editorials myself. Thus there may be times when my news men don't agree with me at all. At least they have not suffered the indignity of pretending they do and in front of a million or more witnesses!

TV's Superior Impact

I am convinced this adds an element of believability, not only to the editorials; but to our entire news and public affairs effort as well. Nothing can detract from the obvious facts of television's superior impact through the combined sensory effects of sight, sound, and motion. But the essential element for television to remain successful in the face of mounting criticism and resentment is as indefinable as it is ephemeral: believability.

Herein lies another reason for my editorials. I get sick and tired of the magazine and newspaper critics, whose legitimate job it is to try to stem the tide of television's advertising superiority, being the only so-called "official" voice of the viewing public. It's our responsibility to tell our own side of our story. Television, like any other matter of intense public interest, deserves to be under public scrutiny and criticism at all times. I don't object to any qualified criticism, no matter how uncomfortable it may make me. But I do object—and violently enough to take to the air and fight back—to the unqualified critics and the pseudo-intellectuals. This is why I use our stations to take pot-shots at these people: most especially the ones who make their livings from television, but insist upon knocking it because they think it's the fashionable thing to do.

The "image" of television in the minds of the public and the government is the sole responsibility of the station operators; and try as they might, they can't pass it off to the networks, the syndicators, or the advertising agencies. This becomes increasingly difficult, but increasingly important, as the attacks of the printed media grow in intensity. Print has suffered serious advertising losses to television. It's only natural that publishers attempt to recoup some of the losses by heaping scorn and derision on television. One of the most obvious methods of reducing the effectiveness of these attacks is for television to enhance the prestige of the medium through wider interest in public affairs. Traditionally this has taken the form of participation in public events by station operators, talent, and personalities. But this is not enough. It is the additional responsibility of station management to contribute leadership in community, area, and national fields of endeavor through positive stands on the air, using our own medium to enhance its own image.

In the long run, a much more important consideration, indeed the primary concern of all of us, must be to keep television's program service free of government control. The slightest incursion into program selectivity or suitability by an agency of the Federal government is an open invitation to the eventual "super-state" thought control envisaged by George Orwell in his "1984."

Never forget we have it within our technical grasp today to influence, control . . . yes, even brainwash . . . the entire population of the world's greatest free nation. Only the vigilance and activity of those responsible for this awesome mechanism can prevent its misuse for the destruction of our way of life in the generation to come.

TV IN '60 POLITICAL ARENA

The Personality Sell

By EDWARD J. DeGRAY

(ABC v.p. in charge of Radio Network)

The most effective radio selling for many products is personality selling because radio is the most adult advertising medium. Integrated commercials delivered by radio stars are taking on more significance in network radio because they are aimed at and reaching the adult.

A recent ABC Radio Network tabulation of Nielsen data stresses the importance and effectiveness of network radio as a means of penetrating the adult market. The tabulation shows that, day or night, more than 88% of the radio audience is adult, the people who have money to spend and who most often listen to the radio before they go out to spend their money.

Another survey dramatically illustrates the importance of integrated commercials delivered by the star of a program. Radio Advertising Bureau, Inc., reveals that 91% of the people contacted could name at least one radio star to whom they listen with confidence. In addition, 81% thought the personalities they listened to were advertising good products. And, most important of all, 36% bought the sponsor's product on the radio star's recommendation.

The sponsor's message is a long way ahead in getting buying action when stars like Don McNeill, Eydie Gorme, Peter Lind Hayes and Mary Healy and others present them integrated into the character of their programs.

49,000,000 Radio Homes

The buying action target is the largest audience in the history of any media. Today, network radio is penetrating into 49,400,000 radio homes—96.3% of all families—in the U. S. A. In 1958 more than 9,000,000 new radio sets were purchased, many of these millions for use in kitchens, bedrooms, dens, family rooms and cars where individuals are tuning in the special program or personality they delight in listening to.

In addition, with the growth of radio ownership the women have relinquished their last word to radio to which they turn for the last word before they go shopping. Since people tend to forget things quickly, in a few hours an advertising message can be forgotten. Radio has the best chance of all to remind the shopper of that brand he or she wants to purchase.

Aside from the decided advantages of having national personalities to deliver well-integrated commercials and penetration into almost all homes and areas, network radio has numerous advantages. For example: a single order can put an advertiser's message into hundreds of markets at exactly the desired time. In the case of ABC Radio, one order can place commercials inside over 300 markets, the largest inside penetration buy in network radio today.

Moreover, network radio provides the right commercial climate. The advertiser's message is surrounded by the prestige and stature of the network and its nationally famous personalities. Coupled with this: the advantage of secure copy control, accuracy and product protection assured by network controlled advertising.

Additionally, network radio is one way an advertiser can get his message to the entire nation in a matter of a few hours. Other media require anywhere from days to weeks in order to get their message to the public. Typical example is when a well-known company won an industry-wide competition. It was a great talking point, if it could get their story across quickly. Using network radio the message was integrated into a battery of network programs within 24 hours.

In an era where thorough merchandising is essential, the ABC Radio Network provides its advertisers with every possible aid to selling their products. Merchandisable personalities who deliver their commercials on radio are available at sales meetings and can become spokesmen for the product, not merely voices who deliver selling pitches. Complete merchandising plans such as the current "Play It Cool" promotion have been developed to stimulate the sale of warm weather products.

"Play It Cool" marketing-merchandising support will include ABC Radio ads in tradepapers highlighting participating advertisers; direct mail to key chain store executives promoting tie-in display space, and tailored merchandising plans for each advertiser. Under the slogan of "Play It Cool," four compatible summer product groups will receive special on-the-air promotions calculated to build up a disposition in the listeners to respond to the advertisers' brand messages.

Coupled with its penetration, ability to carry a message to people out-of-doors and heavy concentration among adults, especially women shoppers, network radio is a vast medium capable of being the primary vehicle of any advertising campaign, or an important complementary medium.

Solution to Equal-Time Dilemma: Relegate All Politicos to Tollvision

Washngton, July 28.

Equal time would be in for a hard time under the most unusual suggestion yet for solving the Sec. 315 dilemma.

The idea came from Dave Reque, Washington Daily News tv columnist. Networks, he reasoned, hate pay-tv and hate Sec. 315; therefore, put all politicians on tollvission.

"Let the candidates," he wrote, "take the chance that the public is interested in them enough to toss sufficient dimes into the coin box to allow the candidates to pay their broadcasting bill. Unpopularity, not merely the whim of a network, would then eliminate some of the candidates from our air."

SIMPLICITY KEY TO WEB COVERAGE

By WILLIAM R. McANDREW

(Vice President, News, NBC)

Television in the last decade has become the most important single element in the American political scene—aside, of course, from the candidates.

TV has been praised for bringing the candidates into the home, where its merciless eye clearly delineates their strong and wrong points. And it has been criticized for preempting soap operas, westerns and mysteries to carry uninterrupted convention and election programs.

Television has force-fed the public into paying closer attention to candidates and issues. It may eventually be the key factor in stimulating a substantial increase in voting (only a little more than 60% of the American electorate went to the polls in 1956, as against more than 90% in France and Austria).

It has done much to right the imbalance produced by what Harry S. Truman is wont to call "the one-party press." Its equal-time presentation has assured fair and adequate exposure of major candidates in more than 85% of the homes in the land.

Its reporting of national conventions has been so all-encompassing that, for example, NBC News in 1956 logged close to 80% of all its broadcast material (aside from pool feeds from the floor) to have been well ahead of the wire services), and a substantial portion of that bulk was exclusive at the time of broadcast. This output came from an on-the-air staff of 38 commentators plus a large behind-the-scenes force—the largest news staff at the conventions except for one wire service.

Newspapers Eavesdrop

The quality of such coverage is best attested by the fact that numerous major newspapers watch the conventions closely on television, and fire back hot rockets when their own correspondents' stories omit essentials or colorful sidebars carried first on tv.

There will always be behind-the-scenes maneuvering, trading and dealing, but television has greatly reduced this by forcing

There's More Than One Melon In the Patch

By ALLEN LUDDEN

(Director of Program Services, CBS-Owned Radio Stations)

If, as so many would have us believe, the radio industry is divided into two camps—the independent "formula" stations versus the network stations—then, there should be no doubt which camp I'm in. I work for network radio stations. But, from where I sit, it seems to me that our camp owes the other a vote of thanks.

In market after market, these energetic youngsters have come on like gangbusters, and they've turned out to be healthy, active competition for the network station that has managed to reign unchallenged for, lo, these many years. Well, a little challenge never hurt anyone. Certainly, the network stations have profited from the competition they've been getting recently from the formula stations. For one thing, these "formula" stations have made the network stations sit back and take a long look at themselves to find out who and what they are. Developing a clear-cut "image" never hurt a radio station either.

It is easy to see that their crystal-clear "image" has been a bulwark of the "formula" stations' strength. Every minute of their broadcast day, these stations are on the air with a simple, easily recognizable sound. They know what they are, and they let the audience know it. Over and over again, loud and clear, they tell their audience who they are, what they are, and where they are. And it's worked! With their single, dynamic sound and clear-cut "image," they've drawn an audience. And nobody's unhappy about that. Least of all, the network stations. Because, tough as the pill may be to swallow, the network stations have got to admit that these new "formula" stations have helped to prove the prophets of doom wrong. Nobody . . . but nobody is trying to tell us that radio is dead any more.

It didn't die. It just changed. It adapted itself to the needs of its audience. As its style became more intimate, its audience became more dependent. Today, it's a fact: Radio is the "companion medium." The audience lives with it.

In the old days, radio's image was BIG; its shows were presentations with a "proscenium arch" around them to lend the distance that brings enchantment. But no more! The "proscenium arch" is out of date. Today, radio is as personal as a hearing aid.

And the network stations, spurred on by the healthy competition of their new one-dimensional neighbors, have revised their image to keep up with the tastes of the times. Sitting back and looking at themselves and their audience in light of today's need for radio, the network stations have found a new self confidence. Since the new "competition" is, by definition, one-dimensional, a single sound by its own "formula", the network stations have recognized that a large segment of the radio audience has been left unattended by the energetic youngsters.

Take talk, for instance. The formula keeps talk to the barest minimum and limits its content to the place on the chart of the latest back-beat delight. Fine! What's left? Talk that says something; talk that is both personal and personable, talk with substance. There must be an audience for it. If all the audience wanted only the kind of talk you hear on the "formula" stations, how could you explain book, magazine, or newspaper sales . . . or college enrollments.

So, it's not hard to reason that there is an audience today for talk with substance; the catch is that the substance must be stated in today's terms. And that's where the network stations' new point of view has been brought to bear. They have discarded the local image of being big and aloof. They've come on strong to tell the people that they're alive, local, good-natured, frendly . . . and that they are as much in tune with the tastes of the times as those who are guided by the Cashbox charts.

Network stations have found their own guides for the tastes of their audience. Leaving the select segment measured by charts to the single-sound stations, they are now presenting the music and entertainment fare that attracts the audience that wants more . . . more entertainment . . . more variety . . . more information . . . than is possible within the one-dimension of the "formula."

Network stations are building record libraries that will have as much respect as any in town. Their record shows are produced with a sure-footed sense of showmanship and musical taste. After all, from one point of view, it is the rock 'n' roll sound that is square. Millions of people spend millions of dollars buying albums of music that are not rock 'n' roll. It's just as important to be in tune with the tastes of that public as it is to know what the high school set digs. Now that they're swinging, the network stations are having a ball being alive and local.

The audience for the single-sound fare of the formula stations is a hefty melon. But, as more and more stations have the same sound, the melon slices get smaller and smaller. Network stations will do well to let the youngsters slice away. There are other rich melons in the patch. And they're growing every day!

The Comedy Writer Murders

By LOU DERMAN

Hollywood.

Detective Burke frowned as he regarded the Head of the Network.

"Four comedy writers in four weeks," he said irritably. "I don't get it. I just don't get it."

The Nethead said glumly, "They're being murdered off like flies. I tell you, Burke, some maniac has dedicated himself to killing off every top comedy writer in town. But why?"

"I've seen some of those comedy shows," Burke said dryly.

The phone rang. The Nethead spoke a while then hung up and said in a husky parched voice:

"Number Five just got his."

"Who?" Burke asked scowling.

"A Berle writer."

"That one could be a suicide."

"No, it was murder. He opened the De to Du drawer of Berle's gag file and was blown to bits."

"De to Du," Burke said sadly, "some of my favorite Berle jokes." Then he added. "How many comedy writers are left in town?"

"Top writers? Maybe 18."

"Are they scattered around town, or still living with Red Buttons?"

The Nethead barely heard Burke and continued to pace his office nervously. He tore up a few pilot scripts absently as he passed his desk, patted his lovely secretary fondly when she bent over to pick up a paper clip, then he turned to the pensive Burke.

"The motive," he said tensely. "If we could only figure out the motive behind these senseless killings. Burke, don't you have any ideas at all?"

"Burke," the Nethead said sharply, "you've been on this case almost five weeks now, and in that time five of our best comedy writers have been murdered in cold blood. Why don't you call in an FBI man?"

"Try and find one," Burke said wearily. "They're all over at Culver City making a movie."

They sat quietly awhile, absorbed in their thoughts, then suddenly Burke sat up with a start.

Design for Not Living

"Wait!" he said excitedly. "I think I see a pattern in these murders!"

"What is it?"

"So far the fiend has murdered a Danny Thomas writer, a Bob Hope writer, a Jack Benny writer, a Gobel writer, and now . . . a Berle writer."

"So?"

"Don't you see?" He's knocking them off according to their places in the Nielsen ratings!"

"You mean . . . high Nielsen gets it first?"

"Right in the labanza!"

The Nethead did some rapid calculating on his pudgy little fingers, then said, "If your theory is right, then a Gleason writer should get his next."

"You can start writing his obituary," Burke said happily.

"No, impossible!" the Nethead said. "Your theory's no good. Gleason personally kills off his writers."

Cockily, Burke took a $10 bill out of his wallet. "Five will get you $10 that a Gleason writer bites the dust next."

The phone rang..

The Nethead spoke awhile, listened worriedly, hung up and said, "A Sid Caesar writer."

He pocketed the $10 bill and Burke said unhappily, "That rat killer—he's switching to Trendex." Then struck by a thought, he added. "How did the Caesar writer get his?"

"Somebody slipped a uranium ribbon in his typewriter, he hit one key and went into orbit."

He absently dropped a paper clip in front of the lovely secretary, pinched her, then mused softly:

"The motive . . . there must be a motive. Think, Nethead, have you received any threatening letters from anybody lately complaining about the quality of your comedy shows?"

The Nethead thought awhile then said:

"Yes."

"Now we're getting someplace! How many letters?"

"Last week—175 million."

"Now we know our killer is an American!"

"Burke," the Nethead said simply, "you need help."

"But I told you, the FBI . . ."

"When I said help, I meant psychiatry."

A Clue

As Burke frowned unhappily, the phone rang and the Nethead spoke for awhile, then hung up excitedly.

"At last!" he cried, "a break!"

"What is it?" Burke said, ignoring the lovely secretary who kept dropping paper clips all over the office.

"They've spotted the killer!"

"Great! Where is he?"

"Right now he's chasing Singer and Chevillat over some rooftops in Boyle Heights."

"I'll bring him in!"

Burke scooted for the door just as the phone rang and the Nethead picked it up. A few seconds later, he hung up miserably.

"Sit down, Burke," the Nethead said dully.

"Nethead," said the detective, "I . . ."

"Stop calling me Nethead!" the Nethead rasped irritably. "Let me hear that space between Net and head, I'm a big man around here."

"Listen, Net," Burke said intensely, "I've got an angle. Who would profit most of all if every comedy writer in the business were killed off?"

"The public, I guess. Why.

"Think," said Burke, now all wound up. "Like the dog is the natural enemy of the cat and the mongoose is the natural enemy of the snake, who is the natural enemy of the comedy writer?"

"The star he's working for, naturally."

A Thataway Deduction

"No," Burke said impatiently. "Look at your tv ratings setup. The natural enemy of the comedy writer is the Western writer!"

"Of course," the Nethead, uh, Net Head said slowly.

"Right," said Burke, then added. "Our mad dog killer is a writer of Westerns—and not too successful—or he'd be too fat and happy to be a good killer.

"My wife's brother . . ." the Net said thoughtfully, then quickly added, "No, he's in Florida. Go on. Burke, you were saying?"

"Nettlehead . . ."

"Stop that!"

"Sorry, Net Head," Burke said slowly, "find the man I've described and you've got your writer-killer."

The phone rang.

"Yes?" barked the Net.

He listened a second or two, then slammed down the phone with a big happy smile.

"Burke, you were right!" he yelled. "The killer's name is Mannie Dwork, he's a Western writer, all right, and at this very second he's got Parke Levy, Arthur Julian and Bill Davenport cornered in the steamroom of the Beverly Hills Health Club!"

"Let's go!" shouted Burke.

They had reached the door when suddenly the phone rang again.

Burke said, "Take it, Nuthead."

"Nethead!" screamed the Net. "I mean Net Head."

He talked awhile on the phone, a big broad grin spreading over his features.

"Burke," he said, sighing a deep sigh of relief, "it's all over."

"What happened?"

"The killer had one of his Western scripts on him, the boys read it, they told him it was very funny, a scream, and they wanted to use it on a 'December Bride'

"But that's a comedy show," Burke said confused.

"The shock killed Dwork," the Net said. "They carried him out of the steamroom. Isn't that something?"

"Strange," mused Burke. "Very strange. A Western writer who suddenly finds out he's really been writing comedy for years . . ."

He opened the door, turned.

"Nettsy boy," he said gently.

"What is it, Burkesy doll?" the Net said cozily as he bit his lovely secretary gently on the ear.

"Net," Burke said hesitantly, "I have an idea for a tv property . . a crime series, starring me. I even have the title: 'Irving Burke, Darling of the FBI.'"

"Burke," the Net said tersely, "I'm sorry. I'm not buying crime properties for awhile—not while I've got one comedy writer left. Goodbye."

Burke went out.

As he walked toward the elevator, he muttered:

"Not while he's got some comedy writers left."

Burke patted his gun and said viciously:

"Eight down, 15 to go."

'The Best Tunes of All . . .'

By ARTHUR HULL HAYES
(President, CBS Radio)

Showmanship, in its simplest terms, is the art of attracting the largest and most appreciative audience for the attraction you have to offer. When American show business was younger, aggressive showmanship was mostly a matter of ballyhoo that had small relation (the smaller, the better it seemed) to the merit of the attraction at hand. In its earthiest, most aggressive form, this approach was embodied in the traveling carnival and with variations and refinements, the concept was shared by other branches of popular entertainment.

Radio has not been remiss in the exercise of showmanship, but it has always had to base its appeal, quite rigorously, on the substance and merit of its attractions. Thus it was discovered at CBS Radio, from the very beginning, that there was a high potential for showmanship in what is called, for lack of a better name, "serious music." On its first day of broadcasting, Sept. 18, 1927, the network presented a complete concert performance of the new American opera, "The King's Henchman," composed by Deems Taylor, with Edna St. Vincent Millay as the librettist.

By October 1930, the New York Philharmonic had become an exclusive weekly radio attraction on CBS and in the years that followed, other important musical organizations, such as the Salt Lake Tabernacle Choir, and the symphony orchestras of Louisville, Philadelphia, Cleveland and others found their places in the program schedule.

Today, amidst changes undreamed of 15 years ago, CBS Radio can still take pride in filling the air with music performed by three of the world's outstanding musical organizations, the New York Philharmonic, the Metropolitan Opera and the Salt Lake Tabernacle Choir. During the past seven summers, moreover, we have also been able to add to these attractions the best performances of European music on "World Music Festivals" during the months when the Philharmonic is absent from the air.

What does showmanship consist of in such radio programs as these? In recent times, the Metropolitan has presented such newsmaking additions to its repertory as Alban Berg's "Wozzeck" and Verdi's "Macbeth." Its programming of Saturday afternoon performances is studiously arranged with the tastes of the radio audience as a prime consideration.

'We Get Letters'

The showmanship that moved the customers from the barker's platform to the ticket window in the carnival was momentarily effective but it was lacking in one important respect. The customers never wrote intelligent, thoughtful letters of appreciation to the bearded lady, the dog-faced boy or their impresarios. In other words, there was no sense of personal involvement. But the files are bulging with letters like these about the Metropolitan Opera and Philharmonic broadcasts:

"I wish to thank you for the Saturday afternoon broadcasts of the Metropolitan Opera.

One of the most dramatic fan letters to the Metropolitan was a legal document which read in part:

"I give and bequeath to the Metropolitan Opera Guild . . . the sum of Two Thousand Dollars . . . as a token of my sincere appreciation for the many hours of enjoyment which the Guild has given me through its radio broadcasts of operas."

Similarly with the New York Philharmonic. Under Leonard Bernstein's directorship it is achieving new heights of dignified but stimulating showmanship. The allocation of a featured spot in each broadcast to the work of an American composer, presented as a historical cycle, is a case in point. But the three decades of Philharmonic performance on CBS Radio are dotted with significant milestones. At random, we can cite such undertakings as the complete Beethoven and Brahms cycles conducted by Bruno Walter in two successive seasons; Mitropoulos' concert presentations of such operas as Strauss' "Elektra," Wagner's "Die Goetterdaemmerung," Act 3, Milhaud's "Christopher Columbus," and Moussorgsky's "Boris Godounoff," Act 3.

There have been such events as the American premieres of Shostakovich's Eighth Symphony, a Schoenberg Violin Concerto and Stravinsky's symphonic melodrama, "Persephone," conducted by the composer.

Twice in recent years, the Salt Lake Tabernacle Choir, on CBS for 27 years, has made triumphant concert tours, once of Europe, more recently of the United States, evoking critical acclaim with every performance, while on its home grounds it receives a weekly stream of letters from appreciative radio listeners.

All in all CBS Radio's presentation of great music continues, after 30 years, in a framework of consistent and impressive eventfulness, without which there can be no real showmanship. The proof of the potential for mass attractiveness in "serious music" is the fact that its audience, both on radio and on recordings, comprises a far greater percentage of the population than it did 30 years ago. In the past 15 years, the number of symphony orchestras in the United States has doubled. More than 35 million people a year attend live performance of serious music and even the jukeboxes use twice as many classical and semi-classical recordings as they did a few years ago.

Serious music has by no means reached the limits of its growth and radio will continue to contribute to this healthy phenomenon.

TV 'Open Mind!' Do-It-Yourself Propositions

By RICHARD D. HEFFNER
(Producer-Moderator 'The Open Mind'.)

"Why don't you call your program 'The Closed Mind' instead of 'The Open Mind'?" shrilled an irate lady. Why? Because not one of the guests on the previous Sunday's show had adequately expressed this particular "fan's" point of view. The topic of the show in question: TV Censorship. But it could have been "Atomic Fall-Out," "The New Deal," or "Homosexuality." For half the woes heaped upon the producer and/or moderator of any one of tv's now plentiful discussion shows have to do with matching (or "balancing") point of view X with point of view Y—so that neither viewer X nor viewer Y will feel cheated or closed out by a "closed mind."

Yet, frequently on those occasions when we do come near to achieving a "perfect" balance, no single, overriding theme or conclusion emerges and, of course, viewer Z writes in to complain that our minds are so open that our brains have fallen out.

This is not to imply, that audience response to the discussion shows is by any means largely negative. Quite to the contrary. The "thanks" run 10:1 against the "no thanks" — and usually they have to do mostly with a particular show's "courage" in dealing with issues that otherwise simply are not touched on in depth or at length anywhere else (including in the press!).

Just For Ideas

For despite the frequent charges that television is frightened of its own shadow—that this mass medium deals only with the safe and the sound — audience reaction would indicate that at least the talk shows offer a means of expression for new ideas, for offbeat ideas — just for ideas! — that is comparatively unique in American life today.

1984 is only 25 years away, with all of its terrifying potential for total conformity of thought. And by 1984, it may well be that television will be used primarily as still another means of controlling and subduing free, independent thought. But right now, television —in its many discussion, controversy, "idea" shows, at least—is truly a major liberating force.

This seems abundantly clear when the mail returns come in and when viewers go on at some length to express both their surprise and their gratitude at the fact that television has offered discussion of subjects that seem to be taboo elsewhere in our times.

The television producer, who routinely debates with himself and his staff 52 weeks a year as to which discussion topic to pick and which guests to use, seems to take a great deal more for granted about controversy on the air than do many of his viewers.

Recently, "The Open Mind" had occasion to have as a guest a man who admittedly has been a rather controversial figure over the past 10 or 20 years. Yet we considered him merely as potentially a well-spoken, attractive guest with an interesting and stimulating point of view. No question of should we or shouldn't we. No censor and no representative of management breathing down our necks. But the show was hardly off the air before calls were pouring in to congratulate us for "daring" to invite this particular guest and to discuss our particular subject. And during the next week, our mail registered the same overwhelming delight, approval, and particularly surprise at our "boldness."

I'm sure that this experience has been shared by other producers and moderators of television discussion shows. So that maybe it's about time for us to "clear the air" a bit by glorying a little less in our viewers' tributes to our "courage" and "daring" and by replying a little more honestly to the effect that being free on the air is simply a do-it-yourself proposition. But let them keep calling and writing!

Future of TV in Britain May Hinge on Elections In Fall

By HAROLD MYERS

London.

The General Election, which is expected to take place some time between October and November next, may probably determine the whole future of television in Great Britain.

Drastic changes in the existing setup are only likely to occur if the Tories are defeated and the Labor Party returned to power and, while the odds are slightly against the Socialists, the possibility of a last minute swing against the existing Government party cannot be ignored.

Briefly the situation can be summarized as follows. The BBC's charter is due to expire in 1962, while the nine-year contracts between the Independent Television Authority and the commercial program companies are valid until 1964. It's a safe bet, therefore, to assume that, whatever Government is in power, temporary legislation will be introduced to prolong the life of the BBC charter by two years so that its expiration coincides with that of the commercial network. Such procedure would enable the Government of the day to propose all-embracing legislation to cover the whole future of television broadcasting.

The Conservatives, who took the initiative in introducing commercial tv against strong opposition from Labor, are not anxious to introduce any major changes in the existing arrangement. They may, however, be compelled to bow to public and political pressure and introduce some measures which could curb the profit earning capacity of the program companies. The Socialists, on the other hand, have made it abundantly clear that if elected to power they will take various measures to restrict the fabulous earnings of the commercial companies and probably at the same time offer more scope to BBC.

Any direct action planned by either party in power would largely be dependent on the final decision in regard to the proposed third network. So far the project continues in the talking stage, but the school of thought advocates that the third channel should be handed over to the ITA for reallocation on a strictly commercial basis; another urges the cause of the BBC which could make good use of a second outlet; while there is a third school which paraphrases an old pre-war political slogan—a plague on both your blouses—and recommends the creation of a new independent agency to administer the third outlet.

Time Table

While speculation on the third channel may well prove unprofitable, the question of Labor Party action is a more urgent one. Unless urgent amending legislation should be introduced, and this must be rated as unlikely, no new Government will be able to take any direct and positive action until 1964. Such legislation as may be introduced, however, could well be termed controversial and might need a substantial time to go through both Houses of Parliament. Allowing for the time necessary in drafting such complicated and controversial legislation, it may well mean that the Government lawyers will have to start their job some time next year in order to insure that the Bill is through all its Parliamentary stages by 1964. And that time-table makes it a reasonably urgent issue.

Neither of the political parties has clearly indicated its attitude towards a third network, but both BBC and ITA have staked their respective claims. The latter authority, indeed, has gone so far as to indicate that there would be a new pattern for allocation of regional outlets and each of the four existing major companies—Associated-Rediffusion, Associated TeleVision, ABC-TV and Granada TV Network, would receive a seven-day allocation, thus ending the "mosaic" which has been in operation since 1955.

In the House of Commons during the past months a clique of Labor MP.s has been protesting vigorously at alleged abuses of the Television Act by the program companes. One of the main beefs has been directed at the practice of not confining advertising commercials to six minutes in the hour, but to achieving a spreadover during the day which results in the same proportion. It was argued, both in Parliament and in the press, that via this device the tv companies were able to attract an undue proportion of peak rate advertising while not taking up all available time during the less popular parts of the day. Undoubtedly, a Labor Government in power would endeavor to apply a stricter yardstick. It could also take other practical steps to curb the earnings of the major companies.

The first post-war Labor Government in 1946 abortively tried to launch a tax on general press advertising. That proposal was withdrawn under pressure, but in more limited form, possibly restricted only to television commercials, it might reasonably be introduced by another Labor Government. As all expenditure on advertising counts as a charge against company and profit tax, the introduction of an additional impost could lead to restrictions in advertising budgets.

Another permutation which has been discussed in top Labor circles is to restrict the activities of the program companies to that of program packagers. The idea is that they would supply programs to a central agency, presumable the ITA, which, in turn, would sell advertising time, transmit the programs and collect all the revenue. If such a drastic step were to be introduced the program companies' income would be limited to a fee for their production services but they would be denuded of their main revenue source.

Com'l TV's 4th Anni

Next September will be the fourth anniversary of the launching of commercial tv in Britain and what has happened in that short space of time is nothing less than a technical and financial miracle. The majors are making profits which are as high as $20,000,000 a year; while the regional stations have developed a comparable profit earning status. From the start, the audience swing in favor of commercial tv has been two to one and that ratio has been maintained with only rare exceptions. The blanket coverage of the country is now rapidly being completed. Within the next three months new transmitters will be inaugurated in the East of England and in Northern Ireland. Just one or two smaller territories will remain to give the two rival webs comparable coverage. Technical developments, however, may give the BBC the chance to hold its lead. New satellite stations are being sited at strategic points throughout the country which will enable a million more viewers to reach the BBC programs. As a first stage there will be 14 tv and 10 VHF stations which are scheduled for completion by March 1962.

Another technical development will equally affect ITA, as well as BBC. This is the proposal to change the line definition from the existing 406 lines to the continental system (excluding France) of 625 lines. That, however, will be a longterm project to be spread over some 10 years in order not to make existing receivers obsolete. For some time, however, the programs will be obliged to make dual transmissions on both 405 and 625 lines to cater for owners of both types of receiver.

The one tussle with authority on which there is largely common ground between the rival webs is the agitation for increased air time. Currently, programs are limited to 50 hours per week with exemptions for remote broadcasts. Recently, there was a concession in regard to Sunday morning programs, but not affecting the overall weekly total of air time. The commercial companies have adopted a cautious approach, fearing that any initiative on their part may be misunderstood as a bid to grab even more profits.

As its position has consolidated and it has gained more experience, the commercial network has been devoting increasing time to thoughtful, provocative and public service programs. The program skeds indicate the amount of time already devoted to serious drama, documentary and ballet, as well as the conventional and highly popular quiz programs and vidpic series. On its part, the BBC has hardly made any concession in its program schedules, but has striven to maintain and continue the high overall standard for which it has long been renowned. The BBC finds time for American imports, be they Westerns or situation comedies, but still gives an adequate proportion of its screen time for drama, live action classical series and a wide range of documentary, science and educational programs.

It's an interesting commentary to note that while the contrast between the rival webs gets less with the passing of time, the overwhelming majority of the viewers still make the commercial programs their first choice.

Mex TV Dickers Japan-Style Tint

Mexico City, July 28.

Mexico is preparing to enter the color television field. But not with the American system due to fact that this cannot be adapted to the local television picture, primarily because of high cost and the need of additional equipment requiring further outlays of cash.

The Japanese Toshiba firm (Tokyo Shibaura Electric Company), which has perfected a system permitting transmission of color television with normal apparatus, is now dickering with executives here for installations. Japanese technicians would supervise these as well as give technical aid for as long a period as required.

In test demonstrations utilizing receivers equipped with the Braunn tube, results have been satisfactory, according to the Toshiba experts. They claim their color system also achieves a greater image luminosity than any others.

Mexican television channels are interested in the Japanese offer and are now seriously considering it. Main factor is that Japanese system will be easy on station budgets and television owners will not be required to replace sets with costly new receivers.

If a deal is set the four major channels here would immediately initiate a series of color programs.

Write Makes Might

By LOUIS G. COWAN
(President, CBS-TV)

Recently I had occasion to appear before the American Association of School Administrators to discuss the general area of television and the arts. My general theme concerned itself with what constituted art and what was mere popular fad without artistic merit. In the course of the exploration of this subject I was pleased to be able to announce that the CBS Television Network was starting a series of annual television writing Grants-in-Aid which would enable writers to exercise their creative talents under their own steam, bulwarked by a no-strings stipend. The purpose was simple stated: "to encourage the Grantee to write."

It was interesting to note that educational circles, in their reaction to this announcement, devoted most of their subsequent attention to the Grants-in-Aid while various representatives of the printed media seemed more intrigued by the definition of art.

The applications received for our Grants-in-Aid have numbered in the thousands. Frankly, I do not envy the task of our selection committee. Most of the applications have been accompanied by up to four pieces of sample literary effort. The fact that the vast majority of applicants are people with sound claims to consideration does not render the selection committee's task any simpler.

The experience of inviting and considering these thousands of applications has already proven most valuable. It has, for one thing, reinforced and validated our strong conviction that the peak of television creativity lies in the future, not the past. It has also indicated most strongly that our young people with creative orientation have great faith in television's future.

It is only fair to report that, while we have found many with the gloss of professional skill, we have also found that such skill and the spark of true creativity are not necessarily co-existent. Only a relative handful of the Grants-in-Aid applicants have presented work which indicated outstanding creative possibilities. We frankly expected this.

Creativity, it must be remembered, is a positive talent, not merely the negation of old concepts. It is much easier to criticize an art form than to come up with superior substitutes. Just as we must go through thousands of applications to find five Grantees, so we must go through thousands of concepts to find a handful of new creative approaches.

Not Just in TV

It has been said by some that television has a tendency to "play it safe." This implies that there is a vast body of magnificent scripts going unused because we are reluctant to use them. And our reluctance is presumed to reflect timidity or worse. We are indeed reluctant to use many scripts, but not because their magnificence frightens us. The greatest shortage in television today is of new creative talent to give us more good scripts—they don't have to be magnificent, just plain good—and more worthwhile program ideas. We are not alone in this need. The theatre and the world of books are equally hungry for more of the best.

Perhaps one can point a lone idea or script which is deemed excellent but which has never been accepted. No one can claim infallibility. Would that we could. The woods are full of publishers, stage impresarios, motion picture magnates and miscellaneous purveyors of entertainment who turned down a submission that later made a fortune for somebody else. But let us not confuse judgment with purpose.

Few American businesses, least of all television, have been built on the idea of standing pat. Creativity is not a luxury with us; it is our bread and butter. We must, of course, be careful to avoid confusing progress and change. There is no point in making changes in programming just for the sake of novelty; and there is little merit in taking the kind of one step forward which requires two steps back.

The chemistry of a hit is harder to break down into its components than a laboratory formula; but we do know that a catalytic agent helps. We seek to provide, through our Grants-in-Aid, the catalyst which will cause the inventive, creative young writer to devote his primary talents to television. We frankly expect to learn from our five Grantees, just as they will learn from us. The end product, we earnestly hope, will be creativity expressed not only in terms of new programs, but also in terms of exciting departures in techniques and scripts for existing programs.

Most probably, the results of this venture will not be visible for months or maybe even years. Just as the tennis champion's effortless ease in the center court is the result of a lifetime of arduous practice and preparation, so a great television show usually draws upon the accumulated resources of many people and many seasons.

Television is not a one-night stand. We must always look to the future. The essential point of our Grants-in-Aid is that the creative people of tomorrow know there are those of us who do care, deeply, about the vast and still to be explored potential of the television medium.

BILL SHIPLEY

Eurovision's Girl-Whirl

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt.

"If you want to be a television show personality in Europe, learn a lot of languages. Then content yourself with making just about enough money to keep you in clothes."

So finds lively Elena Gerhardt, who did her first television show teaching gymnastics in Berlin in 1939—and now 20 years and countless experiences later is the only femme German commentator for Eurovision.

(She has three other female counterparts doing the simultaneous broadcasts for Eurovision shows—one in Copenhagen, two in Belgium. With a great flair for lingo required—and no school in Germany teaching the essentials of television production or broadcasting—there's always a need for these highly trained translator-commentators.)

In her unique spot, Miss Gerhardt is called on to travel all over Europe and broadcast the Europe-wide television coverage to the 10,000,000 German-speaking viewers in Germany, Austria and Switzerland.

For a wide know-how and a job that generally takes her five days (a day's travel time, arrive two days before the event to prepare, do the show, go home again), she's paid a standard fee of 400 German marks (slightly under $100), plus the not-very-prodigal living expenses of $10 a day for hotel, food, taxis and any extras, and her actual transportation costs.

Have Dress, Will Travel

Add to this fact that for a big Eurovision event, the commentator can expect closeups and is expected to be stunningly gowned as a top rep of her country—so she usually lays out $100 for the evening dress in which she appears.

To help for her job, Miss Gerhardt speaks German, French, English, Italian, Danish, Swedish, Norwegian (in her spare time, she translates "Believe It Or Not" cartoons into German for her husband, E. Slovick, head of King Features in Germany).

Starting with simultaneous German-lingo broadcasts of the Olympic games from Oslo and Helsinki in 1952 for Eurovision, Miss Gerhardt appeared recently as the German Eurovision commentator for a show from Lake Como, Italy, in which world-famed Italian opera singers performed from an open air theatre.

Due to space shortages, though, the Eurovision reporters worked from studio facilities in Milan—talking about the stars singing out under the moon several hundred miles away!

Then at the recent San Remo, Italy, fest to pick Italy's top song hits, the commentators were set up in telephone-booth-like stands in an empty hall—while the audience and the singers were in another concert hall several floors away. Eurovision reporters had a control monitor to give them an indicatin of what was going on—and saw the show on television much as did the at-home spectators.

"You eventually get to where you think you're lucky if you wind up in the same house with the event," she comments.

"You go to a strange country alone to prepare your show.

Garroway-At-Large

By JERRY A. DANZIG

Bone-weary, Dave Garroway's "Today" in Paris tape-worms have once more settled down to the creature comforts of normal studio production of the five-day-a-weeker. Little did the 36 person NBC staff that flew to Paris in the Spring to record five shows using Intercontinental Television's facilities (we made four) know the headlines we would make when we left New York. Our mission was to accomplish a television "first"—the recording of five two-hour shows on tape for jet return to the United States from Europe. Somewhere along the way we picked up Brigitte Bardot, a strike, and the knowledge that easy living, cherchez la femme and "pig-alley" were out.

Was it worth it, and what did we learn? The answer to the first part of the question is definitely, yes. In terms of prestige for "Today," NBC and ITI, by proving that it could be done, the experience was invaluable. In terms of what we learned, I have had to sort out a potpourri of reactions to the many experiences we underwent.

The Paris trip was the culmination of an initial exploratory trip to Paris by producer Bob Bendick and his staff which was then followed by a second trip, this time gradually phasing in the production staff. The problem of locations and what could be done in each section of Paris to give balance to the five days of programming came first. An integral part of this dealt with the number of camera moves that could be accomplished on any one day in any one area.

The most complex taping were the first two days: the regions of the Eiffel Tower and the Champs Elysees. The Eiffel Tower show, due to the multiplicity of camera moves, was a back-breaker, with cameras set up variously in five different locations, including one in the elevator that mounted the Eiffel Tower, with cablemen feeding the live camera as the elevator mounted. It was a striking camera shot. More striking still was the teamwork that existed from the very beginning between the American and French crews despite the language barriers.

The Champs Elysees show on the second day of taping was even more ambitious. Starting with a special ceremony for "Today" cameras by the honored Guarde Republicaine at the Arc de Triomphe, the huge blue-colored ITI self-contained truck and generator lumbered down the Champs Elysees, two cameramen mounted on top, taping Dave Garroway and his guest of the day, Miss France, as they moved in an open carriage from the Place de l'Etoile to the Lido further down the Avenue. It was a memory I shall never forget . . . the thousands of amused French spectators, the hundreds of efficient, solemn gendarmes, all entangled with the frantic mess of traffic that kept streaming by. Then in the same day came camera setups in a cafe on the Elysees, in an arcade and, finally, into the Lido nightclub itself for a portion of rehearsal. Intermixed with these moves were live commercials, ranging from a pressure cooker demonstration by Garroway on the sidewalk of the Champs Elysees to an Evinrude commercial taped on the stage of the Lido.

Values of Speed

The "Today" braintrust, consisting of Bendick as skilled chief planner; Jack Otter, associate producer, and directors Bill Healion and Dennis Kane, realized that the third and fourth shows would have to be somewhat simplified, and they were. The last two days of taping resulted in virtually straight sessions, ranging from an hour to an hour and a half, with no cuts or interruptions, still without loss of program quality and excitement. This was due in no small part to the remarkably flexible talents of Garroway, who was a master of adroit ad lib and always managed to rise to the occasion. By this time we had also learned the complexities of numerous camera moves, and we made allowances for the inevitable unexpected occurrences that on previous days had ranged from fire engines blocking our approach to the Lido, to the camera-laden elevator that mounted to the near top of the Eiffel Tower and no one could summon back to ground level following rehearsal.

The fact that we were able to tape what in effect was the equivalent of over four full-length feature films was due to the skillful planning of boss-man Bob Bendick. Camera moves were plotted days in advance, talent informed where to report and when, scripts researched and typed for TelePrompter. And, yet, with all this, singers became ill, a noted personality had to leave for a dentist appointment when taping fell behind schedule, the mannequins arrived with unscheduled dresses, the Mayor of Paris had only 10 minutes. These too must be anticipated and dealt with.

We never could have pulled off the tape coup we did without the complete and continuing cooperation of the French government, the French tourist bureau and the omnipresent gendarmes. Without official blessing the whole trip could have been a shambles. As it was, the French have proven themselves to be ready, willing and able.

Yes, I'd do it again. Vive la France, ITI, NBC, and our thanks to Bardot!

Forget The Pablum— This Baby Wants Steak

By OLIVER TREYZ

(Pres., ABC Television)

Throw away the diapers, but keep the teething ring.

Network television is a brand new baby again—but a baby that is walking with a firm step and instead of bawling in the crib, it is talking in a commanding voice.

Ten years ago there was a need for diapers and a nursing bottle. Television was taking its first faltering steps. It rarely had to face the question, "What do the people want to watch?" Television wasn't subject to its market —rather the market was subject to television.

One station markets and the lack of full programming schedules brought one result: People looked at whatever you gave them. They weren't selective, because there was little from which to select.

Then the medium began to grow. During most of the past 10 years, there were, and nobody will dispute it, just two networks. They, in no small part, helped change the picture of mass communication in this country. The nation increasingly became more sight-and-sound conscious.

In 1953, Leonard Goldenson said there would, in five years, be three major, strongly competitive networks. And he was right. Nobody today can dispute that. The 1958-59 season saw his prediction come true, not just in the minds of the people at ABC who dedicatedly believed in that prediction, but in millions of television homes.

People aren't channel-sitters anymore. They shop around the dial for the programs they want to see, not just the ones they can see. We never had this kind of selectivity in the broadcast medium before.

But then neither did we have three networks.

It's a new ballgame now. ABC approaches the fall season with as many, if not more, tried and true audience winners on its schedule as CBS and NBC. And we have the strongest lineup of new fall properties in our history. Advertisers are shopping, and buying, three networks instead of two.

The result: The world's largest entertainment and advertising medium is again a baby. But it's a different baby because it's a stronger baby.

And it's going to get even stronger.

The increased competition will benefit everybody—the public, the advertisers, the networks. Competition means progress—in programming, in public service, in the effectiveness of television advertising, and in television technique—in every facet of the medium.

Let's take those four points one by one.

Programming: Television vewing is again at an alltime high. This is the result of upgraded programming, no matter what the eggheads say. And programming this fall will be even more appealing to the viewers.

We've had the experience of the past 10 years to guide us in planning this fall's offering. Now programs are created, planned, and produced with a greater assurance of success both with the public and for the advertiser.

Again, no matter what the eggheads say, this doesn't mean the industry is falling into a conformative mold. New forms have been and will continue to be tried and tested, both on film and live. The irregularly scheduled specials are now seen with such frequency that they form an integral part of a network schedule.

Public Service: It is constantly being proved that television is the fastest and most effective way to inform and educate the public, through regular newscasts, regularly scheduled public service programs such as "College News Conference" and "Meet The Press" and specials such as John Daly's "Report Card 1958" and his forthcoming "The Splendid American."

I believe the increased awareness on the part of the American public toward both international and domestic affairs can be directly traced to television. As the facilities and penetration of ABC have enlarged, so have our activities in public service programming. We don't think of public service programs as "prestige programming." We think they are a vital part of our great responsibility.

Television Advertising: Television is just at the starting point in making use of its experience and research in developing its most effective techniques as an advertising medium. We have just scratched the surface but already television is the largest national advertising medium.

Commercials today bear little, if any, resemblance to the words with pictures first seen years ago on TV. Techniques have been developed and the television commercial has evolved as a separate entity—not words with pictures, not pictures with words, but sight and sound selling tailored to television.

Television technique: Where once television films were merely copies of movies, there has now evolved the craft of making television films.

The potential of videotape on television is boundless. Videotape is not even a baby yet—it is embryonic. It will open the doors to many new dimensions of television entertainment and advertising.

Not even we who are using it and experimenting with it have a glimmer of its ultimate possibilities.

These areas of future development are, I admit, commented on very generally. None of us knows exactly where the next 10 years will lead us. And I think we're better off for it.

We only have a dream. And just as the dreams of a few men 10 years ago gave birth to the miracle of today's television, the dreams of men in the medium today will give it new life. We are in a business based on ideas and dreams. The ideas and dreams of those we serve.

This new baby that is network television is going to take a lot of food to create new ideas and dreams. We owe it to not only ourselves, but to the people who believe in our medium, to produce the stimulating fare they desire.

You can't feed this baby pabium—it's hungry for steaks.

STANTON ON TV CRITICISM

(Excerpts from speech delivered by CBS Inc. prexy Frank Stanton before Ohio State Radio-TV Institute)

"Television criticism has had thrust upon it a burden that all other criticism seems to have escaped. Television is the only medium that I know of that came into being with its critics already waiting for it. Poetry, history, art, music, the theatre, the dance—all these evolved their own standards of excellence over long periods of trial and error. Criticism came along much later, and only after those standards had been well and long established. Then criticism itself slowly became an art, until we have come to prize much criticism for its own sake long after its specific objects may have been forgotten—as we do Hazlitt and Saintsbury and Ruskin.

"The basic essential, of such criticism is perspective. In the case of television, however, no one has had the time to develop perspective. The medium itself is too young to have yet made its contribution in this direction. We are still attempting, through honest and sincere application, to arrive at standards that other media took centuries to discover—even though they had much less inclusive audiences to please. Television has attempted to do this, moreover, under a chillingly desperate need to meet extremely heavy economic demands as it went along. These demands and the technical nature of the medium combined to force it to find its place as an instrument to serve, not a few thousands or even hundreds of thousands, but scores of millions. This fact in itself put a totally unique condition upon its character and growth."

Comedy A Serious Business, Some Reflections On The Future

By PHIL SILVERS

In the days of the nickelodeon, when a 200-foot film of a guy slipping on a banana peel was considered a comedy feature (and they were truly funny), there was a producer whose ads proclaimed "Our comedies are not to be laughed at!"

He was right. Being funny is no joke, especially on television, in the year of 1959. Which means that the actor, comedian, humorist, Pagliacci, or whatever you call him, cannot perform with the relative freedom from care that vaudeville artists enjoyed in the grand old days. He has got to engage, unceasingly in Mr. Thomas Watson's favorite activity, called THINK. And in recent years, which may be remembered as the tragic era of television comedy, there has been plenty to think about.

The high mortality rate for comedians of the fluorescent screen is attributed to a number of causes, singly or in combination: the lack of good writers, the perishability of material and routines, the tyranny of the rating charts, the timidity of agencies and sponsors who submit to the tyranny of same, and the terrifying costs of production. Doctors are blamed for being against jokes about doctors and minority groups are blamed for being against jokes at the expense of minority groups. In short, the public is blamed for having public taboos. Vaudeville is blamed for being non-existent and thus depriving us of a "minor league" in which to develop new performing talent. Please recall George Burns' pithy sum-up: "There are no places anymore where a new comedian can be lousy." And comedians are blaming themselves for being comedians—but let's keep psychiatry out of this.

The fact is that there's at least a little truth in each of the indictments. Put them all together, they spell murder for some great performers, and raise questions about the future for all of us.

Whither television comedy, if at all? What forms can it take? And what will the future demand of us?

There will be comedy, of course. Without it, television would lose its pinpoint carbonation. The forms it will have to take are pretty well indicated by radio's whole history and by the tv experience of recent years.

New Ones Will Go Up—Then Down

The stand-up comedians, who have had the biggest casualty list of late, will not be entirely wiped out. Well known ones will reappear, new ones will appear. They will enjoy star billing on their own programs for a while and move back into the nightclubs, or become naturalized in tv as guest artists and members of panel shows.

But the sun is setting for the television comedian who just tells jokes, no matter how fresh his material or how superb his timing.

Today's comedian, to my mind, has to have a character to portray. He's got to be a Jack Benny loaded with the human frailties and vanities. Or he's got to be a Fred Allen whose stand-up monologs are a direct projection of his real-life personality but who associates with fictional characters he has created. Or he can be one-half of Burns and Allen, the Easy Aces or Fibber McGee & Molly. In other words, the essence of durable comedy, on tv more than elsewhere, is to create and project a believable character.

When that much is achieved, it becomes easier and more entertaining to throw him, week after week, into the situations which show off the traits that arouse laughter, and preferably sympathetic laughter. And there's another, more subtle requirement. The character must be inseparable from the comedian. The real and the fictional personalities must merge so completely that when Phil Silvers walks down the street people should say "there goes Bilko." And when Danny Thomas walks into a theatre or a ball park, it is fitting and flattering that he be hailed as Danny Williams.

What all of this means is that the comedian, the funny man in front of the cameras, must be a more creative individual than he has ever been. He cannot be thoughtlessly submissive to his writers, producers, sponsors, network, or even the public. The final result, no matter how much brilliance has been contributed by others, rests with him. It's a tall order but some of us will make it. At any rate, I'm sure that the Mask of Comedy will never have to be removed from the proscenium of television. It's been there since Aristophanes and Gus Edwards, and there it will stay.

Oh, Brothers!

By PATRICK D. HAZARD

(Annenberg School of Communications, U. of Penna.)

Philadelphia.

That formidable blonde expert on fisticuffs—Dr. Joyce Brothers—pulled no punches in her recent appearance at the National Association of Educational Broadcasters in Columbus. Her highly technical psychiatric knockout of an audience of broadcasters and educators came after a simulated telecast of her WRCA-TV midday psychoanalytic session for Gotham housewives. Her bill of fare—a widower fixated on his teenage daughter, a wife bothered by her husband's penchant for innovating during intercourse, a young man with a Don Juan complex—was apparently hard for the educational broadcasters to digest immediately: NAEB President William G. Harley's invitation to interrogate Dr. Brothers about the program met with a stunned silence.

This is a curious switch, since a perennial needling of the commercial broadcasters for their reticence and avoidance of controversy has been a staple educator's criticism at these meetings of the Ohio State U. Institute for Education by Radio-Television. Dr. Brothers (Ph.D. in experimental psychology from Columbia's Faculty of Pure Science, 1953) provides just another example of how the trite old dichotomy of education vs. entertainment no longer always holds. She has built in nine months to a solid 6 rating from the 1.5 she inherited from "Tex and Jinx." That is the highest afternoon rating on the NBC flagship, topped only by reruns of "Our Miss Brooks" on CBS. Her program draws from one to two thousand letters a week according to George Heinemann; he started the show before moving up to Manager of Public Affairs for the network. These letters, as frank and serious as the replies they elicit from Dr. Brothers, give the show the only continuity acceptance problem they've had so far. Occasionally a few letters have to be slightly edited to forestall anxieties in the 264,000 homes the show reaches. When the audience composition (nine women to every man) shifts somewhat to teenagers and children during school vacations, the program content respects lower thresholds of tolerance at the same time that it addresses itself more directly to the problems of adolescents. So far less than 10 letters have asked for more blue pencil.

Tackling 'Unmentionables'

Given the breakdown of audience mail, this whisper of embarrassment is a tribute to the intelligence and clarity with which Dr. Brothers handles a variety of delicate and up-to-now unmentionable topics: The favorite category of her correspondents (21%) is, not surprisingly, marriage—infidelity, divorce, separation, finances, sexual relations, boredom. Fully 10%, the next highest category, are concerned about in-laws; the popularity of the mother-in-law gag is no joke to her viewers. Another 7% ask for advice about young children—bedwetting, fights, eating and sleeping problems. Pre-adolescent tangles account for 8% of the mail; pre-marital questions, 10%; old age, 3%; individual problems such as overeating and shyness, 7%; alcoholism, 2%; medical, 2%; sex, 8%; comments on and praise of the show, 7%; the final 15% is grouped under miscellaneous. Dr. Brothers chooses her material on the basis of these letters which she feels are coming, not from homebound college women following up their introductory psych courses, but from ordinary people who simply have no other place to go for answers they want badly.

Dr. Brothers spends a staggering 15 to 17 hours researching each 25 minute show—and the conciseness and insight of her thumbnail analyses (three a program) show her homework. The text she read from at the Columbus telecast was a seventh draft—and it was almost as much pencil as type. She has a secretary who crossindexes standard reference works and current psychological abstracts to simplify the preparations that take up a lot of her weekends. Her M.D. husband is also on 24-hour call for her daily 25-minutes when problems arise in the medical area. Once or twice she has brought specialists on her show to handle esoteric matters, e.g., how husbands feel about pregnancy and the physiology and psychology of spontaneous and habitual abortions. Mostly, though, it is her show—and that of her bright and articulate producer-director, Pat Farrar, a brunette whose charms rival those of her talented blonde subject, a parlay of pulchritude unhappily lost to WRCA-TV's color cameras.

Those who prefer their blondes and brunettes beautiful but dumb must ask the inevitable question: But is it commercial? Very much

'LET'S EXAMINE THE FACTS'

By WALTER D. SCOTT

(Executive V.P., NBC Television)

Network television, hardly more than a decade old, has probably spawned and then exploded more myths and cliches than other, less volatile industries do in a lifetime.

You remember some of them: "Friday night means low sets-in-use," "it takes a program several months to build an audience" and "7:30 is too early for an entertainment program." Each of these pronouncements — stated with conviction by otherwise knowledgeable television men — flickered and died as soon as a good show came along.

Less easy to squelch are burgeoning cliches about our industry expounded by outside observers, which, by repetition, gain public acceptance.

Recent rumblings on Capitol Hill have helped revive the Tweedle-Dum and Tweedle-Dee of broadcasting chestnuts: "There's nothing on the air but horse operas" and "What? Another crime show?"

Let's look at the facts,

Never before has network television offered such a variety of programming. Never before have the preferences of our viewers borne such a direct ratio to our overall scheduling.

NBC's sense of responsibility as an influential mass communications medium is reflected in its "totality of programming service" concept — rewarding television for every program taste.

Let's examine our schedule for the 1959-60 season.

The NBC Television Network plans to have approximately 24 hours a week of sponsored evening time. There is virtually a direct proportion between the amount of time devoted to each program type —western drama, variety, situation comedy, general drama, quiz and audience participation and suspense drama — and the popularity of each type as measured by Nielsen.

The most popular program classification is western drama, in both hour and half-hour forms. NBC-TV will telecast approximately 4½ hours of western drama next Fall — three one-hour programs and three half-hour programs. Only 60 minutes of these entire 270 minutes will oppose similar programming on either of the networks.

For the viewer who does not like westerns, there will be an abundance of other fare.

The second most popular classification is variety. NBC-TV will program six hours of variety each week next season and, again, only 30 minutes of this time will be slotted against variety programs on other networks.

Thus, NBC will be devoting almost 50% of its commercial time to the two classifications most popular with the American audience.

Next in viewer preference is situation comedy. Here NBC-TV will carry three programs — 1½ hours. In only one instance (30 minutes) are two situation comedies opposite each other.

General drama is the fourth most popular area. NBC-TV will have at least 2½ hours in this classification, none of which will conflict with general drama programming on the other networks.

In the quiz and audience participation category, we have scheduled two hours per week — all unopposed by similar programs on ABC and CBS.

In the final Nielsen classification, suspense drama, our 3½ hours will have only one hour in common with similar programming on another network.

Stated simply in chart form, the 1959-60 season looks like this:

	NBC-TV*	Conflict†
Western Drama	4½	1
Variety	6	½
Situation Comedy	1½	½
General Drama	2½	0
Quiz and Audience Participation	2	0
Suspense Drama	3½	1
TOTAL	20	3

*Programming (in hours)

†With Same-Classification Programming on Other Networks (in hours)

That's mighty good ammunition against the uninformed position that "the viewer doesn't have a choice." Actually, there will be no time next fall when all three networks will be carrying programs of the same classification.

In other key areas of our programming structure, NBC-TV will continue to evoke its "totality of service" concept.

Dramatic, exciting scheduling has broken the traditional bounds of the "special," pioneered by NBC in 1954. Next season, three different far-reaching uses of the special on our network will bring viewers weekly entertainment on a scale unmatched in show business history.

For the first time, a single sponsor (Ford) will present a major

The Life & Times of a 'TV First'

By JOE COHEN

The late and very much lamented "Philco Playhouse," a 60-minute stanza of high-level dramatic shows, represents an era likely never to come again in television. It afforded a place where writers, directors and performers would make their errors without being condemned to perpetual banishment from the medium.

Unfortunately, the growing economic importance of the medium together with its increasingly high costs, have outdistanced its artistic importance. Sponsors cannot easily afford to make mistakes by taking chances on unknowns. Producers want to assure their own future by turning out as many successes as is possible, and the sales departments want to be assured that the heavy coin they are now spending results in sales. The continued accent on assurance has virtually ruled out the excitement of discovery and the creation of new things on the video spectrum.

Fred Coe, who headed the first and formative years of "Philco Playhouse" and who is currently working on CBS-TV's "Playhouse 90," still seeks to carry out some of the original precepts of the Philco stanza. However, in an era where you're just as good as your last show, it's not quite possible to do the things that were done when television was in its exuberant youth and vistas were limitless.

Philco is remembered for fostering one of the more exciting eras in the medium in which some of the top talents were developed. These have gone on to other fields. Included are writer Paddy Chayefsky whose "Marty," "Bachelor Party" and "Middle of the Night" were translated into stage and film works. Robert Alan Aurthur, who just completed the film "Warlock," and is doing the adaptation of the Han Suyin novel and will do a play next fall, also was a consistent contributor to Philco. Horton Foote, David Shaw, Tad Mosel, Sumner Locke Elliott, J. P. Miller, Gore Vidal and N. Richard Nash were developed through Philco.

Performers who showed their mettle as newcomers included Grace Kelly, Eva Marie Saint, Rod Steiger, Kim Stanley and Eileen Heckart. Directors were Delbert Mann, Vincent Donehue, Arthur Penn and Bob Mulligan. All these names are still potent contributors to video, although many are working in other and more lucrative fields.

A Nod to Mapes

However, Coe points out that all this would not have been possible had it not been for H. Pierson Mapes, of the Hutchins Agency, who was the go-between for Coe and the sponsors. Mapes smoothed the path of sponsor resistance and made possible a cultural climate that resulted in many innovations that otherwise could not have been done. Sponsors were mollified at incidents that would have normally been capital crimes in the selling of their products. It was Mapes, for example, who paved the way for reentry of several performers blacklisted by the Red Channels hysteria to reenter the medium. The Republic did survive the return of several actors into the field. Mapes is given credit by the producer as having made all the wonder and awe of the era of the Philco show possible.

Coe says that the passage of time has done wonders for the Philco show. "They've forgotten our bad ones, and remember only the good ones. However, we did take chances, and lots of them. We are lucky that we are best remembered for our payoffs.

There was one example of a complete unknown being cast in a lead. It would have been nice had Joan Potter, who did "The Rainmaker," risen to the heights that were expected of her. She never did.

Paddy Chayefsky came to Coe with an idea, but Coe felt that he should be tested on an adaptation. He chose "It Happened in a Brooklyn Subway," a brief bit in "The Reader's Digest" about a Brooklyn cantor. Between the adaptation and the presentation, someone had told Chayefsky that since Coe was a Southerner, it would be better if the religion of the central character was changed. Chayefsky took this advice and transposed the cantor to a Methodist minister. Coe then asked Chayefsky what he knew about Methodist ministers. "Nothing," Chayefsky admitted, and went back and redid the whole thing into "Holiday Song" which starred Joseph Buloff.

J. P. Miller was a salesman with a yen to write. His practical wife felt that he ought to know for sure. She took a job and had him take six months off in which time he would find out if there was any talent, or else he would be content to settle down into a field where he could make good. His first effort was presented to Coe, and he's been scripting ever since.

Coe took the stance that the writer was the main cog in the production. It was written into the contract of each scripter that the author would have to be present during rehearsals to attend to spur-of-the-moment changes, and revisions that were made necessary by seeing characters in different lights once they started to live their parts. This came about at a time when one show barred writers from the set. Once they bought a show, it was regarded as a finished product and left it up to the actors and directors to interpret.

Coe takes the view that it was vital and living theatre going through a period of trial and error. It was an era of vast experimentation in a new and important cultural arena. They dared and they did. They took on controversial subjects, adult themes, sought for originality and freshness. These were the qualities that contributed to its greatness.

However, this was not the original concept of "Philco Playhouse." Originally, the package was created by Music Corp. of America as a dramatic package that would seek to provide the great stories of the time. Coe, together with Bert Lytell, then president of Actors Equity who was to be host on the show and David "Sonny" Werblin of MCA, sold the package to Philco. During the first year, it was a great success. They did such things as "Street Scene" and "Rebecca" but there was a kinescope situation, and mainly these were stories already done in films. They found that they couldn't use the show in nine delayed showing situations because of the celluloid presentation. Consequently, they turned to public domain yarns and classics. That was pretty good too, but it was realized that this created an imbalance that would make for a small and loyal audience. Then they turned to books and Talent Associates were to screen Book of the Month selections and other tomes for presentation. Once the idea was turned to books, the show toppers departed on another track. They bought the rights to an obscure paperback on Van Gogh for $200. Of course, the resulting effort was their own because of research and rewriting. From there they went to originals, which seemed the predestined course for the hour.

An Aura of Fireworks

That represented the initial gamble, And from then on in, it was a constant series of gambles in virtually every field where human and even commercial relationships were concerned. The chances on writers, actors, directors, technicians, and social content followed. They lived on a continual cultural and intellectual aura of fireworks.

In all, Coe points out that it was also valuable as a place where talent could "be lousy in," quoting George Jessel's phrase on the subject of the greatest need in the field of talent today. It was a prime need then, and is a prime need today. Coe still thinks something should be done about that and feels that one day he may do it. He thinks the networks should contribute some small sum and a time slot even if it's 2:30 in the morning. Then they would test actors, actresses, directors, technicians, writers, ideas, anything and everything. If they discover 12 talents a year out of it all, the cost would justify itself. The fact that there is no tryout period on any of the great networks is just "dreadful" to Coe. He feels that the industry owes it to itself to replenish what it is using up in copious quantities. The unions should cooperate in such a venture. This would be the place where everybody concerned could "stink," but it would educate the worthwhile talent in every field.

Television today needs some of the executive courage that made "Philco Playhouse" a work of continual excitement. Coe, Mapes, Delbert Mann and others constituted one of the most fondly remembered teams of the era which started in 1948 and continued for seven years. Goodyear joined Philco for a period in co-sponsoring the dramatic show. But it was these pioneers who created a climate that put television ahead of many media during its infancy, and might have continued had not the commercial and economic aspects been placed ahead of cultural accomplishments.

NBC Nursing, Watching & Waiting; 'Rarely Do So Few Wait So Eagerly'

By DAVID LEVY

(V. P., Network Television Programming and Talent, NBC)

As a neophyte in the television network business, I have already discovered that network program people are so busy in the trenches, it is no easy task to seize a moment for a glimpse at the horizon. This, happily, is one of those moments for the writer.

It is understandable if, during these warm days, one sometimes feels a cold, little shudder rippling through one's veins. Now that the planting has been done for the most part, the time has arrived for tilling and nursing and watching and waiting for the answer: will the television programs weaned in the spring turn to weeds or blossoms in the fall? No one has that answer yet; it will be decided in South Bethlehem, Dallas, Bangor, Bayonne, Ogden, and points south, north, west and east—not including Hollywood, Broadway or Madison Ave. These good people of Bethlehem and Bayonne may not know a thing about trends, denouements, residuals and Nielsens, but as their thumb and index finger maneuver their channel selectors, so goes television, its stars, its writers, its producers and its networks. Rarely do so few wait so eagerly on the actions of so many.

During these moments of waiting, it might be pleasant to reflect on the wisdom of one wise man's thoughts. He said, "The thing that hath been, it is that which shall be";—certainly a comforting sign for the song stylists and the comedians, perhaps not immediately, but who can speak with absolute certainty about January?—"And that which is done, is that which shall be done";—as inspirational a thought as anyone could find as he offers another western and another Private Eye. —"and there is no new thing under the sun." That last could be depressing if it were not that much of what is old and familiar is also beguiling. If trees, sunsets, and women are old subjects, they still manage to rouse human interest, praise and passion. If a woman is nothing more than "a rag and a bone and a hank of hair," it is still enough to make the male population gape if the rag and the bone and the hank of hair are distributed in the proportions of a Bardot or Monroe, or in television's glamorous Luciana Paluzzi who will give the movie queens on two continents their first real competition when NBC presents its new series "Five Fingers."

There's Fun in Repeats, Too

Familiarity does not always mean that all the fun has gone. There are some things worth repeating again and again; and it is, perhaps well to remember that one man's cliche is another man's bon mot, and that usually they are separated by cultural levels or different generations.

At times, judging from the strident comment of the narcissistic element of the business, quality is more difficult to find on television than virtue in a Third Ave. bistro. This tiresome, one-note, repetitious chant about mediocrity often comes from the forever open mouths of those who have generously contributed to the very mediocrity itself. Mediocrity, it may be worth noting, is a disease common to newspapers, magazines, to the theatre, motion picture business, book publishers and every other part of the gigantic business of communication. As a new plateau of quality is reached a new level of mediocrity is also established; it goes without saying that sometimes a new plateau is not reached. There are swings and tides in the arts and in the gifts of the artists that bring moments of despair as well as moments of sublimity.

Perhaps it is also worth noting that the networks have no monopoly on mediocrity—any more than they have a monopoly on talent. A network is a composite body—a gigantic partnership involving not only the network's own creative resources, but the resources of the industry—from creative people producing through film companies, package producers, talent and program agents, and from advertising agents and their clients, some of whom have started to engage creative people to supervise their own tv efforts.

Though the writer has been a network man for only a few weeks, he has come to some tentative conclusions. A network should not play it safe every hour on the hour. It must, in the interest of survival, seek new talent and challenge old talent to better things. By talent, I mean the people before the cameras and behind the cameras.

A television network should satisfy the tastes of all, although it cannot do this at any one moment all the time. Still, the banal repetition of one type of programming to the exclusion of all others is to impair the full opportunity offered by the medium. Fortunately, even if one network should fall into such a short-sighted narrow trap, the others can, by offering counter programming, satisfy broader tastes.

NBC, like its sister networks, started this season's plans for Fall, 1959 with a dream schedule; but no one can ever have all his dreams fulfilled. In the world of reality there are numerous considerations which influence the structure of a schedule; to name a few—the activities of the other networks, the proprietary interest of customers using the network facilities, the offerings of producers and the availabilities of stars. If programming opposite NBC's "Wagon Train" gives the opposition a nightmare, we share this feeling while contemplating "Gunsmoke" and "Maverick."

There is no rule as to how NBC will meet this kind of formidable challenge. In the case of "Gunsmoke" and "Have Gun, Will Travel," we will keep throwing the heaviest counter-punches we can bring to bear. Only if a "Gunsmoke" sags can the industry begin to suspect that the western trend has reached its summit, for in this writer's judgment the western-action trend will continue in stampede proportions until the leaders falter.

In the case of "Maverick," NBC is offering an elaborate rebuttal in the form of "Riverboat," probably television's most ambitious new series, two years in the making, and to be studded with guest stars of feature film quality. But to follow "Riverboat," NBC has decided to program the hour with television of another kind of distinctiveness. The easy way would have been to offer another adventure or another western. We feel that we have an obligation to the viewing public to bring it a totality of service; therefore, we propose to follow "Riverboat"—a film series of dimension with "Sunday Showcase" —a live series of theatrical offerings (in color) utilizing the most gifted directors, writers and stars dedicated to live television in a series of dramas, specials and news specials produced under the supervision of NBC.

Counter-Punches

In projecting this series we have invited the writers to think boldly in adult terms so that television will offer a provocative series of dramas together with a star-studded list of specials. Circulation is important to us, but totality of service has to be implemented and NBC's management has not hesitated to make totality of service a reality. This totality will be in evidence throughout the year by the continued scheduling of luminous special projects and news-in-depth projects not only on Sunday afternoons, but also, as NBC has pioneered this season, in prime time at night and during weekday afternoons.

The specials area is getting greater visibility at NBC this year than in any year in history. We have set aside one hour every week (Fridays at 8:30) so that Friday will be special night on NBC. With the projected Ford series on Tuesdays—the most ambitious schedule of specials ever presented under a single sponsorship, with variety specials dominating Fridays and the combined drama-variety offerings on Sunday—together with a sold out lineup of specials throughout the entire week utilizing every withholding period available, NBC will present the most exciting lineup of special programs in tv history—and many of them will be conceived by and produced by NBC program personnel.

For, at NBC, we recognize that before a camera turns, before an actor speaks, someone, somewhere has had to lift a pencil or press a typewriter key to set forth the words. That is why the writer will find a special welcome mat out for him at NBC; we respect his place and his contribution. To that end we have just concluded formal arrangements to bring Dick Berg into our program development activities. His two pilot scripts, "Five Fingers" and "Johnny Staccato," are his best references, and both programs will be on NBC this Fall. He, like many other talented men, has found the transition from live to film an easy one, and he will be involved in both areas this coming season. We have noted other talented men who have made this transition, and who work with ease in either area—producers like Martin Manulis, directors like Bob Stevens, writers like Rod Serling. Their offerings have a quality mark that makes it unnecessary for them to decry the shortcomings of live or film. They have expressed their talents in both forms.

We may not reach all of our objectives in 1959, but "a man's reach should exceed his grasp" according to the poet Browning. Our objectives are simply expressed: to offer the best in television, no matter what its form—no matter what its source—be it from an independent producer, a major film company, an ad agency, or advertiser, and to generate creative activity within NBC itself that will spark new programs. We do not intend to revolutionize the business, but rather to participate in its evolution. Our eyes are on 1959, but our sights are moving toward the fall of 1960 and it is not too early. If the 1960 season is to be good, the generative activity must get under way this summer, even as we prepare to launch 1959.

One last word: if you are a creative man, NBC says, "Welcome whoever you are, wherever you are."

Yessir, It's Going To Be Quite A Fall

By THOMAS W. MOORE

(ABC-TV v.p. in charge of programs)

If you can sum up this fall's network television programming situation in two words, those words must be "intensely competitive." A cliche? Possibly. But with three network competition dramatically fulfilled this past year, weak spots are being eliminated all around for next season. No one is merely selling time. Everyone is trying to increase program strength.

The result, I think, will be a change in the philosophy of what it takes to be a success on network television.

The rating standard of success will be lowered. Now a show is in fine shape with a 35% share of audience, but a failure at 30%. Next season that 30% share is going to look a lot better. As programming becomes more equal in quality and appeal, the ratings have to level out.

The greatest programming change, of course, will be the great influx of hour-long shows being introduced on all three networks. Their success or failure will set the pattern for future television programming.

At ABC, almost one-half of our Class A time will consist of hour-long shows. We'll have three hour shows on Monday nights and two hour-long shows on every other night except Wednesday and Thursday; 12 in all. The other networks will be almost as heavy.

There's a good reason for this marked programming change. The hour-long show has been recognized as an ideal time segment for television entertainment. And it has more than twice the chance for success as any competing two half-hour shows of the same quality.

Breaking The 30-Minute Barrier

Previously there was a reluctance on the part of advertisers to support hour-long shows because of the lack of sponsor identification in proportion to the money they must spend. But this barrier had to break down. Too many half-hour shows flopped last year while such hour properties as "Maverick," "77 Sunset Strip," "Rawhide" and "Wagon Train" did extremely well.

With the increase of the hour shows, another programming theory will get a do-or-die workout in the fall. That's giving the hour-long show a half-hour lead on the competition. We did it successfully with "Maverick." Now NBC will try it against us.

My personal belief is that the show is "still the thing." The better show will maintain its rating despite the competition's half-hour advantage.

There will be little, if any, increase in westerns. But action-adventure dramas will dominate programming even more than this past year. You'll see many more private-eyes becoming heroes just before the closing commercial. And the action-adventure theme will be presented in various new forms. "Showboat" and "Five Fingers" (NBC), the CBS outer space show, and ABC's "The Untouchables" and "Man From Black Hawk."

Situation comedies may produce more tragedy than laughter. The new ones will be fighting for survival.

Advertisers are getting accustomed to instant rating success with action-adventure programming. But situation comedies build audiences slowly. Things were touch and go with our Donna Reed program when it first began but now it is a firm viewing habit of 10 million Americans. We expect it to be around for years.

An advertiser whose message is a natural for situation comedies must learn to ride out the ratings.

It's going to be quite a fall. Never before has the public had such a wide selection of programs from which to choose. I think it will be the most interesting season the industry has yet seen. And the results should be just as interesting.

Whitney-Stone's New AM Dickers

Complexion of Greater N. Y., N. J. and Conn. radio markets will change substantially when N. Y. Herald Trib Radio Network, owned and operated by John Hay Whitney, U.S. Ambassador to Great Britain, and Martin Stone, radio-tv producer and barrister, reportedly complete negotiations for three more radio stations in these areas.

Whitney-Stone combo reportedly are seeking to increase their Eastern AM holdings to seven stations. Presently they have four in operation: WVIP, Mt. Kisco; WVOX, New Rochelle, WFYI, Mineola and WGHQ, Kingston.

If deals are consummated, Whitney would make plans to dispose of his stations in the Corinthian network.

CBS Pro Grid Reprise

CBS Radio, for the second straight year, will air all home and away games by the N.Y. Football Giants, the defending Eastern Conference pro champs. It'll be a regional hookup, limited to N. Y. state and New England.

WHO NEEDS SPONSORS!

By STIRLING SILLIPHANT

Precisely at 10:30 that morning Crowell, Weber & Von Glick came back from a screening of the three-stripe of their newest television project.

They said nothing to each other because the three—Crowell, the producer, Weber, the writer, Von Glick, the director—seldom had to speak to each other, communicating instead with lifted eyebrows or a series of phrases as clipped as Von Glick's hair.

Now, having just seen the perfect one-hour suspense melodrama, realizing they had once again created a format of genuis, there was no need even to raise an eyebrow or clip a phrase.

They passed through the reception area outside their offices without looking to left or right, thus avoiding a dozen men in dark suits who loitered there to see them.

Once at his desk, Crowell flipped a switch intercom.

"Whenever," he said crisply.

Von Glick and Weber went to the window to watch the studio secretaries come back from their coffee break.

The secretary ushered in four men, all dressed sincerely.

"Gentlemen," Crowell said, a lack of conviction in his tone, but motioning to the chairs, nonetheless.

"Mr. Crowell," the Agency man said. "Allow me to present Jonathan Harrison, Jeremiah Harrison and Jedimiah Harrison. Our clients."

Crowell eyed them coldly.

"They make the Olympia," the Agency man said hastily. "Finest medium-priced car in America."

"I once rode in an Olympia," Crowell replied testily.

"Look, Mr. Crowell," the Agency man said. "No point fumbling in the dark with you, now is there? I mean, these gentlemen make a fine product, one that would certainly blend with your new show. If you'd like to ask them a few questions. I'm sure . . ."

"Why do you have three stripes of chrome on the back of the Olympia?" Weber asked, without turning away from the window.

The Harrisons reacted with confusion. "Well, we—we think it . . ."

"It's cliche," Weber said. "I've seen it before."

Von Glick advanced toward them, the secretaries on the lawn below having now gone back to work.

"Why don't you get a new format for your cars? Something that will get the people."

"Something with a hook!" Crowell interposed.

"We've been so rushed," Jeremiah Harrison said morosely. "There's never enough time to get these cars ready. I mean, if we could just skip a season or . . . or . . ."

"What JH means," The Agency man laughed, "is that the boys are working on a great new angle, something that really has sock."

"What were your sales figures last month in the Trendex cities?" Crowell asked.

The Harrisons exchanged dark glances. But the Agency man plunged in valiantly. "They were up against some though competition. Have you caught the new Monitor cars. Same price slot . . . But we're building. Just give us time and we'll be in the Top Ten."

Crowell examined his nails. "Sorry," he said.

Another Phalanx

The Harrisons and the Agency man left despondently and three new gentlemen walked in. They waited discreetly until the Harrisons had closed the door.

Then one of them, a youngish fellow with long hair, crept slyly toward Crowell and held out a Thing.

"Well?" Crowell said, annoyed.

"It's a Can-Do," the man said enthusiastically.

"What does it do?"

"Anything. It shops for you, minds the baby, puts the cat out, locks the door, gets the paper. You name it—it Can Do!"

"Take a letter," Crowell said to it.

And it did. Then it handed Crowell the pen to sign the letter.

"It misspelled Toscanini," Crowell said.

"Can it write a script?" Weber asked.

It did. Weber glanced through it. "Not bad," he said. "Needs a little tightening. But not bad."

The new Agency man stepped forward.

"We want to sponsor your new series, Mr. Crowell. We know the Can-Do can do. It belongs with your kind of show."

"Mmm," Crowell said. He motioned to his partners. They huddled. An occasional eyebrow could be seen lifting. Here and there a phrase was clipped and fell on the floor. Finally Crowell looked up.

"Gentlemen — I'm sorry. You have a good thing there, something to be proud of. We were tempted to let you buy our show. But I'm —well, I'm afraid the Can Do just isn't commercial."

The three men fainted. The Can Do carried them out.

The last four men to enter the office seemed visibly shaken by the condition of those who had gone before them. They sat dispiritedly in front of the three creative television geniuses, and Crowell eyed them with a suddenly friendly look.

"You men own all the aluminum or the steel or something or other, don't you?" he asked.

"We own all the ground," one of them admitted modestly.

"Reliable," Crowell agreed. "We're inclined to be charitable toward a product of that type. Nothing offensive about ground, you know. The commercials shouldn't harm the show too much. . . . Now, may we see them?"

One of the men rigged up a projector. He ran four commercials in a row.

"Hmm," Crowell said, looking at Weber.

"Not bad," Weber said. "Need a little tightening. But not bad."

"All right," Crowell said. "We're interested."

The sponsors seemed overcome with surprise and joy.

"You are!" one of them shouted boyishly.

"Moderately," Crowell replied.

Another one of the sponsors raised his hand, with growing bravery.

"May we ask you, Mr. Crowell, a little about your new show? I mean . . ."

"Out!" Crowell screamed. "Out! Out! Out!"

His voice, carrying like a thunderbolt, ruined a take on Stage 5.

The trembling sponsors left.

"Well," Crowell said, seeing Weber and Von Glick had returned to the window to watch the secretaries go to lunch, "I suppose we'll just have to put up with meeting some more of them tomorrow."

He rubbed his head wearily.

"Mediocrity, mediocrity, mediocrity," he mumbled.

special every week in the same time period.

For the first time, a series of top-budget, top-quality specials — encompassing musicals, news-in-depth and informational programs, live dramas, one-man shows and salutes to personalities — will be anchored in a fixed slot each week and sold to major advertisers on an individual basis.

For the first time, a television network will utilize every available top writer, producer, director and star to present a live original drama, in color, in the same time period on a regular basis.

Each one of these special series —which open new horizons in programming quality and service—will be in addition to some two-score or more specials which will replace regularly-scheduled shows during the 1959-60 season.

Added to this, NBC News—winner of virtually every major award for performance this year—is preparing seven full-hour news and information special programs for presentation in prize evening time.

The NBC Opera Co. will present four colorcast productions during the coming year, bringing to 54 the number of operas it will have produced over a 10-year period.

Thus, by carefully planning its schedule to present programs to satisfy every preference—including the strongest sports schedule of any network, the finest news and public affairs operation, and the most sweeping array of specials in the annals of the industry —does NBC meet its responsibility to the public.

WOI-Moscow Swap

Ames, July 28.

Radio station WOI of Iowa State U., Ames, will exchange tape recorded programs with Radio Moscow, according to announcement of production manager Michael E. Collins Jr.

The Russian programming will largely concern agricultural and family life on Ukranian collective farms.

France Wakes To TV's Potential In Show Biz

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Paris.

A recent public poll, undertaken by the Institute Dourdin found that of the French filmgoers approached 9% owned video sets; of these 54% said they went to films less because of this and 68% said they saw feature films regularly on tv. With over 1,000,000 sets in operation, and about 75,000 undeclared, and a second channel in the offing early next year, tv now looks a definite important show biz factor that will have to be coped with by pix and other show biz facets.

After West Germany, Italy and, of course, Great Britain, comes France. France, along with Luxembourg, Monte Carlo and French speaking Belgium, has 819-line screens while the European standard is 625, with only 405 for English receivers. Thus France has the best reception but still has a long way to go in programming. France has 50 hours a week of transmissions which now services about 70% of the population. While the second channel is being prepared, an attempt is also being made to cover all of France by '60.

Main programs are two film features per week, two live dramatic shows, three big sporting events, two quiz shows, two big variety shows and then some children's entries, a few Yank vid series and the rest educational, informative, news and cultural offerings. The average set owner would like to get more varied and entertaining fare but the coming second channel does not promise any since it is to be dedicated to beamings of state theatre offerings on which Andre Malraux, Minister of Culture, has imposed mainly a serious dramatic mien.

Still Cling to Com'l Hope

Some sources hope that the cost of the second channel may lead to advertising inserts which, in turn, might lead to a need for lighter, more entertaining fare which could give space to more Yank vid series, now almost nil, and bigger and more ambitious general programming.

The periphery stations of Tele-Luxembourg and Tele-Monte-Carlo service about 100,000 border French sets between them and are still not of great import in the overall picture. Main aspect of the rise of tv here is the fears film producers who feel that they have enough troubles sans the competitive menace of tv. They are now trying to get film syndicates together to forbid sales of pix to tv with insistence on having film people make special pix only for tv and save their others for big theatre screens.

However, Jean D'Arcy who is program head of the state org which controls tv here, Radiodiffusion-Television Francaise, feels that tv is a natural phenomenon that will take its place alongside other show biz forms and they can all work together for each other's benefit. D'Arcy admits that films were an integral part of tv programming at its beginnings but now the main aspects are programs conceived directly for and by tv.

D'Arcy says that the RTF itself will progressively limit the use of commercial films as part of its programming. He affirms that tv is not "a home film" setup but a form of expression in its own right with the immediacy and its conquest of time and space its main factors. He feels that films and tv can give each other something. He agrees that film people can make films directly for tv and theatres can utilize big screen tv for special events or hookups.

D'Arcy points out that the RTF transfused 2,400 hours in '58 of which 1,900 were created by itself. French films and shorts produce about 300 hours per year and D'Arcy feels it is natural to utilize these films since many fit in with tv needs. But, as proved in other countries, a modus vivendi between tv and films is possible and D'Arcy quotes Sam Goldwyn who said that though he had an excellent cook it did not mean he never went out to eat in restaurants.

Renoir's Feature

And tv is a great program eater, needing more than it can produce. That is why tv has undertaken the production of a feature pic, by Jean Renoir "Le Testament Du Dr. Cordelier" which will also be shown commercially after its one-shot tv showing to recoup its cost. D'Arcy does not think this is competition to films, for France does not make enough pix for its own marts, but an affirmation of the cooperative activities that could exist between films and tv.

Various film syndicates have been set up to study the effects of a burgeoning tv on films. Some reports have it that tv aids pix by weekly programs showing excerpts of new pix, and others claim that French films are already sorely beset by tax problems, unresolved Film Aid Laws, rising costs and falling filmgoing to make rising tv a great danger.

TV is 35 years old in France, actually, but really got its start, as in other countries, after the last war. It has progressed slower than other big nations due to a general wariness among audiences, high priced sets, and the still gregarious, going-out tastes, entertainmentwise, of the average Frenchman. But it no longer can be ignored and color, three dimension, toll tv and big screen tv are being studied and experimented with even now with the paradox of not having the entire nation covered by beamings yet and a second channel still in the offing.

Chroma-Key: TV's Free Trip Around the World

By DR. ALFRED N. GOLDSMITH

Television drawing-room comedies and not-so-numerous quiz shows are easy to stage-set. Provide simple and almost unchanged surroundings and you're in business.

But there are many "sets" far too large, complicated, costly, or inaccessible to be used in live television. Try to place your action in front of a tremendous glacier, or within a vast cathedral. Plan to have airplanes, railway trains or crowded street traffic swiftly moving behind live television action. And you're sunk—without a financial trace.

In the early days of television (about 1930), we were well aware of this awkward problem. The movies had "solved" it by sending camera crews and actors to the far ends of the earth. But not without seriously denting the bank account. But television was and is not financially so well heeled as to go around the world in 80 days—or for that matter, in 80 minutes, if need be.

So we decided to meet the problem head on and solve it electronically. In plain language, we aimed to build a stock-shot library of everyhing, from mountains to molehills, that might be used for a set or background to live action. Given enough color slides and color films of actual scenes, buildings, or other structures in our "background library," we would use these as sets and have our actors perform on an almost empty or blank-back stage.

But this was much easier said than done. If you merely aim one television camera at the performing actors and another camera at the fixed or moving "electronic background," and then conventionally mix the two camera outputs or pictures, you're in bad trouble. The actors have become ghosts with the backgrounds showing through them. While we want actors to show their motives, we certainly don't want them to show their backgrounds between their shoulder blades. Nor do we want them to have semi-transparent holes in their heads.

—And Without Mirrors

What to do? The answer was simple in theory. But it wasn't so simple in practice. The trick was to switch out the "electronic background"—slide or film picture—wherever there was any foreground live action. Then, when the outputs of the live-action foreground camera and the background camera were mixed or added, the background was electronically erased wherever there was any foreground object. And we secured an astonishingly vivid and realistic composite picture.

Skilled professional motion-picture studio personnel have done something like this for many years using traveling mattes of the foreground to blank out the background in composite shots. But we had to do this same difficult job electronically for television.

It would be far too technical to describe more than what had to be done rather than how it was done. Live foreground had to be matched in registry with the background at each inset edge to better than one-millionth of a second! Foreground and background lighting had to match reasonably. And background perspective had to melt imperceptibly into the foreground. It turned out that all this was possible to the skilled television professionals.

When color television came, we expected even more difficulties. But as it turned out, color television offered many new and expanded possibilities. These have been ingeniously worked out by Ralph Kennedy, New York, and F. J Gaskins, Hollywood, both of the NBC engineering staff. Their work, has been described to the National Association of Broadcasters, The Institute of Radio Engineers, and the Society of Motion Picture & Television Engineers. The engineering methods of the Chroma-Key process as developed by them are too specialized for summarizing here. Suffice it to say that extraordinarily beautiful, impressive, or unusual program results are now regularly obtained by it on NBC color television. Miniature live dancers may pirouette atop a giant piano which is not really there. Impressively vast or artistically striking backgrounds can be conjured out of a color transparency, a miniature set, or a stock-shot color film to give utmost realism to the foreground action.

A new dimension has literally been added to television by Chroma-Key. Programming freedom and dramatic scope have been greatly expanded. More and advanced possibilities are already being successfully tested. And side by side with all this, operating economy and simplicity have been achieved. Television now has electronic wings enabling it literally to scan the world.

Germany Jockeys For 2d Channel

By MARGARET ANDERSON

Bonn.

The West German Post is competing with the radio councils in the various German states for the right to operate a second television web.

At present, West Germany is served by a single tv web, operated by the radio council.

When German radio was reorganized by Allied occupation authorities after the war, it was decentralized on a state (Land) basis. Each Land organized a radio council, composed of representatives of labor, churches, industry and the state government. These councils are highly autonomous. The consensus is that they have functioned well from the standpoint of insuring independence of German radio from state influence or control.

German tv began operation in 1952. Each state developed its own web and a national web was then formed through pooling of programs and facilities of the individual state webs.

German televiewing has increased rapidly, and there is now urgent need for a second web to permit the diversity of programming.

The Bonn government proposes that the Federal Post, not the State radio councils, should erect and operate the second tv web.

The Federal Post, with the government's okay, has appropriated $9,000,000 to get construction started on a web which would serve 65% of the 51,000,000 West Germans.

The radio councils moved rapidly to block the Post project. They have published plans for their own second web, which they claim could be put into operation at a cost of $5,500,000 and would reach 80% of West Germany's population.

The councils claim they can take on a second tv circuit without appreciable expansion of personnel. They can do the job with less equipment by utilizing some existing facilities.

The councils plan on taking the dispute to the West German Constitutional Court, and if they lose there, in forcing passage of legislation in Bonn compelling the Federal Post to get out of tv.

The Federal Post's excursion into tv is the latest in a continuing effort by the Adenauer administration to dilute the power of the local radio councils.

First, the government, 18 months back, drafted a "radio law," which would have given the Federal Government a strong voice in the drafting of local radio policy.

And late last year Interior Minister Gerhard Schroeder presented a bill to the Bundestag (lower house) establishing a government-operated nationwide radio network which would compete with the state webs.

Critics connect the government's ardor for radio and tv with its propaganda activity.

However, with respect to tv, there is unanimity on this point: German tv is dull, possibly the world's dullest, and something must be done to pep it up.

War & Peace Over A Russian Telecourse

By LIZ CARPENTER

Washington.

One Washington couple is getting a divorce over it.

Two others are having breakfast together for the first time in years because of it.

And 3,400 more are better equipped with it.

"It" is the 15-week beginner's Russian telecourse of George Washington U. which, because of public demand, is being repeated through the summer over WTOP-TV's "Classroom 9."

The far-reaching effect on domestic tranquility of the Russian telecourse is not due to the subject itself. But rather to the ghastly hour, 6:30 to 7 a.m. each Monday, Wednesday, and Friday.

Listening to her spouse spout Soviet sounds with Professor Vladimir Tolstoy while she tried to sleep was too much for one tv "widow" who has filed suit for divorce.

But while Professor Tolstoy created "war" in one household, he introduced "peace" in two others where the husbands, who arise to take the course, have induced their wives to get up and cook breakfast for them before they go to the office, something they'd not done before.

The Professor will be attending the American National Exhibition in Moscow as a guide this summer, but the class is being taught by Miss Natasha Clarkson, who was born in Belgrade of Russian parents and, for the past five years, has been translator for the Russian branch of the Voice of America in Washington. The new series is sprinkled with special lectures, titled "Russia: Past and Present." Next fall, a more advanced Russian telecourse will be taught.

Composition Of Audience

Who takes Russian on television, anyway?

A questionnaire just circulated to the "Classroom 9" pupils has brought interesting returns.

Most of the students are over 40. They are: (1) Bored housewives who want the mental gymnastics ("I have five children. No sitters' fees or transportation costs are involved, so this is a simple way to learn something new," wrote one). (2.) Engineers, many of them stating that they need it to read Russian scientific papers. (3.) Government employees who feel a knowledge of the language will mean professional advancement.

Overwhelmingly, they requested more languages on tv, not literature of philosophy courses.

"We were amazed by the results of the questionnaire," Lillian Brown, director of radio and tv for George Washington said. "They prove that people are terribly, terribly interested in communicating with one another. And not young people, but middle-age and elderly people showed this great lust for language."

Mrs. Brown, an enthusastic attractive blonde, is one reason for the success of George Washington's deep invasion into commercial tv in the Washington area.

With six years experience in commercial tv, her know-how on adapting the university's reservoir of experts to tv puts the university on the air on 20 different shows each month. Two of her programs were nominated for Emmies: the Russian telecourse, which won the "Classroom 9" award as the best educational tv show in the area, and "The Other Two Billion," a foreign affairs show over WRC.

"The Russian telecourse has a 2.0 rating," she pointed out. "That's 30.000 people at 6:30 a.m. This is enough to sell cereal. If language shows are sharp, there's no reason they can't rate a sponsor."

Wide Open Sunday Skeds for Brit. TV?

London, July 28.

A change in the patterns of Sunday tv schedules may come this winter as a result of the concession, just made by Britain's Postmaster-General, lifting the restrictions on the kind of material that can be screened before 2 p.m. Any type of program can now be transmitted on Sundays, whereas hitherto the networks have been compelled to confine themselves to outside broadcasts, religious and Welsh programs.

Big snag to the wholesale introduction of "women's magazine" shows and the like on Sunday morning—plans have been on the drawing-board for some time—is that the concession doesn't involve any overall extension to the present maximum 50 hours' airing time a week, plus 350 hours of outside events annually. So any non-o.b., non-religious or non-Welsh language program aired Sunday a.m. would have to be compensated for by a cut in airing-hours at some other time. All the same, BBC in particular may be prepared, come winter, to do just this.

Main reaction of the commercial webs is an interested query: does the concession indicate that now's the time to press again for an extension of broadcasting hours? They'd like another 20 or so per week.

Detroit Tigers Execs Sell B'cast Interests; Each to Get $1,000,000

Washington, July 28.

Harvey R. Hansen and William H. McCoy, prexy and secretary respectively of the Detroit Tigers, are selling their interests in Knorr Broadcasting Corp. for over $1,000,000 each, according to application filed wth Federal Communicatons Commission.

Transaction, subject to FCC approval, will put Frederick A. Knorr, president and founder of the Michgan broadcasting chain, in positive control. Knorr owns and operates WKMH, Dearborn; WKMF, Flint; and WSAM, Saginaw. New stockholders under the reorganization will include the Jackson Broadcasting and Televison Corp. and Southern Michigan Broadcasting Corp.

The End of the Beginning

By MATTHEW J. CULLIGAN

(Executive v.p., NBC Radio)

It is a rare thing in a business of such dynamism and change as network radio to be able to point back—with a certain degree of pardonable pride—to successful adherence to a plan which was devised almost three years previously. At this particular point in time the NBC Radio Network can make such a claim since, as of May 18 this year, we put the final touches on the programming and marketing of our "product" in precisely the fashion we set as our objective back in August, 1956.

At that time the NBC Radio program schedule and sales plan could not be described in less than several pages of type. Except for "Monitor," our programming was a patchquilt of individual programs of various types which precluded a clear image of our service in the minds of the public.

As the first step, a team was established by Bob Sarnoff to reshape and streamline the programming, sales and promotion plans of the Radio Network. The faith of NBC in the potential of network radio as a profitable and sound business was evidenced in a material way by the investment the company made in the project.

We then set a clearly defined objective—to reshape our programming so that the entire NBC Radio image could be defined in one relatively short sentence.

The touchstone of our marketing plan was USEFULNESS. We were determined to make the NBC Radio Network the single most useful national advertising medium.

Our press, publicity and sales promotion objective was to restore to network radio some of the excitement and "sex appeal" so sadly lacking since the advent of television.

When we started this revitalization the NBC Radio Network was the third position among the four networks in most important respects: ratings, sponsored hours, billings, station clearance and prestige.

Now, at the completion of this three-year plan the NBC Radio Network is the undoubted leader in the radio network field, as far as volume of programming, billings, sponsored hours and prestige

From this point forward we will be able to build a new image of our program service through promotion of a single, relatively short sentence: The NBC Radio Network is "NEWS-on-The-Hour," "Stardust" at the half hour, "star drama" in the morning, variety in the afternoon, "Monitor" and special programs.

The Key Is 'Usefulness'

We are now truly one of the most useful national advertising media because of our extension of communication service to our clients in all important phases of marketing communications. Our National-Local Plan successfully bridges the gap between national advertising and retail identification. Our closed circuit facilities have been used for training, stimulation, recruiting of new personnel, stockholder meetings and routine communication between national management, regional management, distributors and dealer organizations and retailers.

We restored network radio to the conversational living room with such concepts as "Imagery Transfer," "Memory Vision" and "Engineered Circulation."

So much for the pleasant side of the picture. The inevitable question of any impartial observer—after this recital of progress has been: "Are you still losing money?"

Alas, we are still losing money. All networks are losing money. However, at the recent meeting of RCA stockholders Bob Sarnoff described our losses in this way. "Losses on our radio network have been reduced to manageable proportions. And the trend of reduced losses year by year since 1956 are most encouraging."

We actually did anticipate a break-even in 1959 on the basis of the extraordinary gains scored in 1957 and 1958. However, the setbacks suffered by all the other networks, so thoroughly chronicled by the press, had a depressing effect on the entire industry and NBC suffered proportionately as the overall volume of business spent in network declined despite our maintaining well over 40% of all business placed.

The final dream now realized for our radio network was the development of an availability which would literally be the finest radio package ever offered. We believe we now have this combination. We will go to market soon with a package involving over 400 commercials in four weeks, with a total unduplicated audience of over 13 million homes and three million automobiles. The sponsor will receive a total of almost 350 million commercial impressions and over 600 million listener impressions in four weeks.

Our master plan was based on the philosophy that a networking operation, in order to succeed, must meet the requirements and satisfy the desires of three major groups. First and foremost, it must present programming tailored to the tastes of its listeners. It must also give maximum service and value to the advertisers who support it. And, finally, it must provide its affiliates with the star attractions and global news coverage that an individual station cannot obtain for itself.

Live From H'wood —But on Sad Side

By JACK HELLMAN

Hollywood.

The live show output from Hollywood the coming season won't give the forces of "flesh" much to cheer about. Numerically the hour-volume will be about the same as last autumn when the barrier is sprung. But even the live show is not pure in its concept, most of the so-called au naturels being impressed on a coil called video tape.

How well Hollywood does on its share of the specials may brighten the local scene. From the looks of things at this early date, however, it's more dour than delightful. At CBS they're expecting most of the specs to come from the other seaboard with the possible exception of a brace of Jack Benny hours. With ABC it's more hopeful, with four Sinatras and three Crosbys. The picture at NBC is still blurred but favoring the sunrise side of the nation.

On the breakdown, CBS-TV will have three live shows in the night hours (Playhouse 90, Red Skelton and the Benny-Gobel alternation) and three daylight entries ("House Party," "On the Go" and "For Better or Worse"). All the matinee stanzas will come out of the John Guedel-Art Linkletter shop. NBC lists six livers (Chevy Show, Steve Allen, Ford Hour, Ernie Ford, "This Is Your Life" and "It Could Be You"). Daytimes there'll be three ("Truth or Consequences," "Queen for a Day" and "It Could Be You"). Last season NBC had eight live ones and CBS had the same three at night and daytimes.

Despite that ABC-TV is constructing new studios at Television Center, at the other end of town, the fall slate is light indeed. From Hollywood wil come on Lawrence Welk hour (last year there were two), "Day in Court" and Bishop Pike. Last season there were four with two specials. It will bulk larger on specials, thanks to the return of Frank Sinatra and the three from Bing Crosby including the Pebble Beach golf tourney.

It's all a rather sorry showing against the film shows that will glut the networks. NBC has 22 locked in; 15 hours from CBS, and 28 filmers on ABC-TV, with nine repeats in the daylight hours. With only 71 of the 200-odd markets equipped for video tape, it offers a ray of hope for live shows but the thinking in Hollywood rides with film for a multiplicity of reasons, sponsor-inspired.

So when the announcer blabs, "this comes to you live from Hollywood," he is only telling a half-truth. Most of the shows will be taped in advance, or, at least, parts of them, more subtly known as "pre-recorded." Canned, live or tape, it makes small difference to the home viewer. Just give it to us good and we don't care how, seems to be the sentiment at setside.

More MBS Affils

Mutual, in the throes of reorganization under the Federal Bankruptcy Act, continues to attract new affiliates.

KOBY, San Francisco, is replacing RKO Teleradio's KFRC there. Others coming under the MBS fold include KITO, San Bernardino; WJMK, Syracuse, N. Y.; WOHO, Toledo; WTTM, Trenton; and the recent reaffiliation of WOR, N. Y.

Vox-Popping The Industry On NAB's New Convention 'Format'

The "format" for the last National Assn. of Broadcasters convention in Chicago in mid-March was with the clear approval of the majority of radio-tv executives in attendance. Of the 202 polled in a special survey made by ARB for Variety, to measure the powwow's effectiveness, 87% preferred the newly instituted shorter version of the convention agenda and they gave a definite vote of confidence for the continuation of the plan in future years.

In general, the respondents to the survey were happier by far with the lack of the oldtime hijinx at NAB conventions. (Hijinx had long been blamed on tv film distributors and producers, who in 1959 were deprived of official status at the conclave and were limited to relatively demure hospitality suites, stretched loosely over all floors and throughout the various Chi convention hostelries.)

Yet, there was still a substantial body of the 202 officials who answered all of Variety's questions, and who clearly felt they didn't have enough time to collect all the tv film information they would have liked. In the main, this seemed to be due to the way the film outfits were dispersed and to the lack for the first time of film exhibits. Overall, 21% found the time for gathering telefilm information "insufficient," while 35% had "enough time," ARB states.

The 202 respondents represented approximately one-sixth of all those at the conclave.

The 1959 NAB conclave proved to be most effective for personal contact with station executives and station representatives, since 64% of those tabulated found it easy to make contacts with station men as opposed to 19% who found themselves short on time in this area. As for dealings with the repperies, 70% liked the way things turned out, 19% didn't

On General Manager Level

In this survey, 15% of the individual respondents were owners of either tv, FM or AM stations. Forty-five percent of all surveyed fell into the General Manager category (including 6% who were also station owners). Engineers represented 24%, and sales managers and programming personnel each totalled 4% of all surveyed.

Several other basic questions were asked during the ARB-Variety poll: To the query, "How did you find this year's NAB convention?" 43% found the '59 turn better than previous ones attended, 34% felt it equalled earlier conclaves and 13% thought the last gathering poorer than earlier instances. In about 10% of the cases, the '59 NAB meetings were the first attended by the individual.

Dissemination of information is an important function of the NAB meets. Asked about the number of seminars, etc., they joined, 13% said they all or most of them pertaining to radio while 11% attended all or nearly all of the tv sessions. Nine percent joined all or most all of the engineering talks.

Rest attended special seminars as follows: 7% attended six sessions, 9% made five, 16% got to four, with 11% sitting in on three and 3% managing to attend two sessions. There was only 2% of those surveyed, adding up to four people out of 202, who attended absolutely none of the special seminars.

Addenda

Appended to the questionnaires was room for freewheeling comment by radio-tv executives and here is a sampling:

"This was a more business-like convention than I've ever attended; some hell raising is okay, but there has been too much of this on previous occasions.

"I prefer panel sessions made up of broadcast leaders, not long speeches by NAB. This year was excellent as it gave an outlet to leaders and questions & answers from member stations with NAB acting only as a moderator."

"More time should be reserved on panel discussion for questions . . . from the floor."

"Some time should be devoted to roundtable sessions for radio stations, putting stations in roundtable groups according to comparable market size—too many people in sessions this time."

"Would prefer to have annual banquet moved up a day, leaving the final night for special-interest group dinners."

"I did not like the overcrowded meeting rooms . . . I feel that the film distributors should be allowed to exhibit, or at least put them all in one place so they'll be handier to get to."

"Elimination of exhibitors (film) forced travel from hotel to hotel

"Labor session was excellent, but there was not enough time to visit all the exhibits."

"Not enough engineering sessions on AM-FM."

"In my opinion, the panel re: tv channel allocations was unprdouctive . . . thought radio sessions more helpful on an overall basis than tv."

"Would like more sessions like radio session."

"How about holding meetings in some other city?—South preferred."

"Too many generalities; never got to plain abc's."

"Utterly surprised to have one panel-member (of programming 'brain-wash' session) call DJs 'cancerous'."

The Five Attributes Needed In a TV Com'l to Incite Viewers Into Buying Action

London.

More than 900 British tv advertising men and women heard from Horace Schwerin, president of the U.S.-based Schwerin Research Corp., that "British television commercials are just as effective as American—but that isn't very effective."

The researcher's charge was contained in a seven-hour presentation made by Schwerin and his staff, at Royal Festival Hall in London. The all-day conference, on "Increasing the selling power of tv commercials," was sponsored by Associated Television Limited (ATV), major program contractor in Great Britain.

Schwerin's comparative figures for the effectiveness of British-vs.-American tv commercials were 58% to 59% (1958 study). These and other figures cited in the London conference were drawn from testing more than 10,000 commercials on audiences totalling a million and a half in the United States, Canada and England.

Measure of effectiveness, according to a simplified analysis of Schwerin methods, means whether a commercial caused people to shift their allegiance from one competitive brand to another, after seeing that commercial.

Actually, a good many Schwerin-tested commercials have had a negative effect; i.e., did more harm to the advertiser than if he had neglected to advertise at all.

One example was a Brand A, which sought to discredit its competitor by reminding viewers of its claims, and protesting that they were false. Not only did this blurb fail to impress viewers favorably toward Brand A, but it even succeeded in disenchanting 10% of the audience who originally preferred Brand A.

Another commercial, for a shaver, involved a nagging wife. Evidently she was so real (and so heartily disliked) that 12% of the men who had preferred that shaver before seeing the commercial, changed their minds.

Schwerin's massive presentation opened with a lengthy demonstration of how his "commercial effectiveness" method works.

There are only two reliable methods of determining the relative effectiveness of commercials, he claimed. One is the Sales Area Test, wherein all variables affecting a product's sales are controlled—except the television commercial. This would mean that distribution, promotion, other advertising, point-of-sale material, area merchandising effort and all other factors contributing to a sale were kept constant. The very small number of exhaustive Sales Area Tests in existence is evidence of the expense and difficulty of this method.

Schwerin's test, on the other hand, involves isolating the commercials from these variables—and when Sales Area Tests are carefully conducted, they yield the same conclusions as do Schwerin's Competitive Preference tests.

Further evidence of the accuracy and reliability of Competitive Preference tests was submitted in the case of two hair preparations. When their commercials were isolated and tested on Schwerin audiences, one rated approximately six times higher in effectiveness than a rival. That one was utilized nationally by the manufacturer; at the end of the sales year, his hair preparation was outselling his competitor's by approximately five to one.

"Competitive Preference is a sensitive measure," said Schwerin, "because it is a true 'action' measure." He explained the phrase, "action measure," by comparing it with the action that necessarily takes place when a consumer selects one brand of merchandise from a shelf, in place of another. Schwerin test audiences make the same choice: they indicate their competitive brand preferences before seeing a commercial, then again afterwards.

Non-action measures, the researcher stated, are not of equal value, because they cannot tell us if a given commercial is effective. He cited the two most prominent non-action measures, recall and buying-intention questions, and demonstrated how they did not correlate with effectiveness. In fact, several competitive brands tested by Schwerin showed high remembrance but low effectiveness. A study made by BBDO on the results of following up on people who said they would buy a certain brand, indicated that from 30 to 60% of them actually purchased a different brand, when the time came to make an actual "action" purchase.

RALPH CAMARGO

Following the section of his presentation dealing with the reliability of Commercial Effectiveness tests, Schwerin got into the findings of his firm in their three-nation testing over the past decade.

Inciting Viewer To Action

"An effective commercial," he stated, "contains a vital promise, convincingly communicated. What is a 'vital promise?' It is a product claim, either explicit or implicit, which appeals to the viewer's latent desire and incites him to action."

Out of the thousands of commercials that Schwerin has tested, the most effective have commonly possessed five attributes, said Schwerin. (These attributes apply primarily to non-integrated, "independent" commercials—ones which exist apart from the program content.)

1. An effective commercial must present one unified impression.

Mex TV Within 2 Years: 3d Place Among Industries

By EMIL ZUBRYN

Mexico City.

In nine years of television the Mexican industry has risen to seventh position in national importance. And within the next two years expansion plans now under way will push it up to third or fourth place.

Within 10 years a television network is expected to cover the entire republic by a chain of strategically located retransmittors. Instead of the approximately 550,000 receivers today (approximately 400,000 in this city and 150,000 scattered in zones adjacent to this city as well as in border points), executives talk confidently of four to 5,000,000 receivers in service, with price of these within reach of all levels of the Mexican public.

Television audience today is estimated at far over 2,000,000 persons, and growing by leaps and bounds as new transmittors prepare to go into action. While no accurate statistics exist, about half this audience is centered in this city and such nearby points as Cuernavaca, Ciudad Satelite, Puebla, Taxco and other central plateau points. These receive signals from the three commercial channels operating in this city (2, 4 and 5) with aid of retransmittors.

Channels 7 and 9 are also open for commercial exploitation, with channels 11 and 13 dedicated to educational-cultural programming. Former is operating on limited schedule, still in test stages and latter most probably will be assigned to the National U. of Mexico.

This about completes the television transmission facilities here. Some time ago there were rumors (either premature or unfounded) that NBC was considering installation of various transmittors within the republic. Suddenly the project went hush-hush and now neither NBC representatives nor the Department of Communications care to make any comments about possible foreign participation in the Mexican television expansion program. At any rate, only five high frequency bands are still available in this capital, although in other cities the field is relatively clear for station expansion. Television industry leaders such as Miguel Pereyra, employed by Telesistema Mexicano, pointed out that cost of installation in high frequencies would be far too costly and unprofitable.

Azcarraga's Plans

In the forward march of progress Mexico is stepping up more transmittors and retransmittors. Emilio Azcarraga, radio and television pioneer, is readying plans to bring television to Acapulco, Durango, Hermosillo, Torreon, Saltillo, San Luis Potosi, Oaxaca, Aguascalientes, Leon, Guanajuato and other cities. Major part of this program to be completed this year and balance of 1960.

Public interest in television is high. More than 15,000 spectators a month visit various studios at Televicentro (Mexico's version of Radio City on a very limited scale). While most of the studios seat no more than from several score to several hundred, Studio A, with a capacity of 1,500 spectators, is considered as one of the most ample and best equipped in the world.

The three major channels here program on an average of 70% live and 30% filmed programs. With introduction of video tape (technicians are sold 100% on this system as a means to simplify work and improve programming), this ratio is tending to nosedive. Possibly it may go down to a 50-50 ratio. Already the actor's union is watching with wary eye the inroads of film and taped programs although studios insist there is nothing to fear because there will be more than enough work for talent, musicians, etc.

In programming, Luis de Llano, Telesistema functionary, admitted that quality has been poor, with rare exceptions, both in live and filmed shows. His idea is that Mexico is not geared to turning out artistically and commercially acceptable live programs, and it is his private opinion that there will be more and more of a switch to tape, with corresponding improvement.

Filmed programs today include old films (five or more years is the regulations, but this is not respected at times) drawn from the national industry, Hollywood and foreign areas, and a number of Mexican series. These latter are in swaddling clothes, feeling their way, and having to contend with an influx of Spanish dubbed American programs ranging from "Boston Blackie" and "Have Gun, Will Travel" to "Father Knows Best"

Chicago.

If telefilms have had the effect of decimating live programming in Chicago, the other side of the coin is that the shows remaining on the air—or new to it—are now vastly improved over what local shows used to be. With the exception of one, the Windy City stations have all at once become prouder and more ambitious about their homegrown opuses, pouring greater budgets into them and in general searching for new ways to upgrade the quality. There is also great interest now in program development for the fall season.

The sole exception to the local accent-on-live trend is the NBC station, WNBQ, which, apart from a daylong schedule of newscasts and a handful pubaffairs shows on weekends, programs live only one hour per weekday — and that a rather perfunctory teenage record hop. But even this tv shop is attemping to hatch new program ideas and has a few projects in mind.

If only half the new formats for the fall are realized, the local situation will be more exciting than it has been since the days of "Chicago Style" television, when imaginative programs developed locally were transferred to the nets with some regularity. Certainly a number of the shows being carried over from the past season will keep it a "live" season in both senses of the term.

WBBM-TV this past spring installed a provocative and superbly produced entry in Irv Kupcinet's "At Random" and is getting paid back handsomely for the risk it took with an open-ender starting at midnight Saturdays.

WBKB has allocated a talent budget to Marty Faye's signoff stanza, lifting it from the level of tempest-in-teapot controversy to a nightly entertainment; and WGN-TV's patience with Herb Lyon's "Midnight Ticker," and its expansion of the variety show to 90 minutes, has proved profitable. Latter show cases virtually every nitery or club date act playing in town, largely through Lyon's personal clout as gossiper for the Tribune, and the talent lineups each week are staggering. In terms of names, Lyon's roster of guests frequently outclasses that of Ed Sullivan on his Sunday CBS vehicle.

WGN-TV's award winners and specially cited shows will get the pedestal treatment next fall, "Garfield Goose" being expanded to a full hour and "Fran Allison Show" and "Blue Fairy" returning intact.

For the upcoming season, every one of the four commercial stations has a series of specials on its drawing boards, WGN-TV has contracted the Chicago Symphony Orchestra for a regular monthly series of telecasts to be known as "Great Music From Chicago." Slotted in prime evening time on Sundays, the idioms will include jazz, folk and opera as well as longhair orchestral. Deems Taylor is set as commentator, and the lineup of conductors includes Fritz Reiner, Sir John Barbirolli, Igor Markevitch, Sir Thomas Beecham and Andre Kostelanetz.

WBBM-TV will have going six hourlong specs on the Windy City, a sort of "Wide Wide Chicago," to be shown on a skip-month basis. If the plans reach fruition they

FCC GREENLIGHTS CROSBY-BROWN BUY

Washington, July 28.

Federal Communications Commission has okayed sale of KPTV, Channel 12 in Portland, Ore., to NAFI Corp. for $1,026,940 plus liquidation of $2,734,924 in obligations.

Bing Crosby, NAFI stockholder, will be board chairman of the new station management, and Kenyon Brown, part-owner of Detroit Tigers, will be president. They already have interests in KCOP-TV, Los Angeles and KFOX, Long Beach. Commissioner Robert Bartley dissented from the approval action.

POLITICIANS OF LITTLE FAITH

By ELMER E. SMEAD

(Professor of Government, Dartmouth College; Author of "Freedom of Speech by Radio and Television")

In recent months, the statutory requirement that broadcasters must give political candidates (whether of the major parties or of the "lunatic" fringe) equal opportunities to go on the air, has been receiving much critical publicity. A recent decision that a station must give free time to a "splinter" candidate (who had not even the remotest chance of being elected) because his opponent in a major party had appeared on a news program, has been described by President Eisenhower as "ridiculous."

The criticisms are undoubtedly justified. According to the industry's leading spokesmen, the stations and networks would broadcast more discussions of election issues by major candidates on news interview and forum-type programs, if there were no necessity to give equal time to a multiplicity of other candidates (sometimes numbering as many as eight in a Presidential campaign).

It should be emphasized, however, that the criticisms are valid only as applied to the Communications Act. The FCC should not be blamed for carrying out the law which its members have sworn to enforce; sometimes, the Commissioners must make decisions which they themselves dislike and believe undersirable. In fact, some Commissioners have, on occasion, expressed a desire to be relieved of the difficult problems which enforeement often presents. At one time, they even went so far as to urge Congress to take the job of enforcement away from the Commission and give it to the United States District Courts. More recently, some of the Commissioners have been giving support to proposals for Congressional modification of the requirement of absolute equality.

The remedy, therefore, lies in the enactment of new legislation amending the Communications Act and not in pressure on the FCC to induce it to violate its duty. Unfortunately, this remedy is more easily proposed than affected.

The major blockage is political distrust; although the broadcasters promise that they will be fair to the candidates, many politicians are skeptical. In the beginning, the equality law was born out of distrust. Most important was the split in the Republican party at the time of the enactment of the first radio law in 1927; there were conservative and liberal wings. The former wanted private development of the Muscle Shoals hydroelectric dam and the latter wanted the government to take over the business. Since then, splits and schisms in the parties have been frequent in local as well as national campaigns. Therefore, politicians have always been, and still are, afraid that their opponents, even those in the same party, may be given an advantage in the use of a powerful medium of influence on public opinion.

Even those politicians who are willing to accept the broadcasters' assurances of fairness may refuse to go the whole way. Congressional committee hearings are replete with assertions that a few mavericks in the industry make governmental regulation necessary.

It might be that the broadcasters are overcoming some of this distrust; certainly, there is evidence to this effect. More important, they already have the President on their side and all they need now is a majority of the Congressmen.

TV's Bra & Girdle Peekaboo

Troubles Come Double As Prudery and Bluenosery Create Guilt Complexes on Video Commercials

By JO RANSON

The erogenous zones of the female figure—the nates, the nombril and the pectoral prominences—may be like Geritol to the male but they most emphatically spell pan mail from the impure-in-spirit viewers of video commercials.

Bra and girdle manufacturers in their heroic efforts to get adequate display space for ther feminine products on the video lanes have met, and will no doubt continue to meet, with more relentless resistence than saloon keepers did at the hatchet-wielding hands of Carry Nation and what Broadway and its reportedly racy environs once received from that determined roundsman of the Lord, the mutton-chop whiskered Anthony Comstock.

Not that the video is averse to trafficking with the bra and girdle makers! Perish the thought! Sales staffers of the networks would like to make a legitimate buck from the highly regarded ad agencies handling this type of account but it is the public—"the peepul," particularly women—who raise their highly moral voices in condemnation of such commercials. It is the strident cry of this level of society that tends to scare off sales veeps of the webs from inking this line of business.

Of course, there's some bra and girdle biz on the airlines today, but it is mostly local outlets stuff and that which manages to get on the air is hemmed in by so many restrictions, riders, clauses and ukases to make the pitch almost as bland as Junket.

Those concerned with continuity acceptance at the webs have observed that most of the earthquake rumblings regarding the advertising of unmentionables, namely bras and girdles, stem from the distaff side where guilt complexes for divers neurotic reasons loom almost as large as the bosoms of some pinup lassies.

That the "b&g" commercial is dynamite was brought home like a punch in the nose with an avalanche of phone calls and a barrage of letters following the Exquisite Form Bra commercials several semesters ago on the "Holiday in Las Vegas" broadcast over NBC-TV.

Stockton Helffrich, who heads up the web's continuity acceptance dept. and is as urbane and enlightened a gent as one can stumble on in the broadcasting biz, was indeed surprised at the manner in which his roof fell in. "These filmed extolments of a standard undergarment parallel not only handling of advertising in all other media but also fairly accurately reflect our country's evaluation of what Harriet Van Horne elegantly labels "milady's poitrine!" Helffrich observed. "What is more, these specific spots carry on an advertising approach and production handling initiated some time ago and featured for more than a year on ABC's 'Stop the Music' and on numerous local schedules, to the best of my knowledge coast to coast."

Helffrich, after examining the pile of complaining communiques, was moved to exclaim: "Parallels and precedents notwithstanding, polite phrasing and poetic persuasion aside, they bothered certain viewers. Women more than men, in the mail personally have seen . . . Maybe pre-empting the Perry Como Show introduces a new element; maybe Jayne Mansfield as one of the guest entries, despite careful avoidance of contiguity to the commercials themselves and program material in any way stacked as she is, added insult to alleged injury. Lots of things individually acceptable in themselves serve as catalysts one to the other when combined. Maybe here the combination of ingredients plus cumulative feelings brought to the program by certain viewers created a situation! I truly do not know, nor do some very mature colleagues working with me. I do not know that I personally as a reasonably adult male, husband and parent am concerned over such critical reaction as we have received which articulates itself around words like 'indecency' and 'embarrassing' in the family viewing circle . . . You cannot be in Continuity Acceptance work as long as we have and still be thrown easily by reactions you did not anticipate. You just try to learn from them. And sometimes you get your dander up and suggest maybe those squawking have something to learn too. Especially when between the lines there are 'truly dreadful and depressing' revelations."

No doubt, some of the continuity acceptance chieftains' misgivings about certain viewers, were expressed with additional punch when the late Don Hartman, producer of "Desire Under the Elms," was quizzed by Mike Wallace. Hartman observed that "the Puritan influence has invaded all our lives, our art forms." Continuing, he said: "In the American home they don't mention sex, it's in guarded tones, so the kids get the impression it's something very dirty. They all end up frightened about a very important part of life—and musicals imported from south of the border.

Llano views with mixed feelings recent announcement of Screen Gems that they may start production in Spanish idiom for the Latin American market, with stories specially selected for a south-of-the-border audience. The executive, as well as top producers and federal officials, would prefer national production of shorts to feed the local and Central and South American market. Aside from financial problems, there are artistic and technical complications even though now more and more technicians are receiving basic training in television operation in U.S. schools, and making personal visits to American studio facilities for observation and study.

There is no intent to drive out the growing flood of foreign programs, Llano said, but there should be a healthy increase in Mexican filmed and taped programs. Mexicans are rooters for the growing list of American produced series, seem to favor them to the few initial Mexican made efforts so far released. But the strongest point that might serve as a brake to any untoward switch over to film and tape is the fact that the Mexican viewer is notorious for preferring live programs well filled out with favorite entertainers and the inevitable chorus and show girls, models, etc.

From time to time there is a rallying call for Mexican writers to instill new programming vitality. But generally most turn their shoulders to this medium which is far from a lucrative one. Going rate far too often is 500 to 1000 pesos for either an original work or an adaptation ($40 to $80). Sometimes, in the case of a name writer, the fee may be doubled, or even tripled. Even so, it is peanuts compared to fees writers can get from motion pictures or the legitimate theatre. In latter case, especially, a playwright does not get rich from Mexican royalties, but generally collects monies for presentations throughout Latin America and in Spain as in the case of Rodolfo Usigli, considered the dean of Latin American writers of comedy.

Furthermore, producers seeking to televise completed plays of non-cooperative playwrights, have found that their themes and language are far too strong for a family television audience. They present life in the raw, without pulling any punches. Or if they are not objectionable on this score, they present political messages or ideologies with a bold impudence that is not for television. The Mexican Department of Communications expressly forbids the telecasting of political propaganda, however disguised as "drama."

Mexican television, averaging programming time of ten hours a day, is now moving into the morning field, with channels readying 10 o'clock telecasts, raising programming time to 14 or 15 hours. Later there may be earlybird programs beginning at 8 ayem.

"Quietly spectacular"

A special note of excitement can be detected in the burst of critical applause that greeted the première of The Andy Williams Show on the CBS Television Network.

The critics were clearly excited not only by the program itself but by the element of programming innovation it represented. As one of them put it: "It is fresh. It swings. It experiments."

This commitment to innovation is perhaps the single most conspicuous characteristic of the Network's programming department which is constantly on the prowl for new talent, new concepts, and new techniques. It is with this end in view that it has gathered together a creative programming staff unmatched in broadcasting and has given this staff complete freedom in developing new, different and exciting formats.

It is essentially this creative process that enables the Network to produce not only "the best of this year's summer entries," but also to provide viewers with the most rewarding programs, and advertisers with the largest audiences, year round.

"Manie's Friends," as well as the "America Pauses" series for Coca Cola, "Death Valley Days" for United States Borax and "Sky King" for National Biscuit were produced by McCann-Erickson, the only agency in the producing business.

Spending a hundred million dollars a year in electronic media is a heavy responsibility. Nobody is more aware of that than the McCann-Erickson program people.

How do you invest so much money wisely and well? How can you make sure that every dollar will do its duty?

It takes more than modern equipment and mass techniques. It takes people who are specialists in programming to housewives, to children, to thought leaders—to all the diverse groups which make up the American market.

At McCann-Erickson we have such people—64 of them. They know time, talent, scripts, music, direction, production. They demonstrate that once the objective is clearly seen, each program can be custom-built to do its specific job effectively.

Their versatility—their strength in depth—extends across the entire range of today's TV-radio operations. They can advise when, where and how to use these media in any and all forms.

In the process, they are conscious of their obligations to the sponsors, to the media and to the public.

★ Our social obligation, to build programs that will be welcomed in the living rooms of the nation—shows which will enhance rather than lessen the stature of the media.

★ Our economic obligation, to create shows that move goods and project ideas—that pay off in value received—that create capital values for stockholders.

And finally, our programming staff is mindful of its debt of gratitude to all the producers, the talent and the directors, without whose aid and cooperation this big year, and this great record, would not have been possible.

CALVERT MAKES GIN HISTORY–NEW CALVERT GIN IS 100% DRY!

But No Gin Can Be Dryer!

90 PROOF CALVERT REAL BUY

$1.69 Less Than Comparable Imported Gins

NEW YORK, N. Y.–Calvert London Dry Gin sells at the surprisingly low price of $0.00 a fifth–far below the price levels of imported gins. These gins, up to now, have generally set the standard for dryness. However, since Calvert Gin has reached absolute 100% dryness, this feeling has changed.

Calvert's low retail price is in accordance with a company decision to depend upon volume, rather than high markup, for a reasonable profit picture.

Fresh Lime Peel Is "Secret" Ingredient In Calvert Gin

One reason for crisp, dry taste

RELAY, MARYLAND—Fresh-cut peel from carefully selected Persian and Mexican limes is one of the exclusive ingredients in Calvert London Dry Gin. The lime peel, which is only one of the "botanicals" used in the unique Calvert flavor recipe, gives the gin a sparkling, crisp taste.

Rushed to Distillery

When the limes are unloaded from the steamships, they are rushed to the Calvert Distillery. Here, they are kept under rigidly controlled temperature and humidity conditions to safeguard their freshness.

When the time comes for the lime peels to be added to a new "run" of Calvert Gin, skilled girls carefully peel the limes by hand. The skins then are added to the other Calvert "botanicals" while they are still fresh and moist.

All "Botanicals" Imported

In addition to fresh lime peel, other herbs, seeds and roots are imported for use in making Calvert Gin.

Some of these which lend their flavor or aroma to Calvert are juniper berries from the Italian Tyrol, cassia bark from Indochina, coriander seed from the Rhine Valley.

Quality Assured

To assure uniform botanical flavors, Calvert often buys a huge supply at a time, frequently a whole crop. The botanicals are shipped as quickly as possible to the distillery, where they are stored in air-conditioned rooms, under carefully controlled temperature and humidity.

SIR GIBSON DRYSDALE, Calvert Gin trademark, jumps for joy over 100% dryness.

Exclusive Dry Zone Process Removes All Traces of "Sweetness" and of "Perfume"

Calvert Gin Refined 7 Separate Times To Reach Absolute Dryness

RELAY, MD.—The maximum in gin dryness has been reached here by Calvert Distillers, it was revealed today. It was explained that no method previously known would produce a gin dry enough to be given the designation, "100% dry."

"We had to invent our own way to make gin," Fred Klayer, Calvert's Master Distiller, said. "It's called 'Dry Zone Distillation.' It makes a gin with the dryest, crispest taste in the world."

A New High in Dryness

"We distill Calvert London Dry Gin in a new way we developed," Mr. Klayer went on. "In fact, our gin is refined no fewer than 7 separate times. That's why it reaches a new high in dryness. There just isn't any way you can introduce short cuts if you want to reach absolute 100% dryness."

Calvert starts with basic spirits, as other makers do. These spirits are made entirely from selected grains. During every one of the seven refining steps, the sweet "head" flavors rise to the top of the distillation columns and are discarded. At the same time, heavy, perfume-y "tails" sink to the bottom and are thrown out.

Expensive Process

"This is a very costly process, of course," Mr. Klayer said, "but unless you get rid of every trace of these undesirable 'heads' and 'tails,' you wind up with a martini that tastes as if you have used too much vermouth. You won't ever say that about a martini made with Calvert Gin."

Calvert Flavor Recipe

When the spirits have been refined, they are ready to be married to the imported "botanicals" that make up the exclusive Calvert Gin flavor recipe. This is done over very low heat, in order to keep the delicate flavors intact.

Filtered 12 Times

After the botanicals and the spirits have been perfectly married, the gin is ready for filtering. A total of twelve filters are used to safeguard the crystal clearness of Calvert Gin—never any less. After filtering, the gin is sent to the bottling line and labeled "Calvert London Dry Gin."

Serving all Chicagoland!

WGN-Radio's 'copter service gets flood of favorable comments!

WGN-Radio scored a Chicago "first" several months ago with evening rush hour traffic and news bulletins beamed from a helicopter by Chicago police officer Leonard Baldy. Recently when this service was expanded to the morning hours, the flood of approving comments by phone, wire and letter proved that the program had built a sizeable audience of loyal WGN-Radio listeners.

"Thank you for your kindly tip on traffic the other night. I saved a half an hour on the outer drive thanks to your advice." Mr. D. J. Freeze, 7621 Wilsham Ave., Chicago 31, Ill.

"... and Officer L. Baldy, is cutting down on accidents —believe me! And it's the best guide for all on the road. Thanks for the swell service."
Harry J. Axal, 6243 S. Ashland Ave., Chicago, Ill.

"... I'd like to express my appreciation for afternoon and early evening broadcasts covering the traffic movements in and around the Chicago area from a helicopter. Keep up with the good work."
Mr. Floyd N. Gatrell, 406 Morgan Blvd., Valparaiso, Ind.

... tell Officer Baldy I am most grateful for the fine service rendered by the Chicago Police Department."
Genevieve Austin, C. S., 16918 S. Wood St., Hazel Crest, Ill.

"... the traffic reports are terrific and more cities should adopt this same technique."
Mrs. W. F. Gruning, Jr., 3718 N. 92nd St., Milwaukee, Wis.

In providing this valuable service to the people of Chicagoland, WGN-Radio and the Chicago Police Department have the full cooperation of the Traffic Communications Center of Chicago's Department of Streets and Sanitation; the Citizens Traffic Safety Board; the National Safety Council and The Chicago Motor Club.

This type of programming is just one reason why WGN-Radio delivers loyal audiences for advertisers who want to sell all Chicagoland.

KDAY JUMPS INTO COAST PROGRAM LEAD

The west's newest 50,000 watter KDAY, Los Angeles served notice on Southern California competition this month when it increased power and plugged program holes with top talent. Irving C. Phillips, KDAY General Manager, announced a new program line-up which included heavy emphasis on Sports. Roy Campanella, Dodger great, Sid Gillman, LA Ram Pro Football Coach, Bill Brundige, Sportscaster, and broadcasts of New York Yankee baseball games headline the 50 kw sports roster. Broadcasts of Yank games in Southern California came as a sharp surprise to radio in the West and was considered a major coup by the industry.

AUDIENCE UPSWING

Recent Pulse ratings revealed amazing audience increases to the KDAY ballcasts. Veteran deejay Jim Hawthorne heads the lineup of capable mike men fronting KDAY's music and news format. Joe Graydon, Dan Gates, Mark Ford and Jack Ostrode program the station with an upbeat brightness that has won fast acceptance and leadership for the new coast powerhouse.

"LISTENS TO PEOPLE"

Station music policy quotes a new twist of the station that "listens to people." Listeners phone "voice their choice" for music popularity. Telephone Company reports that more than 20,000 calls are directed to KDAY weekly. Calls are tabulated and station music is programmed on preference of listeners. Additional tabulations are made of listener mail which the 50,000 watter pulls from Arizona, Nevada, San Diego and throughout Southern California in continuing contests among listeners.

Impressive is the word for this lively new powerhouse in Southern California radio. KDAY has to be lively to keep abreast in the booming LA market, one of the nation's best radio markets.

Tonight marks the end of our second year on the air; tomorrow, maybe, the start of our third.

In the year ahead, we hope to bring America more of the type of programming which has led to such kind words as these, last week, from Jack O'Brian:

"When Robert Kennedy, chief counsel of the Senate Rackets Committee, was introduced by Jack Paar last midnight, the length and intensity of the ovation from the studio audience moved Paar to comment in pure amazement: 'This is the biggest, longest hand this show ever gave anyone since it started.'

When the brilliant lad left the program some 40 minutes later, Paar summed up: 'This quiet young fellow has been the most exciting guest we've had on this show in all of its two years.'

Paar was right from any vantage you select....

This show is best when it presents intelligent, articulate people and faces of such people in the throes of simple sincerity. It is better and more powerful than all the jokes ever written for all the Grouchos and Hopes since real or canned laughter on radio-TV began..."

The past two years have been a wonderfully happy time for all of us on the show, and we certainly want to thank the many, many people who've helped to make it possible.

so, it is a pleasure to report to those who like the idea of high I.Q. females in broadcasting: Dupont fabrics, P&G soaps and cleaners (Who ever had a Ph. D. on "Portia Faces Life"?), Tip Top bread, Seabrook Farms' new packaged boil-and-serve foods, and Gimbels have been happily lining up for the 24 one-minute spots a week available in Dr. Brothers' head-shrinking but horizon-stretching telecouch.

There are certain residuals unique to a program of this character. Female psychiatrists have written asking for kinescopes to be used in their group therapy sessions. High school teachers have had their classes switched so they could watch during noon hour and talk with their classes about the show afterward. As for Dr. Brothers herself, there is no fear that the hectic life of a tv performer (an hour day for camera rehearsals plus research and airtime) will prevent her from keeping up with the latest developments in her field. She finds the show forces her to stay abreast of professional literature, it's the only way she can come up with answers for her audience.

This personality format for serious programming is a special interest of Ed Stanley, Director of Public Affairs for NBC. His staff is trying to jell a format for tv that combines tricky and foreboding information, e.g., cancer control, with popular entertainers (Steve Allen, Wally Cox, and Walt Kelly) attracting and sustaining attention for scholarly authorities and artists who freeze on the unfamiliar medium. Shari Lewis played this thawing role on the recent "Adventuring in the Hand Arts" series produced by George Norford for the Girl Scouts of America and the National Educational Television Center.

A final irony: the quiz mania, recently and happily subsided, has made some of the erudite personalities visible enough to be thawers themselves, viz., Dr. Joyce Brothers of "The $64,000 Question" and Charles Van Doren of "21" who has hit a remarkably unstodgy stride in his eye-opening cultural segments in Dave Garroway's "Today" show. It's apparently time to check one's stereotypes about the compatibility of entertainment and education at the decor of a new video era, one in which intelligent show biz celebrities run interference for the academic ball carriers now learning to run the broken field of mass programming with a dazzle and dash hardly thought possible just a few seasons back.

TV's Bra & Girdle Peekaboo

frightened of the very way we all got here."

Though bras and girdles are today in an acceptable classification, these products are still subject to extremely careful handling and scheduling. The undergarment commercials, in many instances, are as unnatural as Hottentot in a hoopskirt. Models are fashioned of plaster or similar composition and are as stationary as a statue. For a man to attempt to sell a bra or girdle via the airlanes would be as unusual as, say, the Long Island Rail Road's trains running on schedule.

The first attempt to get the bra on the video channels was back in 1950 when the female chest piece was displayed behind multiple layers of veil or on the silhouette of a figure. It proved a complete bust.

A top exec of Exquisite Form was quoted as saying of this unhappy experiment: "It was impossible to properly demonstrate the brassiere. We couldn't show the brassiere on a moving model because of blanket network taboos. Of course, we didn't get any letters of protest at that time. Probably the audience wasn't too sure what we were trying to sell. Certainly they had a hard time seeing it."

Like all makers of products who dare invade new fields, the slings were many. Everytime the bra makers invaded a new avenue of communication they got brickbats. When, for example, Exquisite Form appeared in car cards depicting a girl in a loosely-fitting sweater, there were hundreds of complaints, even though one couldn't see the bra. Cries of "indecent" rang out, mostly from women.

For a period the maker of the Sarong girdle overcame the network taboo of showing the product on a live model by having the girl put on the girdle covered with phosphorescent paint, over black tights. When filmed under black light, the effect was that of a girdle in action but without seeing the model. Thus the girdle maker's advertising litany that this was a girdle that walks and won't ride up was demonstrated most effectively. Similar techniques were used by other girdle makers. In general, the policy today is to judge each bra and girdle situation as it presents itself but on the whole the censors have been extremely careful, leaning over almost horizontal in an effort to play it safe in all matters having to do with the personal, the unmentionable and the intimate. Majority of bra & girdle commercials today are on film using an invisible mannequin for demonstration purposes with, of course, a fully clothed sales girl. Daytime shows dealing with feminine problems usually fall heir to this type of commercial. Some get an airing on late hour shows when kiddies are figured to be in bed and consequently far removed from any supposedly corrupting influences. Under no circumstances do stations place such copy on or near kid shows.

Radio also approaches the undergarment commercial rather gingerly. Artistic Foundations Inc., makers of the Flexees Girdles, used AM advertising for the first time in 1946 when it signed a contract for sponsorship of a WQXR-built series tagged "Designs in Harmony." It was a thrice-weekly 9:45 to 10 p.m. program and was on the air for two years but there was apparently considerable criticism from listeners. Joseph Berle, custom-made brassieres, fashioned an ad campaign over the New York Times radio outlet for 13 weeks, in the same year on Alma Dettinger's interview program, then on the air in the morning, in a time spot evidently when children were at school and not in contact with the horrid facts of life, namely that mammy wore a bra.

WOR-TV has been running video copy created by Exquisite Form Corp. for Exquisite Form and Silfskin Girdles and Peter Pan Brassiere for Peter Pan Bra on its "Million Dollar Movie." WNTA-TV also uses this copy, as does WABC-TV, and do their utmost to avoid programming them in and around children's programs. International Latex's girdles have extensive schedules, mainly minutes in nighttime spots, on WCBS-TV. A similar schedule is used at WRCA-TV.

Throughout this type of business on the air there runs a constant undercurrent of uneasiness, caused largely by the squawks from viewers steeped in Victorian prudery and blue-nosery. Social historians and experts in the history of adornment take the dim view that it will be a long time before tv manages to arrive at the same position as that of the American press and magazine in the display of undergarment and personal hygiene advertisements. Since the fifth estate is regarded as a super moral agency, station owners aren't too optimistic about a victory in this category.

In short, video is strictly peekaboo when it comes to the bra and the girdle. These two products are evidently an indigestible cheesecake for the puritan portion of the vast anonymous army serving in the Nielsen and Trendex worlds.

TV In '60 Political Arena

open the traditionally closed committee and caucus sessions—most notably the bitter Republican Credentials Committee battle in 1952 over the seating of the Taft or Eisenhower delegates from Texas.

In days gone by, those hungry for detailed analysis and explanation of the importance and significance of election results had to wait for their Sunday review-of-the-week sections. Television now brings a huge wave of fresh up-to-the-second, accurate analyses that have relegated the Sunday experts to the purview of the librarians and the backwoods outlanders (both rural and urban) who lack tv sets.

The speed of its election coverage is so great that it has virtually eliminated newspaper "election extras." Many morning newspapers now even delay or eliminate early editions, on the ground that they would be hopelessly outdated before they reached the reader; instead, they tend more and more to await definitive results.

These, then, are but a few of the contributions of tv to the American political scene since those pioneer days of 1948 in Philadelphia when a mere few dozen persons (including all technicians) presented all three conventions to the nation.

With three national conventions, campaigns and elections under its belt, what lies ahead for television in 1960?

There is no simple, easy answer. As of this writing, the prospect is for two wide-open conventions next summer. Such conventions presage considerable time-consuming battling over credentials and platforms as well as the climactic nomination fights. This in turn will pose severe problems for tv if it is to succeed in the announced hope of presenting only the meaningful segments.

The unexpectedly swift development of television tape, and of the equally important ability to edit it, has created almost as many problems as it might at first glance seem to have solved. It now will be possible to carry on normal programming for considerable periods, taping the lesser sections of the conventions and presenting edited-down versions at a later hour. Under this concept, the only prolonged live convention programming would be the nominating sessions and the acceptance speeches. The laborious and generally rather dull openings and the segments for such special groups as women or (as with the Republicans in 1956) the parade of Cabinet officers "reporting to the nation," all would reach the nation only in abbreviated form on delayed tape.

This procedure would be sure to satisfy a considerable portion of the populace, but it would be equally sure to antagonize others—the families of delegates desirous of seeing "Uncle Eph or Auntie Annie on the TV," the oratorical windbags disappointed at being deflated by the tape editor's cutter, and the thousand and one other great and near great political hacks and supernumeraries who infest conventions.

Another proposal, is for rotation of sessions among the networks. Under this plan, Network A would carry the first session while the others continued with their own normal programming; Network B would take the second session, and so on.

What may emerge is a pair of conventions at least partly streamlined by a convergence of two forces—the networks' insistence on some reduction in unessentials, and the parties' realization that these elements may well be omitted by the networks. The Republicans, at San Francisco in 1956, proved a convention could be pared; of course, they had the benefit of an uncontested slate and indeed had the problem of stretching their sessions over enough days to meet the guarantees to the hotel men.

As it now stands, it is doubtful if there will be full gavel-to-gavel coverage of either convention by any network.

With both party nominations wide open, and with two new candidates touring the hustings in the autumn of 1960, campaign coverage is certain to be intensified, with "campaign news caravans," key state and regional surveys and much other special reportage.

Electronic machines have played a part in compilation and analysis of election returns since 1952. They again will be present in 1960 as all networks step up their efforts to air the speediest, most complete and most accurate returns. The election coverage trend is toward simplicity.

That word—simplicity—is probably the keystone of all political coverage in 1960. Television has tried its muscles in many directions, has proved that it can present almost any conceivable technical effect, and with those adjuncts firmly entrenched and under sensible control, is turning its attention to unencumbered and ever-clearer coverage of the fundamentals in restrained but dynamic fashion.

L & N's 25 Sr. Veeps

With three mergers in recent months, Lennen & Newell is suffering from too many chiefs and too many Indians.

The agency, which has absorbed Buchanan and C. L. Miller and Merchandising Factors (San Francisco shop), now lists 25 senior veeps with the vast majority of them account supervisors. The situation has some of the Indians in the creative department wondering when they will get their feathers.

In a move to allay dissension, prexy and chief executive officer Adolph J. Toigo announced one new veep in the creative department and said it was the first in a series of stripes to come. A staff memo noted that the stripes would be in recognition of "the number of people who have raised our creative department to an enviable stature in the business, and the way people are coming forward in the department."

The department, which includes copy, art and radio-tv production and programming, has 165 employees and one sr. veep, Nicholas Keesely, broadcast chieftain. The first in a series of promotions went to Royall Smith, a creative group head.

Chicago Style TV

will take probably the largest production budget ever assigned to a strictly local effort—$15,000 per episode.

WNBQ has been experimenting this past season with specs on cultural themes and may install them on a regular monthly basis next semester. Shows tried thus far have covered the Gaughin exhibition at the Art Institute, the Science Fair, and the Metropolitan Opera auditions. WBKB is thinking vaguely too along the lines of cultural specials and will be preempting prime time next season for special telecasts of the Pan American Games and the Daily News Relays.

Principally two prime periods of local time will get the focus for upgrading next season, those being 4-6:30 p.m. and 10 p.m. to signoff. With Jack Paar in runaway dominion of the latenight period, competing stations will be looking for ways to make inroads; and WNBQ, which beams the network show, may be experimenting with ways to carry over some of the handsome Paar rating past midnight. Station made a stab of it earlier this year by creating a Friday postmidnight show with Dan Sorkin but gave up on it after five weeks.

Three Against Paar

So far as is known, the three competing stations will continue to fight Paar with feature films, although WGN-TV may try another approach on Monday nights to test Paar's achilles heel. That's the intended slot, as of now, for a new comedy format with Bob Bell and Wally Phillips.

For the afternoon period, WBBM-TV is mulling a new format for Susan Heinkel, who has outgrown her kiddie show. Station has been mapping unheard of plans for a western strip to be produced locally, and there's no question but that video tape and its possibilities for syndication play a motivating part in this ambitious project. Station may also revive a pair of bygone formats—"Jazz in the Round" and "In Town Tonight"—for the syndication marts but probably not fo. exposure again in Chicago.

WNBQ is answering the 4 p.m. problem with a pair of fresh half-hour vidpix strips, to be followed by its only live production, "Chicago Bandstand." WGN-TV is expanding "Garfield Goose" at 5 to a full hour and probably will continue to precede it with adventure and comedy films.

Spurred by the several awards it has won this year, WGN-TV will be pitching for more of them through increased live programming. On tap as bait for local or national citations are more community events specials; a new farm show; live remotes from churches on Sunday mornings; a weekly series of half-hour reports by Mayor Richard J. Daley and members of his staff; and a continuation of the early morning instructional program for school teachers incepted last year.

Both WGN-TV and WBBM-TV are contemplating panel shows for teenagers, and WBKB is developing an amateur show with professional panel and a unique telephone interview format. Station has signed young comic Bob Newhart with hopes of building a show around him and is also high on the camera presence of Bill Veeck's wife, Mary Frances, having in mind an early afternoon hausfrau show for her.

News continues to have top priority at two of the stations, WBBM-TV and WNBQ, which lead the market in news ratings in that order. The former's "Standard News and Weather Roundup" at 10 p.m. continues to reap the tallest ratings, and WNBQ's slotting of Alex Dreier against that program has not availed greatly so far.

WBKB increased its newscasting last semester, with Paul Harvey handling the bulk of the chore and Norm Ross contributing a news commentary show nightly, and WGN-TV continued to operate at a basic minimum in that area. However, there are bodings that the Tribune-owned station may make a strong attempt next season to upgrade its news image, but it will first have to find a strong news personality to spearhead the buildup.

Timex Puts in Bid For Moscow State Circus

U.S. Time Corp. (Timex), via Doner & Peck agency, is dickering with the U.S. State Department to clear telecasting of a one-shot made of the Moscow State Circus. Sponsor, which is already signed for seven specials on NBC-TV and ABC-TV, plans to tape the circus stanza in Europe for exposure next season.

Moscow State Circus is currently making a limited number of appearances outside the Iron Curtain. No network opening has yet been set.

Schwerin's Five Attributes

with all necessary elements. Incongruous elements will not combine; the number of ideas does not determine a commercial's success.

2. The commercial must be either dominantly logical or emotive. It is extremely difficult and dangerous to mix the "mood" commercial with the factual approach; choose one or the other, for best results.

3. Involve the right viewers favorably. Choose the characters and the settings which will be most flattering to the audience you wish to impress.

4. Keep your commercial consumer-oriented, not product-oriented. Remember that the "vital promise" is best conceived and presented in terms of the benefits the viewer will derive.

5. Employ the video actively. Ideally, the pictorial elements of your commercial will convey the story and establish the "promise" even if the audio is not heard.

The question of the proper length of a commercial was dwelt on at some length by Schwerin. He pointed out that the 15-second commercial, in Great Britain, now accounts for three-quarters of all commercials, whereas three years ago, only one-fourth of the commercials were 15 seconds long.

"Most of our findings," he reported, "suggest that the pendulum has swung too far toward reliance on the 15-second commercial to communicate your vital promise effectively."

Again capsuling the results of many tests in Britain, Schwerin reported that 53% of all 15-second commercials tested were judged effective, but 72% of all 30-second spots did their jobs.

"Mood" commercials suffer most of all in the compressed form, he said, but straight logical stories also may lose their effectiveness. The case of a new beauty product was cited: in 30 seconds, its newness and its novel features could be dwelt on, whereas in half that time, only the claim that it was new and different remained.

"The advertiser who announces his wares in 15 seconds must carve cameos," Schwerin stated. "He cannot make one mistake."

Schwerin went into detail on the general classification of "presenter" of commercial messages. Overall, he concluded that the announcer, or star, or personality must be compatible with the product, and believable in his espousal of it.

Often, unbelievable minor details can make the difference between success and failure with a "presenter," it was reported. A little girl, using an "anyone-can-do-it" bake mix, was decidedly more convincing than a chef doing the same thing. An office worker talking about "clean shaves" impressed many more viewers with the powers of a razor than did a steel worker. An athlete wasn't convincing, until scenes of him performing his athletic feats were included.

Other details discussed by Schwerin included Romantic Involvement (women won't buy the image of a woman acting too forward); Before-and-After situations (most effective is the simply sequence, unhappy "before" situation followed by use of product resulting in happy "after" scene); Taste (taste can be demonstrated, but not merely by claiming it. Best ways are showing the food in enticing settings, in combination with other foods, in attractive recipes, and/or showing its attractive ingredients.)

Schwerin counseled his British audience always to consider demonstration as the ideal means of communicating to television audiences.

Greensboro, N.C.—Richard M. Bradshaw, Chapel Hill native, has joined Forrell, Thomas & Polack Associates of New York City, creators of music and lyrics for television and radio advertising, as director of sales and production.

CBS Affil Doesn't Agree With Networks, Puts on Humphrey

Minneapolis, July 28.

Appearing by invitation on the local "Open Mike" program of WCCO Radio, local CBS affiliate, to be interviewed, Minnesota U. S. Senator H. H. Humphrey, who is expected to be a Democratic presidential candidate but hasn't formally announced his candidacy yet, lashed out at CBS for cancelling his scheduled appearance on the CBS network show, "Face the Nation." The cancellation is being appealed.

Humphrey called the CBS action "ridiculous." It was taken because CBS felt that under the FCC ruling if Humphrey appeared it would have to grant equal air time to obscure presidential candidates.

In announcing the invitation to Humphrey, WCCO general manager Larry Haeg declared his station disagreed with the broadcasters who banned him. He said WCCO "will continue to cover the news on its merits and discuss public issues on the basis of public interest." He pointed out "we always have been careful to insure full coverage of candidates for office."

News Boss of BBC Has Yen for News & Documentaries

London, July 28.

Hugh Carleton Greene, who's to become Director-General of BBC when Sir Ian Jacob retires at the end of the year, hasn't yet indicated what policy changes or innovations, if any, can be expected when he takes office. The only clue, possibly, he's given so far is to state that he considers drama and documentary programs to be of great importance, though this in itself needn't indicate any shift of emphasis inasmuch as BBC sound and tv schedules already allow substantial time to such.

It's known, too, that Greene is a declared opponent of "businessman's control" of tv and radio, which indicates that he's far from likely to relax existing BBC standards of what's considered popular of tasteful.

At present Director of News and Current Affairs for the Corp., Greene is 48 and a brother of author and playwright Graham Greene. It's reckoned he'll get around $22,500 a year as D-G. He joined BBC in 1940 after being Berlin correspondent of the Daily Telegraph and suffering expulsion by the Nazis as a reprisal for the ousting of certain Germans from Britain. He quit the corporation at the war's end to take charge of broadcasting in the British zone of Germany but returned in 1949.

Sir Ian Jacob, who has been BBC's Director-General for seven years, decided to resign because he'll be 60 in September. But he declares he won't be inactive after the goodbye.

Eurovision

You're shut up in a little box with a foreign technician who generally speaks no German. You have to figure out how to get the show on the air, what to talk about, do a simultaneous translation of what's going on.

Hiding From Producer

"Usually you're out of sight of the producer, who doesn't want you bothering him anyhow, with one mike and one telephone to keep you in contact with Germany."

With only a couple of major Eurovision events a year, Miss Gerhardt rounds out her time and income by doing special shows from other German cities. For five-minute personality interviews that she does several times weekly over the Frankfurt tv outlet, for instance, the fee is 90 marks ($22), and she generally picks up from $10 to $12 additional from other German tv stations who carry a repeat of her interviews.

"Planning and arranging a five-minute interview takes a lot of time. Generally one commentator does only three or four a week," she adds.

The German government allows journalists to earn 12,000 marks (slightly under $3,000) a year free of turnover tax—and with 20 years in the business and a wellknown name in Germany, Miss Gerhardt hasn't yet had to worry about paying this particular tax on her tv income.

British Com'l TV in Quest Of Some Patterns; Ehrlich's Series

London, July 28.

That crime skein, "No Hiding Place," for which U. S. tv writer Max Ehrlich is in London acting as script editor over a team of six scribes, is seen by the London weekday program provider Associated-Rediffusion as one spearhead of a campaign to break way from established program patterns. According to Lloyd Williams, assistant program controller for the web, there'll be a diminution come fall in the number of half-hour slots while 60-minute live shows, taking "No Hiding Place" as a representative example, will be brought more and more to the fore.

A-R can't, of course, control what areas outside London will do, excepting by the network deals it can pull off. There's no reason to believe, though, that it won't succeed in achieving many such tie-ups.

Meantime, what's seen as another shape of tv patterns to come will be aired countrywide tomorrow (29) and on Aug. 29 and Sept. 9 under the title "Summersong." All the commercial tv outfits are pooling their resources to compile the three live shows, each of 60 minutes in length and mainly musical in content. Tomorrow's effort, using names such as Dennis Lotis, Ronnie Carroll, Louie Ramsay, Bobby Thompson, Alistair McHarg and Norrie Paramor and his Concert Orchestra, will bring songs, routines and such from places like the Malvern Hills, the sands at Winterton in Norfolk, a factory in Liverpool, the New Forest, and a boat on the River Thames. Project is "terribly expensive," to quote Williams, largely because of the cost of using Post Office lines. This first experimental program won't be offered overseas, though it's planned that the second will so be.

Williams will have such cooperative efforts perpetuated, seeing in theory no reason why commercial tv outfits shouldn't combine frequently to present a live package show lasting, say, two or three hours and consisting of drama from one region, light entertainment from another and so forth.

The "Summersong" venture is also looked on as a runthrough for the commercial webs of their facilities for covering the upcoming General Election campaign. A-R's Studio 9 will be the control point, as it will be at election time, and 30 cameras will be used throughout the country—believed to be the largest number on one program since the Coronation in 1953.

been that video has been remiss in its coverage. WCBS-TV, part of an organization, which like NBC-TV, has vast corporate pride, is expected to receive heavy coin from the parent outfit to invest in film and, more pertinently, more individualized outside reporting.

WCBS-TV had one man, Tom Costigan, who for the past few years, has gone out on picture stories for the station. But he was the only fulltimer on local news for the tv'er. New setup suggests a full-scale news operation, with inside editors and rewriters and inside-outside reporter-writers.

Ignorance Ain't Bliss

Chicago, July 28.

One thing prober Robert F. Kennedy proved last Wednesday (22) with his appearance on the "Jack Paar Show" was that an alarming number of people do not know the names of their Congressmen.

Kennedy had urged viewers to write their representatives if they wanted tighter legislation to break the rackets. Next day the local Board of Election Commissioners was swamped with phone callers wanting to know who their Congressmen were. Chicago City Hall had to put on two extra switchboard ops, and the Board took on 20 additional clerks to hunt up the names.

Hoffa

Henry Morgan, Newsweek, the N. Y. Post, TV Guide and the field of Freudian psychiatry. Numerous guests on the Paar show, of course, have shot sharp darts at enemies of varying degrees, Kennedy being among the latest to unleash an assault.

Hoffa's squawk came in the form of a telegram to Robert Sarnoff, chairman of the NBC board. Hoffa said he had instructed his attorneys to prepare libel action against the aforementioned "and all others who sponsored or were associated with the shameful abuse of national television time on Wednesday night. Any repetition of such performance will be met with an application (to the FCC) to revoke your license for permitting the telecasts of criminal libels."

Theodore F. Koop, director of Washington news and pubaffairs for CBS, yesterday (Tues.) denied there was an agreement to restrict the quizzing of Hoffa during his "Face the Nation" appearance. Kennedy made the assertion on "Meet the Press."

Koop described Kennedy's allegation as "ridiculous." Kennedy said that CBS had an understanding with Hoffa to limit questions to labor legislation. According to Koop, the transcript showed that Hoffa was quizzed on subjects other than labor legislation.

losers make a pizza pie. It was the show's fun spot.

Among the recording artists were Eddie and Betty Cole, Jan and Dean and Dave "Baby" Cortez, the latter a swinging hipster on the electric organ, who may have finger-synced. His beat was hotter than the others and he came off with the heftiest applause. The big moment for the hoofers came when Martindale resurrected a filmed interview he did with Elvis Presley long enough ago to ask the question, "I see you're going to make a picture." What cared the shufflers from San Berdu when it was done. Here was their idol to swoon and sigh to.

That not all rock 'n' rollers are in the delinquent class was amply evidenced by three of the dancers, who told of their efforts to help the underprivileged with fund drives and a boys ranch to help straighten out the wayward. A nice touch of respectability. Al Burton produced and Bob Searles directed competently. Helm.

Post-'48's

and are heavily involved in production plans to emulate the Warner Bros. and SG operations. (Another source of revenues is the use of Coast major studios by outside telepix producers.)

Still another substitute source for feature to tv sales is diversification in tv station ownership. SG is buying the Time Inc. station in Salt Lake City, KTVT, for a reported $3,500,000; and 20th-Fox is buying KMSP-TV, Minneapolis-St. Paul, from National Telefilm Associates for a like sum. Both companies would like the full complement of radio-tv stations allowed by FCC regulations. Other pix companies, some already active in the field, are looking toward similar diversification moves.

All this adds up to one salient point. Contrary to previous predictions, the majors may be free of economic necessity to unload their post-'48's to tv. They may not even have a strong desire to sit down with the Hollywood talent guilds and work out a formula to cut the guilds in on tv revenues derived from post-'48 pix. When the current revenues from licensing of the pre '48's run out, the majors could have substitute millions pouring in from telefilm and station ownership and perhaps other sources.

Study Role of Closed-TV In Higher Education Work; $285,890 Working Fund

Minneapolis, July 28.

The U.S. Office of Education has turned over $285,890 to the U. of Minnesota to study the use of closed circuit television in higher education.

Dr. R. J. Keller, education professor, who will have control of the fund, says the study will endeavor to determine particularly the effectiveness of closed circuit showings of language, mathematics and science instruction in University high school classrooms to groups of students in the college of education.

Colleges of education students have had closed circuit tv instruction in some subject nearly four years. The new grant will be used in part to defray costs of needed technical personnel and supplies and to acquire a library of kinescopes for future use.

(and for this reason he has decided not to put the program up for sale), "to help us better understand our Latin American neighbors who will be here later in the month for the Pan Am Games. And since it is educational, it's our prerogative to show only so much of the bullfight as is necessary to show," he said. "The fact that we're putting it on the air does not necessarily mean we advocate bullfighting."

Ostensibly the show is to be a prelude to the Pan Am Games, being held in Chi Aug. 27 to Sept. 7 and to which WBKB has exclusive telecasting rights in this city. For all the opposition to the bullcast, Quinlan got his money's worth from the preview in press clippings. When the spec goes on this weekend, it will have been more than amply publicized through the controversy it has created.

With the Mexican tapes WBKB will be locking horns with its arch rival, WBBM-TV, in a Saturday night showdown vs. its prime feature film, highest rated local program in town. It will, of course, take place in a rating week, WBBM-TV will have the Windy City firstrun of "A Connecticut Yankee In King Arthur's Court" with Bing Crosby.

The bullfights—three of them—were recorded on tape in Mexico City by Emilio Azcarraga's Telesistima Mexicano. Commentary on the WBKB version will be done by Luis Carlos Uribe, a local Spanish language broadcaster. Jim Ascher, No. 2 man in WBKB's press department and an aficianado, is serving as consultant and co-writer.

Martin Weldon's News-Special Events Formula; Tryouts for Out-of-Towners

Deeply conscious of fact that out-of-town radio news reporters hunger for a break in the Gotham broadcasting scene, WNEW, N.Y. indie, has launched a series of frequent tryouts and already has taken on a number of prospects on a provisional basis.

Martin Weldon, WNEW's news and special events director, hired on a pro tem status, Bruce Williamson, news director of WHIM, Providence, and Henry Van Dyke of the Pittsburgh Courier, Negro newspaper. Other recent additions, on a permanent basis, to writer-reporter staff have been Stanley Willis, formerly on the N.Y. Daily News and Christine Stewart of Canadian Press. No longer with the station are Joan Hanauer and Warren Gardner. Currently, news and special events staff consists of 14 people with 11 on writing-reporting side and Lee Hanna as assistant news director. Weldon said that temporary workers are paid on a perdiem basis until proven worthy of a listing on weekly payroll. Meanwhile, station is negotiating contract with News Writers unit of Writers Guild and expects to seal a contract shortly.

Grapevine has produced a considerable number of applicants for the station's writer-reporter tryouts. Applicants are asked to develop several different type stories and record some of them on tape. Test involves writing a newscast from the wires plus some voice work.

Weldon said he doesn't turn down anyone who will spend time on the tryout and thus far the quality shown has been of a high average. Object is to find out how a man writes creatively and to learn something of his writing skill other than merely rewriting wire copy, where most of the words are already available to him. Many applicants, Weldon said, come from other stations while a goodly number are from the daily gazettes including the top ones of N.Y. city.

No Bars on Race or Sex

Weldon said it was important these days to have both a woman writer-reporter as well as a Negro on the news and special events staff. He said WNEW had no color line. "I think it is to the advantage of any news department in any medium to have a Negro and a girl reporter for special kinds of stories, for special insights, etc." Weldon said. "This is simply because of my desire to build the best possible news department. At the same time, as a human being, I appreciate being in a position to make job opportunities possible for people who are frequently left out of job opportunities because of race, color or sex. But in the final analysis, merit plays the biggest part in getting a job at WNEW, as it must."

Applicants for writer-reporter assignments are given a sheet containing some interesting problems to solve. First problem states that Herb Gordon of station's Washington Bureau has just called "to tell us that Khrushchev has just been shot by Mikoyan, and is dying — write about 20 lines on it; if you have to, speculate on possible consequences. Try for reactions, etc."

Second problem deals with a report from police headquarters about a terrible IRT train crash, with many casualties, and asks the applicant to write as many lines of copy as seems right to him.

Third problem a lulu informs the applicant that someone has just run amuck in the WNEW news room. "Imagine the rest of it and in your story make sure that the listener gets an idea of what the news room looks like," the instruction sheet states.

Meanwhile, station's news room appears to be landing considerable scoops and getting its call letters in newspaper pickups on its exclusives. Ordinarily, call letters of stations get into the news columns of the dailies only on Mondays because of the light Sunday news flowing across newspaper city desks and consequently the Sunday panel shows on radio-tv are of some assistance in filling the Monday morning gazettes. But it is much tougher on weekdays, when there's plenty of news, for a station to grab credit in the press.

NBC Yens Miles Coin

Chicago, July 28.

NBC-TV is trying to get Miles Labs to switch its Sunday morning coin next fall from "Circus Boy" to "Lone Ranger." Web is committed to the former, owing to Miles' order for quarter hours on alternate weeks. But now General Mills is offering to switch "Lone Ranger" from ABC to NBC if it can get the 11:30 a.m. Saturday timeslot.

Justice Dept.: Set Hub Grant Aside

Washington, July 28.

Joining Federal Communications Commission's legal office, Justice Dept. Friday (24) urged that the influence-tainted grant of Boston Channel 5 be set aside and disqualification of WHDH and Massachusetts Bay Telecasters.

Dept. recommendations were made in brief filed with special FCC Hearing Examiner Horace Stern who presided over the court-ordered rehearing of the channel contest. FCC's Office of Legal Counsel, filing earlier, urged like disposition of the case.

Dept. brief charged that WHDH, the Herald-Traveller subsidiary which won the channel, and Massachusetts Bay "ceased to depend on the merits of their cases and sought discriminatory and favored treatment by attempting to influence" an FCC member.

It cited off-the-record lunches former FCC Chairman George C. McConnaughey had with WHDH president Robert B. Choate and Forrester A. Clark, v.p. of Massachusetts Bay.

Justice Dept. differed with FCC legal office by recommending that the contest for the channel be reopened. The FCC lawyers, when a like difference arose in the Miami Channel 10 case, held that this was a separate question for the Commission to decide, not Stern.

WNEW

local news, has frequently utilized news writers (or at least men who initially were under only WGA jurisdiction) as on-the-air reporters and commentators. When the on-the-air business started, AFTRA demanded in.

As it has been explained by reliable union sources, WNEW balked at the idea of separate contracts for its writer-commentators, and demanded one union assume entire jurisdiction for the 13 or 14 staff men involved. Consequently, AFTRA and WGA proposed to WNEW's lawyers that the station dicker a single AFTRA-WGA contract. While it was along the lines of its own proposal, the single contract idea didn't sit well with WNEW for some reason, and so the station put it before the NLRB sometime ago. The labor board is reported to have agreed that a single contract was in order, thus overruling the station.

However, because what they originally wanted was separate contracts, after the NLRB hearing the unions nonetheless conceded to WNEW—and the net result is that the station is dickering with both separately again. Staffers already hold cards in both the writers' and performers' unions.

It's expected that the final outcome will have WGA as the basic union, with the men consequently being paid WGA staff newswriter rates, and with AFTRA handling them on a freelance basis. With this prospect in view, it's felt by observers that WNEW Radio is already showing signs of cutting back on the amount of on-the-air work being done by the WGA-AFTRA workers.

Des Moines—Subject to approval of the FCC, KASI, Ames, has been sold to Bill Ray, head of the news staff of WMAQ-NBC, Chicago. Sale price reportedly was $100,000.

VARIETY - ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top ten network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top ten syndicated shows in the same particular market. This week ten different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top ten shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting, competitive programming in the particular slot, etc., is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 150 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top ten network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U. S.

p.r. possibilities as the Ampex prexy, got a Russian policeman and managed to retrieve Gundy's visa and passport which had been picked up on entry.

Gundy had left the exhibit grounds at 2 p.m. By 4 p.m. he was on his way to the Moscow airport. The tape, wrapped in a dirty shirt and concealed under business papers in a small valise, was completely overlooked by customs. By 5:30, Gundy was winging toward Sweden. The SAS man wired ahead and planes were held in Stockholm and Copenhagen. At 8:30 a.m., Gundy landed in N. Y. and was greeted at the airport with the State Department wire asking that the tape be withheld from broadcast. The State Department wire said that the request had come from the American embassy in Moscow and that the Russians were asking for simultaneous broadcast.

There was also a request from Nixon, through his press secretary Herbert Klein, to hold up on broadcast.

Gundy says he had decided from the outset to avoid the red tape that clearance through Russian and U.S. officialdom would have involved.

In spite of the State Department and Nixon requests, Gundy went ahead and by noon Saturday there were enough copies of the tape for distribution to the networks, the New York indies and the Canadian Broadcasting Co., which flew a man down to make the pickup.

A kinnie and a tape were rushed back to Moscow, arriving there at 4:30 p.m. Sunday. The tape went to the exhibit where it has been playing since and the kinnie went to Moscow tv and was shown late Monday night (27).

Before the 15-minute tape got on the webs at 11 p.m. Saturday, Gundy says there were innumerable phone calls between N.Y., Moscow, Washington and the heads of the three webs, CBS-TV's Frank Stanton, NBC-TV's Robert Sarnoff and ABC-TV's Leonard Goldenson.

"They finally said to hell with it," says Gundy, and decided to run the tape over State Department protest.

Also in the interim between arrival and airing, Gundy says he sent a long wire to President Eisenhower detailing events.

He says the tape session had been set up so that Khrushchev could get the full impact and surprise of seeing himself and the Vice President in immediate playback. When the Russian Premier pushed the button and saw himself, he cried out in English: "OOoooh! Like real!"

The tape was in color, and he said through his interpreter that the Russians have color tv, but nothing like the recorder.

Then he wanted to be sure that the tape, when seen on U.S. tv, would carry an English translation. Both Gundy and Nixon assured him it would.

In his N.Y.-to-Moscow phone talks since his return, the Ampex prexy has heard that the word has gone out for a closer check at customs for tape and film going out of the country.

buys. R. J. Reynold's Salem, Lorillard's Newport and Liggett & Meyer's Oasis—not to mention B&W's longtime Kools—have already proved out in sales and the battle for the menthol market will be a big one for media.

Among major accounts adrift and unplanned at this writing are Cheesebrough - Pond's Vaseline, leaving McCann-Erickson; Lipton, moving from Young & Rubicam; and Hudson Pulp & Paper, recently landed at Grey. Vaseline spent close to $1,000,000 in net last year and Lipton placed $1,700,000 with the webs for its tea and another $800,000 for its soups. Hudson had a piece of "Walt Disney Presents" and will most likely be back somewhere.

Traditional bargain hunter Hazel Bishop is so far uncommitted. There is definitely more money coming from Colgate. Likewise Ansco and the Florida Citrus Commission at Benton & Bowles. The Commission's money is generally late and iffy—good crop, good budget.

Nestle's to date seems shy with only an alternate buy of "Colt .45." Firm last year spent $3,500,000 on time alone.

Sylvania and Dracket had high raters a year ago in "The Real McCoys" and "Maverick" respectively. Neither is yet committed. Pepsi-Cola (last season specials), Dow Chemical (introed "Medic") are not in. Nabisco is shy of usual web spending.

Nets also are eyeing possibility of more insurance company spending. Equitable is in for first time since radio ("FBI in Peace and War") with special buys.

Then there's the Firestone Tire & Rubber money—up for grabs.

roles, one on "General Electric Theatre," the other a "Wagon Train" shot being especially written for him. But comedy spots are out. "A Hope or a Berle, even without good material, can do that kind of a spot and come off well. George needs material, and often the material provided for him isn't good. Then we have to come up with our own stuff at the last minute, and that's risky. Or we use George's regular stuff but we burn it out," O'Malley explains.

On another front, the Gobel-O'Malley Gomalco Productions is working on development of two pilots, its first new projects since Gomalco developed "Leave It to Beaver" nearly three years ago. One is "The Flower Girls," comedy about two spinsters and their young nephew. Other can't be discussed because of rights clearances, but is an adventure stanza. Asked why Gomalco had laid off pilots for nearly three years, O'Malley merely replied that "we didn't come across any properties we liked well enough."

the network schedules—along with a downbeat among syndicators—of film shows originating in New York or overseas. The English coproduction, at least on the network level, is a thing of the past. Gotham-filmed shows are no longer repped on the webs, what with the demise of the Phil Silvers show and the cancellation of the sole Gotham entry, "Brenner."

Breakdown on the Hollywood production scene runs thusly:

1. There are 20 hourlong series slated for network, which will fill some 600 hours of firstrun time and will cost in the area of $60,000,000.

2. Remainder of the network film schedule comprises 61 half-hour telefilm series, consuming 1,190 hours of firstrun time in the coming season and produced at a cost of $103,000,000.

3. Syndicated programming filmed here will run to 26 series of varying budgets and varying number of episodes. But they will aggregate some $17,000,000 in production outlay and account for a total of 480 hours of film programming.

As to the breakdown among producers, Revue and Warners lead the field, with Four Star a close third, and Ziv, Desilu and Screen Gems well atop the rest of the heap. Six companies among them will account for a total of 60 of the 108 shows, and will bear the brunt of the $180,000,000 production outlay to the tune of an approximate $90,000,000, or 50% of the total.

after two tries, so it's not contemplating a third such event, at least not until the results of the second junket can be tabulated. However, Oscar Katz, daytime program chieftain for CBS-TV, believes that the publicity-exploitation impact of the first junket will be intensified this coming fall, due to the fact that instead of keeping the femmes stuck in N.Y. a Hollywood dimension has been added, and probably more important, there had been a certain amount of skepticism from participating newspapers the first time that is not apparent the second time. Some dailies last year expressed concern over the possibility that the exploitation might end up with the women writing yarns as the network would have them written. But, afterwards, there was a widespread expression of satisfaction, that not only was the "amateur copy" good but also independent. This seems to pave the way for increased newspaper support for the CBS affair.

Web aims to kick off the first of the newest "Woman!" daytime specials the week of the "Televisit." CBS will preview the stanza for the junketeers a day or two before the Thursday, Sept. 17, exposure. Goal is to have the gals write advance reviews. No matter how they come out, CBS looks upon the critiques as "a story—and a story makes for interest."

come. Summer has been one of the best seasons for syndication buying activity and whether the current pace is maintained relatively in other period remains to be seen.

But the "group paralysis" of yore has faded. Fewer regional accounts are bouncing the ball back and forth between agency and client without making a commitment. Credit for the change in business conduct is attributed to the vigor of the economy, the health of networking, and the consequent eagerness for the regionals to climb aboard the tv bandwagon.

Comedy Relief

or make him cry." Tatelman prefers to make him laugh.

All of which is another way of saying that for westerns and adventure stanzas, there's got to be a fresh approach, and for Tatelman the freshness of approach lies in the application of comedy. By the same token, he's busy finding writers with fresh points of view and trying to avoid what he calls Hollywood's busy and skilled hacks.

"This town is loaded with talent. It's not, unfortunately, loaded with people who can spot talent. Everybody talks about 'taking a chance' on a newcomer. I think they take a chance when they use a hack who gives them the same old tired treatment." Tatelman has uncovered two new writers he's high on, a mystery novelist named Catherine Kuttner, and another gal named Marion Horvits, neither of whom had ever done a tv script before. Miss Kuttner, between "Alaskans" and "Sugarfoot," is now working on her tenth.

Features also were bought from Atlantic TV and Cinema Vue.

Television, Inc., which Michelson represents, operates TCN in Sydney and HSV in Melbourne. The Herald Sun Television station HSV also owns ADS, in Adelaide, and BTQ, in Brisbane, due to go on the air in November. Another outlet in Perth also is due to begin broadcasting in November, while a station in Hobart is expected to go on the air in early '60.

In addition, about a dozen provincial stations are expected to be operating in Australia in '60 with more coming in the following year.

Average price paid by Michelson is reported to be about $500 per half-hour. While the separate deals vary, Michelson stated that all the deals took in at least four markets, including the principal ones of Sydney and Melbourne.

SINGLES IN 'SQUARE' CASKET

Monaurals & Stereo Share-&-Share Alike in Decca's '66' Clip for Anni

Decca Records is kicking off its 25th anni celebration with a fall program featuring 66 packages (33 monaural and 33 stereo). Spotlighted in the program are "The Gershwin Years," by George Baseman and "The Ernest Tubb Story."

Also in the silver jubilee pitch are sets by the Four Aces, Kitty Wells, Al Hibbler, Jesse Crawford, Roberta Sherwood, Carmen Cavallaro, the Ray Charles Singers, Wayne King, Webb Pierce, Red Foley and Earl Grant, among others.

Decca's longhair division, Gold Label, is also getting into the 25th anni act highlighting a stereo first with Bach's "St. Matthew Passion." It's a package of four LPs featuring Irmgard Seefried, Ernest Hoefliger and Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau. The Gold Label releases include sets that were recorded domestically and abroad. In the domestically recorded issues is the Bach Aria Group, which recently inked a longterm deal with Decca. Group's initial LP disking will be "Arias for Voice and Instrument." Another feature of Gold Label's anni push will be the New York Pro Musica's "Elizabethan and Jacobean Ayres, Madrigals and Dances." The New York Pro Musica came up with a click for Decca last year in "The Play of Daniel."

For the fall program, Decca is giving an extra 10% discount plus a 2% cash discount, if bills are paid on time, on orders of $100 or more. Diskery is also offering a special dating plan with one-third payments on August orders payable Nov. 10, Dec. 10 and Dec. 28. The dating plan applies to orders of $300 or more. The dating and discounts apply to the whole Decca catalog excepting the low-price Vocalion line, imported records and the Archive series.

The Decca program was launched at a fest at New York's Savoy Hilton last Wednesday (22). In addition to the Decca product, the lines of Everest, Urania, Stero-O-Craft, Strand and Listen & Learn were pitched. These labels are distributed through Decca branches in the U.S., Canada and Hawaii.

Latching on to Decca's 25th anni program are its subdid labels, Coral and Brunswick. In the program are 46 packages (24 monaural and 22 stereo) for the August release. Featured are Les Brown, Teddi King, Marguerite Piazza, Art Lund, Teresa Brewer, the Three Stooges, Red Nichols and Mary Ann McCall, among others. The Coral-Brunswick fall program offers an extensive plan to all dealers featuring a discount and delayed dating program.

Mex Gov't Downbeats Max Cooper (Shumake), Fest's Trombone Winner

Mexico City, July 28.

The Dept. of State has given the bum's rush to Max Shumake, better known in the musical world as Max Cooper, for alleged "illicit and dishonest" activities. The brief Gobernacion (State Dept.) statement did not amplify on the reasons.

Cooper, who triumphed in trombone division at recent national jazz festival here, had been working on plans for a tour of the provinces to bring jazz to the Mex backwoods and provincial cities. He was an element of an orchestra formed by festival winners who wanted to capitalize on publicity.

While loss of Cooper delays tour of new musical unit, plan is to replace him and still go ahead with idea of building up a name as a modern jazz unit in the land of the guitar and off-key shouted songs (ranchero ditties).

Sandy Block's Torso Co.

A new publishing firm, Torso Music, has been launched by Sandy Block.

Col's 'Mark Twain Tonight'

Hal Holbrook's one-man show, "Mark Twain Tonight," will be put into the groove by Columbia Records. The disk will be produced by Goddard Lieberson, Col's prexy. Recording session is scheduled for tomorrow (Thurs.).

The one-man show has been running off-Broadway for the past several months. Holbrook nabbed the Drama Desk's Vernon Rice Memorial Award, and an "Obie" from the Village Voice for his characterization of Mark Twain.

NARAS Awards On NBC-TV in Nov.

Awards handed out by the National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences for the top diskers of 1959 will get a tv showcasing on NBC Nov. 29. Watchmakers of Switzerland will pick up the tab.

The hourlong show will feature performances of the year's best classical, popular and jazz records by the artists who recorded them. Winners of the awards, to be chosen by members of NARAS in secret ballot, will receive the industry's counterpart of the film biz's Oscar.

Blueprinted for the telecast are 10 award-winning performances. These will include the best male vocal, best female vocal, best song, best album, best jazz, best comedy, best solo classical vocal, best original cast show album, best motion picture soundtrack album and the best new performer of the year. In addition, special awards will be made to recording artists who have made outstanding contributions to the recording industry.

The telecast will be carried live from Hollywood. Cunningham & Walsh is the ad agency for Watchmakers of Switzerland.

The program will be the second occasion in which NARAS has honored members of the disk industry but the first to be televised. Deal for the telecast of the 1958 awards fell through and the prizes were given out at a special dinner meet in Hollywood.

Col Masterworks Names McClure Vice Oppenheim

David Oppenheim has exited his post as director of the Masterworks (classical) division for Columbia Records. John McClure moves in as acting director of the department pending a reorganization of Col's entire artists & repertoire department.

Oppenheim, who's been in Col's Masterworks department for the past seven-and-a-half years, is taking on an associate producership with Robert Saudek Associates, org specializing in producing tv programs. McClure has been with Col since 1952.

Cap's 'Kaleidoscope'

Hollywood, July 28.

Capitol Records released 14 new pop albums last week under the theme of "Capitol Kaleidoscope—A Brilliant Array of Stars and Sounds."

Topping the release list are new packages by Frank Sinatra, Tennessee Ernie Ford, Paul Weston, the Four Preps, and, together for the first time, Peggy Lee and George Shearing. Latter LP was recorded on the spot at the National Disk Jockey Convention in Miami Beach.

Sarah Vaughan is making her debut south-of-the-border with a four-week tour of Brazil, starting Aug. 3.

TEENERS GET 'EM THE CUFFOLA WAY

The sharp decline of the single record biz recently is dramatizing the necessity for a broad public relations campaign by an overall industry body. So say Hugo Peretti and Luigi Creatore, indie disk producers for RCA Victor under their usual joint monicker, Hugo & Luigi.

The duo has found a dangerous attitude growing among the adolescents, namely, that it is "square" to buy a record. Once an enviable activity by youngsters, a disk purchase by a teenager nowadays is more than likely to earn a chorus of derision from his sidekicks.

"Why buy it when you can get it for nothing," the kids are thinking these days. And, according to Hugo & Luigi, there are numerous routes by which the disks, or their equivalents, can be had for free.

Firstly, there is mass distribution of cuffo disks at the various hops promoted by disk jockeys. Secondly, and more importantly, the teen crowd is turning more and more to the transistor radio fad, basking on the beach or walking down the street with the plugs in their ears listening to the endless repetition of the hit tunes on the unlimited number of "Top 40" stations.

A new wrinkle has now been

AFTRA to Seek Pension, Shorter (3-Minute) Side

Pension and welfare benefits, which would mean a large additional expense to the diskeries, will be asked by the American Federation of Television & Radio Artists next fall. The performers' union and the industry meet then on a new phonograph-recording code. Union has jurisdiction over vocalists and other non-instrumentalists.

AFTRA, meeting last week in St. Louis for its national convention, laid out several demands for the October dickers. Besides the plan to get pension and welfare, the union will ask for national jurisdiction, which would put cities such as Nashville, a heavy recording area, under AFTRA aegis for the first time.

Actors' body also will demand a new definition of a "side." Presently, a side is defined in the code as three minutes and 40 seconds, but AFTRA wants it cut to three minutes. This would mean, if accepted, that any additional time would count toward a second side.

Swedish, Italo LPs Bow RCA Int'l O'Seas Series

RCA's international department is kicking off its series of foreign-made packages in the U.S. with two albums stemming from Sweden and Italy. Under this new plan, the albums will be manufactured in Mexico, but will be handled through regular RCA Victor distribs in the U.S. It's figured that the Mexican setup is geared to a lower per-unit volume and can handle the albums being made by RCA affiliates abroad.

One set due for early release is a collection of authentic Swedish folk music, recorded in Stockholm by Mat Olsson. The other album will feature the 20 prizewinning songs at the recent Naples Song Festival, as delivered by the Festival performers, including Elio Mauro, Nilla Pizzi, Teddy Reno, Miranda Martino and Stella Dizzy.

40 ASCAP Writers Establish Group To Fight Decree's 'Old Tunes' Payoff

The changes in the ASCAP operation, proposed by the new Dept. of Justice consent order, is coming under heavy attack from a newly organized group of songwriters. Representing a cross-section of relatively young, active writers with numerous hits to their credit, this cleffer group is centering its fire on what it terms a "30% takeaway" of its earning power.

Under the consent order, ASCAP would change its writer distribution system so as to allocate 30% of the total payoff for songs that are one year old or older, a category known as the "recognized works fund." This is a new payoff category for writers, although the publishers have had a similar setup for their ASCAP distributions.

According to the critics, the "recognized works fund" represents a move by the older writers to collect extra on standard songs. Hal David, who was named chairman of a group of 40 writers who met in New York last week, said the new 30% allocation for old tunes is "a premium for the inactive writer and a penalty for the active writer." He pointed out that the payoff on new hits is being reduced to increase the performance rewards for old tunes.

Included in the David group, as yet without a formal title, are such writers as Mack Wolfson, Leon Carr, Aaron Schroeder, Sonny Skylar, Sid Wayne, Hy Zaret, Sherman Edwards and Eddie White, among others. David emphasized that this group represented a responsible group of cleffers who had no relation to the chronic hotheads and popoffs within the Society's ranks.

Division of Pot

The current ASCAP payoff for writers is divided as follows: 20% for current performances; 30% for performances over a five-year period; 30% for an availability fund (similar to five-year average but with a brake on promotions and demotions), and 20% for seniority. The new payoff proposal would eliminate the availability fund for the recognized works fund.

Under ASCAP's traditional thinking, the standards have been rated as "more important" than current hits. The customers of ASCAP, according to this viewpoint, are buying the ASCAP cat-

Presley Keeps Rolling

Elvis Presley is still rolling along. His latest single for RCA Victor, "Big Hunk O' Love," has already passed the 1,000,000 sales marker and is the fifth consecutive disk to hit the golden circle since he entered the U.S. Army in March, 1958. Over 10,000,000 Presley disks were sold in the U.S. during 1958 with an even stronger showing expected this year.

Presley has had 14 consecutive singles to hit 1,000,000 in sales. Seven of these have sold over 2,000,000 while one disk, coupling "Hound Dog" and "Don't Be Cruel," has cracked the 5,000,000 mark, setting a new standard for individual disk sales.

New DJ Assn. Aims 'Sell' Via Live TV

Hollywood, July 28.

The critical press stories hitting the public following the national deejay convention in Miami two months ago has brought about formation of the Disk Jockey Assn. Inc., a national organizatoin to bring about a better understanding and goodwill toward the platter-spinners.

The new deejay org, which came about following a meeting in Milwaukee July 17, went into gear with approximately 16 members roundtabling at the first session to lay down bylaws and regulations and purpose.

Jim Hawthorne, deejay of KDAY and tv station KTTV here, has been named acting prexy until the deejay group can hold an official election.

According to Hawthorne, the org will operate as a non-profit corporation with no assistance from others except the membership, and will be open to anyone with two or more years of experience as a disk jockey or in music programming.

A full board of 56 members will be elected at the first annual meeting in 1960, and until then the present officers and directors will act in that capacity.

One of the first things to be tackled by the deejay group is to produce a live tv show which will feature top recording talent.

The slate of officers includes Scott Muni, WMCA, N. Y., 1st veepee; Bob "Coffeehead" Larsen, WRIT, Chicago, 2d v.p.; Fred Hohl, WAME, Miami, 3d v.p.; Charlie Austin, KVLC, Little Rock, 4th v.p.; Robin Seymour, WKMH, Dearborn, Mich., v.p. in charge of public relations, and Bill Gavin, Lucky Lager Dance Time, San Francisco, secretary-treasurer.

Membership fee was set at $10 per year.

Dot Names Norman Greer Ad-Sales Promo Director

Hollywood, July 28.

Norman Greer, who has been working independently on a national scale, been appointed advertising and sales promotion director of Dot Records.

Greer, dissolving his own flackery to accept the post, will direct all matters pertaining to sales, deejay promotion, distributor and dealer relations, artists relations and ad-pub relations.

Jan Peerce took off yesterday (Tues.) for an extensive tour of Australia.

He plans to return to the U.S. in September after vacationing in Hong Kong.

R&R Disks, Interred By Frisco's KGO, Turn Up In American Samoa Bar

San Francisco, July 28.

More than a year ago KGO Radio here dropped rock 'n' roll records from its programming. Ever since, some 150 records have been gathering dust in the station library—until this month.

A few weeks ago, Joey Rardin, cruise director for Matson Navigation Co., phoned KGO program manager Edward Smith and asked if Smith had any reject records the station would give to the owner of the Pago Bar, in American Samoa.

Smith got a bright idea. Not only would he give Rardin new, rejected r&r, but he'd also donate the leftovers. And this month the Matson liner, Montery, hauled a heavy load of Elvis Presley, Fats Domino and Conway Twitty shellacs to the Pago Bar, which has the only phonograph on the tiny tropical island.

Rardin, just back from the Monterey cruise, says the r&r can be heard, loud and clear, all the way from the bar to the pier where the ship docks three blocks away. He claims one woman passenger on the cruise thought she was listening to native Samoan music until she was told what it was.

A further result of the KGO donation is that a sign has now been tacked up in front of the Pago Bar. It reads:

"KGO, San Francisco, Samoan Studios. Where Rock & Roll Records Go To Die."

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By HERM SCHOENFELD

Edmundo Ros (London): "SCOTLAND THE BRAVE" (Burlington*) is a colorful instrumental, with a bagpipe brogue dated to nab plenty of spins. "COMIN' THRU THE RYE" (Burlington*) has a similar idea.

Al Hibbler (Decca): "LONESOME AND COLD" (Copar†), a neat ballad, is delivered in this singer's customary style. "IT WON'T BE EASY" (Barton*) is another okay ballad.

Ray Ventura Orch (Versailles): "THE ORANGES OF JAFFA" (Rayven†) gets an attractive instrumental workover. "THE GOLDEN STRIKER" (Rayven†) is another bouncing rhythm number for easy listening.

Frankie Laine (Columbia): "EL DIABLO" (Stanley*) is a dramatic opus with a driving beat that this singer knows how to project to the hilt. "THE VALLEY OF A HUNDRED HILLS" (Exeter*) is another arresting piece of original material for fine change-of-pace programming.

Sal Mineo (Epic): "MAKE BELIEVE BABY" (Toga*), a snappy ballad, is vocalled in commercial style, with a potent assist from the orch and choral background. "YOUNG AS WE ARE" (Tryton†) is a pretty ballad with a light rocking beat.

Jeri Southern (Capitol): "RUN" (Famous*), a sharply written ballad with a firm enough beat for the current market, is handled by this savvy songstress with cool understatement. "DON'T LOOK AT ME THAT WAY" (Harms*), a lesser known Cole Porter tune, is nicely handled.

The Crests (Coed): "THE ANGELS LISTENED IN" (Winneton†) is a neat rocking ballad delivered by this vocal combo in a way the juves understand. "I THANK THE MOON" (Winneton†) is a more routine entry.

Eddie Cochran (Liberty): "BOLL WEEVIL SONG" (Fireside†), a down-to-earth country song, gets a highly flavorsome vocal by this rockabilly performer. "SOMETHIN' ELSE" (Metric†) is another strong uptempo entry with chances.

Les Baxter Orch (Capitol): "SABRE DANCE" (Ardmore*), is an exciting orch-choral version which will earn this Russian import a hefty round of new spins. "MILORD" (Hill & Range†) changes pace with a light-textured melodic idea.

Jimmy Judge (Torch): "AMAPOLA" (Marks†), the standard, gets an okay, straightforward version of this comic-turned-singer. "IN MY LITTLE REDBOOK" (Marks†) is a pleasant entry.

Jimmy Gilmer (Decca): "BECAUSE I NEED YOU" (Norman*), a pretty ballad, is projected in highly pleasing style by this country singer. "LOOK ALIVE" (Ner Ja Vak†) is routine rockability stuff.

Luther Brandon (Fraternity): "BLUE SKIRT WALTZ" (Mills*) is a nifty ballad with beat which could hit big via this catching version. "TUFF-A-NUFF" (Buckeye*) is a hard-driving instrumental with a one-phrase lyric.

Penny Candy (Flippin'): "THE ROCKING LADY" (Village†) is a familiarly cut rhythm number vocalled in adequate style for this genre. "WHY EACH NIGHT" (Village†) is a good ballad in the contemporary manner.

Lee Greenlee (Brent): "CHERRY, I'M IN LOVE WITH YOU" (Danbury†), a ballad with a charming folk flavor, gets a colorful rockabilly workover which may create some noise. "STARLIGHT" (Danbury†) gently rocks an old lullaby in winning style.

Billy Grammer (Monument): "WILLY, QUIT YOUR PLAYING" (Acuff-Rose†) is a country entry with a first-rate lyric and catching rhythm which should give this side wide spins. "IT TAKES YOU" (Acuff-Rose†) is another fine piece of material in a similar idiom.

Eddie Ballantine Orch (B&F): "IT'S A WONDERFUL WORLD" (Brandom*), an oldfashioned type of inspirational number, is delivered in suitable two-beat style with the Jack Halloran Group vocalling. "YOU'RE HAPPY WHEN YOU DANCE" (Brandom*) is a lilting side.

Album Reviews

George Bassman Orch & Chorus: "The Gershwin Years" (Decca). This handsome three-platter package seals 1959 as year that Gershwin was "rediscovered" on wax. Coming on top of the couple of dozen "Porgy and Bess" albums, this collection is an extensive sampling of the composer's songalog, intelligently arranged in historical sequence, and performed in crisp style under George Bassman's baton. The arrangements are fresh and rich, and above all, they present in lucid form the Gershwin melodies and the lyrics by various collaborators, including Murray Roth, Schuyler Greene, Irving Caesar, Arthur Jackson, Buddy DeSylva, Ballard McDonald, Gus Kahn and, most numerously and notably, Ira Gershwin. Paula Stewart, Lynn Roberts and Richard Hayes handle the solo vocals excellently, doing tunes from shows like "Ladies First," "Good Morning, Judge," "La La Lucille," "George White's Scandals," "Lady, Be Good," "Tip Toes," "Oh, Kay," "Funny Face," "Rosalie," "Treasure Girl," "Show Girl," "Strike Up The Band," "Girl Crazy," "Of Thee I Sing," "Pardon My English," "Let 'Em Eat Cake" and "Porgy & Bess," plus film tunes from "Shall We Dance," "A Damsel In Distress" and "The Goldwyn Follies." Photos of Gershwin, an intro by Louis Uutermeyer, a long biographical essay by Edward Jablonski, a rundown of the Gershwin Broadway and Hollywood songalog by Miles Kreuger, and an excellent color print of a Gershwin self-portrait, make this set a highly valuable addendum to any library of Gershwiniana.

Larry Elgart Orch: "New Sounds At The Roosevelt" (RCA Victor). Recorded during his recent stand at the Roosevelt Hotel, N.Y., Grill, this is the best set cut by Larry Elgart's band. Not too far out, Elgart has come up with a solid swing quality in the ensemble playing and some fine solos by such sidemen as tenor saxist Al Cohn and trombonist Wayne Andre plus the leader's reed work. The tunes range from "Wabash Blues" to "Mountain Greenery."

Fred Astaire: "Easy To Dance With" (Verve). Fred Astaire's effortless style, whether hoofing or singing, is demonstrated once again in this offering. Astaire delivers with an easy charm that may never knock anyone down, but which stands up very well over repeated spins. Backed by tasteful combo and band arrangements, he sings tunes like "I'm Building Up To An Awful Letdown," "The Way You Look Tonight," "I Concentrate On You," "There's No Time Like the Present" and the title song of the LP.

"The Sound of Speed" (Dot). Taking off from the hi-fi faddist's interest in the recorded echoes of locomotives, jet planes, racing cars, etc., this set has added a musical dimension to the sound of speed. Composer Bob Thompson has incorporated the actual sounds of various power-propelled objects into atmospheric numbers which make some musical sense. Thompson's compositions evoke images of sailing boats, subway trains, streetcars, helicopters, missiles etc. Paul Baron conducts the Orchestra dei Concerti di Roma.

"Paul Robeson At Carnegie Hall" (Vanguard). A followup album to the one released by this label last year, this set was cut at Paul Robesan's 1958 performance at New York's Carnegie Hall, N.Y., his first in 11 years. Robeson's commanding talent, as vigorous as ever, is captured on this excellently recorded platter which covers a variety of spirituals, longhair selections and a monolog from "Othello." The only distraction is the shattering applause of audience after each number.

"William Holden Presents A Musical Touch of Far Away Places" (Warner Bros.). Presumably Bill Holden's name and picture on this album will be a sales angle, but actually the actor has little relation to what's in the groove. It's a series of exotic place portraits in music arranged and conducted by Warren Barker, who rates a nod for the imaginative adaptation of Far Eastern musical effects in an occidental pattern. Among the tunes are "Tokyo Trolley," a clever arrangement of "The Trolley Song," and "Kyoto Merry-Go-Round," based on "My Resistance Is Low."

George Romanis Orch: "Modern Sketches In Jazz" (Coral). This is a neat jazz treatment of a group of songs by four top composers, George Gershwin, Richard Rodgers, Duke Ellington and Cole Porter. Leading a middling-sized combo, George Romanis has managed to keep a recognizable melodic outline while giving the tunes a modern workover. Set comprises a dozen top standards, including "Someone To Watch Over Me," "My Heart Stood Still," "Mood Indigo," "In The Still Of The Night" and "Solitude."

"The Kings IV At Large" (United Artists). The Kings IV, a quartet of vocalists and instrumentalists, flash their slick brand of showmanship in this package. These lads who play about 20 instruments among them, perform in a variety of grooves, from dixieland to rock 'n' roll, but always with a smooth gloss that makes their product easy to take. Their vocalizing is also first-rate. They do tunes like "Blow, Gabriel, Blow," "Sit Down, You're Rocking The Boat," "It's Only A Paper Moon," "It's A Long, Long Way To Tipperary" and "Birth of the Blues."

"The Sidney Bechet Story" (Brunswick). Sidney Bechet, a jazz giant who died a few months ago, is memorialized in this collection of sides made at various times since 1938. As demonstrated on this LP, Bechet maintained throughout his career that hauntingly intense sound on his soprano sax, a sound that was uniquely his. Playing with various combos, including several French crews in the 1950s, the set includes numbers like "Sweet Patootie," "Black Stick," "The Cotton Ball," "The 14th of July," "The Fish Vendor" and others.

William Gunther: "Cocktail Hour With Verdi" (Request). A flock of familiar melodies from Verdi operas has been fashioned into a pleasing set which could be called "mood music for middlebrows." William Gunther, with rhythm accompaniment, performs each of the brief selections in a rich, but unobtrusive, style which tempers the longhair element with an easily understood pop approach.

Seattle-IBM's Radio-Music Survey

Seattle, July 28.

What kind of music does the radio audience really like? Are present-day polls, based on record sales and requests, truly indicative of popular music preferences?

These moot questions and others are being tackled here by radio KING and the International Business Machines Corp. in one of the most comprehensive surveys of popular-music preference ever attempted.

More than 100,000 persons over the age of 12 in 15 western Washington counties will be polled by mail. This represents approximately 10% of the population reached by signals of Seattle's major radio stations.

Serving as consultant on the project will be Dr. Stuart Carter Dodd, director of the Washington Public Opinion Laboratory at the U. of Washington.

The KING-IBM survey will last two weeks and is expected to be completed some time in August. Fifty individual surveys will also be conducted on the air.

Those receiving survey cards will be asked to tune to KING and listen to excerpts from 10 recordings that are representative of five categories of popular music. Residents will be asked to rate the recordings according to likes and dislikes. The results will be tabulated by the Seattle IBM office.

Dr. Todd has been conducting the accuracy of the music "census." "How correct it proves will be dependent, of course, upon the percentage of public response to the survey," he said. "In planning the questionnaire, we attempted to make it as scientific as possible to control the many variables that enter into public-opinion sampling."

Dr. Dodd has been conducting surveys for 25 years and has been with U. of W.'s Public Opinion laboratory the past 12.

KING station manager Earl Reilly said he felt programming should reflect the musical preference of the general public, not the personal tastes of announcers, program directors or station management. "This survey," he said, "should provide a scientific gauge of what the public wants on radio."

Mahalia Cancels Denver

Denver, July 28.

Concert by Mahalia Jackson scheduled for last Friday (24) at the Auditorium Theatre was cancelled on short notice due to the death early in the week of the singer's brother in New Orleans.

Miss Jackson departed from New York for the Louisiana city, immediately on receipt of the news, to attend the funeral.

Refund of the advance sale was announced by Hugh Hooks, Denver impresario, who said the singer may give a recital later in the season if a suitable date can be arranged.

Singapore Juke Ban Cues Unloading Try in Aussie

Sydney, July 21.

Singapore jukebox merchants are reported as keen to secure a market here for $500,000 worth of gear laid idle by the banning of fun parlors by the People's Action Party government. Understood, too, that the jukers are anxious to unload thousands of disks at a very nominal figure.

Spokesman for the jukers headquartered in Singapore said that 4,000 persons, mostly natives, had been thrown out of work because of the ban. Spokesman also said that apart from this sector, bids would be made to sell jukeboxes and disks in British Borneo.

Regarded as unlikely that the government here will greenlight the Singapore try.

'You Ain't Heard Nothin' Yet' Keys Warner Bros. Records Fall Program

Warner Bros. Records is pitching its fall program on a "You Ain't Heard Nothin' Yet!" theme. The pitch was made at sales convention at the WB home lot in Burbank, Calif., and in New York with execs, staffers, distributors and sales personnel in attendance.

James B. Conkling keynoted the sessions with a stress on stereo. He said, "We've never recorded one note that was not recorded specifically for stereo. Our philosophy is to record our entire catalog in stereo as well as standard monophonic longplay. We believe that the stereo market is just beginning to show its growth potential and we are keying our efforts to make the record consumer stereo-conscious in general and Warner stereo-conscious in particular."

In line with the stereo stress, the "You Ain't Heard Nothin' Yet!" program introduced a new special "stereo demonstrator" which will be made available to dealers participating in the campaign. Demonstrator is called "The Listening Post," a small stand consisting of a special stereo record player and earphones, both mounted on a portable stand. "The Listening Post" is designed to demonstrated stereo to the average consumer who has been confused by the myriad statements describing stereo.

Another part of the program is a complete "stereo-audiovisual" catalog, a special five-record album of stereo records mounted on "The Listening Post." Each record contains specially selected one-minute samples of the entire WB catalog.

All albums from the August (12 packages) and September (12 packages) releases and the "YAHNY!" merchandising campaign were demonstrated at the meets via a slide film and stereo soundtrack. The first album in the August release is an LP entitled "You Ain't Heard Nothin' Yet!," a stereo sampler tied in with the merchandising campaign and featuring performances by a flock of WB artists. Other LPs feature Edd (Kookie) Byrnes, Buddy Cole, Warren Barker orch, the Play Tonics, Eddie Condon, Maurice Levine orch, Carole Carr, the Outriggers and Matty Matlock orch. On tap for September are such artists as George Greeley, Raoul Meynard, Muir Mathieson, Irving Taylor, Jim Timmens, David Terry, Marty Wilson, Billy Byrd, Al (Spider) Dugan, and the Almanac Singers.

Boston Bally

Boston, July 28.

Warner Bros. Record Sales Corp. nabbed big turnout of New England dealers to intro new merchandising campaign on theme "You Ain't Heard Nothin' Yet" at the Statler Hilton Hotel last week (21).

BULLSEYE LABEL ON 'MULTI-PLAY' TARGET

With a speed battle brewing on the major diskeries' singles level between the 33rpm and the 45 rpm, the indie Bullseye label is stepping in with its own disk innovation. Bullseye is introducing a "Multi-Play" platter which is the size of a standard 45 rpm disk but contains four tunes, two on each side of the record.

The "Multi-Play" platter differs from the present EP record in that there is no band between the selections and each tune will run less than a minute-and-a-half, making the playing time of each new "M-P" record under six minutes. Unlike the EP, the list price of the "M-P" will by 98c, same as the standard two-tune 45 rpm.

The first release of the "M-P" series for Bullseye will feature the Silver Strings of Paris. The tunes are "I'll Be Home," "Cry My Love," "Falling Leaves" and "Raindrops."

Initial "M-P" record, to be issued this week, will be packaged in a two-color sleeve for both dealers and operators. The disk will be available in both monaural and stereo. Bullseye currently is prepping other releases for next month.

Vitality and Realism In 'Blow Up A Storm,' Garson Kanin's Novel

Garson Kanin dug into the past, probably his own, to recapture the music world of the early 1930s for his first novel "Blow Up A Storm" (Random House; $3.95). Playwright-director Kanin is jazz-oriented, having done some blowing of his own, on sax, in his salad days and his experience serves him well.

His picturing of a jazz combo at work, the delights of digging music (live and on wax), and the junkie jousts, is neat, precise and knowing. It gives the book a vitality and realism that so many novels about the jazz scene have tried for and missed.

Kanin, however, fails to blow up a complete storm as a novelist. The in-and-out flashbacking creates a choppy effect and the theme that hate destroys the hater as well as the one who is hated is laid out in melodramatic terms that dissipate its impact.

But Kanin has remembered his jazz incubation and he spells it out clearly and with convitcion. It's his insight on what makes music and musicians that gives the book its punch. Gros.

Nelson Verbit On Listening Booths: They Chase Sales

Nelson Verbit, president of Marnel Distributors in Philadelphia and Baltimore, is against "listening booths." In a letter sent to all record retailers serviced by the two branches of his firm, Verbit warned that the use of customer listening booths hurts record sales.

Verbit stated that in a survey conducted by his sales force, he found that top record retailers are agreed that the listening booth retards sales. According to Verbit, three reasons were given for the growing retailer disenchantment with the record store listening booth device: 1) They attract people who come into the store with no intention of buying; this is particularly true of the growing number of record club members. 2) They tend to create a feeling in the customer that he should listen to the recording before he buys it; this takes a lot of time and discourages people who have only a few minutes to spare. 3) The chances of pilferage are much higher because of teenagers who have a habit of taking a handful of singles into the booth with them.

"The number of defective records made today is so small," the distributor topper said, "there is really no necessity for listening to them from beginning to end. By the same token, this business of listening limits the number of selections the customer will make during the time he spends in the store. The best system, he adds, is to have a centrally located player, or several of them, on which a salesman can demonstrate a few bars of the recording. This gives the salesman an opportunity to "push" the disk while he's playing it and also to add sales by pitching the platter to the other customers in the store.

Albuquerque AFM Nixes Mix With Non-Unioneers At Cuffo Jazz Concert

Albuquerque, July 28.

Hassle developed in Albuquerque last week between local 618, American Federation of Musicians, and promoters of Club 7, non-profit local group organized to upbeat live jazz, as a result of an open air free public concert.

Al Field, director of the club, had ballyhooed concert in advance publicity as being of union and non-union musicians, but Sunday night none of the card-carrying tootlers showed, and the concert went on without union assist.

Paul Muench, prexy of the local, said that when the club was organized in April, directors of it and the union got together and agreed that union men could play with non-union musicians "in private sessions for club members behind closed doors."

Muench last week, prior to the concert, in routine newsletter to local members, reminded unionists they could not mix with club members in free concert. He explained that the free concert could be held either with all union or all non-union jazzsters playing, but they could not mix, for the public free show.

Club directors wanted both groups to mix, but had to settle for non-union musicians. Session went on without aid of a drummer, since no non-card boys play the skins.

Local 47 Scraps Work-Limit Rule

Hollywood, July 28.

Abolishment of a 20 year-old "quota system" which imposed a work limitation will now give membership of Local 47, American Federation of Musicians, opportunity to remain on a job as long as they wish. System, rescinded now by local's board, was voted by membership itself two decades ago.

Quotas were abolished, according to local's attorney Robert Rissman, to avoid the possibility of NLRB compelling local to enter into an NLRB settlement agreement in connection with unfair labor practice charges. Such charges were previously filed by William Hinshaw and Milton Bernhardt, tunesters who attacked union's method of enforcing the quota system.

Union in the labor board case denied any violation of the law, Rissman said, but wished to avoid costly litigation and possibility of damages that could be imposed on union and membership, and hence effected the quota change.

"The local felt that it would be unfair to its law-abiding members who would voluntarily comply with quotas to permit the small illegal grasping and selfish groups to continue to violate quota laws behind the cloak of the Taft-Hartley immunity," Rissman declared.

Xavier Symphony Guild Inc. has been formed under the membership corporations law to operate on a nonprofit basis in New York. John Herbert Tovey Jr., of Manhattan, filed the certificate at Albany.

RAINED-ON LONGHAIR

Crowds of 9,000 Risk Elements At Red Rocks Amphi

Denver, July 28.

The hazard of unsettled weather holds little dread for Denverites when there is an attraction they really want to see and hear.

This was demonstrated vividly recently when more than 9,000 persons packed the Red Rocks amphitheatre July 14 to hear Jose Iturbi and his sister Amparo in a dual piano concert with the Denver Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Saul Caston, conductor, and again July 17, when more than 6,500 contentedly sat in the rain-soaked amphitheatre under hastily draped blankets and (for the wary) raincoats and upraised unbrellas waiting for a sudden mountain storm to subside and permit the San Francisco Ballet to proceed with its interrupted presentation.

A larger attendance braved the elements July 18 to watch the same ballet company offer a different program under the stars in the naturally formed huge amphitheatre whose sheer red rock walls tower over 300 feet on either side while a natural picturesquely formed boulder creates a backdrop of rare beauty.

Kinsman Due in U.S.

London, July 28.

British society bandleader Tommy Kinsman is heading for the U.S. Aug. 22 on a combined business-vacation trip. A solid album seller on the Oriole and Philips' Fontana labels here, Kinsman will o.o. the U.S. disk market.

Four years ago, Kinsman made a 10,000-mile trek through the U.S. on a Greyhound bus.

Pubberies Win 20G Sesac Settlement

Sesac, privately owned performance licensing organization, shelled out $20,000 recently in a settlement of legal actions brought against it by five publishers. Actions arose from publishers' claim that they had not been paid their proper allotments out of the license fees collected by Sesac for use of their music on radio and tv. In addition, they claimed that Sesac had not distributed a surplus fund of nearly $300,000 accumulated from royalties due to its affiliated publishers.

The action against Sesac was brought in N. Y. Supreme Court a couple of years ago by two publishers, Eddie Alkire Publications of Easton, Pa., and Robert Forberg, of Germany. In addition to these two, three other publishers then also asserted claims for back payments. They were Stamps-Baxter, John T. Benson and Harmonia Music. Judge Henry Epstein, who was hearing the original Alkire case, intervened to settle all five claims at the same time for $20,000. Charles Belous was attorney for the five publishers.

Graham Vice Waite at WBR

Hollywood, July 28.

Alan Waite, Warner Bros. Records field promo man in the Southern California area, has exited the diskery to set up shop independently. He was with the company for about four months.

Don Graham, WBR's rep in the San Francisco Bay area, is transferring down here to supplant Waite.

Major Diskery Forming in Mex; $2,400,000 Outlay

Mexico City, July 28.

A new major diskery which will invade the local and international market may be functioning before end of the year. While nobody is talking at the moment, venture is to be backed by high politicos of the past regime (Adolfo Ruiz Cortinez), with Mrs. Cortinez also providing part of the 30,000,000 pesos ($2,400,000) initial capitalization.

Plan is to erect a small, compact "record city" in the Colonia Narvarte section of this city, for production plant, modern waxing studios, distribution, promotion offices, etc. Machinery, scheduled to arrive from Germany, will require an outlay of $1,200,000.

At latest, diskery will go into production in February of 1960. Firm will plug Mexican music and artists, and heavy promotional campaign will be launched to give biggest impetus to sales of Mexican disks on an international scale.

Once in operation, new diskery will be major element in the Mexican recording field, far outstripping most of the financially weaker firms now in business, and on a par with and possibly exceeding the facilities of American subsidiaries operating in Mexico. As far as can be learned, there is no plan initially to pact international singers. Accent will be on Mexican songsters to build up world prestige and record sales for national artists.

Flamingo Heads Claim Yankee Concert Bashes Hurt Brit. Jazz Clubs

London, July 21.

"Too frequent" appearances in London concert halls by American jazz names are blamed by Sam and Jeff Kruger, toppers of the London frontline jazz club Flamingo, for the tough tussle British jazz clubs are having. The Krugers declare that the jazzeries will continue to suffer until they're able to book such stars themselves, a move at present stymied by union resistance.

Decelerating effect on the b.o. applied by the visit of U.S. combos is emphasized, according to the Flamingo duo, by the fact that currently and with no further "invasion" due till September, jazz clubs biz is once more on the upgrade and the Flamingo itself has hit an all-time high during the past month. In fact, the Flamingo claims that it's holding its own all along the line, with takings over the first six 1959 months showing a 17% increase on the corresponding period in 1958, which year set a record. New members in '59 total 3,000, with admissions to date numbering over 44,000.

The Flamingo is bidding for big U.S. names for the winter, incidentally, aiming via Associated Booking Corp. to grab attractions such as Buddy Rich, Dakota Staton, Jackie Cain and Roy Kraal. It's also hoping to do an exchange deal for someone like Gerry Mulligan.

The Krugers add that if there were a more restricted season for touring American attractions—meaning outfits like Basie's and Armstrong's—plus more help from BBC, diskeries and tv networks in presenting British modern jazz, the paybox click could be even louder.

Mass Quits MPHC Group

Hollywood, July 28.

Jack Mass, for 10 years Coast rep of Harms, Remick and Witmark, pubberies under Music Publishers Holding Corp., has resigned, effective in two weeks.

Understood Mass is negotiating with another company.

Goodman on Merc A&R

Chicago, July 28.

Mercury has added Nat Goodman (manager of the idled Diamonds vocal group) to its pop a&r staff in Los Angeles.

He's a former oboist with the Canadian Symphony and has done song arranging and publishing.

Mexican-Made Global Disk Gleam; Everything From Polkas to Corridos

Mexico City, July 28.

Mexican disks totally made here, featuring the best Mexican melodies interpreted by local singers, will invade the entire world from now on. A wide program of distribution has been launched and will gain momentum in 1960, according to a statement issued by the Mexican subsidiary of RCA Victor Records.

RCA is preparing a series of polkas, huapangos, pasodobles, jarabes, corridos, etc., with these stressing the best of folklore music and interpreters.

Initial disk is a series of 12 "sones" or improvised ballads interpreted by the united Vargas and America mariachis, with arrangements by Ruben Fuentes. These include such outstanding favorites here as La Negra (The Negress); Las Olas (The Waves); Los Arrieros (The Mule Skinners); Las Alazanas (The Sorrels); El Triste (The Sad One); Camino Real de Colima (The Colima Royal Road); El Carretero (The Postman); El Maracumbe; El Gavilancillo (The Little Sparrow Hawk); El Perico Loro (The Tawny Parrot); El Tirador (The Shooter) and El Becerro (The Calf).

Soon folklore disk fans will have a chance at hearing these loud-voiced interpretations of Mexican ballads, unique from the oldtime favorites known north of the border. RCA is setting up distributorships in principal American cities as well as in Colombia, Venezuela, Chile, Lima, Bolivia, Argentina, Brazil, Cuba, Puerto Rico and Santo Domingo.

In the world blanket coverage platters will also be distributed in Spain, Italy, France, Germany, England, Holland, Switzerland, Belgium, etc., as well as in Japan and other Far Eastern areas.

Herrmann's Carillon Label

Hollywood, July 28.

Carillon Records, a new Coast indie company, has been formed by pianist Bud Herrmann. Distribution offices have already been set in N. Y., Chicago, Philadelphia and other key cities.

Initial release is "The Big Circus," title tune from the Irwin Allen film for Allied Artists. Disk will feature Herrmann with a calliope, a full-scale orchestral backing and children's chorus. Sammy Fain and Paul Francis Webster penned the tune.

Rice Revives Hoofing

Houston, July 28.

An old local tradition, dancing at the Rice, will be revived Aug. 8, when Ed Gerlach's orch will be featured in the first of a summer dance series in the new grand ballroom of the Rice Hotel.

The new ballroom is part of a multimillion-dollar expansion program just completed at the hotel.

Palitz Quits Jubilee

Morty Palitz has exited Jubilee Records after three years. He had been label's veepee and artists & repertoire chief. Label will be run on a reduced scale by topper Jerry Blaine.

Palitz, who had been a&r chief at Decca and who also was associated with Columbia Records, is currently lining up a new a&r affiliation.

SEE MOVE IN BRITAIN TO CUT DISK PRICES

London, July 28.

According to indications, there's going to be a lowering of some disk prices by major British labels. The move has been considered likely for some time in view of lower-than-1958 sales and the progress of cut-price platters issued by relatively small outfits, while the introduction by Rank Records earlier this month of a 45 rpm disk carrying six hit parade titles as just under $1 clearly represented a potential flashpoint. General cost for such a 45 rpm platter is around $1.50.

Electric & Musical Industries Ltd., controlling many labels, is the first major to hint at any price-lopping but is cagey about giving details. It's learned, however, that it will shortly introduce a new range of pressings under its HMV label at the same price as the Top Rank "King Size" series aforementioned. Something similar will be launched under the Columbia insignia.

Sarah Vaughan Switches to Roulette; Jo Baker on French Wax; Other Deals

'Fun-Party' Albums From Kay Thompson's Diggings

Nitery performer Kay Thompson has come up with a new disk wrinkle in a projected series of albums which she'll cut for Hanover Records. She's calling 'em "Fun-Party" albums and they'll be recorded at parties she'll give in her New York apartment. Composer-singer Ralph Blane and pianist Andre Previn will work with her.

At the parties, Hanover will record not only Miss Thompson's music and comedy performances, but the acts and conversation of her guests. The parties will tie in with various holidays and seasonal ideas.

Prager & Fenton Shifts Jack Engelman to Coast

Prager & Fenton, CPA firm active in the music biz, has moved Jack Engelman from its New York to its Hollywood office.

Among its assignments in the music biz, Prager & Fenton certifies gold record awards to artists for the Record Industry Assn. of America. It also audits for the publishers' agent and trustee, Harry Fox, as well as several publishing companies.

Roulette: Sarah Vaughan

Sarah Vaughan is leaving her longtime berth at Mercury Records for the Roulette label. Deal with Roulette is for four years begining April, 1960. Morris Levy, diskery's prez, plans to record the thrush for the pop markets as well as the jazz field under his Birdland Series line. Miss Vaughan is the second major artist to be wooed away from Mercury by Roulette in recent months, the other being Billy Eckstine.

AREA: Josephine Baker

Josephine Baker, who is currently starring in a revue at the Olympia Theatre in Paris, has been signed to an exclusive pact by AREA, the RCA Victor affiliate in Paris. Her first album, already recorded, is due to be released shortly in both France and the U.S.

RCA Victor: Jaime Laredo

Jaime Laredo, 18-year-old Bolivian-born violinist who recently won the 1959 International Competition sponsored by the Belgian royal family, has been inked to the RCA Victor Red Seal roster. Laredo, currently a student at Curtis Institute, will make his N.Y. recital debut at Carnegie Hall, N.Y., Oct. 19.

His first set for Victor includes selections by Vivaldi and Wieniawski.

Capitol: 8 New Diskers

Capitol Records has signed eight new artists to recording pacts. Best known of the new diskers is Muzzy Marcellino, longtime musical director on the "Art Linkletter House Party" show over CBS-TV. He'll record under the supervision of a&r producer John Palladino.

The other pactees include the Polka Chips and singer Gary von Ilg, who'll work under a&r man Tom Morgan; Johnny Caruso and Kathy Taylor, to be sessioned under Ken Nelson; the Bush Boys, composer-arranger Hub Atwood, and a new singer Young Jessie, all to record under Buck Stapleton's guidance.

Simultaneously, an option agreement between Cap and singer Richard Cannon has been converted into a longterm pact. Cannon, who has already cut two singles for Cap, is a singing bartender at Ben Blue's nitery on the Coast.

King: Cozy Cole

Drummer Cozy Cole will now be banging out sides for Syd Nathan's King label. Cole clicked on disks for the first time last year with "Topsy" on the Love label. His first single release under the King banner will be "Blop-Up" backed with "Blop Down."

Urania: Mildred Dilling

Harpist Mildred Dilling has joined the Urania roster. Her first LP, scheduled for fall release, will be called "Romantic Music For The Harp Played By The First Lady Of The Harp." In addition to concertizing, Miss Dilling is the author of two books on the harp.

N.Y. Hi-Fi Show On Decor Binge

How far the hi-fi industry has come from its original bare-chassis-and-exposed-wire state is indicated by the fact that the upcoming High Fidelity Music Show at the N. Y. Trade Show Building, Oct. 5-10, will be pegged to home decoration. Highlight of the show will be five model rooms designed by the American Institute of Decorators to dramatize the decor motifs possible with stereo component sets.

To date, 86 exhibitors have signed up for the annual event with indications that all 115 display rooms will be sold out by the time the show is ready to open. First day of the show will be "dealer day," reserved for the trade only. Thereafter it will be open to the public for a boxoffice charge.

Coincidental with the hi-fi show, the Audio Engineering Society will hold its 11th annual convention at the Hotel New Yorker, Oct. 5-9. Technical papers on the latest development in the audio field, including stereo, will be presented as well as an exhibit of professional audio equipment.

Top Record Talent and Tunes

VARIETY DISK JOCKEY POLL

This compilation is designed to indicate those records rising in popularity as well as those on top. Ratings are computed on the basis of ten points for a No. 1 mention, nine for a No. 2, and so on down to one point. Wherever possible, only records with two or more mentions are listed, even though their total points are less in some cases than those which receive only one mention. Cities and jockeys will vary from week to week to present a comprehensive picture of all sectors of the country regionally.

Book 18-Piece Mex Orch For Acapulco in Paris

Mexico City, July 21.

The new 18-man Stars of Mexico orchestra, directed by saxophonist and arranger Hector (The Arab) Hallal, which debuted recently in this capital, is headed for a date at the Acapulco night club in Paris.

Actual takeoff date is early in August. Meanwhile Hallal is busy working on arrangements which will be featured in the Paris night club, as well as on a tour of other key French cities, so that "the musical progress achieved in Mexico in recent years can be properly presented in France."

Single Biz

added, say Hugo & Luigi. The kids are buying their own tape machines and are editing their own pop music programs for replay. The kids snip out the disk jockey talk from the taped shows to get uninterrupted pop music reels containing anywhere from 20 to 40 numbers per spool. Some jockeys are trying to counteract this practice, since it also cuts down on radio listening, by talking over the first chorus of songs.

One of the factors in the decline of the single record biz, Hugo & Luigi point out, is the loss of excitement in the list of hits. In the old days, the "Hit Parade" was regarded as the sole barometer, they said. Then it was dissipated into city-by-city listing and today, it's a station-by-station listing with everybody having his own private "Top 40" chart. As a result, the duo said, the kids no longer seem to care about the hit lists.

Singles as 'Must'

Although sales of singles have been dropping, Hugo & Luigi asserted that they were still absolutely essential to the disk industry. The single is the only way to launch a pop song, and it still is the chief showcase for new talent. Without the single, even the album business would eventually taper off, due to the lack of new material and faces.

Hence, Hugo & Luigi are urging an industrywide effort to get the single biz back on the tracks as a central home entertainment medium. Optimistic over the future, they said the single biz has come off the floor several times before, once with advent of radio and then again with the coming of television, and can do it once again against the renewed competition from radio.

ASCAP

alog, with its wealth of oldies, and hence the latter should rate more importantly in the payoff system.

The David group has pointed out that every single writer member of the ASCAP board of directors will personally stand to gain from the new setup. This is intended to stir the conscience of the board which is expected to act in a disinterested way for the benefit of the whole membership.

Huddles With Adams

David has already held some conversations with Stanley Adams, ASCAP prexy, about revising the consent order to eliminate the "recognized works fund." More talks are due to be held. Meantime, David stated that his group would take "every means" to protect their interests. This was taken to mean that if the remedies inside of ASCAP were exhausted, the writers would go to the Dept. of Justice with their complaints or to a sympathetic Congressman like Rep. James Roosevelt (D., Calif.) who spurred the Justice Dept. to make an early filing of the new consent order.

ASCAP execs and lawyers, at a meeting with a committee of the songwriters Friday (24), urged the cleffers to reserve their criticisms until the consent agreement was signed. One attorney for ASCAP pointed out that if the songwriters pressed their attack, the Dept. of Justice may be inclined to come up with additional amendments. The songwriters, however, do not intend to play a waiting game and are going ahead with their fight. They'll probably retain a music biz lawyer to advise them.

Inside Stuff—Music

Richard Himber's current series of cuffo N.Y. park concerts for the Schaefer Brewing Co. this summer is being used by the maestro as a disk audition showcase. Himber's pressagent, Dick Conlan, addressed "an open letter to all responsible a&r executives," urging them to hear the Himber band play "the kind of music that millions of Americans still demand." Conlan made the pitch in the face, as he put it, of "the many skeptics in the recording industry who believes the era of good popular dance music to be a thing of the past and would enjoin further investment in such in favor of promoting more rock 'n' roll artists, weird vocalists, hillbillies and the like." He pointed out, however, that those who buy the latter music will not spend $4.95 for an LP.

George Wein, producer of the Newport Jazz Festival, apologized to newspapers this week re the banning of photogs at Newport during the Erroll Garner performance. Wein, taking Garner's manager, Martha Glazer, off the hook, said Garner's management had nothing to do with this situation. Garner's contract with the Festival provided as follows: "there will be no flash photographs permitted during Garner's performance."

Wein pointed out: "Since the Newport Jazz Festival felt that there were practical difficulties in restricting only flash photographs from the stage area, the Festival had excluded all photographers. This was an error in judgment on our part which we sincerely regret."

Archie Bleyer, prexy of Cadence Records, is on a bicycle to promote the company's newest Chordettes and Everly Bros. disks. The trek began Friday (24) in Chicago where he met with midwest distribs. The following day, he huddled with eastern distribs in N.Y. and on Sunday (26) he planed to London to meet with representatives of Decca's English outlet. Following day he hit Hamburg to discuss promotion and sales with Deutsche Grammophon, the German distributing house that releases the Cadence line on the Helidor label. Bleyer is due in Paris today (Wed.) where he'll catch a jet back to New York.

Royalties earned from a Minneapolis highschool choir Columbia hit record—about a nickel for each 98c one sold—can't be received until the city's attorney finally decides who is to sign the contract with Columbia Records and where the money should go. The 45rpm was cut last October by Col. On one side is "God's Christmas Tree" and on the flip is "Great Somebody," both of them by Minneapolis composer Sid Lippman who now resides in New York. It was among the best 10 bestsellers in Minneapolis with a number of stores for many weeks and also has been selling well nationally.

Rank Records' First Disney Disk in Brit.; Also Slate 'Beauty' LP

London, July 21.

First Walt Disney disk to be issued by Rank Records Ltd. went on sale Friday (17). It's a 45 rpm single as put out under the Buena Vista label in the States, "Lonely Guitar" and "Wild Willie" performed by Annette.

Disney's deal with Rank supplants the arrangement, effective some time, whereby occasional platters were put out via Pye Records, EMI and other diskeries. It's virtually an exclusive tieup, though plans are also in hand for marketing some disks through Gala Records, cut-price outfit, come September. Releases on the Top Rank label are expected to average out at one single, one EP and one LP per month, with the LPs getting underway before the end of July in the shape of a soundtrack version of the "Sleeping Beauty" score.

Though the bulk of the Disney platters for Top Rank will be pressings of American originals, some disks will emanate from here. In fact, the label is already ballying one such, a single featuring numbers sung by Janet Munro and Sean Connery who appear in "Darby O'Gill And The Little People," for sale as received.

Responsible for the Rank liaison is the Walt Disney Music Division, in operation for a couple of months now under the managership of Bernard Cook who comes from Capitol Records. Allied activity is a pubbery which is linked with Chappell and which is currently on the alert with numbers introduced in "Mickey Mouse Club," tv program which has just started to run on the Associated-Rediffusion network.

Edmond Hall's Alumni Bash

Catskill, N.Y., July 28.

Edmond Hall, featured clarinetist with Louis Armstrong for the past three years, was the guest star Sunday (26) for the second summer jazz concert sponsored by the Alumni Assn. of the Catskill, N. Y., Boys' Club, at the New Helderberg.

Hall played an engagement for the Boys Club Alumni last year, following his return from a tour of South America. Gene Schroeder on piano and Mousie Alexander on drums supported Hall.

N.Y. License Commish Queries Spur ARA Meet on Licenses

Artists Representatives Assn. is slated to hold an emergency meeting tomorrow (Thurs), on the question of whether to take out city licenses. No ARA members in New York have applied for permits from the N. Y. License Dept. which is headed by Bernard O'Connell. Last week the License Dept. sent an investigator to several unlicensed N. Y. agencies. At the same time, a subpoena was served on the Shaw Artists Corp., presumably as a test case.

Eddie Elkort, General Artists Corp. veepee and president of ARA, has conferred with O'Connell. Results of the conference haven't been made known, but will presumably be told at tomorrow's confab.

The subpoena to the Shaw agency together with the sudden visits by a city investigator have apparently spurred the ARA to action on this issue. Whether the ARA will stiffen its attitude in regard to city licenses will depend on what might have been agreed upon between the License Dept. and Elkort.

For many years, theatrical agencies throughout N. Y. State have been considered exempt from provisions of the General Business Law, a section of which prohibits employment agencies from accepting more than 5% commission for the first 10 weeks for obtaining employment. The talent offices have long held that because of the nature of the services provided, they are exempt from such provision and that under current conditions they would be unable to exist with that schedule of fees. They feel that by taking out employment agency licenses, it would automatically be construed that they are considered employment offices in the usual sense of the word and thus curtail their commissions as well as ability to render many services which acts call upon talent agencies to perform.

A recent attempt by the N. Y. State Legislature to correct this situation through the enactment of the Gilbert Bill was vetoed by Gov. Rockefeller at the behest of the talent unions. This bill called for a talent office to file a schedule of fees with the License Commissioner and also provided for a new category called a theatrical manager who could also charge a fee.

LOOKS LIKE KAYE B.O. CUEING MELBOURNE H.O.

Melbourne, July 21.

Understood that Danny Kaye has agreed to extend his Melbourne season at the Princess Theatre under the Garnet Carroll banner for an additional two weeks, giving the comedian a six weeks' stopover here.

Kaye, who played four weeks to sellout biz at the Empire, Sydney, for J. C. Williamson, Ltd., is said to have agreed to Carroll's request for the extended span because of terrific demand for seats extending beyond the allotted four weeks.

Comedian should take out a hot $250,000 on his Aussie runaround.

Kingston Trio's $20,700 Storyville High on Cape

Harwich, Mass., July 28.

Kingston Trio set a record at George Wein's Storyville on Cape Cod here in their week stand, nabbing $20,700. The jazz boite on the strawhat kick serves only sandwiches, named after jazz personalities, and bubbly.

The record was set for week ending July 19. Erroll Garner followed, closing Sunday (26), and Tom Lehrer plus Bob Gibson opened last night (Mon.).

It's the second summer of operation for Wein's spot. Skedded for balance of the season are: Bobby Hackett plus Barbara Carroll Trio, Aug. 3-9; Pete Seeger, Aug. 10-16; Odetta plus Josh White, Aug. 17-23; Sarah Vaughan, Aug. 24-30; Gene Krupa, Aug. 31-

Gov. Long as 'Pressagent' For Tempest in Denver

Denver, July 28.

Tempest Storm took off from the launching pad at Warren St. Thomas' Tropics nitery last week in a blast of publicity that should keep the peeler in high orbit for the four scheduled weeks.

Denver engagement meshed with the pyrotechnic visit to this city of Gov. Earl K. Long of Louisiana. Front page news reports several days in advance, and during his three hectic days in town, stated that one of the principal reasons for the Colorado trip was to attend the Storm premiere at the Tropics. Jack Blue, Denver theatrical agent, was prominent among the perambulating governor's entourage

Miss Storm is in at a reported $10,000 for the four weeks.

Jerry Lewis On Supermarket Time For a Fortnight

Albuquerque, N. M., July 28.

Jerry Lewis is skedded to headline a two-hour variety show which is booked to play a 15-day tour throughout New Mexico, Texas and Colorado commencing Sept. 14.

The show is sponsored by Furr's Supermarkets of Lubbock, Tex., and will play in all the areas where they have markets.

Furr's annually backs self-named "Show of Shows" and this is the third in the series. In 1956, the show featured Mickey Rooney, Mamie Van Doren and the Four Aces. In 1957 it included Herb Shriner, Julius LaRosa, Hilltoppers and De Castro Sisters. No show was held in 1958.

Ducats aren't sold for the event, but must be obtained by buying groceries from the supermarket chain. Every $25 in cash register tapes entitles public to a lone ticket.

This year's show opens Sept. 14 in Colorado Springs, then plays these spots in order: Denver, Albuquerque, Amarillo, Lubbock, Roswell, Hobbs, Abilene, Midland, Odessa, and El Paso on Sept. 28.

A total of 42 performances is planned, three-a-day in many of the towns.

Other talent booked to back up Lewis at the Furr's shows include the Chordettes, Homer Garret & His Y-Knot Twirlers, Hubert Castle and the Teddy Phillips 25-piece orch.

1-NITE STARS IN 'SUBURBS' OF CHI

By JACK PITMAN

Chicago, July 28.

While the Michigan-Wisconsin resort belt (a few motoring hours from Chicago) is still a small factor in the talent marts, the trade has justifiable hopes it someday may become more significant, though no one expects it ever to rival the east's borscht circuit.

Keeping the hope kindled virtually singlehanded is Harold Shlensky, whose Brown's Lake Resort at Burlington, Wis. (72 miles from Chi, 42 from Milwaukee), is in its second full season of star shows every Saturday night. Next weekend (1), for example, Henny Youngman headlines. Lenny Collyer and Maxie Rosenbloom are inked to follow, latter for the second time this summer.

Though it wasn't followed up immediately, the star policy actually was incepted when Shlensky brought in Sammy Davis Jr. for Memorial Day, 1957. Subsequent one-night attractions have included, among others, Hildegarde, George Jessel, Robert Clary, and this year, Mimi Benzell, Ricky Lane & Velvel, and Phil Foster.

Things have been going well enough for Shlensky to have added 18 units this year alone at a claimed $5,000 per.

Shlensky thinks of his domain as a sort of combination Grossinger-Concord of the midwest,

Magic Violins Pact As Ice-Breaker For Mex-to-U.S. Troupes

Mexico City, July 28.

A break in the long deadlock involving non-appearance of Mexican musical units in the United States has been achieved, according to Ramon de Florez, representative of the Villa Fontana Magic Violins group. They are RCA Victor recording artists.

Florez claims he has a contract offer from the Dunes in Las Vegas guaranteeing $8,000 for a two-week engagement. However, he added, the Magic Violins cannot accept at this time since open date was Aug. 6 on, and the group cannot go on tour because of prior commitments until November.

Florez said the Cocoanut Grove in Los Angeles is also interested in unit, as are other night clubs in the U. S.

If the Magic Violins, directed by Roberto Perez Vazquez, go on an American tour, the impasse which has blocked exchange of musical talent will become a thing of the past, according to musical circles here.

N.Y. State Official Again Warns AGVA It Cannot Conduct a Home; Penny to Call Nat'l Board Meet

The tangled affairs of the AGVA Foundation Inc., which operates the AGVA Country Club & Recreation Center, South Fallsburgh, N.Y., are still under scrutiny of the N.Y. State Attorney General's office as well the N.Y. State Dept. of Social Welfare.

One of the more important factors in the stormy history of this phase of the American Guild of Variety Artists is the reassertion by Bernard Perlman, chief of the Charities Registration of the Social Welfare Dept., that AGVA Foundation has no corporate powers to conduct a home.

In a recent letter addressed to the AGVA Foundation, Perlman stated: "It has recently come to our attention that your group solicited contributions at the Concord Hotel, (Kiamesha Lake, N.Y.) on the basis that it was for the 'AGVA Country Club, a home for retired variety artists. As you know, your group has no corporate powers, at present, to conduct a 'home' and the recent amendment to your certificate of incorporation does not grant this. Under these circumstances it would be more circumspect if you did not utilize the language indicated above.

"It would also be appreciated if you could furnish this office with the details of this drive, especially with copies of any publicity material or literature which you have circulated."

In another development regarding the AGVA Foundation, Penny Singleton, the AGVA president

Mex Navarro Sisters To Tour Spain, Italy

Mexico City, July 28.

The Navarro Sisters, singers of pop Mexican ditties, leave for a six-month tour of bistros in Spain and Italy. They also have contracts calling for radio-tv appearances.

Sisters are skedded to debut in the Jardin Villa Rosa in Madrid, for a three-month stand. After that they go on to Milan and other Italian cities.

According to reps of the singing sisters, tour will bring them around $100,000.

Earl Mountbatten Joins Geo. Gobel As Lure for CNE

Toronto, July 28.

Earl Mountbatten, first lord of the British fleet, will sail into Toronto Harbor in his HMS Scarborough at the head of five warships of the British navy, plus a flotilla of the Royal Canadian fleet, to open the Canadian National Exhibition here on Aug. 26. Present will also be the Nautilus, first nuclear submarine of the U. S. Navy, and warships from 14 other NATO nations. Mountbatten, uncle of Queen Elizabeth, will be accompanied by his wife, Lady Edwina Mountbatten.

Jack Arthur, producer of the evening performance at the 24,000-seat grandstand show (from Aug. 26 to Sept. 12), has inked pacts with all his talent. As previously announced, George Gobel will be the star, with Eric House playing opposite him as straight. Reserved seats will be $3 top.

Others in the Jack Arthur cast include Janki & Arnaut, dancers; Gino Donati, Italian tenor; Gil Miller & Arnold Archer, comedians; Latona Graham & Chadell, Australian knockabout act; William Trabert, singer, who created the role of Lieut. Cable in "South Pacific"; the Taylor Twins, dancers; Varel & Bailly, French singers, with Les Chanteurs de Paris; Ming & Ling, Oriental comedians.

The star dance attraction will be Alan & Blanche Lund, with the former creating the dance routines and the staging, Midge (Cousens) Arthur doing the routines of the 50-girl line tagged the Canadettes.

From the Cradle to the Grove

By JAMES POWERS

Hollywood, July 28.

The Cocoanut Grove, one of the oldest class niteries in continuous operation in the country, isn't resting on its palm leaves. Entertainment director Gus Lampe is after the next generation already. Get 'em young and indoctrinate 'em early seems to be his motto and it's paying off.

An innovation of Lampe's for the plush, Ambassador Hotel room is the special "student's package," which he advertises for $6.50 a person (including tax and tip). There's no hard liquor involved and the students taking advantage of the deal aren't allowed to order any. The package price includes food and soft drinks and the Grove advertises in all college newspapers and directories within a 90-mile radius of L.A.

"It's not a charitable gesture," he says. "The Schines (who own the Ambassador) believe the Ambassador will be here a long time. We are getting these young people into the habit of a nice club where they are given pleasant, honest treatment, and where their parents know they're attending a clean, tasteful show."

Student business is up 80% in the past year, Lampe says, and some of the acts are now frankly aimed at this younger trade.

Lampe is out for all types, as long as they behave themselves at the Grove. Drunks get short shrift and hecklers are eased out. There is no service while an act is on. "Either you spoil the steak or you spoil the performance," he says.

While the Grove has always been considered a class operation, with sturdy dependence on Beverly Hills and Pasadena patronage, Lampe doesn't think any club can set limits on its clientele.

Kingstons-in-the-Skies

When he booked the Kingston Trio in, he didn't depend on ordinary sources of advertising to draw the customers he figured would dig this particular singing group. He hired a plane to drag a streamer across the skies in the Santa Monica beach areas, places he figured his potential audience (young) would be.

When the Ritz Bros. were booked, Lampe sent the same plane with another streamer advertising this act out to Santa Anita which he calculated as a likely locale for devotees and potential devotees of the comedy team.

Although the Grove contracts top entertainers—Judy Garland, Pearl Bailey, Dean Martin, Lena Horne—Lampe still believes the basic strength of any club is in its service.

The Grove, for instance, bucks the trend of the long, long table, where strangers are seated together, theatre-style. The chairs are purposely designed to be extra wide, for comfort. The room does not have a fast turnover. Most patrons arrive early and stay late. It's Lampe's contention that a group which arrives for dinner and stays is more profitable in the long run than the in-and-outers.

85% Sample the Chow

He says that 85% of the Grove's

DENVER SUPERMARKET BUYS RINGLING DEBUT

Denver, July 28.

Busley's Supermarkets, with 8 large retail stores in the Denver area, has purchased the opening night performance of Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Circus here.

It is understood the grocery firm will offer the tickets, which scale from $1.50 to $3.50 at half-price to their customers with purchase of a given amount of merchandise. Discount coupons given out at the stores are redeemable at the circus' regular boxoffices for reserved seats.

Although it is reported that the firm's guarantee to the circus is near $15,000 plus tax, the tab may run considerably higher. Reason is that the Municipal Coliseum where the circus plays Sept. 2-6 seats better than 9,000 and agreement calls for additional seats at other performances should Busley customers fill the initialer and want "oversold" slips, which are customarily issued on advertised items when stock is exhausted.

Empire Associates Inc., who have brought the circus to Denver the past several years, made the tieup.

Godfrey to Play ESE; 1st P.A. Since Surgery

Springfield, Mass., July 28.

Arthur Godfrey makes his first personal appearance since his lung operation at Eastern States Exposition, biggest New England fair. Edgar S. DeMeyer, general manager of the fair's horse show, said Godfrey has agreed to take part in every performance from Friday, Sept. 25, to the Stake Night performance Sunday, Sept. 27.

Godfrey's stint in the show will be his first public appearance since his operation in New York on April 30. He took part last year in the exposition, the largest amateur horse show in the east. An invitation to this year's show was sent to him long before his ailment was diagnosed. Godfrey has been in seclusion at his Leesburg, Va., home, resting.

Penny Singleton Answers Bright On Issue of Teamster Affiliation

Hollywood.

Editor, VARIETY:

A disservice has been done the membership of the American Guild of Variety Artists in the inferences of a letter from Mr. Jackie Bright, paid National Administrative Secretary of AGVA, which appeared in the July 15 issue of VARIETY.

Certain context of this letter gives the impression that the membership of AGVA had intended to affiliate AGVA with the Teamsters Union, and that such a move would be resisted by Mr. Bright "to the point of my resigning as National Administrator of AGVA."

I hasten to assure you that the membership of AGVA has never contemplated any such move; in fact, the membership of AGVA is traditionally ignored whenever Mr. Bright determines to make any major step in his administration of AGVA affairs. The establishment of AGVA Foundation and AGVA Country Club & Recreation Center is a classic and current example of how the membership, as a whole, is not permitted to participate in a major decision.

It is a matter of public record that Mr. Bright was called to testify before the Senate Committee investigating improper practices in labor and management regarding his association with the Teamsters Union during the Ringling Circus strike.

It is also a matter of publication in the November 1954 issue of The AGVA News relating to certain proceedings at the October 1954 National Board Meeting wherein the aid of the Teamsters Union was openly solicited to involve itself in a personal dispute between Mr. Bright and life-member Dick Jones, which subsequently developed into a libel suit costing the membership $20,000 plus extensive legal fees.

This issue of AGVA News reports "the order of the day was suspended to permit a visit from Mr. Steve Cardullo of the Seafarers Union of the Port of Philadelphia, and Mr. Bernie Brown of the Teamsters Union of that City." There is no record showing that the AAAA's had been consulted to approve involving AGVA with these non-theatrical unions.

The report goes on to say that

ATLANTIC CITY STAYS WITH BATHING SUITS

Atlantic City, July 28.

The 50 girls due here as the annual Miss America Pageant is staged the week following Labor Day will still compete in bathing suits, Lenora Slaughter, director, declared.

Comment was made following news stories that the archbishop's office in Santa Fe had reminded Sue Ingersoll, representing New Mexico in the Miss Universe contest, that Catholic girls are forbidden to compete in beauty contests in which swim suit exhibitions are included because the church holds that such exhibitions are immodest.

Bathing suit judging here has always been a vital part of the Miss America Pageant. Too, there has never been an occasion when a girl was warned, because of the ruling, not to appear.

CPMW Nominations

Conference of Personal Managers West has nominated Seymour Heller, Red Doff and Danny Winkler for the office of president. Mail vote will be audited by Brown, Kelman & Kraft.

Nominees for v.p. are Sam Lutz, Eddie Rio, Brent Wilson, Frank Stempel and Eddie Sherman. George Greif, George Moro and Tom Sheils are on the slate for secretary, and Manny Frank is the sole nominee for treasurer.

Arpeggio New in N.Y.

A new eastside N. Y. jazz spot, the Arpeggio, bowed last night (Tues.) hosted by Willie Shore, who also is partnered in the Composer, and Mike Macario, a restaurateur.

Opening bill comprises Bernard Peiffer Trio and Vic Dickenson Quartet. Pianist Lucille Howard plays the cocktail sessions.

Hub Licensing Board Racks $1,619,300 Profit

Boston, July 28.

Boston licensing board has reported a clear profit of $1,619,300 from issuance of 9,726 licenses for jukebox, pinball machines, liquor and food.

Total number of licenses was reduced by 358 this year, chairman Clarence R. Elam reported. Increased police activity resulted in 18 more violations being reported to the board than in the previous year, with a total of 171 hearings, he said.

Judge, Lady Cop, Dancer's Mater and Hub Cafe Mgt. Offer Details on Veils

Boston, July 28.

Egyptian wiggles and mysteries of Oriental terping were detailed to Judge Elias D. Shamon in municipal court here last week by a policewoman and the mother of a dancer. Their versions differed so widely that it looked for a time as if a Solomon would have to be called in for the right definition of veil details.

Joseph Teebagy, operator of the El Morocco Cafe, Hub's No. 1 Oriental terp nitery, was before the judge charged with hiring two under-age "Oriental" dance exponents who had never been further east than Boston. The two femmes, billed as Elyazan and Amoura, 19 and 18, had their style of terpery reviewed by the nitery op, the manager of the boite, Amoura's mater and a policewoman.

Said Teebagy: "A native custom. Very moral."

William V. Menza, cafe manager: "It's a native custom done under veils."

Mrs. Elizabeth Hargreaves, Amoura's ma: "The body is not exposed at all, just the midriff. Just like a bathing suit. She wears pants, a bra and a veil. I admit that her navel shows at times, but I don't see anything wrong with the dance."

Policewoman Marie Healey: "The costume rests on the hips. When I came in I thought she (Elyazan) was going to lose her skirt. She certainly had no veil and she certainly didn't leave much to the imagination."

Judge Shamon said that he found it was "all a matter of taste." The nitery owner's fate was simple; he was found guilty and his case was filed. The terper's mother and the nitery manager were found innocent of the same charge on which the judge found Teebagy guilty.

Fielding's Vaude Spree At Capitol, Aberdeen

Aberdeen, Scotland, July 28.

Harold Fielding, London impresario, has assembled a strong array of vaude talent for his 1959 summer vaude season at the Capitol Cinema here.

He presents it over a six weeks' period in association with the James F. Donald Cinema Group. Customers are largely vacationers who fill up the Northeast Scotland city from June to August.

Acts on display range from comedians Bob Monkhouse, Vic Oliver, Jon Pertwee and Ken Platt to singers Alma Cogan, Yana, Dickie Valentine, Petula Clark, Jimmy Young and the Beverly Sisters. Others include impressionist Margo Henderson, ventriloquist Arthur Worsley, piano duo Rawicz & Landauer, trumpeter Kenny Baker and piano-entertainer Joe Henderson.

Pepe Lara's Solo Bow

Pepe Lara, a former member of Los Chavales de Espana and who has gone into business for himself, will make his N. Y. debut as a single at the Chateau Madrid starting tomorrow (Thurs.). He'll be accomped by his brother, Ramon Echauz, the original family name.

On the surrounding bill will be El Cuarteto Triana, a flamenco troupe.

Aquaten's 1st SRO Via TV 'Kangaroo'

Minneapolis, July 28.

For the first time in its 20-year history the Aquatennial, local summer mardi gras, last Wednesday (22) sold out the 16,500-seat municipal stadium. The personal appearance of CBS-TV's "Captain Kangaroo" (Bob Keeshan) as the star of the daytime pre-parade show was credited with the extra big draw. At $2 top there were more than 18,000, including standees, packed into the enclosure.

The elaborate Aquatennial daytime and night parades start from the stadium and the daytime procession is preceded there by a show comprising many juvenile appeal features. There are no other stands or reserved seats from which to witness it along its route.

During the Aquatennial Keeshan also made a number of other personal appearances in local public parks in which several of his shows were taped for network video presentation. These appearances also attracted huge crowds of children and adults.

TERESA SALISBURY SUB AS CROSBYS GO VEGAS

Salisbury Beach, Mass., July 28.

Teresa Brewer has been inked to replace the Crosby Bros. date of week opening Aug. 23. Crosbys settled their contract with Denny Mulcahy, op of the 1,200-seat beachfront nitery, so that they could play a Vegas date. Crosbys paid a figure around the $7,500 mark to take the $25,000 L.V. date for three weeks.

In another switch, Jerry Vale has been signed to replace Eydie Gorme Aug. 30 for eight days. The femme piper cancelled because of impending motherhood.

It's been a season of switches for the spot. Sammy Davis Jr. started it off when he cancelled his June 28 week, and Connie Francis pulled in.

Liberace opened at the strawhat nitery Sunday (26) for a week. Erroll Garner follows. Frankie Avalon is booked for week of Aug. 16.

Kenneth McKellar, Ill, Cancels TV-Radio Dates

Glasgow, July 28.

Kenneth McKellar, tv, radio and disk singer, has bowed out of engagements for six weeks because of sinus trouble. He was recently forced to interrupt a weekly series of BBC tv network shows. His medicos have now advised him not to return to work until the end of August.

Alistair McHarg will carry on in McKellar's place, both on tv and radio.

In September, McKellar is pacted to plane to Canada for a concert tour. He will head an Auld Lang Syne unit on a national trek, playing largely to Scot societies.

The Hilton Hotels Corp. is set to build an addition to the Savoy Hilton, N.Y., which will house a new ballroom as well as more guest rooms and offices. Land on which the construction will take place was purchased last week from the Crimmins Operating Corp., which has owned the site for 50 years.

The Zeckendorf Hotels Corp. has completed a deal for the sale and leaseback of the Drake Hotel, N.Y. Sum involved is $12,000,000 which also includes the $3,500,000 financing of the expansion program at the Inn. Addition includes a 200-room annex which would hike the room total to 700, plus several function rooms. Inn was purchased by realtors Samuel Sockol, Louis Adler & Peter Feinberg with Brener & Lewis acting as brokers. Zeckendorf leased the hotel back for a 99-year period.

Two major talents presented pictures of extreme contrast on the Coast with the simultaneous runs of Judy Garland and Harry Belafonte. Miss Garland at the Shrine Auditorium grossed a losing $43,000 for five performances in the 6,585-seater, scaled to a $6.50 top. On the other hand, Harry Belafonte finished a three-weeker at the Greek Theatre with a mighty $252,000. Closing stanza registered a staunch $78,000 for five performances. House had to refund $15,600 for the previous Monday when Belafonte was out with an attack of flu.

Minneapolis Metropolitan Stadium Commission and local newspapers are receiving squawks from parents because of alleged off-color jokes and quips cracked by Hugh ("Wyatt Earp") O'Brian when he was in Minneapolis as the star of a Saturday afternoon Stadium Wild West show which had a predominantly smallfry audience. O'Brian may have been caused to resort to questionable material because he was peeved at the crowd's smallness, less than 2,000, the show laying a big egg.

After the successful gin rummy tournaments of Las Vegas, it was inevitable that a crapshooting contest be held in the green baize country. What is believed to be the world's first craps tourney ended July 15 at the New China Club, Reno, where 119 participated in the contest. At this interracial club, the tournament was won by Theodore Jackson, a Negro auto salesman from Reno who picked up $1,500 as well as a trophy comprising diamond-studded gold dice. Trophy was presented by the Ink Spots.

From Tokyo and Hong Kong, he'll fly to Texas to straighten out details in connection with a natural gas well that's just come in on some land he owns there. En route home to Hawaii, he'll pause in Las Vegas to supervise opening of the Aku-Aku Room in the Stardust Hotel.

Buddy McMahan, manager of Zebra Lounge in lobby of Howell House, sprawling apartment hotel close to downtown Atlanta and adjacent to 4,400-seat Fox Theatre, is resorting to advertising in what is known as "Industrial Pages" of Atlanta Journal and Constitution. Advertisers in these pages, as a rule, are confined to appliance dealers, mattress renovaters, furniture upholsterers, potato chip firms and the like, so appearance of Zebra Lounge ad (and the editorial spread that goes with it) proved to be an attention-getter. McMahan recently redecorated, renovated and refurbished Zebra Lounge and chose to break his new ad campaign with booking of singer Johnny Ryan, who joined pianist-thrush Eloise Bryant, latter riding out a summerlong engagement.

Was Magico Calvert's South Seas Yacht-Wreck A Lot of Abracadabra?

Sydney, July 21.

Talk in local show biz circles is that John Calvert, American actor-magician, will cancel his skedded Aussie tour folowing the wrecking of his yacht at Elcho Island in the South Seas.

Calvert was en route from Darwin to Sydney when he radioed that the yacht Sea Fox was in danger of sinking. The local air force and navy went into action, with a navy tug escorting the yacht to the island for beaching. Rescue of Calvert and his crew is said to have cost the government $60,000.

David McKenzie, member of the crew who quit the yacht and returned to Darwin, has hinted that the radio calls were a publicity stunt. Calvert strongly denied the allegations. However, government officials are probing the whole setup.

Harry Wren, indie vaude-revue producer here, denied he was associated with Calvert. Wren said he had been asked by the magician only to try for theatre dates in Sydney and Melbourne.

3 RIVERS, SYRACUSE, IN NAME SPLURGE

The Three Rivers Inn, Syracuse, on a name binge, has lined up the bulk of the talent for the rest of the year. Domenic Bruno, spot's operator who was in New York last week, to sign contracts, is also enlarging the spot with a construction program that calls for a 50-room motel unit and swimming pool on a nine-acre tract adjacent to the cafe.

Pacted for Three Rivers are Billy Eckstine, July 31; Platters, Aug. 14 for 10 days; Johnnie Ray, Aug. 24; Bobby Darin, Sept. 7; Paul Anka, Oct. 23, as well as a stand next May; Frankie Laine, Oct. 23, and Nat King Cole, Nov. 20.

Agent As Diplomat In Pitt's Sizzling Rivalry for Acts

An agent can only make enemies in Pittsburgh under the strong seller's market prevalent in that town at this time. With six cafes competing for headliners, and all bidding for the same availabilities, an agent has to tread gingerly in that area, dole out the talent tactfully and attempt to give everybody a fair shake so that all can meet competition.

The N. Y. agents are having a difficult time in that city because every nitery expects to get the prime attractions. One agent says that when he goes into that town, he will call on two niteries only, and then return shortly afterward to call on another pair. Otherwise, he feels that he would start a free-for-all from which he couldn't extricate himself easily.

The cafes involved are spread out so that this procedure can be followed fairly easily. Two of the largest cafes are in the suburbs. The Holiday House is at Monroeville, and the Twin Coaches is at Belle Vernon. Also in competition for the same names are the Town House, also Monroeville, the Horizon Room, Ankara and the New Arena. The latter is currently enlarging so that it will also be a more important factor than it has been hitherto. Its increased capacity will enable it to bid much higher for names.

Thus far, say the agencies, the steel strike hasn't affected the buying tendencies of the Pitt cafes. However, should the strike last long, its effect on niteries is expected to be considerable. Another factor that has the niteries worried is the possibility that the work force at Aluminum Co. of America will follow the steelworkers on the picket line unless an agreement is reached by midnight Friday (31).

Negro Acts Get Encore Dates In Swedish Theatres, Niteries

Stockholm, July 28.

Josh White arrived in Stockholm (July 23) for a week's appearance at Tivoli Gardens (July 24-31). After this, his fourth visit to Sweden, he goes to Boston (Aug. 6) and then hits other booking in the United States and Canada, before he crosses to England to make a series of 12 half-hour television shows for Granada. In his shows, White will be supported by his son Josh Jr. and his 20-year old daughter, whom he calls "Miss Thing" or "Bab."

Josh White told VARIETY's rep here that he had a special liking for concerts "for then you know the people have come to see and hear you." In nightclubs, on the other hand, "one disinterested table might get you out of the mood."

Remembering earlier visits to northern Sweden, White said that he had appeared on open-air stages in the parks. "At times, my hands were so cold that I couldn't feel the strings."

He went on to comment, "I'm really not a singer, but a story-teller. I try to open people's eyes."

After White's appearance, Tivoli Gardens will present Ray Ellington (Aug. 1-20), Paul Anka (Aug. 21-24) and then the Delta Rhythm Boys (Aug. 25-30). Latter act is also a perennial repeater in Sweden, via Paul Kapp, their agent in States for 20 years.

Videoaters Plus Marg't Whiting On 40G N.M. Fair Bill

Albuquerque, N. M., July 28.

Booking has been completed for the nine days of the New Mexico State Fair, Sept. 26 to Oct. 4.

The lineup, practically all television western entertainers, has been bought for a total of about $40,000, according to Quentin Tex Barron, fair's manager. Only exception to the alfalfa theme is the appearance of singer Margaret Whiting on Sept. 30 and Oct. 1.

Jimmy Wakely, western singer, is skedded to emcee the entire nine days, plus doing advance promotion work for a fee of $5,000.

Show opens Sept. 26, with one-day appearance of Robert Horton of tv's "Wagon Train." He'll be followed by Dale Robertson of "Wells Fargo" for Sept. 27-29. Then come Miss Whiting plus Steve McQueen of "Wanted, Dead or Alive" on Sept. 30-Oct. 1.

Last three days of show, Oct. 2-4, three top players of "Gunsmoke," CBS-TV oater, have been pegged. Three are Dennis Weaver (Chester), Amanda Blake (Kitty) and Milburn Stone (Doc).

Fair features two shows daily, afternoon performance in 11,000-seat Coliseum and evening show at regular daily rodeo.

Performer tabs include: Horton, $2,000 for one day; Robertson, $7,500 for three days; Miss Whiting, $3,000 for two days; McQueen, $2,500 plus air fare for two days; Wakely, $5,000 for nine days plus promo work, and "Cavalcade of Wheels," $13,000 for nine days.

State Fair Commission limits talent nut to a total of $50,000, and Barron got under the figure with several dollars to spare.

Last year, Arthur Godfrey appeared all nine days of the fair for total take of $40,000.

Catholic Girl Home After Beauty Contest Walkout; Felt Too-Chaperoned

Albuquerque, July 28.

Redheaded Sue Simone Ingersoll, the New Mexico gal who walked out on the Miss Universe contest in Long Beach on the eve of the balloting to pick the winner, came home to Albuquerque Tuesday (21) because she felt the contest was just another form of "tyranny."

Miss Ingersoll, who defied the Catholic archbishop of New Mexico, Edwin V. Bryne, by going to the pageant, was replaced late Monday by another Albuquerque girl, Carol Jones.

Miss Ingersoll went to the contest in spite of threats from the church of the denial of sacraments of communion and confession.

But, as she withdrew Monday she said "I withdrew only because I didn't care to exchange one form of tyranny for another. I was held virtually incommunicado. I could no longer endure it."

Miss Ingersoll said she had already defied the archbishop by wearing a bathing suit in a public parade. She insisted she withdrew because of restrictions placed by contest promoters on the girls.

Officials took this to be a knock at the rigid chaperone system. Contestants have chaperones with them at all times when they are not in their rooms. Their floor at the headquarters hotel is off limits to all.

Contest officials denied that there was anything approaching tyranny. There have been no complaints from other girls.

Miss Ingersoll, on her arrival in Albuquerque, called a press conference, and said that she has not disobeyed the archbishop, but that she has disagreed with him. She said she still considers herself a good Catholic.

She said she emphasized that she was very much interested in showing non-Catholics that the clergy in the Catholic church does not dictate to a "blindly obedient laity."

After the controversy dies down, she plans to return to her job as a beauty shop worker here.

Platters' 137,500 Pesos (11G) For Mexican Stints

Mexico City, July 28.

The Platters are finally coming to Mexico, after a year of dickering to obtain their services. It took a joint combine of radio, television, night club and personal appearance interests to pony up the money demanded by the unit.

Augustin Barrios Gomez, commentator and master of ceremonies, announced that he had signed for the musical group with their representative, Buck Ram. He further said that the Platters will receive the "fabulous" (for Mexico) sum of $11,000 a week. This translated into pesos is a heap of national coin—137,500 pesos.

For this, the unit will arrive next November to appear in the Afro night club, over XEW, Televicentro and personal presentations in the National Auditorium. Nitery will shell out $3,000 dollars; Televicentro and XEW a joint similar amount and the Auditorium guarantees 5,000 dollars for personal appearances.

Contract, if confirmed (verification could not be obtained from the artist's representative who flew back to the States), is one of the most lucrative signed by a foreign entertainment group in Mexico.

N.Y. State Warns AGVA

who has been at odds with Jackie Bright, AGVA's national administrative secretary, has asked the first assistant attorney general, Samuel A. Hirshkowitz, for a conference which would include the AGVA National Board. Miss Singleton told that state official that Sol Neil Corbin, assistant counsel to Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, advised that there was interest in continuing conferences on the Foundation. Since she would be on the road until early September, Corbin suggested that a meeting with Hirshkowitz be held then and which, she understood, would also be attended by Bright and AGVA attorney Harold Berg. Miss Singleton also stated that she would call an emergency meeting of the national board to convene in New York in early September and invited Perlman as well. Copies of the letter to Hirshkowitz were sent to national board members. AFL-CIO head George Meany was also sent a copy.

The AGVA Foundation has been embroiled in difficulties since its founding about a year ago. It was denounced at an open meeting by Miss Singleton. Since then its charter has been amended but apparently it has not yet obtained permission to run a home for the indigent, for which it was originally created. Solicitations for funds took place last year in various parts of the country, especially in the N.Y. Catskill hotel belt. According to Perlman's stand, the AGVA Foundation has no right to solicit funds to run a home.

Joey Adams' Interpretation

Joey Adams, Miss Singleton's opponent for the office of AGVA president, stated that Bright had replied to Perlman's letter with the contention that all funds solicited were on the basis of having a home in the future. However, Perlman's letter says that there is nothing in the charter that permits the Foundation to operate a home, and presumably it's meant in the future unless further amendments to the charter are made.

Adams said that the home as it now stands is a legal operation. He said he had spoken to N. Y. State Atty. General Louis J. Lefkowitz who assured him that the Foundation was completely empowered to raise money and operate a home as soon as physical provisions such as fire escapes, plumbing additions and other improvements were made. Adams also said that if the AGVA Foundation's directors are the same as national board members, the N.Y. attorney general's office will give it its blessing.

and has been promoting Brown's in many directions: for one thing inducing the N. Y. Yankees to make it their World Series hq for the Milwaukee games the past two years. Much of the sportswriting gentry also based there on both occasions, and Shlensky was greatly cheered by the resultant press mentions.

Resort has been grabbing space in the Chi papers the last nine years via freelance flack Larry Stein (vet planter for filmeries and other show biz enterprises).

Shows at Brown's are staged in the ballroom which can handle about 450. There's a $7.50 minimum (for dining and drinks). Each show usually has a second act, and the current band is Marty Gould's (ex-Chez Paree and Martinique Restaurant here). Shlensky avoids alienating Milwaukeean affections, however, by also playing Beertown units. Spot is booked out of Chi by agent Sid Morse (Mutual Entertainment).

Shlensky's major competition comes from the nearby Shinderman-owned Nippersink and Oakton Manors, but not in the area of entertainment. Of the two Shinderman resorts, Nippersink has been favored for vaude, but just sporadically, and the only name they've presented this season (on Memorial Day) was comic Alan King.

Jimmy Daley, who has conducted a theatrical agency in Albany for 25 years and who at one time trouped with minstrel shows, is recovering from an abdominal operation.

Welk $22,800, Belafonte $39,400 at Port. Expo

Portland, Ore., July 28.

Lawrence Welk orch grabbed a hot $22,800 in matinee and evening performance at the Oregon Centennial Exposition Arena last week (19). The 5,700-seater was scaled to $3.50.

Outfit played behind the main gate with an additional $1 tab.

Harry Belafonte rang up a whopping $39,400 in three evening performances at the expo (23-25).

The "Art Linkletter Show" opened a five-day stand Sunday (26) with initial show a sellout. Sam Snyder's "Aqua Follies" opens a two-week run Aug. 1.

Teamsters

Mr. Jones was labeled [deleted—Ed.] by Mr. Cardullo, and that at the conclusion of his remarks he received a standing ovation from the members of the National Board present.

"Less eloquent, yet none the less, equally as emphatic, Mr. Brown of the Teamsters Union informed the Board that his union was taking the same position . . . 100% behind AGVA!" He stated further that "he will not rest until Jones has been driven from that city (Philadelphia)." He, too, received a rising ovation from the members of the National Board present.

The AGVA News report of this incident goes on to state that "President Jackie Bright pointed out the importance of Messrs. Cardullo and Brown being present and how grateful we were for their backing and support." His closing remarks to the National Board was, "This is a great day to remember."

I therefore find Mr. Bright's letter singularly lacking in conviction in that portion wherein he states that any affiliation with the Teamsters Union "would be resisted by me to the point of my resigning as National Administrator of AGVA." And the theatrics of that statement would seem to place the onus upon the membership of AGVA in some contemplated move to renounce its affiliation as a chartered member of the AAAA's.

Mr. Bright's hierarchy in AGVA gives him an assured vote of not less than 30 members of the National Board upon any issue which he chooses to seek this majority support, including, if you please, $50,000 of membership funds to establish a recreation center unavailable to a large majority of the membership.

But the membership of AGVA does not seek an affiliation with the Teamsters Union and Mr. Bright will have to find some other pretext upon which to base his resignation.

Beachcomber's Burglary

Honolulu, July 28.

Police are probing the early morning safecracking job which netted $14,500 from the office of Don the Beachcomber's. Nitery receipts of $11.500 plus $3,000 from Donn Beach's private safety box were taken.

Safecrackers knocked off the dial of the large cabinet safe and punched through the five-inch-thick door to effect entry.

Boston's Fenway to Bow in Oct. With Mixed Stageshow Policy

Boston, July 28.

Ambitious plans are under way for reopening of the shuttered Fenway film house on Massachusetts Ave. in Back Bay section with flesh shows. Stanley Brown, head of his own dance studio upstairs in the theatre building, said he has been negotiating with New York bookers.

"It would not be a return to vaude," Brown said, "but rather the new type of stageshows that are proving successful in other film houses around the country, and we would plan to spot jazz artists, combos, bands, spiritual singers."

A new marquee and new seats for the 1,373-seater are included in the plans, and opening would be skedded for around October. The Fenway, formerly operated by New England Theatres as a sister house with the Paramount, was dropped by NET when the lease expired about six months ago.

Whether or not the new format would include feature films or just cartoons and shorts, has not been decided yet, Brown said. The Fenway was operated shortly after its closing by NET as an art film house, but poor biz forced its closing again.

The Fenway has dressing rooms, and had vaude shows way back when. The theatre is owned by an estate, and the trustees have asked Brown to operate the house. He has just returned from visiting live houses in New York and other cities.

Stageshows planned would be "integrated shows," Brown said, "with continuity" and "revue types." There would be some emphasis on current top record warblers, he indicated.

Cradle to Grove

customers eat there, a high figure. He says the Grove sells five times as much wine as niteries of comparable stature. This he attributes to the festive atmosphere of the Grove, a great place for anniversaries, birthdays and parties of all sorts.

A good deal of the Grove's trade is family. It is true that almost every night there is one party or more including the children of the family. For this reason there aren't the broad acts that click in Las Vegas or elsewhere.

Last year was the biggest year in the Grove's history, he says, and this year so far indicates another record. This proves, he says, that the class nitery—"which delivers what it promises"—can get some share of the entertainment dollar.

Bible Students, Too

He attributes part of the room's success, too, to the calibre of performers he can book. Although it's known they take less than they would make in Vegas, Lampe says many performers work the room almost for the pleasure of it. He quotes Gordon MacRae's astonishment, the first time he worked there, that there were children and families in the audience, and how pleasant it was.

His boss is not running a charitable institution, Lampe stresses, saying the policy has paid off. In the students' classification, he notes, the Grove had 900 of them on one weekend night for the second show.

The room's popularity with performers is attested, he says, by the fact that 95% of his talent is rebooked. As to his diversity of clientele, Lampe notes that on a recent morning he booked the Cocoanut Grove to a group that might not ordinarily be found in a night club—a convention of Bible students.

Honolulu, July 21.

Singer Ann McCormack has come out of semi-retirement to sing for her supper at the Embers, which is owned by herself and her husband, Paul Livermore.

She's singing on Friday and Saturday nights only, with the first show starting at 11 p.m. Bob Jacobs trio is backing. Sundays through Thursdays, Jacobs and Paul Martin are sharing the piano bar stint.

500 Club, A. C.

Atlantic City, July 25.

Frank Sinatra, Bill Miller, Red Norvo, Pat Henry, Lindsay Sapphire Dancers (8), Jack Curtiss, Pete Miller Orch (10) with Joe Frasetto; $5 minimum; $5 cover weekends.

Frank Sinatra is back in Paul (Skinny) D'Amato's plush Vermillion supper room, this time for an eight-day stand, which is almost a sure guarantee that the house record he now holds for a four-day stint in 1956 is due to be broken.

His opening show was a sellout and long lines formed before the bistro and stretched down toward Atlantic Ave., resort's main street, all with reservations and only waiting the dispersement of club crowd to take their places for the second show.

Backed by Red Norvo and his combo (5), and with Bill Miller his accompanist, Sinatra is on stage after a Norvo bit without an introduction (as if he needed one) and bangs out 13 numbers in rapid succession, ignoring demands for many more of his motion picture or record hits. This crowd just didn't want to let him go.

Sentimental bits like "Willow Weep for Me" and "Moonlight In Vermont" keep the ringsiders attentive and silent. They join him in "High Hopes" from "Hole in the Head," his latest film and tap time as he honors Joe E. Lewis, who preceded him here, by singing "When Somebody Loves You" from "The Joker's Wild," biopic of Lewis' life.

"Could Have Danced All Night," his opener, is followed by "Just One of Those Things," "I Get a Kick Out of You," "I've Got You Under My Skin," "It Happened in Monterey," "Lady Is a Tramp," "Angel Eyes," "Come Fly With Me" and "Come Dance With Me," all in the easy Sinatra manner.

Red Norvo and his unit with Miller give Sinatra fine backing. On for nearly an hour, he begged off declaring he had other shows to do.

Pat Henry is a refreshing comic who makes good before an audience set to see and hear only Sinatra. Scores with initial lines and has them with him for all his allotted stagetime.

Lindsay Sapphire Dancers with emcee Jack Curtiss vocalist open with "Broadway" production number displaying eye-catching new costumes. Walk.

Basin Street East, N. Y.

Hi-Lo's (4), Kai Winding Septet, Lennie Tristano Quintet; $3.50 minimum.

Bonifaces Ralph Watkins and Lennie Green are only partly with Hizzoner Robert Wagner and Chamber of Commerce in the campaign that touts New York as a "summer festival." They have shuttered their eastside jazz nitery for the hot months except in the biz bloom of the weekend, that is, Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights.

They are undoubtedly right, because to the local citizenry who do the daily straphanging bit in the swelter of the subway only to hit the blaze of the cement canyons, the old Apple is more of a "simmer festival." But cool jazz plus air-conditioning seem to bring them in on the shank of the week to forget the humidity. And, despite the limited stint, the club is managing to present top names.

Current continuous round of entertainment features the Hi-Lo's quartet, a group that has built a close following through Columbia disks and 39 skeins in the Rosemary Clooney tv film series. Foursome was one of the first to employ the offbeat, high register harmonies that run through the work of most jazz vocal groups today. Their offerings on the Basin Street East show run from folk to jazz a cappella, and they could have made a third encore with ease on the night caught. Particularly effective was the jazz standard "Indiana," and their articulate harmonizing on a number from the Broadway musical "West Side Story." The musicianship of this group and Leonard Bernstein blend remarkably. The interim high jinks of the Hi-Lo's is a little precious. Small matter. The singing carries the act.

Some of the group's standard faves have to be passed by. Don Shelton, an apple-cheeked lad from Texas, is a relatively new member and hasn't had time to learn the full book. He nonetheless has worked in nicely on all the new and a good many of the old numbers.

Kai Winding's septet, featuring four trombones and rhythm, is a holdover. It's a rare featured soloist who surrounds himself with three of the same instruments—all handled by fine soloists in their own right. But that's what trombonist Winding has done, and the bone line of George West, Paul Fauline and Jim Knepper, besides Winding, all get a fair shake on the choruses. Jazz purists might call the two-section setup a gimmick, but it makes for some unusual and sock sounds on jazz standards like "Indiana" (again) and "Tuxedo Junction." The group records for Col.

Pianist Lennie Tristano's quintet, is subbing for the Yusef Lateef quintet which bills as a Far Eastern jazz group. It's a matter of replacing the Far East with the far out. Tristano and saxmen Lee Konitz on alto and Warne Marsh on tenor play the very cerebral stuff that has come to sound traditional against the bop returnees to simpler form and melody, such as Miles Davis, et al. A nice contrast, however, to the more commercially acceptable jazz of the Hi-Lo's and Winding. Bill.

Sands, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, July 22.

Johnny Mathis, Joey Bishop, Harry Nofal, Evelyn Dutton, Roy Palmer, Copa Girls (12), Antonio Morelli Orch (21); produced by Jack Entratter; choreography by Renne Stuart; $3 minimum.

Johnny Mathis has been brought back to the Copa Room by impresario Jack Entratter, and the youngster's showmanship clicks again as he alternately belts and glides 19 songs. With his distinctive quality, the handsome singer offers, in a polished turn, "Everything's Coming Up Roses," "You Are Beautiful," "Flying Down To Rio," "There Goes My Heart," "My One and Only Love," "Accustomed To Her Face," "I Could've Danced All Night," "Someone," "Let's Do It" (in which his inflections make the lyrics seem bawdier than ever), "Lady Is A Tramp," "It's Not For Me To Say," "The 12th of Never," "Call Me," "Chances Are," "Wonderful, Wonderful," "Small World," "Lover," "Stranger In Paradise," and as a solid bowoff, "Goody, Goody."

Joey Bishop is the bill-balancer, and registers again as one of the most reliable laugh-getters in the biz. Bishop's topnotch standup comedy has hit a new high with this engagement — first-nighters yocked his stint into over half an hour, and he got four well-deserved curtain calls.

Two brilliant Renee Stuart production numbers featuring the fine voice of Harry Nofal, the flashy footwork of Evelyn Dutton and Roy Palmer, plus the comely Copa Girls (12) round out the program, smoothly backed by Antonio Morelli orch. Show is skedded through Aug. 19. Duke.

The Cloister, L. A.

Los Angels, July 21.

Mary Kaye Trio, Terry Gibbs Quintet; $2.50 cover.

The Cloister management should be all smiles during the current stand of the Mary Kaye Trio. It's one of the few vocal groups around today that guarantees lush business along the saloon sphere.

Trio, comprised of brother-sister Mary and Norman and Frankie Ross, swung into this Sunset Strip spot for their first nitery date in three months. Group was on a layoff while Miss Kaye joined the ranks of motherhood.

Facing a capacity crowd of showfolk and tourists, the Kaye songsters hit the preemers with both old and new tunes in their usual swinging manner. It's an entertaining turn that revolves around the three harmonizing, or Ross and Miss Kaye duetting, or latter and brother Norman high-noting. Either way they vocalize it's socko.

After actor Tony Randall made a surprise mikeside visit and introed the group, the rounders were treated to "You Go To My Head," "Nearness of You," "Lover Come Back To Me" and the expected "My Funny Valentine."

Aside from the smooth vocals, bits where Ross does a takeoff on a limp-wristed interior decorator warbling "If I Had the Wings of An Angel," and a satirical duet with Norman Kaye (lookin' like Keely Smith) with a rendition of "I Can Give You Anything But Love," give the evening the needed laughs.

Miss Kaye, looking striking in a red gown, shows off her larynx on "Lazy Afternoon," while her brother does same, minus the gown, on "Black Is the Color of My True Love's Hair."

Ray Browne's 88ing paces the terrific backing the Kayes demand. Terry Gibbs, more familiar with a big band, fronts a quintet throughout show and between sets with a beat crying "let's swing." Bill holds for two weeks. Kafa.

Tropicana, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, July 22.

Carol Channing, Chiquita & Johnson, Gali Gali, Kathy Reed, Beverly Scalzo, Bob Fletcher, Joy Blaine, Showgirls & Dancers (24), Herman Kaye Orch (17); presented by Lou Walters; Miss Channing's act produced by Charles F. Lowe, staged by George Burns, costumed by Miles White; special choreography by Tom Hansen; musical director, Robert Hunter; $3 minimum.

Carol Channing's return "home" to the Tropicana theatre restaurant —where she launched her career as a nitery attraction—is memorable in that it proves her rapid climb to headline status was no fluke. Her new material, concocted by Charles Gaynor, is perfect stuff for the unique talents and offbeat appearance which combine in a rare versatility that obviously can be tapped freshly to infinity, easily steering her from the classification of a one-shot performer.

Happily, Miss Channing revives some of the numbers with which she's identified—the wide-eyed innocent incongruously equipped with husky pipes singing "Little Girl From Little Rock"; the Sophie Tucker impresh; and her trademark bowoff, "Diamonds Are a Girl's Best Friend," during which she tosses "diamonds" to her audience. In a dandy newie, she contracts typical songs from standard musicals of the past—"Join Us In a Cup of Tea," "Teeny Little Weeny Nest for Two" and "The Old Yahoo Step"—with those of the modern "think" theatre, "This Is a Darned Fine Funeral," "Love Is a Sickness" and "Switchblade Bess." The act, produced by Charles F. Lowe, was staged by George Burns.

Troproducer Lou Walters has added a couple of nifty acts to Miss Channing's turn, which makes for a well-balanced, highly entertaining show. Chiquita & Johnson, perennial faves in Vegas, present their unusual acrobatic terping with serial tosses, twists, swings and spins to top effect. Gali Gali demonstrates that he's unbeatable as a sleight-of-hand artist as he gets laughs and applause with his uncanny manipulations of live chicks under cups and in and out of pockets.

Kathy Reed, a talented looker who has the spark for stardom, is "femcee" for the holdover production numbers. Show, set for four frames, is capably backed by the Herman Kayo orch. Duke.

Eddys', K.C.

Kansas City, July 24.

Lilo, Tommy Reed Orch (5); $1-$1.50 cover.

There's a sharp change of pace for this club in French chanteuse Lilo, making her first appearance in these parts. It isn't often that a French-type with the genuine Paris cut shows up in a club or hotel show hereabouts, and Lilo is the real thing from her chic coiffure on down. Most of all, she gets all of this across with Gallic finesse and makes a rousing show of her 35 minutes.

Through a list of 10 songs or so, Lilo is pretty much the arch type of continental singer, embellishing it all with generous helpings of verve and flair, not to mention considerable innuendo and a plentiful display of her well-proportioned torso. Her throaty vocals and sultry stylings drive home the idea, whether the words register or not, and in this locale remote from French influence it's better that way. Her closing clincher is "I Love Paris." The customers love it all.

Lilo holds through Aug. 6, to be followed by the Kirby Stone Four. Quin.

Golden, Reno

Reno, July 22.

Ink Spots (3), Freddie Bell & His Bellboys (6), Mafalda Trio; no cover or minimum.

Current efforts of the Tomerlin Bros., bonifaces of the Golden Hotel, indicate an attempt to revive its status as one of Reno's leading showcases. This season they have redecorated the showroom following the theme suggested by the new name, the Mardi Gras Room. And a new sound system has replaced the abortion used in prior days. A grill partition separates the room from the adjacent casino area.

The Ink Spots (not the originals) headline the current bill with a near carbon of the for-real trio. The mimic includes the same visual motions and the same titles and arrangements. Albeit the faces are not the same, auditors endorse the trio and indicate no chagrin at not finding the Ink Spots of yesteryear. The "new Ink Spots" are Joe Skyles, Antoine Leon and David McNeil. Leader and guitarist is Charles Fuqua.

Freddie Bell & His Bellboys best fit the classification of rock 'n' roll —and the appeal is to the beer-drinking set, not to the salooner who's apt to drop a few bucks at the tables on his way into the room. The boys work hard on the novelty stuff, make with some noisy arrangements, and score heavily with the younger auditors. Bell offers some vocaling but wisely sticks to the instrumental and comedic routines as his main forte. Turn gives each of the Bellboys a chance upstage. Some of the blue lines could be dropped with no loss.

Mafalda, with an intriguing style at the 88 and equally interesting eye appeal, guides her bass man (hubby Lou Papps) and drummer Al Ries through skillful renditions of Latin titles, standards and semi-classics. Her offering solo at the piano is of concert calibre. With hubby, and alone, she also wins plaudits vocally. Group is perfect for class rooms. New show is due in Aug. 7. Long.

Deauville, Miami Beach

Miami Beach, July 25.

Henny Youngman, Fran Warren, Henry Levine Orch; $3.50-$6.50 food or beverage minimum.

With two vet performers making up the current package in the Casanova Room, it is a solid one for the summer trade attracted here.

Henny Youngman raps out a full potion of old and new, with his cheerful, easy approach getting laughs from the familiar stuff and the topical one-liners worked in to keep fresh touch, sparking surprised howls. He winds with the standard violining bit, per always, with his shortie-breaks waggery stirring giggles and setting him for solid bow-off palm payola.

Fran Warren, in the tough opening slot, gets them from first belting tune and sustains the reaction rise all the way. In full and fine vocalistic shape, her stylings are on the softer side for the ace balladings, extracting full values out of the lyrics; on the big beats she sets the high returns to a full payoff for encore segments. Physical appeal adds impact, with the slender songstress smartly gowned, the delivery fluid and authoritative.

Henry Levine and his crew are a plus for the musical segments. Due July 31 is Kyle MacDonnell in "Bells Are Ringing," first of a musicomedy stock series set through August. Lary.

Crystal Palace, St. Louis

St. Louis, July 21.

Compass Players (4); $1-$2 admission.

David Shepherd, the guiding light behind the original Compass Players in Chicago, is losing no ground at all with his current group, now playing the avant-garde Crystal Palace saloon-theatre here. Discerning St. Louisans have taken to previous Compass units at the Crystal Palace like Frenchmen to vintage wines, and the habit is obviously snowballing, as the Palace cash register will bear witness any evening of the week. The Compass has been consistently drawing near-capacity attendance, even on Mondays and Tuesdays—a neat trick if you ever saw one in summery St. Louis.

Four immensely talented sprites —Alan Arkin, Anne Meara, Nancy Ponder and Jerry Stiller—make up the group under the producing-directing guidance of Shepherd, of whom a theatrical buff once said, "If David is their Shepherd, they shall not want."

Among 'em, the four protagonists have a bottomless bag of tricks and are as comfortably at home with improvisational skits pulled out of thin air from impromptu suggestions by patrons as they are with their penetrating, rehearsed looks at the contemporary scene.

Among the latter shenanigans, there are some high-hilarity moments well calculated to make a sunshine boy out of the most devout charter member of the sourpuss 'cult. Especially memorable in this convulsive category are a wonderfully obstreperous family finally tamed down by tranquilizers and a string of satires on old movies, including a classic bit which kids the toreador pants off the veddy, veddy serious business of bullfighting.

The Compass people will be on hand all summer and will be keeping a canny eye on repeat business with a constantly changing kaleidoscope of material. And, of course, they already have a head start in that department with their improvisations based on audience suggestions, which are naturally different every session. Bob.

Palmer House, Chi

Chicago, July 23.

Nelson Eddy with Gale Sherwood (and Theodore Paxson), Lucille & Eddie Roberts, Ben Arden Orch (10); $2 cover.

Plush Empire Room is offering music (and mirth) for a summer or any other evening, and Merriel Abbott's latest presentation seems headed for five weeks of hefty trade.

Nelson Eddy seems just about timeless plying his brand of romantic illusion, with and without blonde Gale Sherwood, who's splendid of voice and frame and more than enough to perk any tired businessman. The Eddy voice is as robust as ever pouring out the old cinematic and light opera melodies, and by show's end the romanticists in the room are as incurable as ever.

The baritone could leave it at that and still be ahead, but he proves an added delight at satire and horseplay, latter with the aid of his pianist-arranger Theodore Paxson, and former via impreshes of other singers imitating Eddy's "Road to Mandalay." In all, a solidly satisfying turn, with Eddy steering it with smooth old pro elan. Crowd begged for more at the end, and got it with Eddy and Miss Sherwood dueting "Indian Love Call."

Mentalists Lucille & Eddie Roberts are back here after an absence of several years, and punch over an impressive 25 minutes of mind- and wallet-reading liberally laced with humor. She's at the mike while spouse roams the ringsiders to examine coins, cards, etc. Naturally, plenty of tittering situations develop. Only soft spot is male's intro of stale one-liners, but once into the main business, the couple are winners.

As usual, Ben Arden's orch (10) provides capable backing and dansapation. Liberace is in Aug. 31. Pit.

Downstairs, N. Y.

Rose Murphy featuring Slam Stewart, Carl Norman & William Roy; $3 minimum.

In teaming up with Slam Stewart (ex-Slim & Slam), Rose Murphy has given her turn a new musical dimension. Stewart's doodling on bass and occasional vocal assist excellently complement Miss Murphy's keyboarding and soft-styled vocalizing. They've been working together for several years now and in this, their first Gotham showcasing as a duo, they show up as a nifty bet for intime cafes. It's not of blockbuster proportions but there are enough musical pleasantries to keep the cafe tipplers happy.

Miss Murphy is a happy performer and her attitude is catching even though Stewart goes through his paces with a solemn countenance. She's full of joy on the piano and in song and her 35 minutes onstage pass delightfully. Repertoire is a neat potpourri of standards that very often gets the audience in a hum-along and sing-along mood: "My Blue Heaven," "Lindy Lou," "If I Didn't Care," "Time On My Hands," "You Made Me Love You" and "Three Little Words" are some of the choice items in her songbag. Their "Big Noise From Winnetka" is an excellent sampling of what a piano and bass can do together when both parties are really in tune.

Carl Norman & William Roy fill in the intermission spots on duo piano. They handle showtunes with an understanding flair. Gros.

Shamrock Hilton, H'st'n

Houston, July 23.

Alan Drake; Shep Fields Orch (12); no cover or minimum.

Alan Drake is on an overlong 40 minutes because thrush Lila Guizar, set as the other half of the show, was stricken with a virus in Mexico City and cancelled out. After opening night, Laurie Loman will take over as replacement for balance of two weeks.

This is Drake's second showing here in less than a year, and again he's well received. An experienced standup comic with fine timing, Drake, as usual, leans heavily on husband and wife chatter, first taking one side and then the other, and the doings of today's juveniles.

Best received is his demonstration of a teenager getting the family car when he was a boy as compared to the same transaction today. Part of act is built around novelty tune, "All In Favor Say 'Aye.'" Drake gets more music of a sort in act when he reads menu to rock 'n' roll tune. Shep Fields orch breezes through easy backing job behind comic. With this engagement, Continental Room will close for renovations until Sept. 10. Skip.

Fountainhead, New Hope

New Hope, Pa., July 24.

Crosby Bros. (4), Lou Nelson, Sandy Walsh, Johnny Crawford, Mickey Rodgers Orch (12) directed by Dick Stabile; $5-$7 minimum.

Give an act just about the biggest name in show biz and $50,000 worth of material, add lots of hard work and the best kind of coaching—and you have a smash club attraction.

That's the story of the four sons of Bing, graced with the Crosby name and more than adequate talent. No longer will the Crosby Bros. mean Harry Lillis, Bob, Everett and Larry. Now it's Gary, Lindsay, Phillip and Dennis.

None of the Groaner's offspring has his great singing talent. But all have been blessed with his casual, self-assured air and his glib tongue. Born to a singing dad and a dancing mother, it's surprising that it took this long to get them together into an act which could be one of the biggest in the entertainment industry.

The Crosbys cracked every attendance record in sight in their week at the Fountainhead. Give them time and they'll shatter marks all over the country—and in Europe, where they open Jan. 1.

Fittingly, the high spot of their performance is a parody on a "Damn Yankees" piece which they call "Thought About the Act." It's obvious, from their performances, that they have thought about little else during the last several months.

From their rousing opener, in which they introduce themselves and shake hands with the crowd, to the "Lovely Way to Spend an Evening" closer, the Crosbys don't stop punching for a minute.

Nick Castle's staging keeps things moving and he taught the lads a clever softshoe. Dick Stabile, leading the band of Mickey Rodgers augmented to 12 pieces, skillfully directs the crew to cover bad notes. The vocal arrangements, by Bill Thompson, make the most of the brothers' rather limited equipment.

Most of the singing is in quartet and the boys, surprisingly, sometimes get a good blend. Gary, the oldest and most professional of the four, looks and acts like his pater. But his voice has little of the zip or charm of Bing's.

The patter, written by Jack Brooks and Harry Crane, is typically Crosbyish and breezy and is designed to showcase Gary's talent, particularly, as an embryo comic and emcee. Material is so fresh it sounds like ad libs for the most part.

Tallest and most handsome of the four, Phillip shows on his solo "You Are Too Beautiful" that his voice is potentially the best in the group.

This week, Bing Crosby, who was singing with Paul Whiteman when he was Gary's age, will see his sons' act for the first time at its opener at the Sahara in Las Vegas.

With such competition, comic Lou Nelson was hard-pressed to keep the crowd with him. But he had them smiling with his tv commercial and hospital-doctor routines. Sandy Walsh does some spirited dancing and Johnny Crawford is emcee. The Mickey Rodgers orch, increased from five to 12 pieces for the date, gives solid backing to the Crosbys. Bitt.

Blue Angel, Chi.

Chicago, July 21.

Princess Abilia & King Christian (6), Mighty Panther, Roger McCall, Al Lopez Orch (3); $3.50 minimum Fri. and Sat.

The cellar that calypso built (and vice-versa in the Chi area) is now a hybrid (maybe schizoid), with plenty of American overtones usually diluting the Latin slants. The latter manage to dominate, however, as with the Angel's current layout called "Pan American Extravaganza," and toplining two of the club's best attractions in Princess Abilia & King Christian (husband-wife).

Couple are in and out, separate and together, over a snappy 50-minute course that plies plenty of sexcitement and some thrilling terpery of the leap-and-whirl genre by the stars. For helpmates they've brought along a male and three femmes, two of the gals in particular making dandy partners with Abilia for some spirited and satiric song-and-dancing. Third supportive femme, a tall siren-type, is okay soloing some Yank songs, but really clicks with a wild, ritualistic Afro-Cuban dance that exhibits top torso control. In the costume department, gals are alternately "clothed" in bikinis and toreadors with plunging backlines that duly goggle the gents.

Mighty Panther and Roger McCall are Angel stalwarts integrated in the revue, former with his calypso chanting, latter with topnotch congo drumming solo and to augment Al Lopez' little crew who provide excellent backing throughout. Show's in for eight weeks. Pit.

Bolero, Wildwood, N. J.

Wildwood, N. J., July 21.

Tommy Sands, The Sharks (3), Ken Lane, Bill & Patty Phillips, Norman & Dean, Don Lewis, Lee Henderson Girls (5), Rocky Valentine band (10); $3.50 minimum.

Tommy Sands, lithe, lean and subdued is racking up a successful frame for Ben Martin's splashy new Club Bolero. His conductor-arranger, Ken Lane, has wisely patterned the stint to give equal billing to ballads and rock 'n' roll. Result is a pleasing segment for both old and young.

Sands opens with "Everything's Coming Up Roses," followed by a pleasing upbeat "Ain't We Got Fun." Then comes "Still of the Night," "I'll Be Seeing You" and "What Is This Thing Called Love?"

The three Sharks, scarlet-garbed singer-musicians, get Sands to doff his black tux coat and don a scarlet jacket for the rock 'n' roll session. This includes "All Shook Up," "Short Shorts," and "Hound Dog." The warbler closes with "Sinner Man."

Bill & Patty Phillips, a father-daughter dance team, breeze through a festive, original routine and use their happy feet to give the audience the same feeling.

Norman & Dean, bright young comedians, continue to improve and hit their high spot with a fairy tale routine. The scantily-clad, shapely Lee Henderson girls, assisted by Don Lewis, offer two pleasing numbers to "Pink Shoelaces" and a Latin-American medley. The Rocky Valentine band backs the show adequately.

The renovated Club Bolero has relegated the bars to the extreme back section, so those wishing to see the performers' wrinkles must take a table. It seems like wise business strategy, since formerly bar patrons obtained just as good a view as the tablehoppers. However, the hum of new airconditioning units makes hearing difficult for bar patrons and the back rows of tables. Otherwise, the club is just about perfect, with seating near the 1,500 mark. Math.

Queen Elizabeth, Mon'l

Montreal, July 25.

Alan & Blanche Lund, Fernande Giroux, Louis Bannet Orch (9); $2.50-$3 cover.

Summer biz continues at near-peak for the Queen Elizabeth hostelry which in turn boosts grosses for elegant Salle Bonaventure on the main floor. Current layout, more by chance than planning, is an all-Canadian affair and stacks up handsomely with many other offerings in this room since its inception 14 months ago.

Show was originally booked as a single act (that of Alan & Blanche Lund) but brevity of their hoofing display prompted management to pull in another performer to give the show body and length. Usual stint is about 40 minutes with two shows a night, but the Lunds came with only 20 minutes. During latter part of first week, attractive Fernande Giroux, a Gallic chanteuse, came in to do a solid job with her songalog.

The Lunds, who started dancing together during the war in the Navy Show, have devoted the last few years to television both as dancers and choreographers, and the switch from the demands of a tele camera to a nitery floor is apparent. While there is no fault with their dancing and routining, a nitery act, to compete with other performers and to entertain an audience that is hep to current headliners, has to have something more than the usual five or six numbers featuring spins and lifts of latter-day ballroomologists. Team are above the average groove, however, and their fluid terping and pleasing personalities garner attention and nice reception.

Miss Giroux sparkles with new tunes from Paris and a reprise (due perhaps to the late booking) of her oldies including a brace of comedy items which score handily. Femme is fashionably groomed, mixes the bilingual material wisely and should be good for a repeat performance with a more prepared showcasing. Music for show is by Louis Bannet who splits dance interludes with a pianist. Jo Ann Miler preems Aug. 3 with the Dornan Bros. slated for a return engagement Aug. 24. Newt.

Mapes Skyroom, Reno

Reno, July 25.

Jack Carson, Beverly Lawrence, Brascia & Tybee; Skylets (8), Jack Melick Orch (10); $3 minimum.

There's only one criticism of the Jack Carson show in the Sky Room at the Mapes—it's in for just one week. And with the too-seldom Carson exposure in this area, one week is not enough. Particularly when such as the shapely and talented songstress Beverly Lawrence and the exciting Brascia & Tybee dance duo back the headliner.

Carson, in what amounts to almost a "new act," handles the emcee chores as well as taking the top spot for a full 30 minutes of his distinctive comedy routines. His presentation is effortless, and his lines are updated and new. Carson proves his versatility in tandem stuff with Miss Lawrence, and with special lyrics on a couple of standards to get the laughs. He scores heavy on a "private eye" routine a la Spillane.

Miss Lawrence, playing it solo for the first time in the local area, presents lotsa talent as well as eye appeal. She is most effective on a sensitive interpretation of "Mood Indigo" that combines emoting with the vocal abilities. She's a looker and chooses gowning that compliments the chassis.

Brascia & Tybee, debuting in Reno, offer terping routines that show much study and rehearsal. The two could well become a headline act, what with the visual appeal and the obvious talent in the choreography dept.

Bracketing the show are the Skylets in a Barry Ashton production. Jack Melick and his capable musicians back the entire show and provide the dansapation titles for between-shows hoofers. Current bill runs through July 30. Long.

Safari, Scottsdale

Scottsdale, Ariz., July 21.

Margaret Whiting, Linda Bogdan, Al Overent Orch (8); $1.50 cover.

Armed with nifty arrangements by Lou Busch and Russ Garcia and special material by Inez James Billy Roy and Buddy Pepper, Margaret Whiting invaded Max Penton's plush showcase to break in an expensive new act. This marks her second appearance at this bistro, this time to an SRO (260) opening.

Although fraught with the usual opening night bugs, this pro carries on with a calm charm that is rare in cafes today. She opens with a strong "The Night Is Young" and "Hawaiian Wedding Song" but then, unfortunately, sputters almost to a halt with an anemic "I Enjoy Being A Girl" but recovers with a zany, boffy "April In Fairbanks."

The only segment of her old act that Miss Whiting retains is a medley of standards by her late father Dick Whiting. There she sings with the girlish reverence of a teenage choir girl. Chirper gets powerful mittings with a raucous "Hula Lou" and a frantic takeoff on adult tv westerns done to "Mad About The Boys." After a 40-minute stint she encores with "All I Want Is More And Then Some" and begs off a sentimental "So Long" to a standing ovation.

Miss Whiting, a performer with a great respect for her audience, displays good taste, an established talent and a graceful, folksy approach that sells. Both Ralph Wolf directing from 88 and Al Overend orch back excellently with a set of tricky, difficult arrangements.

Linda Bogdan, a wholesome, ponytailed terper used primarily to settle the house, shows a remarkable poise and talent that belies her age (16). Haff.

Club Harlem, A. C.

Atlantic City, July 21.

Larry Steele's "Smart Affairs of 1960" with The Four Step Bros., Damita Jo, The Buccaneers, Cleo & Bernard, Clyde Webb, Jimmy Elliott, Slappy White, Sir Lionel Beckels, Delores Proctor, Andre Pitts, Ted Shavon, The Beige Beauts (6), Modern Harlem Girls (6), Johnny Lynch orch, Toni Leverier; written, produced and directed by Steele; musical score arranged by Howard Biggs; assistant to Steele, Lyle Smith; costumes designed by Lou Eissle; lighting, Herman Spell; $2 admission, $4 minimum weekdays; $2.50 admission, $5 minimum weekends.

Larry Steele is back in Club Harlem, midtown sepia spot, with another bright and beautifully costumed show, "Smart Affairs of 1960." It opened here to play the season and will go on tour when the club shutters its large room come cooler weather.

Featured this time are the Four Step Bros., new here, who score heavily with their individual and group dance routines. Solos atop a circuler platform of heavily waxed wood won the pre-weekend audience and merited heavy mitting.

Damita Jo once more is a bright spot in the new "Affairs," singing five numbers and two begoffs. Beautifully gowned and a looker, she bangs over her numbers. Her begoff bits are "I Can't Give You Anything But Love" and "Some Of These Days."

The Buccaneers too are new in this show and prove themselves a fine singing quartet with "Running Wild," "St. Louis Blues." "Everybody's Got a Home But Me," a novelty, is especially effective.

Slappy White returns in this show as the comic with new material and the ability to punch his lines across for maximum results. Was on for 20 minutes, none of them dull. Cleo & Bernard are also new, offering a modern dance act which is well received.

Steele's production numbers are always tops in "Affairs." For these he has two sets of femmes, Modern Harlem Girls who are the showgirls, and the Beige Beauts, the dancers. Working with them are four boys, Clyde Webb, Andre Pitts and Ted Shavan.

Steele takes a look into the Las Vegas success picture and this show brings on the taller Harlem Girls and the four boys in a produtíon scene "Strip for Action" during which the boys rip, piece by piece, the girls' clothing until they are attired only in briefie bikinis. Scene is played under dimmed lights but is a stopper, and something new for a Steele show.

Outstanding is the "Out of Space Sequence" which stars Sir Lionel Beckels and the entire cast in a dance built around the satellite age. Beckels does his solo colored with gold paint, coming on under dim lights through the fast dancing girls who clear away to allow him the entire stage.

Finale is a Club Harlem Cha Cha Cha which features girls.

Although this show is a long one, it is so good that few realize they have been watching for nearly two hours. Five original songs, "Smart Affairs of '60," "Recognition," "Have You Met Miss Cook," "The Harlem Che Cha Cha" and "Rio Rio" were written by Steele.

Only the heavy brass of the Johnny Lynch orch was offish at show caught. They pound it out to kill all conversation, from front to back, when they were on, but gave show fine backing.

Steele show runs all season with various stars. Billy Daniels came in Thursday (23) and Arthur Lee Simpkins is due Aug. 6 when Daniels goes out. Club is airconditioned and serves drinks, no meals. It seats 500. Walk.

Ho Ti, Portland

Portland, Ore., July 21.

Leon Mandrake & Velvet, Martez & Lucia, Jack Card & Elation Girls (4), Mary Lee, Jeanie Chase, Herman Jobelman Orch (4); no cover or minimum weekdays, $1.25 cover Sat.

New fare at this plush emporium is long on entertainment but short on marquee value. Returning after an absence of two years, Leon Mandrake may keep the customers attending for the next two weeks despite the high temperature outside and numerous transient name attractions in town for the Exposition.

Mandrake proves to be a versatile performer, entertaining with magic, supernatural, mentalism escape and pickpocket bits as he keeps the audience guessing. The seer-making portion is okay but needs more speed. He constantly pickpockets his volunteers for belly laughs. Finales with escape trick that amazes. Mandrake gets able assist from shapely Miss Velvet. The 30-minute stint could be one of the best in the field if Mandrake would stick to entertaining and cut out philosophic sermons. He works hard for solid mitting.

Martez & Lucia garner hefty returns for their acro-balancing. Small guy handles taller, stacked distaffer with ease. All tricks are done in rhumba and samba rhythms.

Jack Card & the Elation Girls (4) are on for two production numbers. Card proves to be an adequate singer and an outstanding terper. Femme quartet know how to heel-and-toe but need some work on precision. Costumes and choreography are fine but numbers need a bigger buildup for climax. Petite Mary Lee handles the femcee chores warmly. Herman Jobelman orch plays the background for the 50-minute show and sets the tempo for the dancing seshes. Jeanie Chase piano-chirps in the Lamplighter Room. Feve.

Statler Hilton, L. A.

Los Angeles, July 24.

"Larry Ellis Ice Revue," featuring Gloria Nord, Cavanaughs, George Zak, George Arnold; Skinnay Ennis Orch (8); $2-$2.50 cover.

The Statler Hilton Terrace Room will be playing it real cool during the current Larry Ellis Ice Revue. It's a booking that is trenching down here for the second time this year and is a natural to draw those escaping from the heat.

Blonde and attractive Gloria Nord is top blade along with the Cavanaughs, George Zak, George Arnold and four cuties who cut up their own ice. Miss Nord, an ice ballerina, shows off her form in swanlike fashion; Cavanaughs, husband-wife team, cake it up beautifully with emphasis on smooth ballroom dancing, while Arnold and Zak shave their block of ice with fun antics via a sailor routine.

The chorus gals make their splash over the frozen water in a couple of production numbers, best of which bear the Latin beat. Skinnay Ennis orch (8) takes the chill off the room with a danceable tempo that keeps the patrons hustling on and off the floor. Show holds for four weeks. Kafa.

Chez Paree, Denver

Denver, July 23.

Carol Hill, Don Ronai, Collen Carrol, Chris Senakos Orch (6); no cover or minimum.

Top downtown Denver nitery is the Chez Paree, a strippery offering four half-hour shows nightly to get a good turnover of patrons. However, it's highly probable that the "unofficial" hostesses who cruise the place account for a majority of the biz.

Show features two peelers, Carol Hill and Collen Carrol. Both are attractive, young and possess A-1 bodies. Their routines lack imagination, though.

Comic and emcee is Don Ronai, a young gent whose versatility seems boundless. During one evening he imitates Jolson, does a comic strip, pantos a suggestive "Mule Train" and winds up as a fire-eater. None of it's too strong, but he keeps the patrons alert just wondering what he'll do next.

Chris Senakos orch showbacks capably and does a good job for between-shows dancing. Trump.

House Review

Empire, Glasgow

Glasgow, July 23.

Toni Dalli, Nancy Whiskey, Wilson, Keppel & Betty, Alan Clive, Alex Don, Francois & Zandra, Dorothy Reid, Bobby Dowds House Orch; 90c top.

Francois & Zandra, opening this spotty layout, impress with well-rehearsed dance routine. Their first segment opener has them enacting a pair of undesirables in town to background music of "Dragnet"; pair engage stylishly in dramatic interpretation via terping of a couple of layabouts in tough territory. Second-half act has them in comedy bits working cleverly in acro contortions and eccentric dance. On this showing, Francois & Zandra merit some special attention, especially in the nitery field.

For the rest, Alan Clive offers his w.k. impressions of Bogart, Edward G., Gary Cooper, George Sanders and James Stewart. Tall impressionist scores well despite long familiarity of fodder. So do Wilson, Keppel & Betty, noted trio of Eastern dancers, who also register with comedy dance on sand.

Alex Don has n.s.g. fodder in first part of bill, but rallies somewhat in second. Comedian, striving for some zaniness in gimmick, would be advised to concentrate on amusing walk and manner rather than on well-trod path of comedy gagging.

Nancy Whiskey offers some pleasing folk tunes in cheery style, but doesn't leave any great impact. Dorothy Reid squeezes her accordion for zestful Scot tunes. Toni Dalli, headlining, is a strong bet for more U.S. treks (see New Acts). Gord.

Spindletop in Dallas

Dallas, July 23.

Dallas's newest private club, the Spindletop, opened Saturday (25) in Oak Lawn section of the city. It is located in the spot previously occupied by the Greater Dallas Club. It features songs by Latin troubador Juan Alvarado.

Ernie Fletcher is owner and George Winter is manager.

New Acts

JEAN SHANNON & THE BROOKS BROS. (3)
Songs, Dancing
35 Mins.
Chez Paree, Chicago

A pair of new "brothers" and a largely new repertoire certify Jean Shannon for New Act consideration at this juncture; and it's no less significant that the o.o. comes at her Chez Paree bow after two and a half years on the cabaret circuit.

It's a swift act with little of the chi chi stylization of comparable turns (past and present). This one is frankly commercial and sans the sophisticated sex that could make it a perilous go on vaudeo, say. What glitters in this package are the personalities. Threesome comes on with a vigor and pro manner that sustains to the final bar, their energy such that even some lagging material is made to shape up for auditors.

New in the proceedings are a cha-cha number; a minstrel medley ("Robert E. Lee," "Rockabye," etc.); and solo nods by Miss Shannon to Sophie Tucker ("Some of These Days") and Eva Tanguay ("I Don't Care"). Still the best of it all, however, is the carryover parody of the '20s, with Miss Shannon in flapper getup and the boys in blazers for a session including "Anybody Seen My Gal?" "Yes Sir, That's My Baby," a tango and a Charleston. It's their getaway and a fine piece of nonsense.

Most of the songs are meant for belting, Miss Shannon's best mode, which is why her intro "All The Things You Are," a torch item, doesn't impress as the tune should. Nor is she quite at home with the satiric "100 Ways to Lose a Man." The rest, however, shows her in fine fettle per "All God's Chillun," "How Come You Do Me Like You Do?" and "Saints Go Marching In." Her basic costume, by the way, is a three-piece sequined breakway (from gown to toreadors to briefie) that's practial and flattering.

The boys are mostly terp framework, with a harmony assist here and there. They've been given okay, if uninspired, choreography in part. George Morgenstern continues as Miss Shannon's effective pianist-conductor. Pit.

TONI DALLI
Songs
26 Mins.
Empire, Glasgow

Here's a young Italian tenor with a fine set of pipes, and okay for tv and niteries in the U.S.

Toni Dalli belts out a tune with an obvious sense of enjoyment. He has talent potential and a natural flair for putting over a song, like so many of his fellow-countrymen from down Italy way.

On this showing, Dalli, headlining in vaude here, looks set for bigger things in the months ahead, and would be useful as a tv series warbler. Goodlooking, with dark hair and an attractive smile, he has the virtue of not taking himself too seriously, and exudes a bright sense of fun in his gabbing.

Opens solidly with "Come Prima," then relaxes by seeking outfronters' indulgence to remove his bowtie, seguing with "Around The World" and "Only A Rose" (from "The Vagabond King"). Then he pleases the customers with a strong operatic bit, and contrasts by tossing in (mainly for native tastes) the Auld Lang Syne melody "My Air Folk" which he renders most creditably, gaining yocks with his pronunciation in gabbing at close of song. Winds for heavy palming with "Katerine," and bows off to really solid applause, with outfronters wanting more.

Okay pronto as excellent bet for all situations, and can be developed into a leading name in most fields. Few singers currently in the U.K. have the same talent potential as this happy-sounding warbler from Italian territory. Gord.

GERICK TWINS
Acro
13 Mins.
Chaudiere, Ottawa

The Gerick Twins, blond identical lookers, have been on the vaude circuits for some time but not yet in New Acts. Stint preems with a familiar mirror bit, done nicely. Then duo doffs skirts and goes into a clicko acro using most of the standards items but several of them with fresh angles.

Pair does some chant and a sprinkling of terp to good advantage and collect palmslaps throughout. This is good material for any nitery fare and would be okay for television variety shows. Gorm.

BILLY WILLIAMS REVUE (12)
Songs, Music
60 Mins.
Gatineau, Ottawa

Advance-billed as the Billy Williams Quartet, it became the Billy Williams Revue when it reached the Gatineau Club after four months of nitery work as a unit. Williams has retained his chant foursome, added three more chirpers and five musicians and built a raucous, midway-type stanza of piping and tooting that rocks the house from preem to closer.

Loosely staged, the session moves fast throughout and at opener (23) it collected good returns. Tunes are all standards, most of them presented in a heavy-beat bounce rhythm with only a now-and-then instrumental bit, entire stint staying close to the pipes. Lacking is something to break up the solid run of loud sound; comedy or terp, properly constructed, might help. Members of the group reach for both comedy and dance but the efforts are evidently tossed in with scant preparation.

With more balance and tighter staging, the Billy Williams Revue would collect bigger impact from the hard work that goes into it as it stands now. It's clicko nitery fare, would be nice for tv and is already set for a disking date with Coral. Gorm.

BUNNY GLENN
Juggling
12 Mins.
Chaudiere, Ottawa

Blond looker Bunny Glenn works a nice stint of juggling that includes most of the standard items with the addition of clicko sight appeal. She adds slices of okay terp and features dance-and-juggling in unison. The stanza needs more extensive action and could use stronger staging although it has the basis for a solid job of production.

As it stands, it makes good fare for niteries. Gorm.

Unit Reviews

Aquatennial Star Night
(Auditorium, Mpls.)

Minneapolis, July 25.

Abigail Van Buren, Jill St. John, Evy Norlund, Jerry Mathers, Aquatennial Queens (40), Visiting Queens (14), Helen Garvey, Great Chamberlain, Schmitz Sisters (3), Cedric Adams, George Grim, Aquatennial Male Quartet, Bob Mantzke's Onan Male Chorus (50), Adair Girl Steppers (24), Wayzata High School Trojanettes (24), 1959 Aquatennial Queen Sharon Bilgake, Aquatennial Officials (30), Aquatennial Commodore Randy Merriman, Gordie Bowen Orch (18); staged and directed by Don Stolz. Presented by Minneapolis Star-Tribune Newspapers Charities at Minneapolis Auditorium July 24, '59; $3.50 top.

Hitherto the Minneapolis Star-Tribune Newspapers Charities, working on the cuff, always has been able to come up with at least one Hollywood luminary to stimulate the draw and prestige of its "Star Night and Coronation Shows," a big attraction of the Aquatennial, local annual summer celebration, now in its 20th year.

The best that could be corraled on this occasion were attractive and personable starlets Jill St. John (20th-Fox) and Evy Norlund (Columbia), undoubtedly comers but pretty much "unknowns" who, however, acquitted themselves well.

But despite the lack of name stars of the stature of Jimmy Stewart, Esther Williams, Tab Hunter, Jayne Mansfield, etc., who have graced previous shows, this one's almost complete capacity turnout in the 10,000-seat municipal Auditorium equalled its predecessors in size and there was as much audience enthusiasm as there ever has been.

As a matter of fact, these shows' main magnet is the spine-tingling exit of the current year's queen of the lakes and the revelation of her successor and the latter's crowning, along with the unveiling of the two princess, runner-ups. Members of the Aquatennial court participate in the exciting and dramatic ceremonies.

This always is a momentous occasion. Prior to the show, judges had chosen the queen and princess from among 40 candidates who were winners in contests held in many Minnesota communities and by various business concerns, but their identity had been kept secret.

Like its predecessors this show had on generous display the 40 queen candidates and 14 visiting queens, representing many other fetes and coming from as far away as South America, Hawaii and Alaska, and thus boasted much pulchritude. It also boasted the usual skillful staging with emphasis upon color, flash, suspense, excitement and dramatic effect, fun, first-rate music, song, dance, etc.

It again had the witty and expert emceeing of local newspaper columnist-television-radio personalities Cedric Adams and George Grim who probably could earn their salt as stage and airlane comedians if they so desired.

While the talent mostly was recruited locally, it stacked up as pro in calibre.

Adams and Grim managed to garner many laughs while interviewing and exchanging verbal badinage and engaging occasionally in clowning with Abigail ("Dear Abby") Van Buren, columnist whose advice to the lovelorn appears in 250 newspapers and who is becoming a local resident. They also did likewise with the two Hollywood starlets who made their dramatic appearances treading down the spotlighted center aisle, and with 11-year-old tv's "Leave It to Beaver" Jerry Matthews.

Other entertainment highlights included three pleasing numbers by Frank Mantzke's chorus of 50 males; top-drawer harmony by the three Schmitz Sisters, and the heavily applauded performances of instrumentalist Chamberlain, pianist Helen Garvey, the Aquatennial male quartet, the high-stepping Adair dancers and a high school's Trojanettes.

Plaudits for the staging go to Don Stolz, the local strawhatter's producer. While the show probably could have been tightened and cut to advantage and fell below predecessors' entertainment standards as a whole, it nevertheless plainly rated the vast audience's hearty approval from start to finish. Rees.

World Dance Festival
(Carter Barron, D.C.)

Washington, July 21.

First Annual World Dance Festival with Jean Leon Destine & His Haitian Dance Co., the Dancers of Ceylon, Tania Karina & Oleg Sabline, Medina & Goya, Alvin Ailey & His Creative Modern Dancers, Oranim-Sabar Israeli Group with The Hebraica Dancers. Presented by Super Attractions Inc.; coordinated and directed by Susan Pimsleur.

This ambitious program embodies a worthy concept in line with Feld Bros.' policy of providing something for everybody during the Carter Barron Amphitheatre season. It throws together a variety of modern, classical and folk dance groups in a panoramic evening which has something of a travelog flavor.

Such fare is not calculated to rouse the masses, and might go over better in smaller quarters than the Carter Barron bowl. Premiere audience was at best sedately appreciative with one or two exceptions.

The Dancers of Ceylon, decked out like Christmas trees in their ceremonial garb, featured an accomplished fire-eater and stir some enthusiasm with their esoteric arm gyrations and cacophonic music accompaniment.

The Alvin Ailey Co. of Negro blues dancers also meet with a generally good reception, although some bits appeared a little too pretentious and left the spectators cold.

Jean Leon Destine troupe provided lively Haitian hoedowns, including an interpretation of the voodoo initiation rights, and a colorful Watusi dance right out of "King Solomon's Mines."

There's lusty singing and barefoot dancing by the Oranim-Zabar Israeli Co. and Hebraica Dancers. Excellent flamenco dancing is offered by Medina & Goya accompanied by Rogelio Roguera on the guitar. Classical ballet is performed by Tania Karin & Oleg Sabline of France with a lot of finesse but little audience response.

As implied by the rather grandiose title, Feld Bros. contemplate similar venture next year, but on much larger scale. Idea is to invite up to 40 nations through the State Dept. Also under discussion is keeping present program intact for possible U.S. tour this fall. Les.

Off-B'way's Scattered 34 Theatres Played 788 Weeks During 1958-59

There were 34 theatres presenting professional off-Broadway productions during the 1957-58 season. That's two more than the total number of houses available for Broadway presentations. The 34 theatres were lighted a total of 788 weeks (Broadway's 32 houses were lighted 1,157 weeks). The maximum number of off-Broadway theatres occupied any one week was 21.

The off-Broadway area, however, takes in more territory than the Main Stem, with the 34 houses spread throughout the lower eastside, Greenwich Village and other sectors of Manhattan. Only three of the theatres were occupied for the full season and 13 others from 26-50 weeks. Eight were open for less than 10 weeks each, seven for 11-19 weeks and three for 20-25 weeks.

Lighted for the entire season were the Cherry Lane Playhouse, with "Boy Friend"; the Martinique, with "The Crucible" and the Theatre de Lys, with "Threepenny Opera." The Circle in the Square split 50 weeks between "Children of Darkness," "Quare Fellow" and the current "Our Town." The Actors Playhouse piled up 42 weeks with "Blood Wedding" and "Enemy of the People."

Among the busier theatres were the York, Marquee, Sheridan Square and Orpheum, each playing five productions. The York rang up 17 weeks with "Garden District," "Waiting for Godt," "Golden Six," Saintliness of Margery Kemepe" and "Come Play With Me." The Theatre Marquee went with the dual-bill, "Guests of the Nation" and "Aria Da Campa,"

Doug Crawford Offers Stock at Shubert, Cincy, Doubling With Dayton

Cincinnati, July 28.

The 2,100-seat Shubert Theatre here is moving into the strawhat fold. An eight-week stock season is scheduled to begin at the house next Tuesday (4) under the management of Douglas Crawford and William Brennan. It'll be a low-priced venture, with tickets scaled from $1-$3 evenings and $1-$2 matinees.

Crawford is already operating a pop-price stock group at the 2,492-seat Memorial Hall, Dayton, with Joseph Vispi as associate producer. The Dayton b.o. is scaled to a $2.50 top for musicals and a $2 top for straight plays.

The potential capacity for a straight play at Dayton is $29,500, while a musical can do $37,500 at capacity. The grosses for the first five weeks were $23,000 for "Mister Roberts," starring David Janssen; $9,000 for "Who Was That Lady I Saw You With," costarring Jean Hagen and Keefe Brasselle; $16,400 for "Born Yesterday," starring Peggy Cass; $17,500 for "Harvey," costarring Joe E. Brown and ZaSu Pitts, and $32,500 for "The King and I," starring Patricia Morison.

The potential capacity gross at the local Shubert will be $38,500. The operation here, tagged the Cincinnati Star Theatre, will be running in opposition to Mark Kroll's tent showcase, the Cincinnati Summer Playhouse. Richard Seader, who's been general manager of the Dayton setup, is mov-

Friedrich Duerenmatt Receives Schiller Nod

Mannheim, Germany, July 21.

Swiss playwright Friedrich Duerenmatt was awarded the Mannheim Schiller prize of about $2,500 in a ceremony held here recently. The citation described him as the most important living playwright using the German language.

His drama, "Der Besuch der Alten Dame," was adapted by Maurice Valency, and presented on Broadway as "The Visit." (Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne, who costarred in the Broadway production, are scheduled to repeat their roles in an upcoming U. S. tour of the play.—Ed.).

Cambridge Drama Fest Offers Theatre Study

Boston, July 28.

Cambridge Drama Festival, currently presenting "Twelfth Night" in the new 1,800-seat Boston Arts Center Theatre is opening the Cambridge Drama Festival Academy "to provide a professional setting for the development and training of talented persons in the theatre arts." Under the directorship of John Ransford Watts, theatre arts professor at Boston Univ., the school opens next Saturday (25) with first of a one week special series of workshops and seminars.

Participating in the workshops and seminars will be such members of the Festival's professional companies as Herbert Berghof, John Gielgud, David Hays, Margaret Leighton, Siobhan McKenna, Jose Quintero, Jason Robards, Jr., Zachary Scott and Michael Wager.

Hal Olver Quits As ATPAM Prez

Hal Olver has resigned as president of the Assn. of Theatrical Pressagents & Managers effective next Saturday (1). Olver, who was reelected president of the union in last June's election, turned in his resignation upon his return from an organizing tour of tent theatres.

He attributes his withdrawal to the time-consuming activities involved in his appointment as an executor of the estate of a recently-deceased uncle and not to any friction in the association. However, it's reported that Olver's withdrawal followed a disagreement with the board.

Walter Fried, a manager-member of the union's board of governors, has been appointed temporary president by the board. Nominations for a regular president will be made at the next ATPAM meet Oct 15, and ballots will then be sent to the entire membership.

Olver's resignation as president leaves him without any administrative standing in the union for the first time in years. Prior to his election as president, he had been business agent and before that a member of the board of governors. The organization tour from which he recently returned was authorized by the union's board with an appropriation of $225 weekly salary, plus $125 for expenses. It was the first time since 1939 that a union president had received any pay.

In the June election, Olver was re-elected president with 237 votes, while the balloting for the other officers was 258 for Harold Goldberg, vice president; 278 for Milton Weintraub, secretary-treasurer; 260 for Edward J. Scanlon, business agent, and 271 for Fred De Bondy, sergeant-at-arms.

LONDON 'LADY' CHORUS ASKING FOR A RAISE

London, July 28.

The chorus of "My Fair Lady" is agitating for more pay, and has raised the question with Equity. After a run of 18 months, and with bookings already going well into 1960, the ensemble performers figure that they've earned an increase.

At the moment they are being paid more than the minimum. The men pull down $44.80 a week, the women $39.20. The chorus comprises 20 singers and 24 dancers.

Masons in 'Red Barn'

Laguna Beach, Cal., July 28.

Michael Gibson, operator of the Laguna Playhouse, has come up with an oldtime melodrama for the appearance of James, Pamela and Portland Mason. "Murder in the Red Barn" opens tonight (Tues.) for a run through next Sunday (2).

Mason also is co-directing with Paul Almond.

'Sweet Bird' to Sweden

Stockholm, July 28.

Tennessee Williams' "Sweet Bird of Youth" will have its first European showing when it opens at the Vasa Theatre, Stockholm, in September. The theatre has also bought the Stockholm rights for Graham Greene's "The Complaisant Lover," but this play is not apt to open for some time.

Williams' "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" ran a year at the Vasa Theatre and "Sweet Bird of Youth" is expected to run at least as long.

H'wood Bowl Set With USSR Group Despite Q.T. Raps

Hollywood, July 28.

Hollywood Bowl's presentation of Sol Hurok's "Russian Festival of Song and Dance" will make its skedded appearance Wednesday through Sunday (29-2) despite considerable circularizing among friends of the Bowl by a few anti-exchange persons attempting to force cancellation of stand's engagement, according to the Hollywood Bowl Assn.

Event is part of the Cultural-Exchange Program negotiated between this country and Russia, which received the blessing of President Eisenhower and unanimous approval of the Senate and House of Representatives, an Association statement read. It was pointed out that "these are our representatives," charged with the duty of determining policy matters for this country, and it's believed by HBA that these reps have better sources than any private citizen for determining policy in regard to Russian festival.

In a letter sent to all Bowl subscribers, Z. Wayne Griffin, Association prexy, asserted:

"Vice President Nixon will be in Russia for 11 days, from July 22 through Aug. 1, which overlaps precisely the time the Russian Festival will be in Los Angeles. If the Board of the Bowl were to act on the demands made upon it to cancel the Festival, it would furnish the Soviet Government with exactly the kind of propaganda it wants for its purpose.

"Within Russia the propaganda line would be that while the Vice President of the United States was being treated as a friendly guest

Embassy Folk Dancers To Enliven 75th Anni Rally Of U.S. Dancing Masters

Washington, July 28.

In store for the 75th Anniversary Convention of the Dance Masters of America Inc., is a program which could only be staged in Washington.

Part of the convention which spans Monday (27) to Aug. 8 at the Shoreham Hotel are native dances in costume staged by 15 foreign embassies here.

Convention is featuring a teacher-training course with a faculty composed of Andre Eglevsky of the New York City Ballet; Orest Sergievsky and Hilda Butsova; Danny Hoctor; Udo and Helga Bier, Weisbaden ballroom teachers; and Dr. Charles E. Fishback, Albuquerque, N.M., pediatrician who teaches acrobatics.

More than 400 dance teachers are here for the Diamond Jubilee convention.

Cambridge Fest Offers Theatregoing by Boat

Boston, July 28.

Taking a boat to the theatre is a new wrinkle being promoted by Cambridge Drama Festival for its Shakespeare revivals in the new Boston Arts Center Theatre on the Charles River. Motor launches take theatre passengers down the river from Boston to the dock at the theatre.

"Twelfth Night," starring Siobhan McKenna and Zachary Scott, opened the season and runs through July 29 with "Macbeth," starring Jason Robards Jr. and Miss McKenna to follow.

Off-B'way Came of Age in 1958-59; 76 Productions, With 48 Preems

New productions dominated the formerly revival-ridden off-Broadway scene during the 1958-59 season. Of the 76 professional entries during the season, 48 were New York preems. That's figured a record for off-Broadway, a substantial increase over the 30 new offerings presented during the previous semester.

The new productions for '58-'59 included 11 musicals, in contrast to only two the prior season. The tuner category included musical comedies, revues, operas and operettas. New plays for '58-'59 totaled 34, against 28 during '57-'58, while three other first-time entries fall into the "miscellaneous" category. There were no shows in that classification the previous season.

A slight discrepancy in the comparison of the last two seasons is that the Phoenix Theatre, responsible for three of the '58-'59 preems, was not included in the VARIETY rundown of the '57-'58 off-Broadway season. Included among the first-time entries for the 52 weeks ended last May 30 are a number of imports and adaptations, as indicated in the breakdown of the season's offerings in an adjacent column.

The shows during '58-'59 included seven double-bills, of which six were new. There was also a program of six one-acters, a program of three one-act operas, two solo-performer shows, a pantomime program and a quadruple-bill with actors and puppets.

The boom in new productions is indicative of off-Broadway's development in the last 10 years. At one time the shows offered on the cellar and attic circuit comprised principally revivals of classics, which avoided the expense of author royalties.

In recent years, however, more money has become available for

New Provincial Theatre To Open in N.W. England

Whitehaven, Eng., July 28.

A new theatrical operation, the Rosehill Arts Trust, opens next September in this West Cumberland town. The theatre will incorporate actual sections from the Royal Standard, a Georgian vaudery which has been demolished. Aim of the project is to provide culture in "a fast-growing industrial community which has attracted many young and talented people."

Interior of the theatre will have decor by London scenic designer Oliver Messel. Booked for the house thus far are Emlyn Williams (in his solo readings of Dickens), John Gielgud (in Shakespeare readings), Bernard Miles and Joyce Grenfell. Concerts will also be staged.

Financing for the venture has been by donation, with both individuals and industrial organizations in the area co-operating.

Alvin, N. Y., Sold For $1,550,000

Max and Stanley Stahl, who've grossed about $2,000,000 on the rental of the Hellinger Theatre, N.Y., since taking over ownership of that property in March, 1957, have now purchased the 1,319-seat Alvin Theatre from the Columbia Broadcasting System for an undisclosed amount, believed to be about $1,550,000.

The Stahls, a father and son realty team, purchased the Hellinger from Anthony Brady Farrell for $3,000,000. They took over the 1,395-seater when the current longrun tenant, "My Fair Lady" was in its 53d sellout week. The musical, currently in its 177th week, has been playing to capacity since then. The gross at capacity, which was about $68,700 when they acquired the Hellinger, has since climbed to around $70,500.

The theatre's share of the weekly gross at capacity is figured around $15,500. However, operating expenses are estimated at around $8,500 weekly, plus $5,000 interest charges, taxes, etc., leaving about $2,000 weekly profit on the venture.

The Alvin, located a block away from the Hellinger, has been operated by CBS as a legit showcase for both regular plays and musicals. The house has been vacant since last May 30 when "First Impressions" folded after an 11-week run. The next booking scheduled for the house is "Girls Against the Boys," due to open there Oct. 27.

KIM STANLEY TO ACT 43-TO-60 IN 'CHERI'

Kim Stanley will costar with Horst Buchholz in the upcoming Broadway production of "Cheri." The actress will portray a woman who ages from 43 to 60 during the play. In her Broadway appearance in last season's "Touch of the Poet," Miss Stanley was cast as a young woman.

"Cherie," adapted by Anita Loos from two Collette novels, "Cheri" and "The End of Cheri," is being co-produced by the Playwrights Co. and Robert Lewis, who'll also direct. Rehearsals are to get under way Aug. 25, with the Broadway opening scheduled for Oct. 5 at an undesignated theatre.

Irish Repertory Tour

Ottawa, July 28.

Irish Repertory Theatre opens a U. S.-Canada tour Oct. 1 in Hartford.

Company, due Sept. 5 in New York will present "Pot o' Broth," by William Butler Yeats, and "Riders to the Sea," by J. M. Synge.

Jerry Leider is planning a Broadway or London production this season of Sam Spewack's "Once There Was a Russian."

London Theatre Group Wins Honors in Paris, Loses Council Subsidy

London, July 28.

Joan Littlewood, Theatre Workshop producer of "The Hostage" and "A Taste Of Honey," flew to Paris and Italy last week to receive awards in connection with her work with the company. Brendan Behan's rollicking play, "The Hostage," received an award as the best production at the 1959 Theatre Des Nations Festival in Paris.

Miss Littlewood herself received the 1959 International Olympics Prize for Theatre, an Italian award, for being "the untiring and genial promoter of juvenile forces and new character in the art of the theatre."

Because of its current prosperity the Theatre Workshop has lost its annual Arts Council grant of $2,800. Gerald Raffles, boss of Theatre Workshop, which operates at Stratford, an East London nabe theatre, is still negotiating with the Arts Council for the handout. He can afford to be philosophical if the subsidy is discontinued, however, with two hit productions now running in the West End. "We've made more from 'A Taste Of Honey' in four months than we've received from the Arts Council in 14 years," he says.

Warren Theatre, in A.C., Will Revert to Films

Atlantic City, July 28.

The Warren Theatre, which has been playing legit since last fall, reverts to films after this week's presentation of the touring stock package, "The Law and Mr. Simon," starring Menasha Skulnik. Martha Raye played a three-week stand at the boardwalk house in "Bells Are Ringing" prior to the Skulnik show.

The Ibis Theatre, of Philadelphia, played "The Big Knife," by Clifford Odets, in the grand ballroom of the Shelburne Hotel last Saturday-Sunday (25-26) and will present other plays there Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights for the rest of the summer.

CASTING NEWS

Following are available parts in upcoming Broadway, off-Broadway, and touring shows as well as ballet, films, industrial and television shows. All information has been obtained directly by the VARIETY Casting Department by telephone calls, and has been rechecked as of noon yesterday (Tues).

The available roles will be repeated weekly until filled, and additions to the list will be made only when information is secured from responsible parties. "Oedipus Rex," presented for a limited run.

"Garden District," double-bill of "Something Unspoken" and "Suddenly Last Summer."

Shaw Series, included "Philanderer" and "You Never Can Tell."

Matinee Idols Still B.O.

Chicago, July 28.

Matinee idols still mean matinee boxoffice. Forrest Tucker has been demonstrating that as the male lead in the touring company of "The Music Man." Company manager Milton Pollock reports that the Wednesday and Saturday afternoon performances at the Shubert Theatre here have all been SRO in recent weeks, and he attributes the boom entirely to the draw of the featured leading man.

Tucker has made his presence felt in the Windy City ever since the musical arrived here last February. He has appeared on every conceivable radio and tv show and been a celebrity guest at numerous civic, business and social functions. His goodwill efforts for the show have been greater than any other performer here in recent years, and in the process he's become the top local dowager-draw and squeal-provoker.

Road Robust for Four Musicals; 'Lady' Wow $112,000 in S.F. Repeat

Business was big last week for the road show list of four musicals. "Music Man" fell off slightly in Chicago, but "My Fair Lady," in its second San Francisco run, piled up another tremendous gross.

The touring lineup will get a straight play addition next Saturday (1) with the opening of "The Gazebo," costarring Tom Ewell and Jan Sterling, in Central City, Col.

Estimates for Last Week

Parenthetic designations for out-of-town shows are the same as for Broadway, except that hyphenated T with show classification indicates tryout and RS indicates road show. Also, prices on touring shows include 10% Federal Tax and local tax, if any, but as on Broadway grosses are net; i.e., exclusive of taxes. Engagements are for single week unless otherwise noted.

Deplores Mex Theatre's Lack of Self-Promotion

Mexico City, July 21.

The Mexican theatre is a virtually unknown quantity in Europe, according to playwright-critic Antonio Magana Esquivel, who has just returned from representing Mexico at the International Theatre Congress in Helsinki. He says there is "very strong interest" in Mexican theatre developments, but little knowledge of conditions here.

"This is the first time that Mexico has sent a representative to this biennial congress, organized by the National Theatre Institute," Esquivel said. The principal reason has been the chronic lack of money to send Mexican observer-spokesmen abroad.

Esquivel advocates that international promotion be set in motion, possibly with federal subsidy, so that the Mexican theatre, its playwrights and players, can assume their rightful place on the international scene. However, he sees little prospect of this becoming a reality. He observes that the Mexican Theatre Center, headed by Rafael Solana, is so short of funds that it cannot even send out press releases and other promotional matter so that the world can "know our theatre better."

STRATFORD, CONN., BIG $40,800 WITH 3 BARD

Stratford, Conn., July 28.

The American Shakespeare Festival nabbed its highest gross of the season last week with $40,800 for three performances of "Romeo and Juliet," two performances of "Merry Wives of Windsor" and three previews of "All's Well That Ends Well."

The take the previous week at the regular $5.75 top was $39,300 for eight performances split evenly between "Romeo" and "Wives." "All's Well" preems for the area critics tomorrow afternoon (Wed.) and for the New York reviewers next Saturday night (1).

Chevalier Big $46,500 For Dallas Muscials

Dallas, July 28.

The State Fair Musicals registered its biggest take for the season last week with a $46,500 gross for the first frame of a fortnight's run of "An Evening With Maurice Chevalier."

The previous week's take at the 4,126-seat Music Hall was $34,400 for the second stanza of "The Vagabond King," with Burgess Meredith, Richard Torigi, Lee Venora and Jean Sanders.

ZaSu 6G in 'Post Road' At Traverse City, Mich.

Traverse City, Mich., July 28.

The Cherry County Playhouse here hit its top take of the season last week with a $6,000 gross for "Post Road," starring ZaSu Pitts.

Joe E. Brown in "Father of the Bride" is current.

'New Moon' $45,000, K.C.

Kansas City, July 28.

Starlight Theatre had a moderately good week with "New Moon," which closed Sunday night (26), the sixth production of the outdoor season in the Swope Park theatre. The Sigmund Romberg work drew good notices, with excellent singing by Jan McArt, Earl Wrightson and Robert Williams. Figure for the seven nights was $45,000.

Seventh production is "The Great Waltz," opening last night (Mon.) for a week's run with Vic Damone and Claramae Turner.

'Babes' 31G, Westbury

"Babes in Arms" grossed under $31,000 last week in the first frame of a fortnight's run at the Westbury (L.I.) Music Fair.

The package musical, starring Julie Wilson, grossed $27,600 the previous week at the Camden County Music Fair, Haddonfield, N. J.

B'way Withers; Only 3 Sellouts; 'Flower' $62,000, 'Redhead' $49,700, 'Destry' $49,100, 'Majority' $47,600

As anticipated for this time of year, Broadway was belted last week as business sagged substantially for most shows. The seasonal upturn is due Aug. 15.

The falloff in receipts reduced the number of sellouts to three shows, "Gypsy," "My Fair Lady" and "Raisin in the Sun."

Estimates for Last Week

Keys: C (Comedy), D (Drama), CD (Comedy-Drama), R (Revue), MC (Musical-Comedy), MD (Musical-Drama), O (Opera), OP (Operetta).

Other parenthetic designations refer, respectively, to weeks played, number of performances through last Saturday, top prices (where two prices are given, the higher is for Friday-Saturday nights and the lower for weeknights), number of seats, capacity gross and stars. Price includes 10% Federal and 5% City tax, but grosses are net; i.e., exclusive of taxes.

Two for the Seesaw, Booth (CD) (80th wk; 636 p) ($6.90; 780; $32,300) (Hal March, Lee Grant). Over $9,000. Previous week, $10,000. Going on twofers.

World of Suzie Wong, Broadhurst (D) (41st wk; 327 p) ($6.90; 1,214; $47,400). Over $26,200 with twofers. Previous week, $28,800 with twofers.

Miscellaneous

Once Upon A Mattress, Phoenix (MD) (11th wk; 88 p) ($4.60; 1,150; $29,382). Almost $18,000. Previous week, $18,300.

Mimi Benzell OK $9,000, 'Paris,' Ivoryton, Conn.

Ivoryton, Conn., July 28.

Mimi Benzell in "Paris" grossed a profitable $9,000 last week at the Ivoryton Playhouse. It was a replacement bill for "Private Lives," which was cancelled because of Tallulah Bankhead's recent injury.

Previously, the Milton Stiefel strawhat drew a healthy $14,000 with Betsy Palmer and Kurt Kasznar in "Once More, with Feeling" as the opening bill and $8,300 with Shirley Booth in "Nina" for the second week.

"Bells Are Ringing," with June Ericson, is current.

SWANSON NEAT $17,400 IN 'DAY' AT WESTPORT

Westport, Conn., July 28.

The tryout package of "Red Letter Day," starring Gloria Swanson, grossed a satisfactory $17,400 last week at the 755-seat Westport Country Playhouse. The previous week's take for "Caesar and Cleopatra," costarring Franchot Tone and Susan Strasberg, was also $17,400. The top is $4.85 Saturday night and $4.40 weeknights.

"Nina," starring Shirley Booth, is current. The one-night stand of The Modern Jazz Quartet last Sunday (26) grossed $2,500.

Groucho's Record $21,562 With 'Elizabeth' at Chi

Chicago, July 28.

Groucho Marx grossed $21,562 in "Time For Elizabeth" at Edgewater Beach Playhouse last week. That set a new house record, topping by about $60 the previous week's take by Hans Conried in "Tall Story." Marx played to fewer benefit houses than did Conried.

Marx's record was set in the first week of a two-week stand, and the current stanza, and on the basis of advance receipts, is shaping comparably. It's likely Marx will also set a two-week record for the strawhat.

Julius La Rosa $19,600 With 'Wish' at Oakdale

Wallingford, Conn., July 28.

"Wish You Were Here," starring Julius La Rosa, grossed a so-so $19,600 last week at the Oakdale Musical Theatre. It was in the black, but disappointing.

Current is "Li'l Abner."

off-Broadway production and consequently producers have been able to option new scripts. Also, as the prestige of off-Broadway has grown, particularly through its acceptance by the first-string drama critics, there has been less reluctance on the part of authors to have their works produced in theatres outside the Times Square area.

Although there's little money to be made off-Broadway, a production in an out-of-the-way house has showcase value, since most of the plays are not only reviewed but are also publicized by professional legit pressagents. In addition, there's also the prospect of the property being picked up for filmization or some other subsidiary medium.

TRI-STAR 'MENAGERIE' $22,300, PHILLY PARK

Philadelphia, July 28.

The Playhouse in the Park got a sparkling $22,300 last week for "Glass Menagerie," co-starring Eli Wallach, Jo Van Fleet and Anne Jackson (Mrs. Wallach). The management would like to bring the show back for a repeat week, but there are no available open dates.

A Adventure

Bruce Becker presentation of Morton Gottlieb production of three-act (four scenes) comedy by James P. Davis. Direction, Herbert Machiz; setting and lighting, David Johnston; theatre decor, Willis Sammons. Stars Helen Hayes; features John Alexander, Edith Meiser, Royal Beal, Jack Cannon, Chris Gampel, Alexander Clark, Dorrit Kelton, James Reese, Flora Elkins, Tom Wilson. Opened July 20, '59, at the Tappan Zee Playhouse, Nyack, N.Y.; $4.40 top.

Helen Hayes is playing a New England spinster author in this oddly-titled satirical comedy by N.Y. Daily News staffer James P. Davis. It's not too dissimilar to the role she acted in "Harriet" on Broadway 17 years ago. Like that Florence Ryerson and Colin Clements work, this play is likely to depend on the performance of the star. If she can make enough of the marathon role of the lady novelist, "A Adventure" could conceivably get by on Broadway.

Although the Davis play has the makings of an amusing social satire, he hasn't pointed it clearly enough, and wastes time and attention on inconsequential matters. He squanders lines on a somewhat private joke about the wealthy writer and her dependant publisher who are flabbergasted when one of her personally-subsidized, privately circulated biographical novels becomes a scalper's item.

The characters of the old-wordly typewriter service man, the autheress's down-to-earth sister and several unctious lawyers are shrewdly drawn, but not vital to the central plot. On the other hand, the two old friends, now Washington rivals whose political fortunes are threatened by the spinster's nostalgic reminiscences, tend to be under-written. The parts of a loyal maid and the ingenue are negligible.

As the amateur writer with money enough to get her stuff printed (her transparently-disguised autobiographical stories are titled alphabetically—each prefaced with the article "A"—so her latest, "A Victory," is her 22d published work), Miss Hayes gives an admirably dimensioned and detailed performance, considering the limitations of stock rehearsal. She's offstage scarcely at all.

The character of the slightly daffy authoress who hasn't an inkling of the explosive power of the written word (after all, even the relatives to whom she gives the few copies of her books apparently don't bother reading them) has something of the naivette of the Harriet Beecher Stowe role of the 1942-43 season. However, she too has a streak of canniness and a speaking acquaintance with the President of the U.S.—in this instance "Teddy" Roosevelt. In the case of the present Miss Lulu Spencer, there's more than a touch of double-cross in the way the heroine outsmarts the two conniving politicians.

This Morton Gottlieb production is shrewdly and by strawhat standards expensively cast, and has been skilifully staged by Herbert Machiz. John Alexander is excellent as the bombastic Supreme Court candidate who became a lawyer by fraud and is terrified at the prospect of having to take a bar exam. Royal Beal quickly establishes the brief role of his rival, a self-righteous U.S. Senator, and Edith Meiser gives definition to the so-what part of the novelist's disingenuous sister.

The other principals are ably played by Chris Gampel, Alexander Clark, James Reese, Jack Cannon, Tom Wilson, Flora Elkins and Dorrit Kelton. The expansive Boston living room setting by David Johnston is appropriately dated, roomy and light. Hobe.

The Ring of Truth

London, July 17.

Robin Fox Partnerships Ltd. & Donmar Productions Ltd. (in association with Frith Banbury Ltd.) presentation of three-act (four scenes) comedy by Wynyard Browne. Direction, Frith Banbury; decor, Reece Pemberton. Stars David Tomlinson, Margaret Johnston. Opened July 16, '59 at Savoy Theatre, London; $2.80 top.

Wynyard Browne's new comedy, "The Ring of Truth," involves the clash between the logical and the emotional mind. Browne, a seasoned writer of drawing-room comedy, has turned out another expert vehicle for a polished cast.

Occasionally, however, the serious undertones of the work become confused and so confuse the audience. "Ring of Truth" is a pleasant little play which should rate a moderate, unsensational run.

The yarn is about a mathematician whose charming wife sees the loss of her engagement ring as a portent of the ruin of their marriage. The logical-minded husband regards this as nonsense. However, the incident precipitates their first quarrel and leads to a maze of misunderstanding, as first the insurance people and then the police get into the situation. The husband finds himself suspecting his wife of an affair and being similarly suspected himself.

Taken as an instance of how a seemingly small, event can lead to a chain of complications, "The Ring of Truth" is an amusing summer-weight affair. Occasionally, the author seems to be trying to prove something more weighty, but never clarifies what.

Frith Banbury's direction brings out the best in a good cast, in which the supporting players have more opportunity than the stars. David Tomlinson and Margaret Johnston cannot be bettered at this verbal table-tennis and emerge as a thoroughly nice married couple for whose problems the audience feels deeply. Irene Browne, as the husband's mother, is also a veteran at the skilled, glossy dialog in which the author excels.

The performances that most effectively capture audience interest, however, are by Arthur Lowe as an over-zealous insurance inspector, John Slater as a police sergeant with psychological pretensions, and Brian Wilde as his dim-witted assistant. Reece Pemberton's set is in the conventional drawing-room mold. Rich.

'Stockings' 19½G, Indpls.; Mowbray $7,100 in 'Nude'

Indianapolis, July 28.

Both local summer operations, the Starlight Musicals and Avondale Playhouse, hit their season's lows last week. While there were no rainouts, weather threatened every night.

Starlight grossed $19,500 in six perfomances with Anne Francine and Dick Smart in "Silk Stockings" at $3 top ($3.50 weekends). Avondale settled for $7,100 with Alan Mowbray in "Nude With Violin" at $2.75 single price.

Penny Singleton is current at Starlight in "Happy Huntings," Eddie Bracken at Avondale in "Seven Year Itch."

"Guys and Dolls," usually an odds-on bet in a list of legit entries, is off form in its current outing in New York's Central Park. The musical gets away to a hopeful start but fades in the stretch.

The tuner is the first of three song-and-dance shows scheduled for al-fresco presentation this summer in the park's new arena theatre. The 2,520-seater is on the site of the Wollman Memorial Rink, which two years ago was the locale for a disastrous season of musical and other productions, presented on an outdoor proscenium stage by Michael Grace & Chris F. Anderson.

The present season, "sponsored" by New York's Hudson Celebration Committee, is under the direction of Jean Dalrymple. Like Grace, she isn't confining the park program to legit, but is going in for a potpouri of entertainment. The season's opener, was a ballet program, headed by Andre Eglevsky, who was also a participant in Grace's opening bill at the rink in 1957.

Although "Guys and Dolls" doesn't take top money, it's at least a professional presentation. One of the adverse factors of the offering is the spacious theatre and its picturesque but distractive surroundings. The accoustics are also unsatisfactory.

The production, which on its own is hampered by generally uninspired performances, gets lost in the vastness of the park area and the backdrop of greenery and skyscrapers. Although the tall buildings are in keeping with the musical's basic Broadway setting, they tend to such an expansive locale, that audience concern over the yarn is dissipated.

"Guys and Dolls," as scripted by Jo Swerling and Abe Burrows, is loaded with an assortment of likeable and colorful Damon Runyon characters. As portrayed in the park production they're a remarkably lacklustre group. The performances have a surfacey quality, lacking in insight and cohesion. Another negative aspect is that only a few of Frank Loesser's tuneful songs are given satisfactory delivery.

Principles get a fairly strenuous workout in just making their exits and entrances (four runways are used.)

Heading the cast is Lloyd Bridges, making his legittuner debut as Sky Masterson. One of the many television names (he's star of "Sea Hunt") playing summer stock this year, he appeared in the role earlier this season in a tent production of the musical. He's a little too tense and his performance and singing are routine.

Nitery comic Harvey Stone drives too hard as Nathan Detroit, and his shouting is no substitution for the nuances necessary to get the most out of the part. Iva Withers does a good job as Miss Adelaide, while Margot Moser is okay as the "mission doll." She's a little too "cute," however, in her handling of "If I Were a Bell."

Contributing some of the better performances among the balance of the cast members are Dean Michener and Martin Wolfson. Terpers Tom Snow and Alice Shanahan score in the "Havana" number and incidentally, the scene shift from Broadway to the Latino locale could have been abetted by covering up or removing the "Hot Box" sign associated with the show's Main Stem setting. In staging the production, Billy Matthews has fared better with the crowd scenes than with the individual performances.

The regular scale at the theatre is $1.05-$3.95 but a special block of 136 seats are peddled for $5.65. Jess.

in the Moscow Exhibit of the United States, which is being made available to all Russians, the capitalists in the Vice President's own state have committed a most unfriendly act against the artistic representatives of the Soviet nations, thus demonstrating to the world at large that we do not really desire peaceful and friendly relations with the Soviet Government.

"Inside Russia this propaganda would seriously hurt the effect we hope for through Nixon's presence, enabling the government of Russia to smear the visit. Externally, the Soviet Government would make propaganda to the nations which are now on the fence between capitalism and socialistic communism, to the effect that we in the United States did not have enough confidence in capitalism and feared that the Russian Festival, as a demonstration of the great strength of socialism, would corrupt our people.

"Lastly, while it is true many of the people of Los Angeles who have doubts about the importation of the Russian Festival are sincere, our investigation shows that this is an organized and inspired operation, typical of communistic technique, and should be viewed with suspicion."

Mrs. Lincoln Rhubarb

Despite objections of Harry J. Dunbaugh, a Chicago attorney, Bobbs Merrill Co. has no intention of withdrawing the Lincoln book, "The Trial of Mary Todd Lincoln," said M. Hugher Miller, president of the firm. Dunbaugh is a longtime member of the law firm of Isham, Lincoln & Beale, of which Robert Todd Lincoln, President Lincoln's son, was a founder. Dunbaugh had suggested that the book be withdrawn from further distribution and that use of any part of it for television, film or stage production might subject the publishers, producers and authors to libel action.

The book, authored by James A. Rhodes and Dean Jauchius, describes the circumstances under which Lincoln's widow was committed to a mental institution on a complaint signed by her son, Robert Todd Lincoln.

Time Inc. Peak Profits

Time Inc.'s net income for first six months of this year was up 13.2% over first six months of 1958. Net income for first half of 1959 was $6,043,800, or $3.09 per outstanding share, as compared with $5,340,000, or $2.73 per share for the first six months of last year.

Roy E. Larsen, prexy of Time Inc., said revenues from publishing, broadcasting, paper products and other sources had set a first-half year record, up $7,392,400 to a total of $131,802,400. Costs and expenses were up $6,505,900 to a total of $120,815,300.

Bell Doesn't Ring Right

Joseph N. Bell's byline series on motivational research for United Features Syndicate began with three installments based on an exploratory survey of radio listening habits done especially for VARIETY by Creative Research Associates of Chicago. Bell neglected to credit VARIETY by name, alluding to the publication as "a magazine in the entertainment field."

The VARIETY report on radio appeared in two installments this year, the first in the issue of April 29 and the second on May 20.

Broadening The Crime

The proposed "obscenity" legislation for Pennsylvania took on broader aspects this week when a second bill was introduced in the House at Harrisburg which would include, in addition to motion pictures and stage shows, the prohibition of the preparation, sale, distribution and exhibition of obscene literature, magazines, photographs and pamphlets.

The proposal, which has the backing of the administration, is scheduled for an early hearing in the House.

Cop Turns Moralist

A Permabook paper back of "The Sexual Responsibility of Woman" by Maxine Davis was ordered removed from newsstands in Rockport, Mass., Wednesday (22) by Jacob H. Perkio Jr., chief of police. The 239-page volume was sold out in neighboring Gloucester by Thursday (23) p.m.

The action was charged "illegal and unconstitutional" on Thursday (23) in New York by Freeman Lewis, exec. veep of Pocketbooks Inc., which publishes Permabooks. "I think the book is not proper, especially for consumption by youngsters," the chief of police stated.

Lewis said: "The chief is not legally entitled to determine what the community should read. If the chief wants to bring a charge against the book, he should go before the court." He called the volume "a very serious book by a very qualified author in the medical field. It is not quite the sort of book youngsters would read."

Stu Keate's Affiliation

Stuart Keate, ex-Toronto Star, one-Time staffer in N.Y. and now publisher of Victoria, B.C., Times, is a director of F.P. Publications Ltd., a new company owning or controlling five Canadian dailies and a weekly. They're Ottawa Journal, Winnipeg Free Press, Free Press Weekly, Calgary Albertan, Victoria Times and Victoria Daily Colonist. It also has an interest in Lethbridge, Alta., Herald, daily.

Victor Sifton, long owner of 120,000-circ. Winning Free Press, and family have 60% of new outfit, Max Bell 40%. They're chairman and president respectively. Bell has long owned both Victoria dailies. Combined circulation of new company's five dailies: 295,000; of its weekly, 387,575.

John Buell, 32, English teacher at Loyola College, Montreal, will have his first novel, "The Pyx," published in N.Y. by Farrar, Straus & Cudahy. A mystery with a message, it's a Catholic Book Club choice for September. Setting is Montreal.

Switch on the N.Y. tennis-club situation: Toronto's Primrose Club has just voted to admit its first non-Jewish member. He's John Bassett, chairman and publisher of Toronto Telegram. So reports Gerard FitzGerald in Montreal Gazette.

Civil War Clown

Show biz will get some spotlight attention in the Civil War Centennial celebration via the biog of Dan Rice, "Bigger Than Barnum," by Don Carle Gillette with Ralph Hancock, to be published by Julian Messner Inc., in a deal set by Bertha Klausner.

Rice, greatest clown of all time and operator of his own circus for about three decades spanning the Civil War, was a pal of Lincoln and also enjoyed personal acquaintanceship with all big figures of his day. The book has another timely angle in the fact that showman-patriot Rice's unrivalled popularity in his era caused him to be boomed for President, with many newspapers seriously supporting him.

Incidentally, circus stories appear to be blossoming as a new Hollywood cycle on the heels of current release of "The Big Circus." Columbia recently completed "The Flying Fontaines," Walt Disney just finished "Toby Tyler," and Paramount has "Fabulous Showman" (Barnum) slated.

Up Pornographic Liability

Massachusetts House passed by voice (unrecorded) vote Monday (20) a bill to impose stiff new penalties on peddlers of pornography and obscenity. The Senate had previously passed the measure. The bill was based on recommendations of Middlesex County prosecutor James L. O'Dea Jr. after his investigators had seized thousands of obscene pictures and films in raids throughout the county.

The bill would provide prison terms up to five years and $5,000 maximum fines for convictions. A provision to make jail terms mandatory on second offenses had been removed by the judiciary committee.

Dorothy Thompson's Condition

Dorothy Thompson, 65, w.k. author, columnist and lecturer, in Gifford Memorial Hospital, Randolph, Vt., after suffering a heart attack Thursday (23) at her summer home in Barnard.

Dr. Elisabeth Barry reported that "basically Miss Thompson's condition is fairly good."

Radio Press Inc., of New York, has changed its name to Hircob Inc.

Bantam Books paid $100,000 for reprint rights to John O'Hara's "From the Terrace," with initial printing of 500,000-700,000 planned.

Olga Curtis, who was woman's editor for INS from 1955 until its merger last year with UP, was named woman's editor of Parade Magazine.

Roy Rowan, head of the Time-Life office in Chi, has been transferred to New York and replaced in the Windy City by Robert Ajemian.

Robert W. Service, Canada's Yukon poet ("Shooting of Dan McGrew"), left $141,930.47 in a Toronto bank account when he died last September, in addition to holdings elsewhere. He lived for years in Monte Carlo, but died in France.

The Bobbs Merrill Co., acquired last November by Howard Sams, Indianapolis, will continue in that city, said M. Hughes Miller, the firm's new president. James A. Eldridge has been named public relations director of the publishing firm.

Helen Williams, publicity and media copywriter for Parade Magazine, has resigned. Miss Williams, who married Alton Alexander Chaney of Baltimore June 27, was formerly with the DuMont Television and the Chicago office of Bozell & Jacobs, and will continue in this field in the Baltimore area.

Southampton Press Publishing Co. Inc. has been authorized to conduct a publishers and printers business in Southampton, Suffolk County. Directors are William B. and Shirley B. Robinson and Hazel B. Wilde. Westhampton Publishing Co. Inc. formed, with the same directors to conduct business in that Long Island township.

Glenn Thompson, former executive editor of the Cincinnati Enquirer, has been named editor of the Dayton Journal Herald, of the Cox newspaper chain. He succeeds Dwigh E. Young, editor and publisher since 1948, who is retiring from active direction of the news and editorial activities of the paper, but continues his column, "Talking It Over," and retains the honorary title of publisher. Young is 75.

USSR Jams Radio

chine's progressive choreography. VARIETY's reviewer went on to suggest the actual component elements of a successful program to visit Russia and administer "hot and cold thermal therapy of the artistic imagination, American Style, to wit: "Symphony in C," "Fancy Free," "Episodes on Webern" and "Western Symphony."

Writing in the current (Aug.) issue of Dance Mag, Pleasant does not question the resources or greatness of the Bolshoi. Rather he, too, points up what America itself possesses in this area of a supposed Russian artistic monopoly. The right kind of an American invasion would hit the Soviets where they live. Under the caption "Message to Congress" Pleasant puts the propaganda issue thus:

> "Do you want to speak directly to the masses in Russia without the possibility of jamming, as with radio, or distortion, as with print? Do you want to show them the strength, the potential, the achievement of America in a field Russians have been brought up, and with much justification, to consider peculiarly their own? Then show them a ballet that truly represents America's best efforts."

The American impresario does not hold back any effusions for ballerina Galina Ulanova. She rates all that has been said, he thinks. But he adds that she is not "typical of the Muscovites, though they cherish her. She is "as much a gift of the czars to the Soviet Union as the Kremlin."

He praises, however, the Bolshoi's over-all "vitality, security, acrobatic virtuosity and the excitement of its feeling for the dance."

means more cash to jingle in pockets of farmers.

With this money the grower will pay his debts, perhaps buy a new car, maybe stash some of it away and then spend considerable on entertainment. Consequently theatres and amusement places in Adel, Alma, Baxley, Blackshear, Claxton, Douglas, Fitzgerald, Habira, Hazlehurst, Metter, Moultrie, Nashville, Pearson, Pelham, Quitman, Statesboro, Swainsboro, Sylvester, Thomasville, Tifton, Valdosta, Vidalia and Waycross, in Georgia; and High Springs, Lake City, Jasper, Live Oak and Madison, in Florida, will be doing good business during selling season, which will run until around Sept. 1.

Carnival atmosphere pervades area after big barns, which are hot as blazes, close down after day's selling. Farmers and families, with time on their hands and money in their jeans, go looking for some type of amusement. Growers, after fighting insect pests and vagaries of weather, are in a relaxed mood and anxious to have a little fun . . . and willing to pay for it.

It's a happy time and this year outlook is that 1959 will be no exception. Last year's marketing season (July 29 to Aug. 22), one of shortest on record, set a high price average of $57.44 per hundred on producers sales.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Hollywood, July 28.

"The most authentic hillbilly since Will Rogers," Harold Sherman had said of Jimmie Driftwood. "Neighbor of ours in Arkansas. He'll be flying to Hollywood Friday. When are you leaving?"

"Saturday," I said, wishing I had said "Thursday" as I was aching in every organ and in no mood to hear even Mozart in the original.

"Where are you staying?"

"Mostly in the offices of the army of doctors I keep off unemployment insurance," I said.

"No, seriously."

"At the home of Helen and Martin Field while they are in the east visiting their people."

"I know where it is. I'll bring Jimmie up there."

He did too. Not only Jimmie Driftwood but Jimmie Jr., a tall, slender handsome youth of 19 and quiet as a Coolidge.

Jimmie Driftwood (his real name was Martin) is tall and handsome, too, but stockier than his son, and as gabby as Gabby Hayes. They arrived with three kidney-shaped guitar cases, wearing low-heeled cowboy boots and ever-ready smiles.

Queen's English Arkie

Jimmie's accent is pure Arkie but his English is the Queen's. That figured. He's principal of Snowball highschool and teaches history on the side.

Within minutes he revealed he really was "the most civilized hillbilly since Will Rogers," though certainly not as funny. However, he told us a funny story explaining why his "Battle of New Orleans" was not played or sung when Queen Elizabeth II came to Canada for the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway.

"In England some smart alec rewrote my lyrics," he explained, "and had the English win the battle and chase our troops up the Mississippi. That might be all right for English music halls, but the Queen knew enough history to know it wasn't so. On the other hand, to play my version might be a little hard on her pride. So it was decided to drop the song altogether."

"Actually," I said, "it didn't make much difference who won it, since peace had been declared in 1814 and the battle was fought in 1815."

If We Had Lost New Orleans Battle

"Yes, but the treaty had not been ratified," said Historian Driftwood, "and if the British had won the battle, it never would have been. Instead they would have been masters today of everything west of the Mississippi and you'd be singing 'God Save The Queen' instead of 'My Country 'Tis Of Thee'."

I forgot I was talking to a teacher of history. I can't sing any of them but I did remember that "God Save the Queen" and "My Country 'Tis Of Thee" were both derived from a fine old German drinking song. But what was "Battle" derived from?

From his love of General Andrew Jackson, according to Jimmie. Old Hickory had been Jimmie's hero since he learned to walk. In fact, a buckskin coat he was wearing was worn by one of the general's troopers who had fought in the Battle of New Orleans. He showed me the coat. It was heavy enough to resist 19th century shells. New beaded embroidery adorned the jacket. He explained some Canadian Indians added it as their contribution to North American solidarity.

Due to circumstances over which I had every control I had not heard the "Battle." Whereupon Jimmie whipped out one of his "boxes" and went to work, giving us, in the end, an hour's concert that has not been matched in the history of folk festivals. We learned more history that is not in the history books than you could shake Robinson, Beard and Hayes at.

Color Of 'Soul Of Man' Tough on Faubus

These were mostly folksongs which are in RCA Victor LPM 1635 and 1994 records, but he sang some also which are too controversial for public performance, like "Tell Me, What Is The Color Of The Soul of Man." Another was called "He Had A Long Chain On." It was a beaut—sadder than "Old Man River" and deeper than the bottom of the sea.

His home is in Timbo, Ark., about seven miles from Mountain View where Harold Sherman has his home. Driftwood walked that route all during his highschool days and even walked the hundred miles between his home and college when he entered Arkansas Teachers College. He graduated with honors but got no credits for being the best scholar of folklore music in the country.

Though most of his songs are American he can sing ballads that run back to Good Queen Bess' time and he believes the American hillbillies are nearest to old England in language and song. He sings them "like they orter be sang." Like Ring Lardner, Jimmie Driftwood has an ear for the American language as she is spoke and sang.

He wants to go around the country, finding unsung heroes to sing about. Ones like Peter Francisco who fought in the Revolution and was so strong he threw an enemy over a fence and threw his horse after him.

Jimmie knows a thousand folksongs already and he's only 40. He had been singing his ballad of General Jackson's defeat of Commander Pakenham's British forces at New Orleans for years but it didn't catch on till recently. Tune, via Johnny Herton on the Columbia label sold a million records in four months. By creating folksongs for youngsters, he believes, they will get interested in local heroes and look up their history. He said the gibberish of rock 'n' roll lyrics were a protest against the love songs of Broadway and the interest in folksongs is the natural sequel to the rock 'n' roll protest.

His interest in guitars started when he was a very small boy. His family lived fifty miles from anywhere in Arksansas and the only way they got places was either walking, riding mules or horse-and-buggy.

Travelling people came by and it was hard for them to find places to stay overnight, because many people were afraid to take in strangers. But not his grandfather.

One of the travelers had a guitar and played and sang for them. Jimmie thought the man gave him his guitar, and when the man left the next morning Jimmie cried his eyes out seeing the man go down the road with his guitar slung over his shoulder.

A Hillbilly's Strad

"So Grandfather dried my tears and said he would make one for me. And that's just what he did. He used part of an old post fence for the stem, part of an old ox yoke for the sides and part of Grandma's bed headboard for the top and bottom."

It came out real beautiful, with a lovely tone, and it is the same guitar he is using to this day. He has others too, but this one has the mellowest tones.

He never took a lesson, but plays the guitar with great charm and original skill. He also plays a mouth bow which H. G. Wells said is "the oldest music next to the human voice."

Driftwood's bow looks old and beaten. He used to make them himself. But as the wood dried it would warp and it would not twang so good. So he found an old spinning wheel, over a hundred years old, and used one-third of the wheel for a bow. That one has kept its shape ever since.

The bow string instrument is a section of a curved piece of wood strung by a musical wire. Driftwood tunes it by a key as other string instruments. One end of the bow goes just to the opening of his mouth, and as he twangs on the wire he can control the sounds by opening or closing his mouth.

On being asked how many bow string musicians there are in the country now, he said as far as he knew he was the only one left.

London Daily Express staffer Robert Haswell is not one to let American hotel honesty hide behind anonymity. Not only did he write the Hotel Algonquin management thanking them for a $6 refund on a restaurant bill overcharge but he vox popped to his own paper, lauding the New York hotel and concluded, "Isn't it an unusual thing to find such honesty in hotels these days? I wonder how many other hotels in the world would have done the same."

OBITUARIES

HAROLD (HAL) E. JANIS

Harold E. Janis, 52, veep and exec producer of Shellrick Corp., producing outfit of Sid Caesar's tv programs, died (22) of a heart attack at St. Vincent's Hospital, N.Y.

Janis had been with Caesar since 1950 when the two worked together on "Show of Shows." Previously Janis was a reporter of Latin-American affairs for the AP and also covered sports for INS. From 1934 to 1940 he was executive producer and director of news, sports and special events for WMCA, N.Y. indie.

During World War II he rose to the rank of colonel in the U.S. Army overseas. He also served with the Inter-American Defense Board and for two years after the war was with the U.S. Dept. of State Info Services in N. Y. and Washington. Janis went to NBC in 1950 as associate supervisor of production of "Show of Shows" headed up by Caesar and Imogene Coca, later stepping into the exec producers role.

He had also worked on numerous other programs including the Martha Raye show, the Bob Hope Show, Max Liebman productions, Jackie Gleason show and Martin and Lewis programs.

Janis attended Pennsylvania Military College and Columbia Univ. School of Journalism.

His wife and two children survive.

K. K. HANSEN

Kenneth K. Hansen, 54, former show business publicist who rose from army private to colonel and made the army his permanent career, died July 20 in Alexandria, Va. He was buried in Arlington Cemetery.

K. K. Hansen, as he was generally called, broke into theatrical publicity under the late Ben Serkowich at Balaban & Katz in Chicago. Later, in New York, he was teamed in the publicity shop of Hansen & (Ned R.) Williams in handling a log list of names, notably for the William Morris Agency and General Artists Corp. Ray Noble, Duke Ellington, Cab Calloway, Jack Teagarden, Mitchell Ayres were typical of the "list."

In Loving Memory
RUBEY COWAN
July 28, 1957

Though broadly known in show business, he was to live out the balance of his mature years with the military, for which he developed an affinity, and vice versa. He had a kidney condition which he successfully suppressed from army medicos as later he left unreported two broken ribs, sustained on the obstacle course, for fear it would mar his becoming a lieutenant.

Hansen's steady rise and decision to stay with the new life was a surprise to show business, although there have been others who elected the same course under different circumstances. Hansen's theatrical know-how and facility with words (he was a crack speech-writer) all proved grist to the armed forces' mills.

An active participant in the war, he sought action and got to Japan as Chief of Psychological Warfare. Of recent years, with chickens on his shoulders, he was (a) staff director of special projects and (b) a member of the Joint Chiefs of Staffs at the Pentagon.

His death followed earlier heart attacks. His wife survives.

FRANK G. PEDDIE

Frank Groves Peddie, 62, veteran actor of radio and television for the Canadian Broadcasting Corp., died July 20 in Toronto of a brain tumor. Born in Fifeshire, Scotland, where he studied law at the U. of Edinburgh, he served in World War I, was wounded and awarded the Military Cross. He later joined the police force in India and was appointed supervisor of the Punjab there. After four years in India, he was forced by malaria to come to Canada where he returned to his law studies and graduated from the U. of Toronto in 1924.

In 1927, Peddie was persuaded by the CBC to try radio acting; was a lawyer by day and an actor by night. In time, the latter became his main work and he starred in a number of radio-tv series, including 13 years as lead in "The Craigs" which he created and on which he was still active until his illness. He was also heard in such Canadian series as "Jake and the Kid," as Mr. Wardle in "The Pickwick Papers," and Lord Steyne in "Vanity Fair."

In legit, he played the role of Socrates in the play of that name, was a principal in the North American premiers of "Salad Days" and "The Glass Cage." For the latter, J. B. Priestley took him to London with the Toronto company in 1957.

Survived by his wife and two sons, David, story editor of the CBC tv department, and James who is playing with the Shakespearean Festival Theatre in Stratford, Ont.

GEORGE HUNT

George Hunt, 87, a legit manager and publicist for more than 60 years, died July 21 in Berkeley.

A native of Charles City, Ia., Hunt ran away from home when he was 12, got a job as waterboy for the elephants of a circus, was a teenage cowhand in the Rockies, worked as a printer's devil in Denver and in the 1890s worked under Colonel Rolls in New Orleans until heading to New York.

In N.Y. he learned the theatre business by acting as a scout for play broker Frank Sanger, soon afterward started taking Klaw & Erlanger shows on the road. He was a charter member of the original Friars Club, when George M. Cohan was abbott, and among shows he took on the road for long tours were "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," with Florence Moore, and "So Long, Letty," with Charlotte Greenwood.

Around 1924 he settled in Boston where he operated his own advertising and publicity business for a decade, handling such personalities as Mary Garden, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, Mary Pickford. The next decade he worked as ad-publicity man for the Boston Braves' ballclub and in 1944 moved to Los Angeles, where he remained until 1954 handling legit shows. He lived in San Diego a year and a half and in mid-1955 moved to the Frisco Bay area, settling in Berkeley but continuing to work at the Curran, Geary, Alcazar and Frisco Opera House. The last legit show he handled was the eight-week run of "Two for the Seesaw," which closed July 18 at the Geary.

Wife, son and daughter survive.

LON M. HUGHES

Lon M. Hughes, 56, who broadcast one of radio's earliest stock and bond shows, died in San Francisco July 22.

Hughes was assistant financial editor of the old San Francisco Bulletin when it was merged into the Call in 1929, then went to the Frisco edition of the Wall Street Journal and in 1932 became the Journal's city editor. At the same time, he began his daily financial show on the NBC network, a program which continued until he moved to the San Francisco Examiner as financial editor in 1938. He held the Examiner position until 1947, when he went into the public relations business for himself.

Two sons survive.

EVERETT STEVENS

Everett Stevens, pianist and composer, died in Washington July 19. More than 100 of his compositions, largely chamber music and piano pieces, many intended for children, were published. A Stevenson piano concerto was played by the National Symphony Orchestra in 1957. His numerous compositions for children included "Candy Cane Cakewalk," "Cinnamon Stick" and "Jo-Jo the Juggler." He was formerly on the faculty of Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore and taught music in Washington.

His mother survives.

GEORGE A. BAGGS

George A. Baggs, 53, secretary-treasurer of Westland Theatres, died July 20, 1959 in a Colorado Springs hospital. Before joining the theatre company 12 years ago, he was a Certified Public Accountant in Denver for 16 years. He was a past president of the Colorado State Society of Certified Public Accountants. Member of the El Paso Lodge No. 13 AF&AM and the Rocky Mountain Consistory No. 2.

about 8,000 listeners. In event of rain everyone scoots cross-street into the Judson Memorial Church where concert continues. Cooperation is the essence. Music stands, for instance, are loaned by Greenwich House. There is help from the Dept. of Parks. City-owned WNYC provides sound equipment, also broadcasts. But the concerts are possible because of donations. West Side Savings Bank underwrites first concert this season. One Village citizen paid for the music shell, an artist is sponsor for two concerts. The Musicians' Recording Fund helps.

Greenwich Village boasts about these highbrow park concerts: (a) they are uncompromising in repertory; (b) the Bohemian audiences are well-behaved unlike some of the weirdos who congregate in Central Park when music or the Bard is dispensed; (c) the concerts are free, but they are paid for by neighborhood pride.

Again quoting an enthusiast: "I know that nowadays all over the country you can gently push aside the bushes and find a music or arts festival going on, but this August trick in Washington Square is genuine chamber music and you've got to be a true music-lover to go for that."

For the inaugural Monday (3) David Amram has composed a "Fanfare for Washington Square" which will be played by three trumpeters atop the arch.

tivity to them greater than ever abroad since the war, a unifying force can create positive results, both in terms of activities and in the channelling of ideas.

It's considered logical that Nathanson will also concern himself with hypoing the flow of publicity from productions by UA's independents when they location abroad.

In the past at UA, as at the other distribs, liaison between the foreign and domestic divisions on the promotional level has been haphazard, though—from time to time —efforts at achieving an overall point-of-view have been made. Now, via Nathanson, a permanent contact point is being established to coordinate campaigns, special events and the production of material for the worldwide audience. Nathanson's appointment doesn't change the status of Francis Winnikus, UA's European publicity coordinator.

Nathanson started in the business in 1928, as an office boy for the Keith-Albee-Orpheum circuit. Eventually, he became a press-agent doing publicity for RKO Pictures in 1932 and later handling Katharine Cornell. He also tubthumbed for the late Mike Todd on several shows. From the legit field, he segued into films via Samuel Goldwyn whom he repped in the east as publicity director. He then joined Liberty Films, went to Paramount as publicity director and finally, in 1952, joined United Artists as publicity manager.

larger outfits are openly admitting that they're veering to where the bigger money is and that, today, they're less interested in offbeat "art" and more in formula appeal that can deliver the gross.

Some vets, like Arthur L. Mayer, say this isn't anything new and that it's just been forgotten over all the publicity for Brigitte Bardot, which has paid off.

Dilemma comes in where nobody can foretell what's going to draw. While Janus' "Seventh Seal" had rough going in the U. S. (it'll end up with about $35,000), its subsequent Ingmar Bergman film, "Wild Strawberries," is behaving like an art house hit. Yet "Seal" got hefty plugging from the important N. Y. Times while "Strawberries" didn't have that advantage.

Quite a lineup of other imports, which at one time might have made some noise at the b.o., aren't doing the business any more today. Their distributors are generally encouraged to invest in the dubbing cost by way of tapping the commercial market.

the Equity Library Theatre productions.

Most of the straight plays produced off-Broadway during '58-'59 are figured to involve investments of $8,000-$15,000. Some shows, however, were budgeted at less than $8,000 and others at more than $15,000. Musicals went as high as $25,000. A sampling of the capitalization on some of the off-Broadway entries, as reflected in published limited partnership setups, is as follows:

"Buffalo Skinner," $13,500; the current Shaw Festival at the Provincetown Playhouse, $10,000, with provision for 15% overcall; "Chaparral," $15,000; "Chic," $17,000; "Come Play With Me," $20,000 and believed to have raised additional financing; "Cock-a-Doodle Dandy," $20,000; "Deathwatch," $3,500; "Diversions," $7,500; "Failures," $11,000; "Fallout," $22,000; "Foenix in Choir," $10,000; "Golden Six," $20,000; "Heloise," $12,500; and "Innocents," $15,500.

Also, "Man Who Never Died," $18,000 and understood to have lost substantially more than that; "Time of the Cuckoo" and "Clearing in the Woods," a combined $18,000; "Leave It To Jane," $14,000; "Look Back in Anger," $6,000; "Lysistrata," $17,000; "Mistresses and Maidens," $10,000; "Of Mice and Men," $15,000; "Ole," $15,000; "On the Town," $25,000; "She Shall Have Music," $18,000; "Triad," $20,000; "Waiting for Godot," $4,500; "Waltz of the Toreadors," $8,000 and the one-man show, "Mark Twain Tonight," $9,000.

couldn't see why it should not it'd probably be held in the fall of 1960. Spring, i.e. cherry blossom time, would be preferable, he felt, but it'd also conflict with Cannes. The Japanese never had an international festival in Tokyo even though they've been the sparkplug for the Southeast Asia film fest.

The Japanese are sending a film to the Moscow film festival in August. Takamura said he was hopeful that Shochiku's "No Greater Love" would be selected.
